—— Tenant for Life and Remainderman—Trust for Sale.]—Real estate being devised in trust to sell at such times or time after testator's death as should seem most advisable, either together or in separate parcels, by auction or private contract, the trustees to stand possessed of the produce of such sale, and the rents and profits accruing in the meantime upon the trusts of the devise:—Held, that the cestuis que trustent were entitled to receive their respective portions of accruing rents, &c., from the end of the year after testator's death. Noel v. Henley, 7 Price, 242; Daniell, 211; 26 R. R. 660.

—— Reasonable Discretion.]—An executor's discretion is not that of an absolute owner; it is limited by the duty of bringing the assets into a proper state of investment within a reasonable time; the onus is upon him to shew that he has acted bonâ fide and has exercised a reasonable discretion. Where the testator's assets were subject to trusts in favour of unborn persons, and consisted in part of shares with unlimited liability, and the executors delayed conversion after the same was demanded by those beneficially interested:—Held, that they were liable for the value of the shares ascertained at a reasonable date from the death of the testator, which in this case was fixed at six months. Hiddingh v. De Villiers, 56 L. J., P. C. 107; 12 App. Cas. 624; 57 L. T. 885—P. C.

It is not the duty of executors to turn the whole estate into money; their duty is to liquidate it, that is, reduce it into possession, cleared of debts and outgoings, and so left free for enjoyment by the heirs, and to hold any trust fund separate from their own. Beningfield v. Baxter (12 App. Cas. 167) approved. Ib.

The testator, at his death, had cargoes of cotton which he had purchased on speculation, and his executors, in the exercise of due care and discretion (though at one time they might have sold the whole of the cotton in a fluctuating market, at a small profit) kept it until it fell in price, and loss to the assets was thereby sustained:—Held, that the executors had not been guilty of wilful default. Blount v. O'Connor, 17 L. R., Ir. 620.

The will contained a clause, that the testator's trustees should be at liberty to sell all his ships, houses, and other property, and invest the same as they should think most desirable, but not in British funds; his trustees to be free from all liability, in investing the money received for the sale of any of his property. The testator had railway and foreign stock, which the trustees did not sell, and which afterwards fell in value, causing a large loss to the assets:—Held, that they were not guilty of wilful default. Ib.

A testator bequeathed his personal estate to his executors upon trust to divide it equally among four persons, all of whom were of age. A considerable part of the estate consisted of three foreign railway bonds of very uncertain value. At the time of his death they were worth about 150*l.* each, but their value was declining rapidly, and at the end of a twelvemonth they were worth about 54*l.* each. One of the legatees during the year repeatedly pressed the executors to sell, but the others did not join in doing so, and the executors thought it best to wait for the chance of a rise. Ultimately, fifteen months after the death, they sold two of the bonds for 54*l.* each. The third, which remained unsold, had fallen far below that value:—Held, that, as the executors had acted in the honest exercise of their discretion as to the time of selling property of a very uncertain and speculative character, they ought not to be made personally responsible for the loss arising from their not having sold within the twelvemonth. Marsden v. Kent, 46 L. J., Ch. 497; 5 Ch. D. 598; 37 L. T. 49; 25 W. R. 522—C. A.

An executor, who allowed part of the testator's assets to remain invested in Mexican bonds for a year and eleven months after the testator's death, and eventually sold the bonds at a lower price than might have been obtained by a sale at an earlier period, but who appeared to have acted throughout with diligence and good faith, was held, under the circumstances, not to be liable for the loss consequent on his not having sold them sooner. Buxton v. Buxton, 1 Mylne & C. 80.

Where executors have neglected to realise assets which are outstanding upon an improper investment, there is no fixed period at which the loss is to be calculated: it depends on the particular nature of the property, and the evidence affecting it. Hughes v. Empson, 22 Beav. 181.

Losses occurred by the non-sale of Crystal Palace shares, which were at a premium at a testator's death, but subsequently fell to a discount. The executors were charged by the certificate with the value at the end of two months, but the court varied the certificate to twelve months. Ib.

But executors were allowed to retain for a limited period shares of a banking company, as great benefit to the testator's estate might be derived if retained until a certain date. Hirst, In re, 11 L. T. 533; 13 W. R. 225.

—— Where Executors differ.]—A difference of opinion between two executors, as to the propriety of converting the assets at a particular period, followed by a demand made by one of them on the other, to concur in effecting an immediate conversion, does not deprive the latter of the right to exercise his own discretion, or render him liable for the loss that may arise from the delay consequent on his declining to comply with the demand. Buxton v. Buxton, 1 Myl. & C. 80.

Direction to Convert with all Convenient Speed, or at Prescribed Time.]—Executors, who were directed by the will to call in the testator's personal estate with all convenient speed, continued his trade for some years after his death, and ultimately a considerable loss was sustained. But the court refused to charge them with the loss, as they had acted bonâ fide, and according to the best of their judgment. Garrett v. Noble, 6 Sim. 504; 3 L. J., Ch. 159.

Where a testator prescribes a time for realising his share in a trading concern in which he is a partner, and his legal personal representative extends that time to the surviving partners, who have notice of the trusts, the transaction is not so entirely vitiated as to make the surviving partners accountable for the subsequent profits. Chambers v. Howell, 11 Beav. 6; 12 Jur. 905.

Executors were ordered to sell canal shares before the 14th July, 1833. They did not sell them until 1836, and a great loss occurred:—Held, that they were personally liable for the loss. Davenport v. Stafford, 14 Beav. 319.

A testator entitled to shares in a company with unlimited liability, directed his executors to convert his estate with all convenient speed. P., one of the three executors, died a year and five weeks after the testator. The shares were not converted, and about fifteen years afterwards the company was wound up, and the surviving executors being placed on the list of contributories paid a large sum out of the estate for calls. A bill was filed against the surviving executors, and the executors of P., to make them liable for the loss. P.'s executors did not answer, nor did they in evidence give any reason why conversion had not taken place within twelve months from the testator's death:—Held, that P.'s estate was liable for all loss occasioned to the testator's estate by the omission to sell the shares within twelve months; and that as P.'s executors had not suggested by answer or evidence any reason for the delay, no inquiry could be directed on the subject. Grayburn v. Clarkson, 37 L. J., Ch. 550; L. R. 3 Ch. 605; 18 L. T. 494; 16 W. R. 716.

A testator devised and bequeathed his residuary estate to four trustees, whom he also appointed his executors, upon trust to sell the same immediately after his death, or so soon thereafter as the trustees might see fit so to do. The testator was, at the time of his death, entitled to shares in an unlimited company then in high repute. The executors did not convert the shares as directed by the will, and about two years after the testator's death the company suspended payment, the result being a heavy loss to the estate. Upon a bill by some of the cestuis que trustent against the executors to render them personally liable for the loss:—Held, that they ought to have converted the shares within twelve months after the testator's death, and that they were liable for the loss occasioned by their omission to do so. Sculthorpe v. Tipper, 41 L. J., Ch. 266; L. R. 13 Eq. 232; 26 L. T. 119; 20 W. R. 276.

No distinction was made in the case of one of the executors who did not prove the will, and did not attain twenty-one until more than a year after the testator's death. Ib.

Money on Personal Security.] — Executors ought not, without great reason, to permit money to remain upon personal security longer than is absolutely necessary. Powell v. Evans, 5 Ves. 844.

Executors under the circumstances charged with a loss by neglecting to call in money lent by the testator upon bond. Id. 839.

An executor having possessed a promissory note for 400*l.*, part of the assets of the testator, retained the note in his possession without taking any proceedings to recover the amount or the interest for seven years; and at the end of seven years, when the sole residuary legatee came of age, the executor delivered the note to the residuary legatee. The residuary legatee, ten years afterwards, filed the bill against his executor, charging him with breaches of trust in the administration of the estate. The court under such circumstances refused to charge the executor with the amount of the promissory note, or direct an inquiry whether any loss had resulted to the estate by reason of the executor not having taken proceedings to enforce the payment of the amount due on the note. East v. East, 5 Hare, 348.

In such a case the executor would not be chargeable, unless it should be found that the amount of the note could have been recovered during the seven years between the death of the testator and the time when plaintiff attained his majority; and if it were found that the amount could have been recovered during that time, still the executor would not be chargeable, unless it should be found that it could not have been recovered during the ten years which elapsed after the note had been delivered to the plaintiff. Ib.

Executor bound to call in money out upon personal security; therefore to pay into court money due from himself. Eagleton v. Kingston, 8 Ves. 466.

Executors held personally liable in respect of the loss to the testator's estate of a sum outstanding on personal security, although the security was that of the bond of the testator's solicitor, and the money had been invested in that security by the testator some years before his death, and by his will he directed that his trustees should get in his outstanding personal estate "as soon as conveniently might be" after his decease. Bullock v. Wheatley, 1 Coll. C. C. 130.

It is the duty of the executor to get in all debts outstanding on mere personal security, notwithstanding the testator had long been satisfied with such security. Gardner v. Gardner, 1 Jur. 462.

Executors authorised to lend upon personal security, not justified in leaving outstanding debts on such security. Evans v. Flight, 2 Jur. 818.

Part of a testator's assets consisted of a promissory note. The executor, though requested by the parties interested so to do, neglected to get it in, and about two years afterwards it was lost by the insolvency of the debtor:—Held, that the executor was personally liable. Caney v. Bond, 6 Beav. 486. S. C., nom. Carrey v. Bond, 12 L. J., Ch. 484.

A testator died in March, 1878. W. then owed him money on promissory notes. Shortly afterwards the executors applied to W. for payment. W. said he could only pay by selling his real estate (which according to valuation was sufficient to leave a surplus, after payment of mortgaged debts, more than enough to pay the testator's debt). In March, 1879, after further pressure, W. offered the real estate for sale, but withdrew it as an adequate price could not be obtained. W. afterwards obtained further advances from the mortgagees of the property, but no money was paid to the executors. On the 31st January, 1880, their solicitor again pressed for payment, and on the 10th February W. filed a liquidation petition. He alleged that earlier pressure would only have resulted in his petition being immediately filed:—Held, that the executors were not liable for the loss of the money due from W. Owens, In re, Jones v. Owens, 47 L. T. 61—C. A.

4. Selling or Mortgaging Estate.

(a) Alienation of Chattels.

i. Sales.

Power of Disposition.]—In many respects, and for many purposes, third persons may consider executors absolute owners; power of disposition is generally incident to an executor. Hill v. Simpson, 7 Ves. 166; 6 R. R. 105.

Executors may make a valid assignment of their testator's property in respect of their own debts, or where they apply the consideration of it to their own purposes, if no fraud in the other party, or reasonable ground of suspicion in the transaction. Tanner v. Irie, 2 Ves. sen. 466. And see Whale v. Booth, 4 Term Rep. 625, n.; 2 R. R. 483, n.

Lis Pendens.]—A leasehold interest was sold by an executor for payment of a bond debt of the testator. A bill in equity had been filed by a creditor against the executor, to which he appeared. In an action to recover the deposit evidence was given, that according to the rules of equity, an executor so circumstanced could not make a valid sale of part of the assets:—Held, first, that an executor has the power of sale at any time before a decree in the suit. Neeves v. Burrage, 14 Q. B. 504; 19 L. J., Q. B. 68; 14 Jur. 177.

Held, secondly, that the supposed rule was not a rule of practice merely, and therefore the evidence was inadmissible. Ib.

A bill filed by a creditor of a deceased testator for the administration of the estate under the direction of the court, does not of itself control or suspend the executor's right to dispose of the property and make a good title. Ib.

The courts of common law take judicial notice of this principle of equity, and evidence to shew a contrary practice is not admissible. Ib.

—— Judgment for Administration.]—After a judgment for the administration of personal estate in an action not registered as a lis pendens, the executor of the deceased and the residuary legatee, both of whom had full notice of the action, assigned to a bonâ fide purchaser for value, without notice of the action or judgment, a chattel real which was part of the assets of the deceased:—Held, that the assignment was effectual to vest a good title in the purchaser, unaffected by the administration proceedings. Lonergan v. Hoban, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 401.

Revocation of Grant, Proceedings for.]—As long as a person remains clothed with the character of personal representative by the grant of the Probate Division, he, to the fullest extent, represents the assets and personal estate to which the grant refers. When, therefore, all persons entitled are represented and a compromise is entered into by the persons holding grants administration, this will bind the assets even though proceedings are instituted to recall the grant of administration. Smithwick v. Hayden, 23 L. R., Ir. 475.

Sale of Leaseholds—Specific Devise.]—One possessed of a term devises to A., makes B. his executor, and leaves some debts : so if the executor sells the term, the purchaser shall hold it against the devisee ; secus, if sold at an under value, or if the purchaser knew there were no debts, or that the debts were or could be paid without breaking in upon the specific legacy. Ewer v. Corbet, 2 P. W. 148.

Executor or administrator, where there are debts, may sell the testator's term specifically devised ; and even in suspicious cirrumstances of fraud, after long possession by the purchaser, or the person under whom he takes, the court will not relieve. Andrew v. Wrigley, 4 Bro. C. C. 125.

By an assignment, by one of several executors, of a leasehold estate, the property of the testatrix, which had been bequeathed to that executor absolutely for his benefit, reciting that the assignor and another executor had proved the will (but not stating the fact that a third executor had also subsequently proved), and reciting that the executors had assented to the bequest to the assignor, it was witnessed, that the assignor in his several capacities of executor and assignee of the testatrix, in consideration of the sum therein mentioned, sold and assigned the premises to the purchaser. The assignor, in his character of executor, was at the time of the assignment indebted to the estate of the testatrix in a sum greater than the value of the property assigned. On a bill by the co-executors, on behalf of the estate of the testatrix to set aside the assignment and recover the title-deeds, it was held, that the assignment by the executor to the purchaser was effectual, and that, whether there had or had not been an assent to the bequest by the other executors, the court would not disturb the sale. Cole v. Miles, 10 Hare, 179.

—— Powers of Administrator durante minore ætate.]—An administrator durante minore ætate has for the time all the powers of an ordinary administrator, including a power to sell the estate if it is necessary in due course of administration, although not necessary for payment of debts. Thompson and M'Williams' Contract, In re, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 356—C. A.

A vendor of leasehold property deduced title as administrator durante minore ætate. It did not appear that the sale was necessary for payment of debts. Upon an objection by the purchaser :—Held, that the vendors had not under the circumstances power to sell. Robinson v. Sords, In re, 3 L. R., Ir. 429.

An administrator durante minore ætate had mortgaged his intestate's share in a general residue, and had eventually sold the equity of redemption to the mortgagees. It was alleged by the statement of claim of the infant next of kin, who had impeached the above transactions, that the mortgages and the sale were to their prejudice, and that the administrator had received and applied the consideration-moneys for his own purposes, but it was not alleged that the sale was made for any other purpose than payment of debts, and on the facts stated it was obvious that there were debts. The mortgagees demurred :—Held, that the mortgages and sale were good. Cope, In re, Cope v. Cope, 50 L. J., Ch. 13 ; 16 Ch. D. 49 ; 43 L. T. 566 ; 29 W. R. 98.

—— Title of Administrator with Will annexed.]—A testator bequeathed his leaseholds to executors and trustees upon trust for his nephews and nieces, with a power of sale. All the trustees who survived him renounced probate, and refused to accept the trusts. Administration with the will annexed was granted to another person who paid all the debts and assented to the bequests. By the decree in a suit for the administration of the testator's estate, a sale of the leaseholds was ordered :—Held, that the administrator alone, without the beneficiaries, could make a title to the leaseholds, and had the same power to sell them as if he had been a trustee of the will. Wyman v. Carter, 40 L. J., Ch. 559 ; L. R. 12 Eq. 309.

—— Sale of Leaseholds by Administrator under Grant subsequently Revoked.]—A grant of letters of administration obtained by suppressing a will containing no appointment of executors is not void ab initio, and accordingly a sale of leaseholds by an administratrix who had obtained a grant of administration under such circumstances to a purchaser who was ignorant of the suppression of the will, was upheld by the court, although the grant was revoked after the sale. Boxall v. Boxall, 53 L. J., Ch. 838 ; 27 Ch. D. 220 ; 51 L. T. 771 ; 32 W. R. 896.

—— Sale many Years after Death of Testator.]—A testator who died in 1847, possessed of certain leaseholds held for a term of years, by his will directed his debts to be paid ; and the residue of his property he bequeathed, after payment of his debts, to his executors in trust for payment of certain annuities. There was no specific bequest of the term of years. The executors after a lapse of thirty-seven years put up the leasehold premises for sale by auction. No necessity for the sale was disclosed on the abstract of title, nor was it alleged that any debts of the testator remained unsatisfied. The purchaser objected that the abstract did not disclose how the vendors, after such a lapse of time, still retained the power to sell :—Held, that a good title to sell had not been shewn by the executors. Molyneaux and White, In re, 15 L. R., Ir. 383—C. A.

A testator left all his property to W. B. and M. R. upon trust, in the first place, to pay his debts, and subject thereto in trust for his wife and children in equal shares, and appointed his trustees and M. B. executors. The testator died in April, 1868, and in October, 1885, M. R., who had alone proved the will, put up for sale, as executrix, a portion of the assets, consisting of a house in Dublin, held for a term of years. One of the conditions of sale provided that the purchaser should not require any of the legatees to be parties to the conveyance. C., having purchased the premises, objected to the title, upon the ground that a good title could not be made without the concurrence of the legatees of the leasehold and W. B. :—Held, that the period which had elapsed since the testator's death did not create a presumption of the executrix's assent, and that she had authority to sell. Ryan and Cavanagh, In re, 17 L. R., Ir. 42.

The rule intimated in Tanqueray-Willaume and Landau, In re (20 Ch. D. 465), that where an executor is selling real estate, after twenty years have elapsed from the testator's decease, a presumption arises that the debts have been paid, and the purchaser is therefore put upon inquiry, does not in general apply to the case of an executor selling leaseholds of his testator. Whistler and Richardson, In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 827; 35 Ch. D. 561; 57 L. T. 77; 35 W. R. 662; 51 J. P. 820.

A testator bequeathed leaseholds to his executrix upon trust to pay an annuity, and bequeathed his residuary estate to the executrix. Shortly before twenty years had elapsed from the testator's decease the executrix contracted to sell the leaseholds at a price to be ascertained by a named person. Shortly after the twenty years had elapsed the price was ascertained. It was not shewn that there were debts of the testator remaining unsatisfied, nor did it appear that the executrix had been in possession of the leaseholds as legatee:—Held, that the purchaser was not entitled to require the concurrence of the annuitant in the assignment of the leaseholds. Ib.

—— Presumption that Executor sold in Discharge of his Duties as Executor.]—The rule laid down by Jessel, M.R., in Tanqueray-Willaume and Landau, In re (20 Ch. D. 465), that where an executor is selling real estate, after twenty years have elapsed from the testator's decease, a presumption arises that the debts have been paid, and the purchaser is therefore put upon inquiry, is not applicable to the case of an executor selling leaseholds. Whistler, In re (35 Ch. D. 561) followed. Venn and Furze's Contract, In re, 63 L. J., Ch. 303; [1894] 2 Ch. 101; 8 R. 220; 70 L. T. 312; 42 W. R. 440.

The duties of an executor in connection with his testator's personal estate not being confined to the payment of debts, where an executor sold a lease which had been granted to him as executor twenty-six years previously, and the conveyance of such lease did not purport to be executed by him as executor, he must be presumed to have been acting in the discharge of his duties as executor, and neither the lapse of time between the grant of the lease to him and its sale by him, nor the form of the conveyance, is sufficient to raise the presumption that he was acting otherwise than as executor. Ib.

—— Mortgaged Term.]—An executor assigns a mortgaged term of his testator to A., as a satisfaction of a debt due to A. from the executor; this is a good alienation. Nugent v. Gifford, 1 Atk. 463.

There is no difference in equity between the power of an executor to dispose of equitable and legal assets. Id. 464.

—— Proviso against Alienation.]—Executors may dispose of a lease for years, as assets, notwithstanding a proviso or covenant that lessee shall not alien. Seers v. Hind, 1 Ves. J. 295. But see Sir William More's Case, Cro. Eliz. 26.

Transfer of Shares or Stock—Sale by Representative of Beneficial Owner.]—The registered owner of a share in a company died in 1859 intestate, and administration to her estate was granted to A. P., her sole next of kin. A. P. died in November, 1859, intestate, and administration to his estate was granted to his widow, E. P. In February, 1860, E. P. passed the residuary account of the original owner's estate shewing no debts. In November, 1860, E. P., described as "administratrix of A. P., administrator of" the original owner, executed a transfer of the share, which was passed by the company:—Held, that the sale was valid and binding in equity. Clark v. South Metropolitan Gas Co., 53 L. T. 646—C. A. Affirming 54 L. J., Ch. 259; 33 W. R. 160.

—— Forged Transfer by one Executor.]—One of two executors, at various periods, some of which were more than six years before the commencement of the action, forged his co-executor's signature to transfers of stock, which were duly registered. He applied the proceeds of the transfers to his own purposes, but continued to pay the amounts of the dividends to the persons entitled. The other executor, on discovery of the fraud, informed the railway company that the transfers were invalid, and demanded that the stock should be registered in the names of herself and another who had been appointed trustees of the will. The railway company declined to accede to this request, and the present action was brought that the company might be ordered to register the plaintiffs as owners of the stock:—Held, that one of the co-executors could not transfer stock registered in the names of both; that the transfers were not good as to one moiety of the stock, and that the innocent executor had in equity a sufficient interest in the stock to enable her to sue her fraudulent co-executor and the railway company. Barton v. North Staffordshire Ry., 57 L. J., Ch. 800; 38 Ch. D. 458; 58 L. T. 549; 36 W. R. 754.

—— Registered Stock—Bank of England—Right of Executor to Transfer.]—The Bank of England are not to look beyond the legal title to the trusts of the will, and therefore cannot prevent the executor from selling out or transferring stock into his own name. Bank of England v. Parsons, 5 Ves. 665.

Demurrer allowed to a bill by the Bank of England for an injunction against the action of an executor, claiming a transfer of stock. Considering the stock as specifically bequeathed (which was doubtful) to trustees in Rome, upon special trusts, if the executor cannot maintain the action upon the nature of the bequest, or as having assented, the injunction is unnecessary; if he can, upon his title to the stock, to be applied as the other property, there is no equity. Bank of England v. Lunn, 15 Ves. 569.

Where stock is specifically bequeathed, the executor may compel the bank to permit him to transfer it, unless it appears that he has assented to the bequest. Franklin v. Bank of England, 9 B. & C. 156; 4 Man. & Ry. 11; 7 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 183; 1 Russ. 575.

Circumstances Invalidating Sales.]—The principle is well established, that where an executor parts with any portion of the assets of his testator, under such circumstances as that the purchaser must be reasonably taken to know that they were sold, not for the benefit of the estate, but for the executor's own benefit, the purchaser is liable as if he was himself, in respect of those assets, the executor. Walker v. Taylor, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 681; 4 L. T. 845—H. L.

Injunction granted to restrain an executor claiming under a will, and also by gift from testatrix in lifetime, from selling, upon affidavit of undue influence. Edmunds v. Bird, 1 Ves. & B. 542.

It is no objection to title, that assignment of term was executed by one executor only, though deed was prepared as an assignment by two, one executor being competent to assign. Simpson v. Gutteridge, 1 Madd. 609; 16 R. R. 276.

A contract for the sale of a leasehold house to the plaintiff by two executors was signed by one of them for himself and his co-executor. The signing executor supposed himself to have the authority of his co-executor for the sale, but, in fact, the co-executor had not given any sufficient authority, and refused to ratify the contract:—Held, that even if specific performance could be decreed of a contract for sale made by one of several executors alone, as to which the court gave no opinion, still it must be refused in this case, as the signing executor never intended to contract alone. Sneesby v. Thorne, 7 De G. M. & G. 399; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1058; 3 W. R. 605.

A testatrix having directed that a lease should be sold, and the money divided among five persons, the administrator alleging that he had become entitled to it by an arrangement with the legatees, assigned it over for valuable consideration:—Held, that at his death it remained assets unadministered, and that the purchaser must be directed to convey it to the administratrix de bonis non, though the persons beneficially interested were not all parties to the suit. Cubbidge v. Boatwright, 1 Russ. 549.

The transfer, by an executor, of the trade of his testator, and of the premises on which it was carried on (which were of small value) to a third party, who afterwards continued the trade for his own benefit:—Held, under the circumstances, not to be necessarily a breach of trust. Portlock v. Gardner, 1 Hare, 594; 11 L. J., Ch. 313; 6 Jur. 795.

On a bill by a cestui que trust against trustees and executors to make them liable for loss alleged to have been sustained by the sale of the testator's business and stock-in-trade against the will of the plaintiff, to one person instead of another, who, he alleged, would have made a higher offer, the court held that the trustees having acted with due deliberation, and in the honest exercise of their discretion, were not liable, and gave them their costs of the suit. Selby v. Bowie, 4 Giff. 300; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 432. Affirmed 9 Jur. (N.S.) 425; 8 L. T. 372; 11 W. R. 606—L.JJ.

It is a matter of indifference whether an executor or trustee observes the order of sale enjoined in the will or not, provided that no depreciation takes place in the property whose sale is thus irregularly postponed. Ollivier v. King, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1066.

Where the inability of an administrator to purchase an estate with his own money is relied upon as a ground for following that estate as part of the intestate's assets, such inability must be shewn by evidence of facts from which the strongest conclusion can be drawn, and not merely or principally by evidence of the opinions of witnesses, though such witnesses may have been well acquainted with the affairs of the party, and their testimony may be corroborated by circumstances of suspicion. Wilkins v. Stevens, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 431; 6 Jur. 253.

Demurrer by one of several defendants allowed for want of equity, the bill alleging nothing against him, except that a fictitious sale had been made to him of part of a testator's estate. Marshall v. Gilliard, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 483.

—— Fiduciary Relation of Executors and Administrators to Beneficiaries.]—In selling or subletting the leaseholds of a testator or intestate, an executor or administrator stands to the beneficiaries, or next of kin, in the same relation as a trustee to his cestui que trust. Therefore, for an executor or administrator to grant an underlease with the option of purchase to be exercised by the sub-lessees at a future time, at a price now fixed, is ultra vires, and a breach of trust. Such a transaction cannot be supported as against the beneficiaries or next of kin, however advantageous the transaction may have been to their estate. Oceanic Steam Navigation Co. v. Sutherberry, 50 L. J., Ch. 308; 16 Ch. D. 236; 43 L. T. 743; 29 W. R. 113.

If a legatee agrees to sell to the executor of the will his legacy for an annuity, the burden will lie on the executor to shew that there was no unfairness in the transaction. Gray v. Warner, Biel, In re, 42 L. J., Ch. 556; L. R. 16 Eq. 577; 28 L. T. 835; 21 W. R. 808.

The purchase by an executor of his co-executor's legacy in consideration of a life annuity, set aside on the ground of insufficiency of price. Ib.

Sale by administratrix of the testator's property to her own son, under an open contract and for undervalue, set aside. The mere fact of this agreement being made with the son of the administratrix would have been sufficient to vitiate the sale, irrespective of the improvidence of the contract, which imposed no conditions on the intending purchaser, and of the undervalue. John v. Jones, 34 L. T. 570.

A testator gave all his real and personal property, including a business, to his executors on trust to sell and pay the income to his wife for life, and after her death to the plaintiff, but with full discretion to his executors to postpone the sale of his estate. And he directed that until the sale the net income should be applied in the same way as the income of the proceeds of the sale was to be applied. Shortly after the death of the testator one of the executors purchased the business at a valuation:—Held, by Bacon, V.-C., that the sale must be set aside, and that the executor must account for the profits made since the sale without salary, but with just allowances; and that the amount of the profits must be treated as capital, and that the widow was only entitled to the income of it. Norrington, In re, Brindley v. Partridge, 13 Ch. D. 654; 28 W. R. 711; 44 J. P. 474—C. A.

On an appeal the case was compromised, and the purchase was confirmed; but the court expressed an opinion that if the sale had been set aside the widow would have been entitled to the profits as income. Ib.

B. was a member of a firm of three partners, and also the surviving member of another firm of two partners, which was the sole or chief creditor of the first firm. B.'s executor purchased the estate of the first firm for his own benefit, with the result that nothing was left for B.'s widow and universal legatee:—Held, in a suit by the widow against the executor, that such sale was voidable; and that a decree be made for a general administration of B.'s estate, declaring that the sale be set aside with certain special directions. Travis v. Milne (9 Hare, 150) approved. Beninfield v. Baxter, 56 L. J., P. C. 13; 12 App. Cas. 167; 56 L. T. 127—P. C.

A., B. and C. were executors and B. and C. trustees of a testator who had property in Jamaica. A. proved the will in Jamaica, and

B. and C. in England. Before the estate was wound up and accounts settled, A. purchased from B. and C. a business carried on by the testator in Jamaica :—Held, that the sale to A., being of itself a part of the process of realising the estate, could not be justified as a sale to an executor who had assented to a bequest, and must be set aside at the instance of the beneficiaries. Harvey, In re, Harvey v. Lambert, 51 L. T. 449.

A sale is not to be avoided merely because, when entered upon, the purchaser has the power to become trustee of the property purchased, as for instance by proving the will which relates thereto, though in point of fact he never does become such. Such a purchaser is under no disability, and in order to avoid such sale it must be shewn that he in fact used his power in such a way as to render it inequitable that the sale should be upheld. Clark v. Clark, 52 L. J., P. C. 99 ; 9 App. Cas. 733 ; 51 L. T. 750—P. C.

An executor, purchasing assets belonging to the estate of his testator, with the assent of the parties then interested, will not, after a length of time, be answerable for the profit he has made ; but he will when he has purchased with a fraudulent intention. Whatton v. Toone, 5 Madd. 54.

An executor purchased a share of the residue, and in an administration suit he was ordered to pay the assets into court, minus the amount of the purchased share. Afterwards, in another suit, the purchase was set aside :—Held, that the executor was not entitled, on setting aside the transaction, to a decree for repayment of the consideration money, but that it must be paid into court in the administration suit. Smedley v. Varley, 23 Beav. 358.

—— Breach of Trust—Notice.]—A will contained a direction that no part of the testator's property should be sold or disposed of except the interest in a certain house, for ten years only, if thought advisable on the part of the executors, and he bequeathed the property to his son, who was a minor. The executors sold the whole interest in the house to A., who had notice of some restriction on the executors' power to sell. There were no debts :—Held, in a suit to impeach the sale, that the sale being a breach of trust, the purchaser was bound to prove that the sale was at the full value. M'Mullen v. O'Reilley, 15 Ir. Ch. R. 251.

Where a term is devised away by will, a purchaser of and from the executor is not bound to see whether it was necessary to sell the term for payment of the debts. Langley v. Oxford (Earl), Ambl. 797.

A purchaser of leasehold premises from an executor need not (in general) see to the application of the purchase-money, nor need there be any recital in such an assignment of the purpose for which it is sold : but if, on the face of the assignment, it appears to have been made in satisfaction of the private debt of the executor, such a sale is fraudulent against the persons interested in the premises under the will, and the Court of Equity will relieve against it ; but such a claim will be barred by a great length of time having run against the parties seeking relief. Bonney v. Ridgard, 1 Cox, 145.

An executor in trust for an infant residuary legatee, renews a lease, part of the testator's personal estate, in his own name, and, having mortgaged it, assigns the equity of a redemption to a trustee, to sell for payment of his own debts. The trustee sells to one who had notice of the infant's title. Purchase set aside. Walley v. Walley, 1 Vern. 484.

The commercial correspondents of executors, acting under a power of attorney :—Held, to be responsible to the testator's estate for the amount of the produce of stock, part of such estate sold by them and applied by the direction of the executors in payment of a balance due from the latter, as partners in a commercial concern, to their correspondents, with full knowledge on the part of the correspondents, that the stock was part of the testator's assets. There is no primary liability in respect of breaches of trust, all parties to a breach of trust being equally liable ; and it is no objection to a suit brought by parties seeking relief against a breach of trust, that one of the defendants, against whom no relief is prayed, may have been a party to such breach of trust. Wilson v. Moore, 1 Myl. & K. 127, 337.

A person having a claim against a testator's estate, prevailed upon the executors to hand over to him part of the testator's assets, under circumstances from which he must have known that in doing so the executors were acting hastily, improvidently and against their duty as executors :—Held, that such person was a proper party to a suit instituted by a legatee against the executors for the administration of the estate, although the bill contained no charge of collusion or insolvency. Consett v. Bell, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 569 ; 11 L. J., Ch. 401 ; 6 Jur. 869.

A creditor, who had proved his debt against the estate of a deceased person, under an administration decree obtained at the suit of another creditor against the executor, filed a new bill on behalf of himself and all other unsatisfied creditors of the testator against the executor and a person, not a party to the previous suit, who had purchased part of the assets from the executor, the bill charging connivance between the executor and the purchaser, and seeking relief in respect of the purchase-money, no misconduct being alleged against the plaintiff in the previous suit :—Held, that the bill could not be maintained. Earle v. Sidebottom, 37 L. J., Ch. 503.

—— Where Administration Fraudulently Obtained.]—A., who was entitled to a sum of money secured by a trust term in reversion after a life estate, went to Australia, and remained there many years ; during which time, B., representing him to be dead, obtained administration to his estate and effects, and a suit having been instituted in relation to the fund secured by the report, and confirmed by the final decree, that he was dead, B. afterwards sold the charge to a purchaser for value, who took an assignment of the term from the trustee to a trustee for himself ; and A. having come back on the death of the tenant for life, and filed a bill to set aside the sale of the charge :—Held, that, although the administration taken out by B. gave him no title to assign the charge, yet that the court would not interfere to take away from a purchaser for value without notice the benefit of the legal estate which he had obtained by the assignment of the term. Monckton v. Braddell, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 352.

When a man fraudulently obtained administration to an intestate's estate, and settled the property thus acquired on his marriage, being in debt at the time, an injunction was granted restraining the trustees from dealing with the capital of the property, but not interfering with their application of the income to the trusts of the settlement. Gibson v. Head, 17 W. R. 986.

Following Funds.]—If executor, for benefit of testator's estate, should invest part of it in the funds, or transfer money from one stock to another, this is not a conversion, but it may still be followed as much as if it had continued in the same condition at the testator's death. Waite v. Whorwood, 2 Atk. 159.

ii. Mortgages or Pledges.

Generally.]—Each executor has entire control over a testator's personal estate; he may release, pay or transfer without the others; and so as to each administrator, though formerly questioned: one executor may retain satisfaction of his own debt, if no fraud. A surviving partner, therefore, being an executor of the deceased partner, and having mortgaged leasehold property of the latter for better securing of a debt due from the testator to himself, the mortgagees were entitled to satisfaction; and creditors of the testator, under marriage articles, who had no specific lien, were not allowed to pursue the premises thus assigned. Jacomb v. Harwood, 2 Ves. Sen. 265.

Bankrupt, who had obtained his certificate, being possessed of leasehold premises as executor and residuary legatee, mortgaged them to secure a debt of his own, and afterwards assigned the equity of redemption for valuable consideration; the deed reciting that the assignment was made for the purpose of paying the debts of the testatrix. The assignee took an assignment of the mortgage. The certificate held to have been fraudulently obtained. The lease was claimed by the assignees under the bankruptcy, but it was determined they had no right against the assignee for the valuable consideration. Bedford v. Woodham, 4 Ves. 40.

Leasehold estates specifically bequeathed to an executor were by him assigned as a security for his own debt. That assignment, no collusion appearing, was established against a creditor. Taylor v. Hawkins, 8 Ves. 209; 7 R. R. 27.

Pledge by executors of bonds given to the testator, to secure advances of money from time to time, for several years, sustained, the bill being filed, not by specific legatees, but by co-executors, who had not previously acted. M'Leod v. Drummond, 14 Ves. 353. Affirmed, 17 Ves. 152; 11 R. R. 41.

An executor may pledge specific assets of his testator, but he has no power to pledge generally the credit of the testator's estate. Farhall v. Farhall, London and County Bank, Ex parte, 41 L. J., Ch. 146; L. R. 7 Ch. 123; 25 L. T. 685; 20 W. R. 157.

An executor or an administrator borrowing money in that character, does not give the lender any claim against the testator's or intestate's estate. The contract simply creates a personal liability on the part of the executor or administrator. Ib.

Semble, when part of the testator's property is invested on mortgage, the executor is justified in making such further advances as may be absolutely necessary to secure the first advance. Collinson v. Lister, 20 Beav. 356.

It would be dangerous to lay down any rule which would prevent the executor from exercising a bonâ fide discretion in such case, or even charge him with a devastavit in case the result should disappoint his expectations. In case of loss, however, the onus lies on him of shewing that he exercised due caution. Ib.

On Personal Security.] — Executor cannot lend on personal security. Morrissey v. Foley, 2 Moll. 346.

Executors cannot lend money on personal security, though words which may imply a discretion so to do are used by the testator. Wilkes v. Steward, G. Coop. 6; 14 R. R. 211.

Leaseholds—Power of Sale.]—An executor or administrator may not only pledge or mortgage the assets, but may also give to the mortgagee of leaseholds a power of sale and to give valid receipts for the purchase-money. Russell v. Plaice, 18 Beav. 21; 23 L. J., Ch. 441; 18 Jur. 254; 2 W. R. 243.

In a suit for the specific performance of a contract for the purchase of property sold under a power of sale contained in a mortgage executed by an administratrix:—Held, that there was a good title; and specific performance was decreed. Ib.

—— Mortgage to Building Society.] — An executor mortgaged three small leasehold houses to a building society. The deed, which was in the form of a building society's mortgage, recited the will and probate, and that the money was wanted for executorship purposes; it incorporated by reference the rules and by-laws of the society, and made the mortgage a security not only for the moneys advanced, but for any moneys at any time due by the executor in respect of any shares held by him in the society. The deed contained also personal covenants by the executor for payment of the mortgage money, &c.:—Held, that the mortgage was a good one, and that a title derived under it might be forced on a purchaser. Cruickshank v. Duffin, 41 L. J., Ch. 317; L. R. 13 Eq. 555; 26 L. T. 121; 20 W. R. 354.

An executor may create a mortgage of his testator's property, with power of sale. Ib.

Though an executor cannot bind his testator's estate in respect of shares taken by the executor for himself in a building society, a mortgage by him of his testator's assets to secure money bonâ fide advanced to him as executor, with interest thereon, even if containing onerous provisions as to consideration and observance of the society's rules, and securing also moneys to become due from the mortgagor as a shareholder, is, as against the estate and the beneficiaries, not void, but good to the extent of the money actually advanced and reasonable interest thereon, but bad beyond. Thorne v. Thorne, 63 L. J., Ch. 38; [1893] 3 Ch. 196; 69 L. T. 378.

—— Power of Administrator to Mortgage for Repairs.]—An administrator has no power to mortgage leaseholds of the intestate under leases not containing repairing covenants, in order to raise money for repairing the property. And such a mortgage will be set aside as against a mortgagee who has notice of the purpose for which the money is raised. Ricketts v. Lewis, 51 L. J., Ch. 837; 20 Ch. D. 745; 46 L. T. 368; 30 W. R. 609.

Book Debts—Power of Attorney to Collect.]—An executor is absolute owner of his testator's assets, and may mortgage or sell them, as well to a creditor as to any other person; and a mortgage of the book debts of the testator may contain a power of attorney to collect them. Vane v. Rigden, 39 L. J., Ch. 797; L. R. 5 Ch. 663; 18 W. R. 1092.

An executor assigned all the book debts, &c., of her testator to the nominal value of 2,000*l.* to a creditor, to secure a debt of 534*l.* due to him from the testator, and also gave him a power of attorney to collect the debts. The property so assigned amounted substantially to the whole of the assets:—Held, that the mortgage was valid. Ib.

For Advance to one of Co-executors as such.]—One of two executors, who was himself a residuary legatee, entered an account with a banker in his own name for executorial purposes, and the banker, with notice of the dispositions under the will, made advances to the executor for payments connected with the executorship, and securities were deposited for repayment of the advances. The co-executor assented to the first advance, but upon a second advance being made to the acting executor upon other securities, he withdrew his assent, and objected to the banker being repaid out of the trust property, on the ground that the money had been placed to the separate account of the acting executor. The advances were duly applied to the purposes of the administration. Upon an action being brought by the banker for a lien upon the securities for repayment of his advances:—Held, that the banker was justified in advancing money to the acting executor for executorial purposes, and that the assent of the co-executor in the first instance was a further justification for placing confidence in the acting executor, and in making further advances to him. The repayment was therefore decreed with mortgagee's costs. Child v. Thorley, 16 Ch. D. 151; 29 W. R. 417.

For Future Payment of Annuity fallen into Arrear—Benefit of Estate.]—D., by his marriage settlement, conveyed leasehold hereditaments (subject to a mortgage) to trustees after his death to raise an annuity for his widow. There being arrears of the annuity, a deed was executed by the widow and the husband's executor, whereby the former agreed to abandon part of the arrears on the remainder being capitalised, and interest thereon and payment for the future being secured by a mortgage of the leaseholds, and by the covenant of the executor to pay ground rent and interest on the mortgage out of the general assets, exclusive of the rents of the leaseholds:—Held, that the widow was entitled to the benefit of the indenture. Depree v. Bedborough, 10 W. R. 875.

Circumstances Invalidating.] — It is not enough to impeach a mortgage of part of the assets, that it was made to secure a debt originally contracted on the personal security of the executor, and without reference to the assets. Miles v. Durnford, 2 De G. M. & G. 641; 21 L. J., Ch. 667.

Whoever deals with an executor for the assets of a testator for a purpose perfectly inconsistent with a due administration of those assets, subjects himself to the consequences of a devastavit. Downes v. Power, 2 Ball & B. 498.

—— Notice.]—An agent receiving notes from an executor payable to him as executor, as a security for advances by the principal to the executor on his private account, and not as executor, affects his principal with notice that it is a dealing with an executor for the assets for a purpose foreign to the trusts he was to discharge; the principal is thereby a party to the devastavit, and liable to the consequences thereof, and cannot, therefore, retain the notes against those claiming under the will. Downes v. Power, 2 Ball & B. 491.

If a lender of money to an executor has at the time of the loan, and before parting with the money, notice that the debtor in borrowing commits a breach of trust, and intends to misapply the money, he acquires no better title against the estate than the executor himself. Collinson v. Lister, 7 De G. M. & G. 634; 25 L. J., Ch. 38; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 75; 4 W. R. 133.

An executor borrowed money from a banking company, of which he was the local agent, for the purpose of making a further advance to a mortgagor of a ship, on the security of which the testatrix had lent money, on the pretence that such further advance was to pay off a prior charge, but really to assist the mortgagor, and the security proved ultimately wholly insufficiently:—Held, that the company had no claim upon the testatrix's assets, and that a mortgage of a ship made by the executor to the company to secure their advance was invalid. Ib.

A., who was a trader in partnership with B., died, leaving by his will to C., his wife, the business premises, of which he was lessee for a term of years, and all other his property whatsoever, to be by her divided amongst his children and grandchildren at her death, or sooner, if she should think fit, and appointed her sole executrix. C., for the purpose of continuing the business with B., entered into a partnership agreement with him, and raised money for the same purpose on the security of the leasehold interest. The lenders had express notice of the purpose for which the money was borrowed, but relied on advances subsequently made to the children and grandchildren out of the profits of the business. The petition referred solely to the securities given by C. in her character of executrix:—Held, that, under such a petition, advances subsequently made could not be relied on; and that the securities being originally void, the money having been lent for an improper purpose, the petition, as framed, should be dismissed. Johnson, In re, 15 Ir. Ch. R. 260.

Transfer by executor being a clear misapplication of assets as immediately after the death, and to secure the debt of the executor, with future advances, under circumstances of gross negligence, though not direct fraud, set aside by general legatees. Hill v. Simpson, 7 Ves. 152; 6 R. R. 105.

A mortgage given by an executor as a security for his own debt on assets of his testator, which have been absolutely bequeathed to him, is not valid, if the mortgagee has notice that debts of the testator remain unpaid. Hall v. Andrews, 27 L. T. 195; 20 W. R. 799.

A., after becoming surety for B. to a bank, died, leaving a will, by which he appointed B. his executor, and left all his personal and real estate (charged with his debts) to B.'s wife. At A.'s death B. owed the bank a considerable sum. Shortly afterwards B. and his wife mortgaged to the bank real and personal estate forming part of A.'s assets as a security for the money then owing by B. Subsequently B. became bankrupt. In a suit for the administration of A.'s estate, instituted by a creditor:—Held, that, as the bank had notice that the property comprised in the mortgage had formed part of A.'s assets, all moneys realised under it came from his estate. Ib.

C. and his wife were trustees and executors of the will of R., by which the testator devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to them in trust for Mrs. C. for life, for her separate use, and, after her decease, for her children. Part of the assets consisted of certain shares in the H. Bank, and shortly after the testator's death C. and his wife invested other portions of the assets upon two mortgages of fee-simple estate, which were made to them jointly; but, beyond shewing that the money had been advanced on a joint account, did not disclose any trust. C. afterwards opened an account with the M. Bank, and, as security for overdrafts, deposited with them the bank shares and the mortgages, these latter being sub-mortgaged to the M. Bank by deed, which was not, however, acknowledged by Mrs. C. as a married woman. To reduce his overdraft, C., at the suggestion of the manager of the M. Bank, authorised the bank to sell the shares, and induced Mrs. C. to join in such sale. They were accordingly sold by the brokers of the bank on account of C. and his wife, "representatives of R.," and in the transfer deeds C. and his wife were described as "executors of R." The M. Bank was also paid the moneys due to them on foot of the mortgages, but not until after receiving express notice of the trusts affecting them. In a suit by C.'s children after his death:—Held (1), that the bank having received the proceeds of sale of the shares, with distinct notice that they constituted part of the testator's assets, even though unaware of the trusts of the will, could not retain the amount in liquidation of C.'s personal indebtedness to themselves, and were accordingly bound to replace the same. (2) That the bank, not having acquired the legal estate in the mortgaged premises, except for the life of C., in consequence of the want of acknowledgment by Mrs. C., they could only set up an equitable title to the mortgages, which, even assuming them to have originally been purchasers for value without notice, could not prevail against the earlier equity in the plaintiffs. Connolly v. Munster Bank, 19 L. R. Ir. 119.

A testator possessed of leaseholds bequeathed, amongst others, pecuniary legacies to each of his two daughters, and appointed his son residuary legatee and executor. The son, on the testator's death, went into possession of all his assets, including the leaseholds, and paid interest to the daughters on their legacies, the principal sums remaining unpaid and due to the legatees. Many years after the testator's death the testator's son deposited with a bank the leases of the testator's leasehold premises to secure, by way of equitable mortgage, the amount of his (the son's) own overdrawn account, and the evidence shewed that the bank dealt with him as absolute owner. On the petition of the bank the leaseholds were sold, and the daughters claimed to be placed on the schedule as incumbrancers on the leaseholds in respect of their unpaid legacies in priority to the claim of the bank:—Held, that the bank was not entitled in priority to the legatees, but was only entitled to a charge on the executor's beneficial interest in the leaseholds as residuary legatee. Queale's Estate, In re, 17 L. R., Ir. 361—C. A.

Equitable Security.]—An executor, six years after the death of the testator, surrendered a lease belonging to the testator, and took a renewed lease, including additional property and at an increased rent, in his own name. He afterwards deposited the lease as security for money advanced to him, which he applied to his own purposes. The renewed lease contained no mention of the surrender, and the mortgagee did not know that the borrower was an executor, or that he was not the beneficial owner of the lease. He did not, however, make any inquiry into the title. An action was afterwards brought to administer the testator's estate, and a consent order was made for the sale of the leasehold property, without prejudice to any right, the mortgagee giving up the lease to facilitate the sale. He claimed to be paid the amount due to him by the executor out of the proceeds of sale:—Held, that the lease was in equity part of the testator's estate, and that the equity of the estate, being prior to the equity of the mortgagee, must prevail against it. Morgan, In re, Pillgrem v. Pillgrem, 50 L. J., Ch. 834; 18 Ch. D. 93; 45 L. T. 183—C. A. Affirming, 29 W. R. 733.

Held, also, that the equitable mortgagee was not injured by the order to give up the indenture of lease, and did not thereby acquire any claim upon the proceeds of the sale. Ib.

The rule that if an executor, who is also residuary legatee, sells or mortgages for his own purposes an asset of the testator for valuable consideration to a person who has no notice of unsatisfied debts of the testator, or of any ground which rendered it improper for the executor so to deal with the asset, the purchase or mortgage is valid against any unsatisfied creditor of the testator, applies even though such purchaser or mortgagee has thereby acquired only an equitable interest in the asset, if perfected by giving any necessary notice to the legal owner. This rule, however, does not apply when the executor, or the court administering the estate, still retains sufficient control over the asset to apply it for the benefit of creditors. Noble v. Brett (27 L. J., Ch. 516; 24 Beav. 499) and Hooper v. Smart (45 L. J., Ch. 99; 1 Ch. D. 90) distinguished. Graham v. Drummond, 65 L. J., Ch. 472; [1896] 1 Ch. 968; 74 L. T. 417; 44 W. R. 596.

Lis Pendens.]—A decree was made in a creditors' suit for the administration of the personal estate of a testator, but no receiver was appointed nor an injunction granted to restrain the executrix from dealing with the assets. More than two years after the decree, and nearly three years after the death of the testator, his executrix, who was also his sole legatee, opened an account with a bank, headed "E. G., executrix of B. G." In the following year, the account being overdrawn, she deposited with the bank a picture belonging to the testator's estate to secure the balance then due and further advances. The bankers did not know of the suit, and had no notice of any breach of duty on the part of the executrix:—Held, that the bank had a valid security on the picture, for that the doctrine of lis pendens had no application, a decree for administration without an injunction or appointment of a receiver not taking away the power of the executrix to deal with the assets. Berry v.

Fraudulent Mortgage.]—An administratrix, being indebted to an attorney for rent, executed to him a mortgage of leasehold property belonging to her intestate, which falsely recited that the sum of 300*l.* was paid as a consideration. The next of kin, not knowing the facts, were induced by misrepresentation to execute the mortgage; and the jury at the trial found that the deed had not been fairly obtained:—Held, that the mortgagee was not entitled to recover in ejectment against the next of kin, because of the fraud, nor against the administratrix, who was the widow of the intestate, because the accounts of the estate had not been wound up. Doe d. Woodhead v. Fallows, 2 C. & J. 481; 2 Tyr. 460; 1 L. J., Ex. 177.

Mortgage Deeds Forgeries.]—A son who was heir-at-law to his father, who was one of the executors and trustees of his father's will, though he had not proved the will, and whose christian names and description were identical with those of his father, after his father's death, executed mortgages of freehold and leasehold property of the father and applied the mortgage money to his own purposes. He handed over the title-deeds to the mortgagees. The transaction took place without the knowledge of his mother and sister, who were co-trustees and co-executrixes with him, and who had proved the will. The will had not been registered in the Middlesex registry, though the property was situate in that county. The mortgage deeds were registered. They purported to be executed by the absolute owner of the property, and the solicitor who acted for both parties believed the son to be the absolute owner. The son told him nothing about the father's will. The solicitor searched the Middlesex registry. The son took a beneficial interest under the trusts of the father's will. After the son's death the fraud was discovered, and the mother and sister, as trustees of the father's will, brought an action against the mortgagees, claiming a declaration that the mortgages were void against them, and delivery up of the title-deeds. The other beneficiaries under the will were made defendants:—Held, that the son in executing the mortgage deeds was personating his father; that the deeds were forgeries and passed nothing to the mortgagees, except the son's beneficial interest under the father's will; and that the mortgagees could obtain no title by virtue of the Middlesex Registry Act. Cooper, In re, Cooper v. Vesey, 51 L. J., Ch. 862; 20 Ch. D. 611; 47 L. T. 89; 30 W. R. 648.—C. A.

Semble, the son could have been convicted of forgery by reason of his executing the mortgage deeds. Ib.

Held also, that the mortgagees must deliver up the title-deeds to the plaintiffs. Since the Judicature Act the Chancery Division has jurisdiction on the application of the legal owner of title-deeds to order them to be delivered up by a purchaser for value without notice. McLeod v. Drummond (14 Ves. 353; 17 Ves. 152; 11 R. R. 41) distinguished. Ib.

After Settlement of Accounts between Next of Kin.]—A., B. and C., as the only next of kin with D., the administrator of their intestate father, signed a memorandum in 1872, authorising D. to borrow, upon mortgage or otherwise, as he might deem best, upon the security of certain house property, held by the intestate under an agreement for a lease to be granted on completion of repairs, such money as D. required for carrying out these matters, and to charge their respective shares with the interest. A lease of the houses was soon afterwards granted to D. as the sole legal personal representative of the intestate, which, with the memorandum, was shortly afterwards deposited by D. as a security for his own debt with E. In 1875, the administration accounts, shewing a balance due to D., was settled between A., B., C. and D. and D. then told A., B. and C. that he had not borrowed any money upon the security of their shares under the memorandum of 1872. In 1877, D., who had previously mortgaged his share of the house property to E., executed a further mortgage to him of the entirety, reciting the authority of 1872. No notice was given by E. to A., B. and C., that he held any charge upon their shares under the memorandum:—Held, that in the absence of any notice by E. to A., B. and C., of a charge to him of their shares by D. under the authority of 1872, the mortgage of 1877, after that authority had been withdrawn by the settlement of accounts, did not effect their shares, and that they were entitled to an assignment from E. of their shares of the property comprised in the lease, which had been mortgaged by D. Jones v. Stöhwasser, 50 L. J., Ch. 625; 16 Ch. D. 577; 44 L. T. 333; 29 W. R. 497.

(b) Alienation of Real Estate.

i. Sales.

With respect to wills coming into operation after 1st January, 1898, see powers conferred by the Land Transfer Act, 1897, vesting the real estate in the personal representative as if it were chattel real.

Power of Sale—Express or Implied.]—Executors have only power to sell real estate where expressly given, or necessarily to be implied from the produce being to pass through their hands in the execution of their office. Bentham v. Wiltshire, 4 Madd. 44; 20 R. R. 271.

—— Where Express.]—A., after directing all his debts to be paid, and bequeathing personal estate to his wife for life, devised a freehold house to her "for her natural life, with liberty to sell it in case a good offer is made, and invest the proceeds of it in the 5*l.* per cent. stock, for her benefit during her life." And in a subsequent part of the will he desired that "at the death of his wife the residue of his estate might be collected, including the proceeds of the house, and, if not previously sold, to be then disposed of to good advantage, to be divided as follows": He appointed his wife, the plaintiff and C., to be executrix and executors of his will. The plaintiff and the widow proved the will. C., the other executor, died in the lifetime of the widow. After the death of the widow, the plaintiff, the surviving executor, entered into a contract with the defendant for the sale of the house:—Held, that, whether there were or were not debts unpaid, and whether it was or was not uncertain whether any debts remained unpaid, the plaintiff had a power to sell and convey the house in fee-simple. Forbes v. Peacock, 11 M. & W. 630; 12 L. J., Ex. 460.

of A.'s assets as a security for the money then owing by B. Subsequently B. became bankrupt. In a suit for the administration of A.'s estate, instituted by a creditor:—Held, that, as the bank had notice that the property comprised in the mortgage had formed part of A.'s assets, all moneys realised under it came from his estate. Ib.

C. and his wife were trustees and executors of the will of R., by which the testator devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to them in trust for Mrs. C. for life, for her separate use, and, after her decease, for her children. Part of the assets consisted of certain shares in the H. Bank, and shortly after the testator's death C. and his wife invested other portions of the assets upon two mortgages of fee-simple estate, which were made to them jointly; but, beyond shewing that the money had been advanced on a joint account, did not disclose any trust. C. afterwards opened an account with the M. Bank, and, as security for overdrafts, deposited with them the bank shares and the mortgages, these latter being sub-mortgaged to the M. Bank by deed, which was not, however, acknowledged by Mrs. C. as a married woman. To reduce his overdraft, C., at the suggestion of the manager of the M. Bank, authorised the bank to sell the shares, and induced Mrs. C. to join in such sale. They were accordingly sold by the brokers of the bank on account of C. and his wife, "representatives of R.," and in the transfer deeds C. and his wife were described as "executors of R." The M. Bank was also paid the moneys due to them on foot of the mortgages, but not until after receiving express notice of the trusts affecting them. In a suit by C.'s children after his death:—Held (1), that the bank having received the proceeds of sale of the shares, with distinct notice that they constituted part of the testator's assets, even though unaware of the trusts of the will, could not retain the amount in liquidation of C.'s personal indebtedness to themselves, and were accordingly bound to replace the same. (2) That the bank, not having acquired the legal estate in the mortgaged premises, except for the life of C., in consequence of the want of acknowledgment by Mrs. C., they could only set up an equitable title to the mortgages, which, even assuming them to have originally been purchasers for value without notice, could not prevail against the earlier equity in the plaintiffs. Connolly v. Munster Bank, 19 L. R. Ir. 119.

A testator possessed of leaseholds bequeathed, amongst others, pecuniary legacies to each of his two daughters, and appointed his son residuary legatee and executor. The son, on the testator's death, went into possession of all his assets, including the leaseholds, and paid interest to the daughters on their legacies, the principal sums remaining unpaid and due to the legatees. Many years after the testator's death the testator's son deposited with a bank the leases of the testator's leasehold premises to secure, by way of equitable mortgage, the amount of his (the son's) own overdrawn account, and the evidence shewed that the bank dealt with him as absolute owner. On the petition of the bank the leaseholds were sold, and the daughters claimed to be placed on the schedule as incumbrancers on the leaseholds in respect of their unpaid legacies in priority to the claim of the bank:—Held, that the bank was not entitled in priority to the legatees, but was only entitled to a charge on the executor's beneficial interest in the leaseholds as residuary legatee. Queale's Estate, In re, 17 L. R., Ir. 361—C. A.

Equitable Security.]—An executor, six years after the death of the testator, surrendered a lease belonging to the testator, and took a renewed lease, including additional property and at an increased rent, in his own name. He afterwards deposited the lease as security for money advanced to him, which he applied to his own purposes. The renewed lease contained no mention of the surrender, and the mortgagee did not know that the borrower was an executor, or that he was not the beneficial owner of the lease. He did not, however, make any inquiry into the title. An action was afterwards brought to administer the testator's estate, and a consent order was made for the sale of the leasehold property, without prejudice to any right, the mortgagee giving up the lease to facilitate the sale. He claimed to be paid the amount due to him by the executor out of the proceeds of sale:—Held, that the lease was in equity part of the testator's estate, and that the equity of the estate, being prior to the equity of the mortgagee, must prevail against it. Morgan, In re, Pillgrem v. Pillgrem, 50 L. J., Ch. 834; 18 Ch. D. 93; 45 L. T. 183—C. A. Affirming, 29 W. R. 733.

Held, also, that the equitable mortgagee was not injured by the order to give up the indenture of lease, and did not thereby acquire any claim upon the proceeds of the sale. Ib.

The rule that if an executor, who is also residuary legatee, sells or mortgages for his own purposes an asset of the testator for valuable consideration to a person who has no notice of unsatisfied debts of the testator, or of any ground which rendered it improper for the executor so to deal with the asset, the purchase or mortgage is valid against any unsatisfied creditor of the testator, applies even though such purchaser or mortgagee has thereby acquired only an equitable interest in the asset, if perfected by giving any necessary notice to the legal owner. This rule, however, does not apply when the executor, or the court administering the estate, still retains sufficient control over the asset to apply it for the benefit of creditors. Noble v. Brett (27 L. J., Ch. 516; 24 Beav. 499) and Hooper v. Smart (45 L. J., Ch. 99; 1 Ch. D. 90) distinguished. Graham v. Drummond, 65 L. J., Ch. 472; [1896] 1 Ch. 968; 74 L. T. 417; 44 W. R. 596.

Lis Pendens.]—A decree was made in a creditors' suit for the administration of the personal estate of a testator, but no receiver was appointed nor an injunction granted to restrain the executrix from dealing with the assets. More than two years after the decree, and nearly three years after the death of the testator, his executrix, who was also his sole legatee, opened an account with a bank, headed "E. G., executrix of B. G." In the following year, the account being overdrawn, she deposited with the bank a picture belonging to the testator's estate to secure the balance then due and further advances. The bankers did not know of the suit, and had no notice of any breach of duty on the part of the executrix:—Held, that the bank had a valid security on the picture, for that the doctrine of lis pendens had no application, a decree for administration without an injunction or appointment of a receiver not taking away the power of the executrix to deal with the assets. Berry v.

Fraudulent Mortgage.]—An administratrix, being indebted to an attorney for rent, executed to him a mortgage of leasehold property belonging to her intestate, which falsely recited that the sum of 300*l.* was paid as a consideration. The next of kin, not knowing the facts, were induced by misrepresentation to execute the mortgage; and the jury at the trial found that the deed had not been fairly obtained:—Held, that the mortgagee was not entitled to recover in ejectment against the next of kin, because of the fraud, nor against the administratrix, who was the widow of the intestate, because the accounts of the estate had not been wound up. Doe d. Woodhead v. Fallows, 2 C. & J. 481; 2 Tyr. 460; 1 L. J., Ex. 177.

Mortgage Deeds Forgeries.]—A son who was heir-at-law to his father, who was one of the executors and trustees of his father's will, though he had not proved the will, and whose christian names and description were identical with those of his father, after his father's death, executed mortgages of freehold and leasehold property of the father and applied the mortgage money to his own purposes. He handed over the title-deeds to the mortgagees. The transaction took place without the knowledge of his mother and sister, who were co-trustees and co-executrixes with him, and who had proved the will. The will had not been registered in the Middlesex registry, though the property was situate in that county. The mortgage deeds were registered. They purported to be executed by the absolute owner of the property, and the solicitor who acted for both parties believed the son to be the absolute owner. The son told him nothing about the father's will. The solicitor searched the Middlesex registry. The son took a beneficial interest under the trusts of the father's will. After the son's death the fraud was discovered, and the mother and sister, as trustees of the father's will, brought an action against the mortgagees, claiming a declaration that the mortgages were void against them, and delivery up of the title-deeds. The other beneficiaries under the will were made defendants:—Held, that the son in executing the mortgage deeds was personating his father; that the deeds were forgeries and passed nothing to the mortgagees, except the son's beneficial interest under the father's will; and that the mortgagees could obtain no title by virtue of the Middlesex Registry Act. Cooper, In re, Cooper v. Vesey, 51 L. J., Ch. 862; 20 Ch. D. 611; 47 L. T. 89; 30 W. R. 648.—C. A.

Semble, the son could have been convicted of forgery by reason of his executing the mortgage deeds. Ib.

Held also, that the mortgagees must deliver up the title-deeds to the plaintiffs. Since the Judicature Act the Chancery Division has jurisdiction on the application of the legal owner of title-deeds to order them to be delivered up by a purchaser for value without notice. McLeod v. Drummond (14 Ves. 353; 17 Ves. 152; 11 R. R. 41) distinguished. Ib.

After Settlement of Accounts between Next of Kin.]—A., B. and C., as the only next of kin with D., the administrator of their intestate father, signed a memorandum in 1872, authorising D. to borrow, upon mortgage or otherwise, as he might deem best, upon the security of certain house property, held by the intestate under an agreement for a lease to be granted on completion of repairs, such money as D. required for carrying out these matters, and to charge their respective shares with the interest. A lease of the houses was soon afterwards granted to D. as the sole legal personal representative of the intestate, which, with the memorandum, was shortly afterwards deposited by D. as a security for his own debt with E. In 1875, the administration accounts, shewing a balance due to D., was settled between A., B., C. and D. and D. then told A., B. and C. that he had not borrowed any money upon the security of their shares under the memorandum of 1872. In 1877, D., who had previously mortgaged his share of the house property to E., executed a further mortgage to him of the entirety, reciting the authority of 1872. No notice was given by E. to A., B. and C., that he held any charge upon their shares under the memorandum:—Held, that in the absence of any notice by E. to A., B. and C., of a charge to him of their shares by D. under the authority of 1872, the mortgage of 1877, after that authority had been withdrawn by the settlement of accounts, did not effect their shares, and that they were entitled to an assignment from E. of their shares of the property comprised in the lease, which had been mortgaged by D. Jones v. Stöhwasser, 50 L. J., Ch. 625; 16 Ch. D. 577; 44 L. T. 333; 29 W. R. 497.

(b) Alienation of Real Estate.

i. Sales.

With respect to wills coming into operation after 1st January, 1898, see powers conferred by the Land Transfer Act, 1897, vesting the real estate in the personal representative as if it were chattel real.

Power of Sale—Express or Implied.]—Executors have only power to sell real estate where expressly given, or necessarily to be implied from the produce being to pass through their hands in the execution of their office. Bentham v. Wiltshire, 4 Madd. 44; 20 R. R. 271.

—— Where Express.]—A., after directing all his debts to be paid, and bequeathing personal estate to his wife for life, devised a freehold house to her "for her natural life, with liberty to sell it in case a good offer is made, and invest the proceeds of it in the 5*l.* per cent. stock, for her benefit during her life." And in a subsequent part of the will he desired that "at the death of his wife the residue of his estate might be collected, including the proceeds of the house, and, if not previously sold, to be then disposed of to good advantage, to be divided as follows": He appointed his wife, the plaintiff and C., to be executrix and executors of his will. The plaintiff and the widow proved the will. C., the other executor, died in the lifetime of the widow. After the death of the widow, the plaintiff, the surviving executor, entered into a contract with the defendant for the sale of the house:—Held, that, whether there were or were not debts unpaid, and whether it was or was not uncertain whether any debts remained unpaid, the plaintiff had a power to sell and convey the house in fee-simple. Forbes v. Peacock, 11 M. & W. 630; 12 L. J., Ex. 460.

—— Exercise of Discretion.]—Where lands are charged by will with the payments of debts and legacies, and the executor has power to raise money for that purpose by the sale or mortgage of all or any of the testator's real estates, this is not a discretion which can be exercised arbitrarily or capriciously by the executor. Thomas v. Att.-Gen., 2 Y. & C. 525.

—— By way of Compromise.]—A testator, who carried on business in partnership with his brother, by his will dated the 23rd November, 1861, directed payment of his debts, and after bequeathing specific and pecuniary legacies, he devised and bequeathed all his real and leasehold and personal estate to trustees, upon trust for sale and conversion into money, and to hold the proceeds of sale on certain trusts. In 1872, the brother and the testator's widow, who was then the sole trustee and executrix of the will, joined in selling and conveying real estate, of which the brother and the testator had been tenants in common, and which was in fact partnership property, to a limited company who purchased the business. The purchase-money was to be paid partly in cash and partly in fully paid-up shares and debentures of the company. At the same time an arrangement was made for the handing over of the whole purchase-money to the bankers of the partnership, to whom the partnership was largely indebted, and whose debt was secured by mortgages of the partnership property, in satisfaction of the debt due to the bankers, the bankers undertaking to pay the other creditors of the partnership, and handing back to the executrix a sum of cash and some of the debentures, and providing certain other benefits for the brother. The conveyance of the real estate to the company contained a recital that the brother and the widow were entitled to the property in equal undivided moieties, and the widow purported to convey as trustee of her husband's will, but it was not stated in the deed that she was his executrix or that the property was partnership property. On a subsequent sale of the property by the company, the purchaser objected that the sale by the widow was not authorised by the trust for sale, the consideration not being entirely paid in money:—Held, that the arrangement as to the disposition of the purchase-money received from the company amounted to a compromise by the widow with the creditors and with the surviving partner into which it was competent to her as executrix to enter under s. 30 of the act 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145. West of England and South Wales Bank v. Murch, 52 L. J., Ch. 784; 23 Ch. D. 138; 48 L. T. 417; 31 W. R. 467.

And held on the authority of Corser v. Cartwright (L. R. 7 H. L. 731), that this being so, and the real estate being partnership property which the widow, as executrix was entitled to sell, and inasmuch as she, as trustee, had the legal estate, and as executrix was the proper person to receive the purchase-money, the sale to the company was a valid one and their title good. Ib. And see now Trustee Act, 1893, s. 21.

—— Administrator Durante minore ætate.]—An administrator durante minore ætate can exercise a power of sale given by a testator to his executor or administrator for the time being. Monsell v. Armstrong, 41 L. J., Ch. 715; L. R. 14 Eq. 423; 20 W. R. 921.

—— Administrator cum Testamento Annexo.]—Where persons have been appointed executors with power to sell real estate for the payment of debts, and they have renounced probate, an administratrix with the will annexed has no power to sell and to give a good title to a purchaser either under the general doctrines of the court or under the statute 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 16. Clay and Tetley, In re, 16 Ch. D. 3; 43 L. T. 402; 29 W. R. 5.

Renunciation of Probate—Powers of Renouncing and Acting Executor.]—A testatrix, seised of house property, held for lives renewable for ever, by her will devised the same to her brother M. B., in trust for the clothing and education of his children, and with complicated directions for his and their benefit. She then proceeded—"Should my brother wish to emigrate with his family, I leave to my executor J. L. full power to raise money on or sell those houses to enable him to do so; J. L. renounced probate of his will:—Held, that he could, notwithstanding, exercise the power of sale. Madden v. Madden, 23 L. R., Ir. 167.

A power in a will in the following form, viz.: "I direct that A., B. and C., the executors of this my will, or the survivors or survivor of them, or the executors or administrators of such survivor, shall sell my copyhold messuages": is within 21 Hen. 8, c. 4, authorising a sale by A. and B. on C. refusing to act, that act extending to copyholds. Peppercorn v. Wayman, 5 De G. & S. 230; 21 L. J., Ch. 827; 16 Jur. 794.

A testator by his will directed that his debts should be paid, and that his property (which included real estate) should be sold by his executors. One of the executors alone proved the will, the other renounced probate:—Held, that the acting executor could make a good title to real estate, and that he had power to sell and convey it. Fisher and Huslett, In re, 13 L. R., Ir. 546.

When Power Implied.]—A. devises his real and personal estate for payment of debts. The personal estate not being sufficient, the executors may sell the real estate, although no directions are given in the will as to who shall sell, and the money arising from the sale is legal assets in the hands of the executors. Blatch v. Wilder, 1 Atk. 420.

Executors held to have a power of sale, though others are directed to divide the proceeds. Daniel v. Ustiche, 2 Jur. 987.

A., the cestui que trust of lands in L., devises several legacies, "all which before-mentioned legacies, not limited to a continued payment, my will is, shall be paid within a year, if my lands in N. can be sold," and gives residue, after debts and legacies paid, to defendant, her executor:—Held, executors had power to sell. Elton v. Harrison, 2 Swanst. 276.

Testator directs his real and personal property to be sold and divided:—Held, that executors have an implied power to sell real estate. Tylden v. Hyde, 2 Sim. & S. 238; 25 R. R. 194.

Direction for the sale, in a given event, of an estate devised by the will, without expressing by whom it was to be sold, does not give a power of sale to the executors by implication. Patton v. Randall, 1 Jac. & Walk. 189.

A power of sale not expressly given to any one is not to be implied to the executors because the devisees of the estates are minors. Ib.

A testator directs that at a proper time his real estates be sold, and the money divided between A. and B., but makes no other devise of them. The executor is not entitled to sell them. Batho v. Fulton, 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 196.

Purchaser decreed to take a title under an obscure will, amounting to a power to sell; the legal estate, not being given, descends to the heir till execution of the power, and then passes to the vendee. Warneford v. Thompson, 3 Ves. 513.

A proviso in the will of R., that if his personal estate, and house, and lands at W., should not be sufficient to pay his debts, then his executors to raise the same out of the copyhold premises, enables them if the rents are not sufficient, to sell the copyhold lands to satisfy the testator's intention of paying his debts. Bateman v. Bateman, 1 Atk. 421.

Where a testator has charged his real estate with the payment of a sum of money, he is to be taken to have given an implied power of sale to someone. The donee of the power is to be ascertained from the whole of the will. Eidsforth v. Armstead, 2 Kay & J. 333; 25 L. J., Ch. 237; 4 W. R. 279.

A testator devised his real estate to the use of A. and B., during the life of C. (a married woman) upon trust for her, with remainder to the use of the right heirs of C., and charged such real estate with the payment of 700*l.* to D., on her attaining twenty-one:—Held, that A. and B., having occasion to sell the estate for the purpose of raising the amount, they had a power of sale during the life of C. Ib.

Testator devised all his goods, chattels, estate and effects, of what nature soever and wheresoever, not thereby otherwise disposed of, to his executors upon the trusts after mentioned. He then willed that all his debts, &c., should be paid, and that what remained of his personal effects should be appropriated for the benefit of his family, as his executors should think proper; next he willed that his family should be placed in his farm, subject to the direction and control of his executors, and that, when his youngest son attained twenty-one, it should be sold, and the produce divided amongst his wife and children:—Held, that the legal fee in the farm passed to the executors, and that they were entitled to sell it for payment of the testator's debts. King v. Shrives, 5 Sim. 461.

A testator, by his will, appointed A., B. and C. to be his executors, in trust to dispose of his property in the following way; he then directed that all his debts should be paid by his executors, and that the residue of his property, real and personal, should be disposed of by them at the time therein mentioned, save and except his estate at M., which he gave to A. for life, and at A.'s death to be disposed of as aforesaid:—Held, that A., B. and C. had a power of sale of the estate at M., and that it was not necessary for them to shew that there were any of the testator's debts left unpaid. Mather v. Norton, 21 L. J., Ch. 15; 16 Jur. 309.

A general devise and bequest of the testator's real and personal estate to A. for life, and after the decease of A. a devise of certain copyholds to B., and a direction that, on the decease of B., the copyholds should be sold, with a gift of the moneys arising by such sale amongst persons of certain classes who should be living at the death of B., share and share alike:—Held, to create a power of sale of the copyholds, by implication, in the executors of the testator; and that, apart from the power of sale, the executors would not be necessary parties to an administration suit, on the mere ground that the copyhold estate is by statute made assets to be administered in equity for the payment of debts, semble. Curtis v. Fulbrook, 8 Hare, 25; 19 L. J., Ch. 65; 13 Jur. 1044. But see S. C., corrected on the point of the implied power of sale, 8 Hare, 278. And see Haydon v. Wood, 8 Hare, 279, n.

Testator, after giving a general direction for payment of his debts, gave and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to his wife for life; and after her decease he directed all his real and personal estate to be sold, and the produce to be divided between the children of certain persons named in the will. And he directed that the purchaser or purchasers of any part of his real or personal estate should not be liable to see to the application of the purchase-money, and that the receipt or receipts of his executor, his heirs, executors and administrators, should be a sufficient discharge or sufficient discharges to the purchasers, and he appointed his wife and A. B. his executrix and executor:—Held, first, that the executrix and executor, or one of them, had an implied power, in case the testator died indebted, to sell the real estate for payment of the debts; secondly, that the executrix and executor having entered into a contract for the sale of parts of the estate, and it being shewn that at the time of the contract there were unsatisfied debts of the testator, the contract was valid; and, thirdly, that the purchaser was not bound to take the title without the concurrence of the heir-at-law. Gosling v. Carter, 1 Coll. C. C. 644; 14 L. J., Ch. 218; 9 Jur. 324.

A., after commencing his will with the statement that he thereby disposed of "all his worldly state and effects in manner following": directed payment of his debts, &c., out of his personal estate, and that his executors should sell "all his stocks, shares and securities, and such other part of his personal estate as was in its nature salable, and collect and get in all money due and owing to him, and all other his estate, and convert the same into money and stand possessed of the proceeds upon trust to pay debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and invest the residue upon the trusts therein declared." After the date of his will he became possessed of a freehold house. This house was put up for sale by his executrix, who in the absence of her co-executor (A.'s heir-at-law) in India, had alone proved the will:—Held, in a suit for specific performance against the purchaser, that the executrix had power, under the terms of the will, to sell the house; and that the expression of a contrary opinion by one of the conveyancing counsel of the court was not sufficient to induce the court to render the title unmarketable by refusing specific performance. Hamilton v. Buckmaster, 36 L. J., Ch. 58; L. R. 3 Eq. 323; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 986; 15 L. T. 177; 15 W. R. 149.

—— Devise to Trustees of Land Charged with Debts.]—A testamentary charge of real estates with the payment of debts generally, authorises a trustee to whom, after imposing the charge, the testator has devised the estates upon trust for other persons, to sell or mortgage the estates charged, and exempts the purchaser or mortgagee from liability to see to the application of the purchase- or mortgage-money. Ball v. Harris, 4 Myl. & C. 264; 8 L. J., Ch. 114; 3 Jur. 140. Affirming 8 Sim. 485; 1 Jur. 706.

A testator, after commencing his will with words amounting to a charge of his real estate with the payment of his debts, devised an advowson to trustees, upon trust to present his youngest son to the living when vacant, and, subject thereto, in trust to sell and apply the produce of the sale for the special purposes therein mentioned; and he devised his residuary real estate upon certain trusts to other trustees, and appointed three executors (who proved his will), one of whom was his youngest son, and another one of the trustees of the advowson. The personal estate being insufficient for the payment of his debts, the trustees of the advowson, one of whom was an executor, at the instance of the other executor, contracted to sell the advowson, before any vacancy had occurred in the living. In a suit for specific performance by the plaintiffs, the trustees of the advowson, and executors against the purchaser, it was held that the charge being in effect a devise of real estate, in trust to pay debts, a good title could be made by plaintiffs without institution of a suit to ascertain deficiency of personal estate, and that purchaser was not bound either to inquire whether other sufficient property ought first to be applied in payment of debts, or to see to the application of purchase-money. Shaw v. Borrer, 1 Keen, 559; 5 L. J., Ch. 364. And see also Stroughill v. Anstey, 1 De G. M. & G. 635; 22 L. J., Ch. 130; 16 Jur. 671.

The concurrence of executors having under a will an implied power of sale for payment of debts is not necessary to a conveyance by a devisee in trust for sale under the same will. Hodkinson v. Quinn, 1 John. & H. 303; 30 L. J., Ch. 118; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 65; 3 L. T. 804; 9 W. R. 197.

Therefore, where a testator devised real estate after his debts, &c., should be first paid thereout to trustees upon trust to sell after the decease of certain tenants for life:—Held, that the implied power of sale given to the executors did not make necessary their concurrence in the exercise by the trustees of their trust for sale. Ib.

A testator by his will, dated in 1858, gave all his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust, out of the proceeds of his personal estate, or if and so far as the same should be insufficient then out of the proceeds of his real estate, to pay his debts; and as to a certain house belonging to him, to permit his widow to occupy it during widowhood, and on her second marriage or death to sell the same. The usual decree for administration was made by the court, and the chief clerk found that all the debts had been paid out of the personal estate. By an order subsequently made, on further consideration of the cause, it was ordered (with the consent of the widow, who was still living), that the said house should be sold; and a contract for sale was entered into. The purchaser having objected that a good title could not be made:—Held, that the trustees had no power of sale, and that the objection was valid. Carlyon v. Truscott, 44 L. J., Ch. 186; L. R. 20 Eq. 348; 32 L. T. 50.

A testator gave all his real and personal estate to trustees, and directed them "out of the proceeds arising from the sale of any estates" to set apart a certain principal sum. As to all the rest, residue and remainder of any estate whatsoever and wheresoever and of what nature or kind soever, after payment of his debts, legacies, funeral expenses and the expenses of proving his will, the testator gave and bequeathed the same to a class of persons in equal shares and proportions:—Held, that a power of sale of the real estates was to be implied from the expressions in the will relating to the payment of debts, which amounted, in the opinion of the court, to a direct charge of the debts, legacies, &c. Flux v. Best, 31 L. T. 645; 23 W. R. 228.

Held, secondly, that a power of sale was to be implied for the purposes of the division of the residuary estate amongst the persons entitled thereto, the court being of opinion that the will directed the estate to be blended. Ib.

—— Beneficial Devise to Executor of Land subject to Debts.]—Whatever may be the effect of a general charge of debts as giving to the executors an implied power of sale, this implied power cannot be executed so as to override anything done by a devisee and executor, and to displace an estate which he had absolute power to convey and had in fact conveyed. Corser v. Cartwright, 45 L. J., Ch. 605; L. R. 7 H. L. 731. Affirming 29 L. T. 596; 21 W. R. 938.

In the case of a mortgage from such a devisee and executor, the circumstance that the solicitor of the mortgagee was also solicitor of the mortgagor, was held not to fix the mortgagee with constructive notice of an intended misapplication of the mortgage-money, the solicitor expressly denying that he knew of or suspected the intended misapplication. Ib.

In considering the validity of such a mortgage, it is not material that the mortgage deed does not on the face of it state the intention to apply the mortgage-money in payment of the debts. Ib.

A testator directed all his just debts to be paid, and in a subsequent part of his will devised freehold estates subject to the payment of all his just debts to one of his executors. The devisee mortgaged the freehold estates, and applied the mortgage-money for his own purposes, and afterwards became bankrupt. The executors of the will were not parties to the mortgage, but the mortgagee had no notice that the money was to be applied otherwise than for the payment of debts:—Held, that the devise of the freehold estates charged with the payment of debts controlled the prior general charge of debts; that the devisee, and not the executor, was the proper person to raise the money to pay the debts, and that the mortgagee having had no notice of the breach of trust, and being under no obligation to see to the application of the mortgage-money, had a good title, and was entitled to priority over the testator's creditors. Ib. L. R. 8 Ch. 971; 29 L. T. 596; 21 W. R. 938.

Where there is a general charge of debts, but no legal estate is given, the executors may have implied authority to convey the legal estate in order to raise the money to satisfy the charge; but where there is a devise of the legal estate to a particular person, and the estate is charged with payment of debts or legacies, the money must be raised through the instrumentality of the devisee, and he is the only person that can make a legal title. Colyer v. Finch, 5 H. L. Cas. 905; 26 L. J., Ch. 65; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 25.

—— Land charged with Debts beneficially Devised.]—Executors have no implied power of sale by reason of a legacy being charged on lands devised beneficially in fee or in tail. Rebbeck, In re, Bennett v. Rebbeck, 63 L. J., Ch. 596; 8 R. 376; 71 L. T. 74; 42 W. R. 473.

A testator directed his debts to be paid out of his real and personal estates; he then devised his freehold lands to trustees for 500 years, and subject to that, he gave all his real and personal estate to his five sons, their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, upon condition that they should proportionately contribute to the payment of his debts, legacies, &c., on failure of which the trustees of the term were to raise out of the rents, or by mortgage or sale of the shares of the defaulting son, as much money as the son ought to have paid. The testator appointed his five sons executors, and two of them, after the death of their three brothers, sold a portion of the estates:—Held, that the executors had an implied power of sale under the direction to pay debts, and that a contract entered into by them after the death of their three brothers, and thirty-one years after the decease of the testator, was valid, and a decree was made for specific performance. Wrigley v. Sykes, 20 Beav. 337; 25 L. J., Ch. 458; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 78; 4 W. R. 228.

A testator devised lands for life, with contingent remainders over, and then devised other lands to another tenant for life, with contingent remainders over, and charged the latter lands with the payment of a mortgage on the former lands, and also with his debts generally, but gave no express power of sale:—Held, that the executor took a power of sale by implication, and that after a sale of the latter lands by the executor, the devisees of the former had no equity against the purchaser in respect of the charge of the mortgage debt. Robinson v. Lowater, 5 De G. M. & G. 272; 23 L. J., Ch. 641; 18 Jur. 363; 2 W. R. 394.

A testator devised to his brother all his estate, by discharging all his bequests and just debts; if not, the estate was to be sold by auction at the discretion of his executors; and he wished them to discharge his just debts:—Held, that the executors took no interest in the testator's real estate, but had merely a power to sell. Thompson v. Todd, 15 Ir. Ch. R. 337.

A testator directed his executors to pay his debts, &c., and after bequests of sums of money, some of which were to be invested by the executors for the benefit of the beneficiaries, devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate to his wife and four daughters, "in manner and form following." He then directed that the residue of his real and personal estate should be equally divided between his wife and daughters, and that his wife should enjoy her share for life; and that after her death his surviving executor should distribute her share among his daughters, or if a daughter should not survive his wife, such daughter's share should be distributed among her children; and he appointed an executor and an executrix, the latter being his wife, "to act jointly in carrying out all the intentions" of his will. After the death of the testator and his wife, and while the pecuniary bequests were still not fully satisfied, the surviving executor contracted to sell a part of the residuary realty:—Held, that he could sell the realty and pass the legal estate therein and make a good title thereto. Oates d. Markham v. Cooke (3 Burr. 1684), and Anthony v. Rees (2 C. & J. 75), considered and followed. Davies to Jones, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 720; 24 Ch. D. 190; 49 L. T. 624.

Implied Power.]—An executor has no implied power to sell or mortgage land which descends to the heir, charged simpliciter with the payment of debts. Doe d. Jones v. Hughes, 6 Ex. 223; 20 L. J., Ex. 148. Sed quære, see cases, col. 1270, ante.

With Power of Sale.]—An executor may create a mortgage of his testator's property, with power of sale. Cruickshank v. Duffin, 41 L. J., Ch. 317; L. R. 13 Eq. 555; 26 L. T. 121; 20 W. R. 354.

By Executor, Devisee of Real Estate charged with Debts.]—A testator devised his real estate, charged with the payment of his debts and legacies, to his eldest son, in fee, and appointed him executor. Nine years after the testator's death, the devisee, being then in possession, mortgaged the estate, and covenanted against all incumbrances except the legacies. In a suit subsequently instituted by one of the legatees for payment of his legacy, the estate was sold, and the proceeds proved insufficient to satisfy the testator's unpaid debts and legacies, together with the mortgage-money:—Held, that the mortgagee's title was complete, subject only to the amount of the legacies, and therefore, that after reserving the amount of the legacies, the mortgagee was entitled to the residue of the fund as a security for his debt, and that the amount so reserved was assets of the testator unadministered, and was therefore to be applied, first in satisfaction of his debts, and then, so far as it would extend, in payment of his legacies. Eland v. Eland, 4 Myl. & C. 420; 8 L. J., Ch. 289; 3 Jur. 474. See also Ball v. Harris, 8 Sim. 485; 4 Myl. & C. 264; 8 L. J., Ch. 114; 1 Jur. 706.

When an executor mortgages property, devised or bequeathed to him absolutely, as a security for his own antecedent debt, and the mortgagee has notice that there are debts of the devisor and testator unpaid, the property mortgaged still remains assets of the testator. Hall v. Andrews, 27 L. T. 195; 20 W. R. 799.

A., after becoming surety for B. to a bank, died, leaving a will, by which he appointed B. his executor, and left all his personal and real estate (charged with his debts) to B.'s wife. At A.'s death B. owed the bank a considerable sum. Shortly afterwards B. and his wife mortgaged to the bank real and personal estate forming part of A.'s assets, as a security for the money then owing by B. Subsequently B. became bankrupt. In a suit for the administration of A.'s estate, instituted by a creditor:—Held, that as the bank had notice that the property comprised in the mortgage had formed part of A.'s assets, all moneys realised under it came from his estate. Ib.

For Payment of Debt to Testator's Firm, subject to Bequeathed Annuities — Creditors — Annuitant.]—By the marriage settlement of W., an annuity of 800*l.* Jamaica currency was settled on his wife for life, and was subsequently charged on an estate of W. in that island. W. afterwards made his will, whereby he charged his estate in a certain manner with the payment of his debts, and then, after reciting the settlement, and that he was desirous of making a larger provision for his wife, he gave her a rent-charge of 2,000*l.* per annum for life, which he charged on the R. estate, and which was to be in lieu of all dower and thirds. Upon the death of W., the widow released her title, if any, to dower, and elected to take the 2,000*l.* annuity, and payments were made to her on account of it by the executors. W., however, being at his death largely indebted to the firm of W. & Co., of which he was a partner, that debt was paid by his executors by means of a mortgage of the R. estate, and by the terms of the mortgage deed the mortgagee was to hold the estate subject to the several annuities given by the will of W., but freed and discharged of and from the debts and legacies charged upon the premises by the will, and of and from all other charges and incumbrances whatsoever. The assets of W. turned out to be insufficient for payment of all his debts:—Held, that a portion of the payments made by the executors to the widow must be ascribed to the annuity of 800*l.* Jamaica currency, and were to that extent good, but that the residue of such payments were not good against the creditors of W.:—Held, also, there being certain arrears of the annuity of 2,000*l.*, and a fund in court arising from the produce of the R. estate, that as to that part of the fund which was not applicable to the portion of the annuity representing the annuity of 800*l.* currency, the creditors of W. had priority over the mortgagee as well as over the executors of the widow. Lyon v. Colville, 1 Coll. C. C. 449.

Under Lord St. Leonards' Act—Devise by way of Settlement.]—Section 18 of Lord St. Leonards' Act does not apply to a case where a testator has devised his real estate, by way of settlement, to a person or persons for life, with remainders over. The meaning of that section is, that where a testator has devised his whole estate and interest directly to A. or to A. and B., or any number of persons as tenants in common, or joint-tenants in fee or in tail, so that the devisee or devisees can themselves mortgage the property, then the executors are not to have the power. But where the estate is devised by way of settlement, so that there is no individual or individuals who are able to make a title to a mortgage, then that is a case to which s. 16 (whereby executors are empowered to mortgage a testator's real estate for payment of debts or legacies) was intended to apply. A testator, by his will, appointed certain persons therein named executors and trustees thereof, and after making certain specific devises and bequests, he devised and bequeathed all the residue of his real and personal estate subject to his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and to the legacies thereinbefore bequeathed, unto and equally between his twin sons for life, with remainders over. The executors mortgaged a portion of the residuary real estate:—Held, that this was a case in which s. 16 was applicable, and that the mortgage was a perfectly valid one. Wilson, In re, Pennington v. Payne, 54 L. T. 600; 34 W. R. 512.

Express Powers — Mortgage for "Full or Valuable Consideration" — Priority of Mortgage to Legacy.]—A. died in 1866, appointing his two sons (his partners) trustees and executors. He gave 5,000*l.* in trust for his daughters and their children, charged on all his estate. He empowered his trustees to retain the 5,000*l.* in their business as long as they might reasonably require or wish, and subject to that option, and as soon as they conveniently could, they were to invest it otherwise. He gave all his residue to his sons, and declared, if they should sell or charge any part of the real estate for a "full or valuable consideration," it should not be liable in the hands of the purchaser, to the legacy. Certain freehold business premises belonged to A. and his sons, in common, subject to a mortgage for 2,000*l.* In 1878 the sons mortgaged these premises to R., to secure past and future advances. No fresh advance was made at the time. Out of previous advances the sons had (without any stipulation to that effect by R.) paid off the 2,000*l.* mortgage and taken a reconveyance to themselves. Other part of such advance they had applied in extending their business:—Held, that the mortgage to R. was a charge for a valuable consideration within the terms of the will; that the testator had made his sons the sole judges of the length of time during which it was reasonable to keep the amount of the legacies in the business: and in the absence of mala fides the mortgage to R. had priority for the whole amount due on it to the charge of the 5,000*l.* Redman v. Rymer, 65 L. T. 270—C. A.

—— "Sale and Arrangements," Power to make—Mortgage.]—A testator, after appointing two persons executors and trustees of his will, directed "that the trustees for the time being of my will shall have full power to settle my accounts and wind up my affairs as they or he shall think fit, and in so doing to make any sales and arrangements they or he shall judge expedient." And the testator devised and bequeathed all his real and residuary personal estate unto and to the use of his trustees upon the trusts therein declared. Shortly after the testator's death, one of the trustees named in the will (the other having renounced probate and disclaimed the trusts thereof) raised a sum of 500*l.* by a mortgage of a portion of the testator's real estate for the purpose of satisfying some pressing claims against the testator's estate:—Held, that the mortgage was authorised by the terms of the will. Jones, In re, Dutton v. Brookfield, 59 L. J., Ch. 31; 61 L. T. 661; 38 W. R. 90.

Notice of Breach of Trust — Circumstances amounting to—Consequences.]—An executor and devisee in trust having paid off all the debts of his testator borrowed 1,000*l.* from B., upon deposit of the title deeds of the estate, alleging that the money was required to pay debts, but 150*l.*, part of the 1,000*l.*, was taken out in wine. The debt was paid off, and subsequently, seventeen years after the death of the testatrix, another sum of 1,000*l.* was borrowed in the same manner from B. by the executor, who agreed to purchase 200*l.* worth of wine. The executor also agreed to execute a legal mortgage when called upon to do so. The mortgagee assigned his security, and a legal mortgage was then executed. Upon a bill filed against the representative of that mortgagee:—Held, that the nature of the original transaction was sufficient proof that the money was not borrowed by the executor for payment of debts, and the assignee from B. the original mortgagee could not stand in a better position than B. himself, and the mortgage was therefore declared void. Burt v. Trueman, 29 L. J., Ch. 902; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 721; 8 W. R. 635.

A. devised real estate to trustees for eight hundred years, to raise money sufficient for payment of such of his debts and legacies as his personal estate should be insufficient to pay, and declared that the receipts of the trustees should be valid discharges. Subject to the term, he gave the estate to his sons B. and T., whom he appointed executors, B. being one of the trustees of the term, and the only one who acted in the trust. The personal estate at his death was sufficient for the payment of his debts and legacies. The debts and all but two of the legacies were paid, but the executors spent the rest of the personal estate, and became bankrupts:—Held, that the real estate, as against mortgagees, was subject to the two unpaid legacies. Howard v. Chaffer, 32 L. J., Ch. 686; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 767; 9 L. T. 243; 11 W. R. 1057.

R. and B. advanced 1,000*l.* to B. and T. on the security of the term and the fee, and in the mortgage deed it was stated that the trusts of the term had not been performed, and that the sum of 1,000*l.* was paid to B. as trustee of the term:—Held, that R. and B. were aware that the money was not advanced for the purposes of the trust, and that their security was subject to the unpaid legacies. Ib.

S. advanced 500*l.* to B. and T. on the security of the term and the fee, and in the mortgage deed it was stated that all the debts and legacies had been raised or provided for:—Held, that the debts having been paid, the mortgagee was bound to see that the legacies were satisfied, and that his security was subject to the unpaid legacies. Ib.

B. and T., as executors, had signed two legacy duty office receipts for the two legacies:—Held, that this did not amount to an appropriation by the executors of the sums required for the legacies so as to discharge the real estate. Ib.

An executor, who was also devisee, subject to a charge of debts, mortgaged, by one and the same deed, real estate of the testator, and property belonging to himself personally. Subsequently he again mortgaged part of the testator's property; and by a contemporaneous deed made between the same parties, and for the same sum, mortgaged property of his own:—Held, that these circumstances were not in themselves sufficient to rebut the ordinary presumption of law; that the executor must be taken to have been acting in the due discharge of his duty; and that therefore the mortgagees must be satisfied out of the mortgaged estates in priority to the creditors of the testator. Barrow v. Griffith, Barrow v. Newman, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 6; 13 W. R. 41.

Persons who under a will were executors and also beneficial devisees subject to debts and legacies, borrowed money on mortgage of the devised real estate. The testator's property proved insufficient, apart from the premises thus charged, to pay his debts; and a bill was filed by a creditor, seeking to have the mortgagees postponed to the testator's unsatisfied creditors, and stating circumstances in the transactions respecting the loan leading to the implication that the mortgagors had been dealt with as beneficial owners rather than as executors. On an appeal from an order of Vice-Chancellor Stuart, overruling a general demurrer founded on the proposition that in order to postpone the mortgagees, they must be fixed with actual knowledge that the money was not wanted for payment of debts and legacies:—Held, that a sufficient primâ facie case had been stated to entitle the plaintiffs to call for an answer, and that the demurrer must be overruled, without costs, reserving the benefit of the defence to the hearing. Collingwood v. Russell, 34 L. J., Ch. 22; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1062; 11 L. T. 322; 13 W. R. 63—L.JJ.

Semble, the fact that, in the dealings for a loan, executors who happen to be also beneficial owners have been treated with in their latter character, is not sufficient ground for inferring that the money was not borrowed to pay the testator's debts. Ib.

A testator charged his debts and legacies upon his estate generally, and devised and bequeathed the residue to his six sons as tenants in common, giving his executors power of sale. One of the sons, who was the only acting executor, was in partnership with another person, and paid debts of the testator with moneys advanced by the partnership; he also purchased the residuary shares of several of his brothers, and he borrowed money from the plaintiff, and deposited with him the title deeds of real and leasehold estates of the testator by way of security for the same, with a note, undertaking to make over such property to the plaintiff when required. The partnership became bankrupts, and a deed was made, conveying the residuary estate of the testator to trustees upon trust, among other things, to repay to the assignees of the bankrupts the advances made to the executor by the firm:—Held, in the circumstances of the case, that the contract for security between the plaintiff and the executor was not for an equitable mortgage of the testator's estate, comprised in the deposited deeds under the powers given to the executors by the will, but was a contract for an equitable mortgage of no more than the beneficial interest of the executor therein. That, although debts of the testator had been paid by means of the advances made by the partnership to the executor, and although the assignees of the bankrupts might possibly be entitled to stand in the places of the creditor so paid as against property still remaining in the hands of the executor, they could not so stand in the places of such creditors as to possess the rights which those creditors originally had of following the property of the testator, which had been alienated by the executor for his own purposes or benefit. That the plaintiff was entitled to have the estate of the testator marshalled so that the subsisting debts and charges thereon might be thrown in the first place on the residuary estate of the testator, not comprised in the original mortgage. Haynes v. Forshaw, 11 Hare, 93; 22 L. J., Ch. 1060; 17 Jur. 930; 1 W. R. 346.

Semble, no case goes so far as to decide that where an executor, having also an interest, aliens land of his testator, and afterwards borrows money for the purposes of the estate, the lender can come upon the lands aliened in the hands of the alienee. Ib.

Apart from Statute.]—On a purchase from an executor or other person having power to deal with real estate if there be no reason to infer that the executor is not selling for payment of debts, the purchaser is discharged from seeing to the application of the purchase-moneys. Secus, if the executor be selling for securing his own private debt, or otherwise for his own benefit. Haynes v. Forshaw, 11 Hare, 93; 22 L. J., Ch. 1060; 17 Jur. 930; 1 W. R. 346.

When a testator gives a power to mortgage his real estates in aid of the personal estate, a person dealing with his sole acting executrix is not bound to see to the application of money advanced to her and secured by mortgage of real estate of the testator. Farhall v. Farhall, 38 L. J., Ch. 281; L. R. 7 Eq. 286; 17 W. R. 350.

A testator gave A. a power to mortgage the whole or any portion of his real estate in aid of his personal estate. His sole acting executrix opened an executorship account with his bankers. She, having overdrawn this account, and being required by the bank to find security, mortgaged real estate of the testator to secure the balance due and future advances. She expended most of the money on her own personal expenses, and those of her children:—Held, that the bank was not bound to see to the application of the money advanced to her; and, therefore, on a claim being sent in by the bankers, under a decree for administration, for their balance, that they were entitled to receive it out of the estate. Ib.

—— Where General Charge of Debts and Legacies.]—If lands are devised for payment of debts in a schedule, purchaser is bound to see to application of purchase-money; but if trust be general to pay debts, though he has notice of them, he is not so bound. Abbot v. Gibbs, 1 Eq. Abr. 358. And see Dunch v. Kent, 1 Vern. 260. S. P., Walker v. Flamstead, 2 Ken. Ch. 57. Rogers v. Skillicorne, Ambl. 188. Jenkins v. Hiles, 6 Ves. 654, n.; 6 R. Where land is directed by will to be sold generally, and the money to form part of the personal estate, the purchaser is not bound to see to the application of the money. Smith v. Guyon, 1 Bro. C. C. 186.

Whether the rule, that where there is a general charge of debts not scheduled, a purchaser is not to see to the application, holds where the purchase is not from the original trustees, but from others to whom they conveyed, quære. An objection upon the distinction was overruled upon circumstances. Braybroke (Lord) v. Inskip, 8 Ves. 417; 7 R. R. 106.

Generally, a purchaser from an executor, not bound by his misapplication of the money, nor in many cases even of pledge, if free from fraud or direct evidence on the face of the transaction of an intended misapplication. M'Leod v. Drummond, 17 Ves. 154; 11 R. R. 41. See also Whale v. Booth, 4 Term Rep. 625, n.; 2 R. R. 483, n.

Where the purchase-money is to be laid out again by the trustees generally, the purchaser need not look to the application. Doran v. Wiltshire, 3 Swanst. 699; 19 R. R. 287.

Mortgagee or purchaser from executor of land charged is not generally bound to see to the disposition of the trust fund; but where, in the transaction, there is intrinsic evidence of breach of trust, and that the mortgagee or purchaser must have been aware of it, such land will still remain charged and liable. Watkins v. Cheek, 2 Sim. & S. 199; 25 R. R. 181.

—— General Charge of Debts and Legacies—Payment of Debts, effect of.]—Where an estate is charged generally with the payment of debts and legacies, and the debts have been paid, but not the legacies, the purchaser will not be bound to see to the application of the purchase-money, unless it be proved that he knew of the payment of the debts; and the taking of a general bond of indemnity, or of a bond of indemnity against the legacies only, will not raise the inference that he knew of such payment. Johnson v. Kennett, 3 Myl. & K. 624. Reversing 6 Sim. 384.

The rule relieving a purchaser from seeing to the application of his purchase-money, where there is a general charge of debts and legacies, has reference to the state of things at the death of the testator; and if the debts are afterwards paid, leaving the legacies charged, that circumstance cannot vary the rule. Eland v. Eland, 4 Myl. & C. 420; 8 L. J., Ch. 289.

The rule which relieves a purchaser from seeing to the application of the purchase-money when the estate is subject to a primary general charge of debts, has reference to the time of the testator's death, and does not cease to be applicable though the debts be subsequently paid; and therefore, where an estate so charged was sold by the trustee, it was held that the cestuis que trustent were not necessary parties to the conveyance, though the sale did not take place till twenty-five years after the testator's death, and the vendor, on being asked by the purchaser whether all the debts were not paid, had refused to answer the question. Forbes v. Peacock, 1 Ph. 717; 15 L. J., Ch. 31. Reversing 12 Sim. 528; 13 L. J., Ch. 46; 7 Jur 688. S. C., at law, 11 M. & W. 630; 12 L. J., Ex. 460. And see 6 Jur. 476. And see Tanqueray-Willaume and Landau, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 434; 20 Ch. D. 465; 46 L. T. 542; 30 W. R. 801—C. A.

The rule of courts of equity as to the non-liability of a purchaser to see to the application of the purchase-money, where a trustee is selling an estate which has been charged by the will with debts and legacies, does not depend upon the existence of debts, but upon an implied declaration of the testator that he means to intrust his trustees with the exclusive power of receiving the money, and of absolving the purchaser or mortgagee from seeing to the application of it; and this power does not cease by there being no debts. Stroughill v. Anstey, 1 De G. M. & G. 635; 22 L. J., Ch. 130; 16 Jur. 671.

If it appears that a man is himself the trustee as well as owner of the property, if it absolutely appears that he is raising money not for the payment of the obligation with which it is charged, there the purchaser or mortgagee will be bound to see to the application of the purchase-money. Ib.

If it clearly appears that a man is not meaning to execute his trust, but endeavouring to do something for his own personal benefit, which cannot go to the trust, that cannot be deemed a good execution of the trust, so as to absolve the purchaser from seeing to the application of the money. Ib.

If authority be given to sell for the payment of debts and legacies, and the purchaser knows that the debts are paid, he is not bound to see to the application of the purchase-money. Ib.

If a trust be created for the payment of debts and legacies, the purchaser or mortgagee is in no case bound to see to the application of the purchase-money. Ib.

Persons who deal with trustees at a considerable distance of time, without an apparent reason for raising money, must be considered under some obligation to inquire into the bonâ fides of the trustees. Distinction between a trustee raising money after a distance of time where he is merely a trustee, and where the trustee is also entitled to the estate subject to the charge. Ib.

—— Devise in Trust to pay Debts or Subject to Debts.]—A testator, after commencing his will with words amounting to a charge of his real estate with the payment of his debts, devised an advowson to trustees, upon trust to present his youngest son to the living when vacant, and subject thereto in trust to sell and apply the produce of the sale for the special purposes therein mentioned, and he devised his residuary real estate upon certain trusts to other trustees, and appointed three executors (who proved his will), one of whom was his youngest son, and another one of the trustees of the advowson. The personal estate being insufficient for the payment of his debts, the trustees of the advowson, one of whom was an executor, at the instance of the other executors, contracted to sell the advowson before any vacancy had occurred in the living. In a suit for specific performance by the plaintiffs, the trustees of the advowson and executors, against the purchaser, it was held that the charge being in effect a devise of real estate in trust to pay debts, a good title could be made by plaintiffs without institution of a suit to ascertain deficiency of personal estate, and that purchaser was not bound either to inquire whether other sufficient property ought first to be applied in payment of debts, or see to the application of purchase-money. Shaw v. Borrer, 1 Keen, 559 ; 5 L. J., Ch. 364.

A devise in trust, subject to payment of debts, gives the trustee a power to mortgage for the purpose of paying debts ; and where the trustee says the money is wanted for such purpose, the lender is not bound to inquire further. Ball v. Harris, 8 Sim. 485 ; 4 Myl. & C. 264 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 114 ; 1 Jur. 706.

There is no distinction between annuities and other legacies, as to the right or duty of a purchaser to inquire into the satisfaction of such charges, where the estate sold is by the will first charged with the debts, and then with the annuities. And it was held, that the purchaser had no right to require the concurrence of the annuitants, even in a case where the devisee selling, who was also executor, admitted by his answer that the personalty was sufficient for the payment of the debts. Page v. Adam, 4 Beav. 269 ; 10 L. J., Ch. 407 ; 5 Jur. 793.

A testator ordered his debts to be paid by his executors, and after giving legacies he gave the residue of his real and personal estate, subject as aforesaid, to A., and he appointed A. and B. executors :—Held, that if the legacies were charged on the real estate, the debts must also be charged thereon, and that therefore A. was able to give valid receipts for the purchase-money of the real estate, which relieved a purchaser from the necessity of seeing to its application. Dowling v. Hudson, 17 Beav. 248.

E., by will, appointed R. and T. trustees and executors of her will, and she gave to them and the survivor 2,000*l.* upon trust to invest it, and pay the produce to her daughter for life, with remainder to her children, and in default of children, or descendants of a child, who should attain a vested interest, in trust for R. She also gave her residuary real and personal estate, "subject to the payment of her debts and legacies," to R. absolutely. R. died ; and T., by a deed, which recited that all debts and legacies had been paid, conveyed the testatrix's real estate to the devisees of R. The plaintiff purchased the rectory of J. It was objected that there was no proof that the debts and legacies were paid, and it was found that the 2,000*l.* had not been duly invested :—Held, that the devisees made a good title to the vendor, without proving that the debts and legacies were paid as stated by the recital in the deed conveying the estate to them ; and that a purchaser from them was not bound to make inquiries into the payment. Storry v. Walsh, 18 Beav. 559 ; 27 L. J., Ch. 338 ; 18 Jur. 503.

Semble, that where a devisee of a real estate, charged with payment of debts, sells the real estate, the purchaser is not bound to inquire (unless special circumstances call for such an inquiry) whether the money is applied in the payment of debts, or whether the sale was intended for that purpose. Colyer v. Finch, 5 H. L. Cas. 905 ; 26 L. J., Ch. 65 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 25.

An executor, who is also a devisee of an estate charged with the payment of debts, may be presumed by a bonâ fide purchaser or mortgagee of that estate to be dealing with it for the purposes of the administration, and may give a valid title to it. Such purchaser or mortgagee, therefore, will not be bound to look to the application of the money. Corser v. Cartwright, 45 L. J., Ch. 605 ; L. R. 7 H. L. 731.

Mere absence of statement of the purpose for which the money obtained by the sale or mortgage is to be used will not make the purchaser or mortgagee liable, on the ground of a presumed knowledge that the money was to be applied otherwise than for the payment of the testator's debts. Ib.

On a creditor of the testator, who impeaches the validity of the mortgage or purchase, lies the burthen of proving that the mortgagee or purchaser had notice of the true state of the facts. Ib.

A testator having charged his real estate with the payment of his debts, devised it subject to his debts to A., his executor and trustee beneficially. A. being also possessed in his own right of another estate, which was then subject to a mortgage for 1,000*l.*, executed a mortgage of both estates for 3,000*l.* The mortgage recited the will of the testator, and expressed that part of the mortgage money was to be applied in redemption of the mortgage of the trustee's private estate, and A. covenanted to pay the 3,000*l.* :—Held, that the circumstances were not such as to render it incumbent on the mortgagee to see to the application of the part of the money which was not applied in liquidation of the mortgage on A.'s estate. Shalcross v. Dixon, 7 L. J., Ch. 180.

—— Where Particular Debts charged.]—Where lands are to be sold for payment of particular debts, the purchaser must take care to see his purchase-money rightly applied; but if more is sold than is sufficient to pay the debts, that shall not turn to the prejudice of the purchaser. Spalding v. Shalmer, 1 Vern. 301.

Objection to title by a purchaser, under a trust to sell, as bound to see to the application of the money in satisfaction of scheduled creditors and others, coming in within a limited time after the date of the deed or disabilities removed, overruled, upon the tenor of the deed implying that the receipt of the trustees should be a discharge. Balfour v. Welland, 16 Ves. 151.

The doctrine as to binding a purchaser to see to the application of the money by trustees, has been extended further than any sound equitable principle will warrant. Id. 156.

Mortgagees with notice of a specific charge for payment of debts upon devised estates, were:—Held, notwithstanding releases of the executors to the devisees (such devisees being themselves two of the executors, and the releases not shewing that the charge had been raised and paid), to be bound to see to the application of the mortgage money. Braithwaite v. Britain, 1 Keen, 206.

When lands are sold subject to bond, or other specialty debts, this court presumes that the money is to be applied in payment of those debts, and that the sale is made with that view, and the purchaser will be discharged. But it is a different case when the parties are purchasers for valuable but not money consideration under a settlement pendente lite; and the creditors are entitled to follow the lands in the hands of such purchasers, semble. Higgins v. Shaw, 2 Dr. & War. 356; 1 Con. & L. 400.

Under a trust to pay a specified debt of the testator, and debts generally, a purchaser of the estate is not bound to see the specified debt paid. Robinson v. Lowater, 17 Beav. 592. Affirmed, 5 De G. M. & G. 272; 23 L. J., Ch. 641; 18 Jur. 363; 2 W. R. 394.

—— Power to give Receipts.]—The question whether an executor or trustee who sells an estate, can give a good receipt for the purchase-money, is not a question of conveyance but of title. Forbes v. Peacock, 12 Sim. 528; 13 L. J., Ch. 46; 7 Jur. 688. And see S. C., 6 Jur. 476. And on appeal, 1 Ph. 717; 15 L. J., Ch. 371.

The doctrine of Forbes v. Peacock (supra) amounts only to this, that where prior to 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, there is a trust to sell real estate, and pay debts and legacies out of the proceeds, there is also an implied power in the trustees to give receipts for the purchase-money. There is nothing in that case authorising trustees, by reason merely of such a charge, to sell a settled estate. Carlyon v. Truscott, 44 L. J., Ch. 186; L. R. 20 Eq. 348; 32 L. T. 50.

A testator by his will, dated the 4th September, 1858, devised his real and personal estate to trustees upon trusts to pay debts, and subject thereto upon trust as to a freehold house to allow his wife to reside there during her widowhood, and on her death or second marriage, upon trust for sale. The testator died in the same year. An administration suit was instituted, and the chief clerk found that all the debts were paid. The court afterwards decreed a sale of the estate in question, and the purchaser raised the objection that the widow being still alive, the order was beyond the jurisdiction of the court:—Held, that the court had no power to make the order. Ib.

Where there is a power of sale for the purpose of making certain payments, a power to give receipts and discharges may be inferred. Greville v. Browne, 7 H. L. Cas. 689; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 849; 7 W. R. 673.

Testator devised his estates to trustees in trust to sell, and declared their receipts to be sufficient discharges; and he directed his trustees to complete any contracts for the sale of his estates, entered into during his lifetime, and remaining incomplete at his death:—Held, that his executor was the proper party to give receipts for the purchase-moneys of the estates contracted to be sold by the testator. Eaton v. Sanxter, 6 Sim. 517; 3 L. J., Ch. 197.

A testator, "in case his personal estate should be insufficient for the payment of his debts," charged them upon his real estate:—Held, that the executor had an implied power to sell and give valid receipts for the purchase-money without shewing the insufficiency of the personal estate. Greetham v. Colton, 34 Beav. 615; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 848; 13 L. T. 34; 13 W. R. 1009.

Held, also, that the lapse of thirteen years between the death and the sale did not affect the executor's power. Ib.

47 Geo. 3, c. 74, s. 2.]—Where legacies were charged on the real estate of trader, and his devisee and executor sold part of the real estates before the debts were paid:—Held, that purchasers, notwithstanding the 47 Geo. 3, s. 2, c. 74, were liable to see to application of purchase-money. Horne v. Horne, 2 Sim. & S. 448; 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 52.

3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104.]—Where real estate is, under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, assets for the payment of a simple contract debt, a purchaser of that estate, having notice of such debt, is not bound to see that his purchase-money is applied in payment thereof. Jones v. Noyes, 28 L. J., Ch. 47; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1033; 7 W. R. 21.

Where a deceased owner was lunatic, the fact that the simple contract creditor was the committee of his estate, and that the debt was due in respect of such committeeship, does not alter the case. Ib.

Inquiry as to Existence of Debts—Lapse of Time, Effect of.]—Persons who deal with trustees raising money at a considerable distance of time, and without apparent reason for so doing, are under an obligation to inquire and see that no breach of trust is being committed. Stroughill v. Anstey, 1 De G. M. & G. 635; 22 L. J., Ch. 130; 16 Jur. 671.

S. devised all his real and personal estate to G., his heirs, &c., charged with his debts; plaintiffs were bond creditors, and received their interest of G., as executor, regularly for sixteen years, but never asked for the principal, and G. during this interval made several sales of the testator's estate:—Held, that the purchaser shall not be disturbed after a quiet possession of so many years. Elliott v. Merriman. 2 Atk. 41 ; Barnard. 78.

Where a testator had expressly directed payment of his debts, and the executor, after a lapse of twenty-seven years from the death of the testator, exercised the implied power of sale thereby given, although the parties beneficially entitled had been in possession, by the permission of the legal representative, for nine years, and the executor refused to answer a requisition whether there were any debts of the testator still unpaid, the court refused to disturb the established rule that the executor can, without shewing that there are debts unpaid, make a good title to the property sold, and absolve the purchaser from liability to see to the application of the purchase-money. Sabin v. Heape, 27 Beav. 553 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 79 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1146 ; 1 L. T. 51 ; 8 W. R. 120.

A testator, "in case his personal estate should be insufficient for the payment of his debts," charged them upon his real estate :—Held, that the executor had an implied power to sell and give valid receipts for the purchase-money without shewing the insufficiency of the personal estate. Greetham v. Colton, 34 Beav. 615 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 848 ; 13 L. T. 34 ; 13 W. R. 1009.

Held, also, that the lapse of thirteen years between the death and the sale did not affect the executor's power. Ib.

Where executors in whom the legal fee is vested are selling real estate charged with debts, a purchaser is not bound or entitled to inquire whether debts remain unpaid, unless twenty years have elapsed from the testator's decease. Tunqueray-Willaume and Landau, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 434 ; 20 Ch. D. 465 ; 30 W. R. 801—C. A. Reversing 45 L. T. 281. See also Forbes v. Peacock, 1 Ph. 715 ; 15 L. J., Ch. 371.

5. Other Dealings.

Insurance of Trust Property.]—An executor is not bound to insure or continue the insurance of his testator's property against fire. Bailey v. Gould, 4 Y. & C. 221 ; 9 L. J., Ex. Eq. 43.

Upon a reference to the master to inquire what sums executors might have received but for their wilful default, the master has no authority to charge executors neglecting to insure with the amount of the policy for which the testator to the time of his death was accustomed to insure premises which, in the hands of the executors, are destroyed by fire. Ib.

A testator, as lessee, was bound to insure. The insurance expired on the 25th March, and he died on the 27th, without having paid the premium. The premium was not paid by his executors, and the house was burnt down on the 26th May :—Held, that the executors were not personally liable for not having kept up the insurance. Fry v. Fry, 27 Beav. 146 ; 28 L. J., Ch. 593 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1047.

Leaseholds—Renewals.]—Lessor covenanted to renew the lease at the request of the lessee within the term. Lessee did not request, but executors do within the term ; lessor is compellable to renew. Hyde v. Skinner, 2 P. W. 196.

A testator directed his executors to get in and convert all his real and personal estate, invest the same from time to time, and pay and divide the interest and dividends to two tenants for life, with benefit of survivorship. At the death of survivor to convert the whole, and to pay and divide the same amongst his nephews and nieces, naming them. Part of his personal estate consisted of leaseholds for lives, renewable on the death of the last nominee, under different terms of renewal, some arbitrary, some not. Some of the premises contained in the leases had come under the control of the charity commissioners, and alterations as to the terms of renewal had been made by other lessors :—Held, that the executors were not bound to obtain any renewal which would be prejudicial to the interests of the tenants for life, with a reference to chambers as to what contracts the executors should enter into as to renewal or sale of the testator's interest in the leases, and as to raising the necessary amount of fines, &c., as should be most beneficial for all parties interested under the will. Alden v. Kennerley, 7 L. T. 312.

A testatrix by will gave her executor all her interest in a farming lease upon trust to carry on the farm for the benefit of the plaintiff. The executor accordingly carried on the farm until the expiration of the lease, and then obtained a new lease. Under the circumstances, held by the court below that the defendant was a trustee for the plaintiff, and an account was ordered of all moneys expended or received by the defendant in carrying on the farm. Upon appeal by the plaintiff against so much of the order as directed accounts :—Held, his having elected to claim the profits of the farm, he could not resist the taking of such an account. Kendall v. Marsters, 2 De G. F. & J. 200 ; 2 L. T. 709 ; 8 W. R. 747.

An executor to a tenant by sufferance or at will, obtaining a larger interest, is a trustee for the residuary legatee like the case of general occupancy. James v. Dean, 11 Ves. 392.

—— Leases by Executors.]—Lessee of a term for years, with a toties quoties covenant for renewal, having died intestate, his administratrix in 1806 subdemised the premises at an increased rent, with a covenant that she, her executors, administrators and assigns, would renew to the sublessee, at the same rent, as often as she could herself procure a renewal from her head landlord. Upon the death of the administratrix, administration de bonis non was obtained by the defendant :—Held, 1st, upon the evidence in the case, that the sublease of 1806 was a due administration of the assets ; 2nd, that the sublessee was entitled, as against the administrator de bonis non, to a specific performance of the covenant for renewal. Hackett v. M'Namara, Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 283.

The appellant in this case having claimed the renewal of a lease from the heirs of the covenantor pursuant to his covenant, they refused, alleging that the covenantor was a bare tenant for life. This refusal is a breach of covenant, for which an action at law will lie against the representatives of the covenantor. Macartney v. Blundell, 2 Ridgw. P. C. 113.

Lease by an administrator to a party having notice that a sale was required by the persons beneficially interested, set aside. Drohan v. Drohan, 1 Ball & B. 185 ; 12 R. R. 10.

In selling or subletting the leaseholds of a testator or intestate, an executor or administrator stands to the beneficiaries, or next of kin, in the same relation as a trustee to his cestui que trust. Therefore, for an executor or administrator to grant an underlease with the option of purchase to be exercised by the sublessees at a future time, at a price now fixed, is ultra vires, and a breach of trust. Such a transaction cannot be supported as against the beneficiaries or next of kin, however advantageous the transaction may have been to their estate. Oceanic Steam Navigation Co. v. Sutherberry, 50 L. J., Ch. 308; 16 Ch. D. 236; 43 L. T. 743; 29 W. R. 113.

The owner of six leasehold houses agreed in writing to let one of them, numbered 737, to a tradesman, the agreement saying nothing about a restrictive covenant. On the same day he also agreed to let another of the houses, numbered 735, to a grocer, and he agreed with him that the business of a grocer should not be carried on in any of the other five houses. Afterwards he contracted to sell the house numbered 737, and a third house numbered 739, to T., also a grocer, and the agreement, which was in writing, and dated the 6th July, 1870, contained nothing about a restrictive covenant, but an underlease was prepared and engrossed which did contain a covenant that the premises should not be used for a grocer's business. An appointment was made for the execution of the underlease and counterpart on a certain day; but on the previous evening, T. died suddenly, intestate. It was stated, but on the plaintiff's evidence only, that after the written agreement of the 6th July, and before T.'s death, T. verbally agreed to the insertion of the restriction, and there was other evidence that he was prepared to execute a counterpart of the engrossment. It having been shewn that the insertion of such a restriction would considerably diminish the value of the property:—Held, that the administrator of the intestate could not be compelled to execute a counterpart of a lease containing such a restriction. Snelling v. Thomas, 43 L. J., Ch. 506; L. R. 17 Eq. 303.

The written agreement of the 6th July stipulated that the property should be bought "subject to the existing tenancies." The plaintiff alleged that on the 6th July the lessee of the house numbered 737 was under an agreement to consent to a restrictive covenant, and in proof of this the counterpart of a lease, bearing date the day before the agreement of the 6th July, was produced, containing such a covenant. It having been shewn that the lease was antedated, and was not in fact executed till after the 6th July, 1870:—Held, that the administrator was not by this clause bound to execute the counterpart of a lease containing the restriction. Ib.

—— Assignments by Executors.]—An agreement to assign a lease is good against an executrix. Smith v. Watson, Bunb. 55.

The purchaser of a term cannot have a covenant for title from executor assignor. Staines v. Morris, 1 Ves. & B. 8.

Executors sell by auction, in nine lots, sundry houses, which the testator, during his life, held by lease under the Crown, and of which they, after his death, obtained a new lease, subject to one entire rent of 24*l.*; the printed particulars mention that the sale is by executors, and that the nine lots are all held under one lease, and at one entire reserved rent:—Decree, upon a bill filed by the vendors, and an answer, submitting to perform the contract upon an indemnity being given, that the purchaser of one lot, with respect to which the particulars stated that the apportioned rent for it was 5*2l.*, was entitled to have an indemnity from the executors against his liability for the whole reserved rent, and the breach of any of the covenants in the original lease. In such a case the defendant is entitled to have his costs, up to and including the hearing. West v. Wild, 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 15.

—— Agreement to take Lease—Obligation of Representative.]—A. leased premises to B. for ten years, and B. covenanted not to assign the premises without A.'s consent. A. agreed to grant to C. a lease for ten years from the end of B.'s term, subject to the same covenants as were contained in B.'s lease. C. died before the lease was executed to him. A. filed a bill against C.'s executors (who admitted assets), for a specific performance of the agreement, and offered so to qualify the covenants of the lease as that the executors should be no further liable thereon than they would have been on the covenants which ought to have been entered into by the testator in case a proper lease had been made to him. Specific performance of the agreement decreed, with a reference to the Master to settle the lease. Phillips v. Everard, 5 Sim. 102.

Agreement for a lease, with a covenant that the lessee should build a wall round the land. A lease was executed by the lessor, but not by the lessee, which did not contain the covenant to build:—Held, after the death of the lessee, that a suit could not be maintained against the administrator having assets for a specific performance of the original agreement. Blosse v. Prendergast, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 373.

Specific performance of a covenant in a lease to take a renewed lease decreed against lessee's executors, who had entered and admitted assets. Stephens v. Hotham, 1 Kay & J. 571; 24 L. J., Ch. 665; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 842; 3 Eq. R. 571; 3 W. R. 340.

But the court will take care that the renewed lease, if not beneficial, is so framed as that no personal liability shall be incurred by the executors. Ib.

Rent—Right of Administrator de bonis non.]—An executor makes a lease, rendering rent; his administrator shall have the rent, and not the administrator de bonis non. Noel v. Robinson, 1 Vern. 94.

A. indebted to B. for rent; B. dies; C. administrator to B.; A. gives a note for this rent to C.; C. dies intestate. The note is an alteration of the property, and the rent belongs to the administrator of C., and not to the administrator de bonis non of B. Barker v. Talcot, 1 Vern. 473.

e. Allowances and Payments.

In General.]—An executor making payments in the usual and regular course, without any circumstances of suspicion, shall be allowed them in account, and be discharged from any loss. Bacon v. Bacon, 5 Ves. 331; 5 R. R. 52.

No allowance to administrators for debts paid after a decree to account, but they shall stand in the place of the creditors paid. Jones v. Jukes, 2 Ves. J. 517; 2 R. R. 308.

Semble, that an administrator is entitled to the reasonable charges of collecting the intestate's debts. Giles v. Dyson, 1 Stark. 32; 18 R. R. 743.

Payments to Beneficiaries.]—The trustee of a will, prior to the institution of a suit for the administration of the testator's estate, made certain payments to persons beneficially interested in the residue. The chief clerk in his certificate disallowed these payments on the ground that at the time they were made there was a debt due from the testator. At the time the payments were made, the testator's estate was sufficient for them and for payment of an equal sum to the other residuary legatees as well as of the debt, but it was not now sufficient for these purposes, and also for payment of the costs of the suit :—Held, that L. was entitled to be allowed these payments, although the time for reviewing the chief clerk's certificate had expired. Lloyd v. Lloyd, 23 W. R. 787.

Statute-Barred Debt.]—An executor may pay a debt proved to be justly due by his testator, although barred by the Statute of Limitations ; and on the same principle may have a right to retain his own debt, although barred by the statute. Stahlschmidt v. Lett, 1 Sm. & G. 415. S. P., Hill v. Walker, 4 Kay & J. 166.

Where a judgment has been recovered against executors for a debt due from their testator, and they pay the debt, the executors are entitled to be allowed such payment, although the Statute of Limitations might have been set up against the creditor who recovered the judgment. Hunter v. Baxter, 3 Giff. 214 ; 31 L. J., Ch. 432 ; 5 L. T. 46.

—— Res Judicata.—An executor who pays a statute-barred debt after a judicial decision that the debt is not recoverable out of the testator's estate by reason of its being statute-barred, commits a devastavit ; and the creditor who receives payment of such debt, with knowledge of the circumstances, is also liable to the testator's estate for its repayment. Midgley v. Midgley, 62 L. J., Ch. 905 ; [1893] 3 Ch. 282 ; 2 R. 561 ; 69 L. T. 241 ; 41 W. R. 659—C. A.

Claim within Statute of Frauds.]—An administrator is not bound to set up the Statute of Frauds in respect of the payment of the balance of a sum of money promised by the deceased to be paid to his daughter on her marriage. Garratt's Trusts, In re, 18 W. R. 684.

Contra as to debt, Rownson, In re, Field v. White, 54 L. J., Ch. 950 ; 29 Ch. D. 358 ; 52 L. T. 825 ; 35 W. R. 604 ; 49 J. P. 759—C. A.

Beneficial Expenditure.]—A testator devised his real estate upon the common trusts for sale, making his real and personal estate a mixed fund. His trustees and executors were advised that a few acres of freehold land which belonged to him might be advantageously sold in lots for building purposes, and that to develop their value it was desirable to build a villa upon part of them. They accordingly built one at a cost of 1,600*l.* out of the testator's personal estate. This villa had ever since been let at 80*l.* a year, most of the other land had been sold, and the evidence tended to shew that the outlay had benefited the estate :—Held, that as the trustees had, in the bonâ fide exercise of their judgment, expended this sum as the best means of improving the estate, they could, at most, only be disallowed the amount of loss (if any) occasioned to the estate by the expenditure. Vyse v. Foster, L. R. 8 Ch. 309 ; 27 L. T. 774 ; 21 W. R. 207.

An inquiry directed as to what allowances for permanent improvements should be made to an executor, who was ordered to account for the rents of the real estate which he had appropriated to his own use in breach of trust. Pelly v. Bascombe, 4 Giff. 390 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 100. Affirmed, 34 L. J., Ch. 233 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 52 ; 13 W. R. 306.

C., an executor, expended large sums of money for the benefit of the estate of, and pending a suit which had been instituted against, his testator A. for the administration of the estate of his testator B., and to whose estate A. was liable for the default of his co-executor. There was a balance due to C. on the account. The real estates of A. were ordered to be sold, and it was declared that the debt due to B.'s estate ought to be paid out of the estates of A. The proceeds of A.'s estates being insufficient to pay all the claims :—Held, that as C. had expended the moneys as executor, he was entitled to be recouped the whole amount due to him before any of the debts of A. were paid, and that the doctrine of retainer did not apply. Spackman v. Holbrook, 2 Giff. 198 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 881 ; 2 L. T. 367.

A solicitor, acting for the administrator of a deceased intestate, retained in his hands a portion of the estate and failed to account for the same. The administrator applied for and obtained in 1876, in the Queen's Bench Division, a rule that the solicitor should be struck off the rolls, or should answer an affidavit relating to the retention of the sum by him. A writ of attachment was issued against the solicitor, who absconded, and the writ was renewed in each term down to 1887. In that year, upon further consideration of an action to administer the intestate's estate, the taxing-master was directed to tax the costs, charges, and expenses of the administrator properly incurred. He disallowed all the costs of the proceedings against the solicitor, on the ground that they were not ordinary proceedings, but were in the nature of punishment to the solicitor :—Held, upon a summons to review the taxation, that the real object of the proceedings against the solicitor was to obtain the money due to the estate, and that therefore some of the costs incurred ought to be allowed ; but it was referred to the taxing-master to consider how far the costs incurred subsequently to obtaining the rule were for the benefit of the estate and should be allowed. Davis, In re, Muckalt v. Davis, 57 L. J., Ch. 3 ; 57 L. T. 755.

Probate and Succession Duty, Advances for Payment of.]—A testator died in August, 1861, and his executors remitted to their solicitor 80*l.* to obtain probate, and 25*l.* to pay legacy duty. The solicitor became bankrupt in November, 1861, and the money was lost. The court allowed the executors the 80*l.*, but not the 25*l.*, the latter advance being premature, the legacies not having been paid in 1863. Castle v. Warland, 32 Beav. 660.

For Time and Trouble.]—An executor and trustee cannot claim compensation for personal trouble and loss of time in the performance of the trusts under a will, but should have made a special case for compensation before he entered on the performance of the trusts. Brocksopp v. Barnes, 5 Madd. 90.

An executor will not have a salary given him in the absence of some contract to that effect between him and the testator. Browne v. Collins, 21 W. R. 222.

—— Carrying on Trade.]—Where a surviving partner is also the executor of the one deceased:—Held, not entitled to an allowance for carrying on the business after his partner's death, for the benefit of the estate. So, in the case of an executor and legatee of such surviving partner. Stocken v. Dawson, 6 Beav. 371.

A surviving partner being executor is not entitled, without express stipulation, to any allowance for carrying on the trade after the testator's death. Allowed expenses actually incurred under an erroneous conception that he was sole proprietor by purchase from his co-executors, but which purchase was set aside as a breach of trust, though bonâ fide. Burden v. Burden, 1 Ves. & B. 170; 12 R. R. 210.

Circumstances under which the court making the executors and trustees an allowance for trouble and loss of time in managing the testator's leasehold property and carrying on his business, fixed the amount itself, without directing an inquiry. Forster v. Ridley, 4 De G. J. & S. 452; 11 L. T. 200.

Professional Charges—As Agent.]—An agent named executor is not entitled to charge commission on business done subsequently to the testator's death. Sheriff v. Axe, 4 Russ. 33.

—— Executor Banker.]—An executor, who is one of a banking firm, cannot charge the ordinary banker's commission against his testator's estate. Heighington v. Grant, 9 L. J., Ch. 142.

—— Executor Solicitor.]—The principle that an executor, a solicitor, is not entitled to profit costs out of the estate applies equally where the executor is one of a firm of solicitors. Burge v. Brutton, 2 Hare, 373; 12 L. J., Ch. 368; 7 Jur. 988.

Payment of costs to a London agent allowed to executor as costs out of pocket. Ib.

An executor is not entitled to be allowed the costs of a suit in respect of the estate, prosecuted by a solicitor whom he did not employ; the solicitor himself is the party to apply for costs as a lien on the fund which he has recovered. Ib.

An executor, conducting suits as solicitor for the legatees under the will of his testator, was not allowed his costs in the first instance, where it appeared that he had conducted the suits in a negligent and tardy manner. Carmichael v. Wilson, 4 Bligh (N.S.) 146. S. C., nom. Wilson v. Carmichael, 2 Dow & Cl. 51.

—— Where allowed by Will.]—A testator gave all his residuary real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for his wife for life; and after her death he directed that a just and true valuation should be made of "all his freehold and leasehold estates, stocks, funds, and securities, and other residuary personal estate," and directed the same to be divided, or considered as divided, into seven equal parts, and then disposed thereof; and the testator directed that A. B., one of his executors, who was a surveyor by profession, "should be entitled to charge, and should be allowed, all reasonable charges as a surveyor, in valuing his said freehold and leasehold estates, and in letting the same, and in collecting the rents, or otherwise in the management of the said estates, whenever requested or instructed so to act by his co-trustees":—Held, that this latter clause applied solely to the valuation and management of the freehold and leasehold estates, and that A. B. was not entitled, under this clause, to make any charges in respect of valuations made by him of the residuary personalty after the death of the testator's widow. Knott v. Cottee, 16 Jur. 752.

If a solicitor is appointed an executor, liberty to charge for professional services will not authorise him to charge for services which appertain to the ordinary duties of an executor. Harbin v. Darby, 28 Beav. 325; 29 L. J., Ch. 622; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 906; 2 L. T. 531; 8 W. R. 512.

Commission on Indian Estates.—An executor in India proving his accounts in this court is entitled to the commission upon payments according to the practice in India. Chetham v. Audley (Lord), 4 Ves. 72.

Agents, being also appointed executors of the principal, are not entitled to the commission upon remittances from India by the testator not received till after his death. Hovey v. Blakeman, 4 Ves. 596.

An executor in India is entitled to a commission of 5 per cent. on all assets of a testator collected by him there, including the assets which he retains in respect of a legacy to himself, not given to him in the character of executor, and including moneys belonging to the testator which were in the hands of a commercial house in which the executor was, and the testator had been, a partner, semble. Cockerell v. Barber 1 Sim. 23; 2 Russ. 585; 5 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 77; 28 R. R. 181.

Executor in India, having a legacy for his trouble, not entitled to commission on receipts and payments, or either, as executor; not allowed, in passing his accounts, after a series of years, to renounce his legacy and charge commission on such receipts and payments. Freeman v. Fairlie, 3 Mer. 24; 17 R. R. 7.

If an executor in India collects part of the assets there, and then comes to England and has the remainder remitted to him by his agent, he is entitled to commission on that part only which he collected in India. Campbell v. Campbell, 13 Sim. 168; 11 L. J., Ch. 382; 6 Jur. 635.

By a decree made in a suit for administering the assets of a testator who died in India, the master was directed to allow Indian commission to the executor only in respect of assets received by him while resident in India. The testator (whose estate was solvent for the payment of legacies) died possessed of certain notes of the Bengal government, which the executor took from the treasury at Calcutta and handed over to certain trustees in discharge of a legacy of the testator of equal amount with the notes:—Held, that the notes were assets within the meaning of the decree. S. C., 2 Y. & C. C. C. 607; 8 Jur. 28.

A planter in India obtained advances from his agents, who, by custom, were entitled to a commission on their advances and on the produce of the sales of the crop. The planter died, and his executors sold the factory, and got in the crops, and remitted them to the agents, who sold the latter, and accounted to the executors for the balance, after deducting the amount due to them:—Held, that the executors were entitled to 5 per cent. (Indian commission) on the gross proceeds of the factory and crop. Matthews v. Bagshaw, 14 Beav. 123; 15 Jur. 977.

Keeping up Testator's Establishment.]—Trustee and executor, although taking under will a commission as a satisfaction for trouble, is entitled to allowances under a general trust to let and manage as he should think proper, and out of the rents and profits to pay all rates and taxes, charges of repairs, stewards, bailiffs, and gamekeepers' salaries and expenses, and all other charges and expenses he should think proper; but he was not allowed to appoint an establishment, gamekeepers, &c., except as the due management required. Webb v. Shaftesbury (Earl), 7 Ves. 480; 6 R. R. 154.

An executor's expenses in keeping up an establishment not disallowed simpliciter, but there being a question whether travelling expenses were thereby economised, an inquiry was directed with liberty to the executor to bring forward afterwards such claims as he might have to be recouped his expenses, notwithstanding the further consideration of the cause was the proper time for doing so. Browne v. Collins, 21 W. R. 222.

Executors must be allowed a reasonable time for breaking up a testator's domestic establishment, and discharging his servants. Two months held not to be an unreasonable delay, having regard to the circumstances. Field v. Peckett, 29 Beav. 576.

For Maintenance of Deceased's Children.]—The infant children of testator, being respectively entitled to pecuniary legacies, which were lodged in the bank, and successively to the testator's house and stock in trade, and equally to the residue, an offer of the executrix, the mother, to maintain all the children without requiring any assistance from the fund in court, upon the terms of being released from accounting for the profits of the business which she continued to carry on between the time of the death of the testator, and the attaining his age by the first legatee entitled in the house and with the stock in trade of the testator on the consent of the pr. ami, and approval of the master, was decreed accordingly. Drake v. Fortune, 1 Moll. 201.

In a creditor's suit for the administration of a testator's estate, where the personal estate was insufficient for payment of debts, and the master had found that the executor and trustee had made advances for the maintenance of the testator's children, but had refused to allow him to retain the amount of such advances out of the balance in his hands, arising from the rents of the real estate, the court, on the trustee and executor submitting to account, relieved him from paying the balance into court until the amount of the proceeds of the real estate should be ascertained. Littleboy v. Hill, 9 Jur. 986.

But, as against creditors, an administrator cannot be allowed for disbursements in the schooling, feeding, or clothing the intestate's children subsequently to his decease. Giles v. Dyson, 1 Stark. 32; 18 R. R. 743.

Maintenance to some extent allowed out of capital, though the direction in the will applied only to income, the whole estate amounting to about 12,000*l.*, but the income having proved insufficient, owing to temporary charges; but sums expended in luxuries, &c., as for the purchase of ponies, were disallowed. Bridge v. Brown, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 181.

—— Interest.]—Generally executor making advances for maintenance beyond income in his hands is not entitled to interest, but, on further directions, the executor may be able to shew that common justice requires the allowance of interest. The case in which maintenance may exceed income, is where there was a reasonable expectation that the amount of fortune would be greater than it turned out to be. Kilbee v. Sneyd, 2 Moll. 235.

Solicitor's Costs.]—Executor, as such, employing solicitor is allowed his costs. Macnamara v. Jones, Dick. 587.

An executor or trustee is not to be allowed, without question, the amount of bills of costs, which he has paid bonâ fide to the solicitor to the trust; and the master, without regularly taxing the bills, will moderate their amount. Johnson v. Telford, 3 Russ. 477; 27 R. R. 116.

In taking the accounts of a personal representative, bills of costs paid by her are not to be taxed, but the master will consider the reasonableness of any items to which objections may be taken. Pitchford v. Hulme, 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 223.

An executor will not be allowed the charges of his solicitor for doing things which the executor ought strictly to have done himself. Harbin v. Darby, 28 Beav. 325; 29 L. J., Ch. 622; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 906; 2 L. T. 531; 8 W. R. 512.

An executor is not entitled to be allowed the costs of a suit in respect of the estate, prosecuted by a solicitor whom he did not employ. The solicitor himself is the party to apply for costs, as a lien on the fund which he has recovered. Burge v. Button, 2 Hare, 373; 12 L. J., Ch. 368; 7 Jur. 988.

—— Incurred whilst no Personal Representative—Ratification.]—During a period in which there was no personal representative of the estate of a deceased testatrix, the appellant, acting upon the instructions of Easton, a relative of the deceased, did work as a solicitor in respect of the administration and for the benefit of the estate. Subsequently the respondent Phillips obtained letters of administration de bonis non, and refused to pay the appellant's bill of costs: —Held, that the respondent was not bound, as administrator, to pay such costs. Phillips, Ex parte, Watson, In re, 56 L. J., Q. B. 619; 19 Q. B. D. 234; 57 L. T. 215; 35 W. R. 709—C. A.

—— Interest on.]—Court will not allow executor interest on costs paid by him, pending a suit concerning the estate. Where interest is allowed, it is only from the time of the balance having been struck on the general report. Gordon v. Trail, 8 Price, 416.

Accountant's Charges.]—The master ought to allow in an executor's accounts the expense of an accountant, where the nature of the accounts justifies it. Henderson v. M'Iver, 3 Madd. 275.

Agent's Commission.]—Executors will not be allowed to charge for the employment of an agent, except under very special circumstances. Weiss v. Dill, 3 Myl. & K. 26.

An exception to the master's report, by which he had reduced an executor's charge for the employment of an agent at 5 per cent. to 2½ per cent., overruled. Ib.

Executor with annuity allowed expenses of collection of rents. Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 2 Sim. & S. 237; 25 R. R. 193.

Where the book debts were numerous, the executors of a tradesman were held justified in appointing an agent to collect them, and in allowing him a salary for his trouble. Hopkinson v. Roe, 1 Beav. 181.

Broker's Commission on Identification.]—An executor, upon transferring stock to a legatee, paid one-sixteenth per cent. to a stockbroker for identifying him at the bank. He was allowed the payment in passing his accounts. Jones v. Powell, 6 Beav. 488; 7 Jur. 781.

To Executor or Administrator paying or making himself Liable for Debts of Deceased.]—An executor who makes himself liable for debts of the testator has no priority in respect of such debts over the other creditors of the testator, but stands in the same position as the creditors for whose debts he has made himself liable. Lucas v. Williams, 4 De G. F. & J. 439; 10 W. R. 677.

An executor who in winding up his testator's affairs, and acting in pursuance of the will, and according to the testator's course of business, gave a promissory note for a trade debt of the testator's:—Held, not entitled to be indemnified in full in respect of the note out of the estate, which was insufficient to pay his debts. Ib.

Executor paying to creditors more than the value of his testator's personal assets, acquires an absolute right to them. Chalmer v. Bradley, 1 Jac. & Walk. 64; 20 R. R. 216.

A. owes money by real judgments and bonds, and dies intestate; his administrator pays the judgments and some of the bonds, and pays more than the personal estate amounts to. What the administrator paid on the judgments must be allowed him; but as to what he paid on the bonds, he must come in pro ratâ with the other bond creditors. Robinson v. Tonge, 3 P. W. 400.

Where there was a doubtful claim against the estate of an intestate, which, if unsatisfied, would have left a surplus, but which the surplus, after paying all other demands, was insufficient to pay, the sole next of kin, not admitting the validity of such claim, agreed to give up the surplus if the administrator, who was a surety for the debt, supposing it to be a valid one, would contribute the remainder of what was wanted for payment of it, and by deed, which recited that the assets then in the hands of the administrator were all the assets belonging to the estate, the next of kin released to the administrator, in consideration of his covenant to pay the debt, the whole of his right and interest, &c., in the personal estate of the intestate. The debt was accordingly paid, and after that assets fell in:—Held, that they were not included in the release, and that the administrator was not even entitled to recoup himself out of them what he had contributed towards the debt. Lindo v. Lindo, 1 Beav. 496; 8 L. J., Ch. 284.

A testator, seised of real estate, and leasehold and personal estate, and, among other property, of leasehold collieries or mines, gave certain real estates to his son; he devised and bequeathed all his other real and personal estate upon trust, with the approbation of his son, at some convenient and proper period to sell and convert the same, and to invest and apply 1,000*l.*, part thereof, for his granddaughter; and after giving some small annuities, in trust to pay to his daughter 200*l.* a year, besides one half share of the yearly income and produce of his real and personal estates, his intention being that she should enjoy an equal yearly income with his son during her natural life, treating 200*l.* a year as equivalent to the real estate given to his son, provided that his daughter's annuity should in no case exceed 600*l.* a year; and that the overplus, after 600*l.* a year to her and 400*l.* to his son, should go to his son, but that what he called produce of his personal estate was not to be taken as the income derived from the mines, but the profit arising after laying by 10*l.* per cent. to pay back the capital expended in plant, &c.; and, subject to these gifts and devises, he gave all his real and personal estate to his son. The son was appointed, with the trustees, executor; they disclaimed and renounced, and he entered into sole possession. In taking the accounts of the testator's estate:—Held, that the son had a right to apply, in payment of debts, all permanent personal property before disposing of the mines; that having paid off with his own moneys debts which could not have been paid off without resorting to the mines, the debts so kept alive in his hands were a charge on the net produce of the mines; that the accumulations of the 10*l.* per cent. were a fund liable to the debts in exoneration of the mines; that as to any liabilities due to him in respect of over payments of debts made by him beyond the assets applicable, he would be entitled to interest; that the 1,000*l.* legacy to the granddaughter was a charge on the real and personal estate, pro ratâ. Lord v. Wightwick, 1 Drew. 576.

An executor having assets of his testator, either in money or goods, before any bill had been filed for the administration of the estate, applied to a creditor of the testator for a loan of a sum of money equal in amount to the debt; and the creditor accepted the personal security of the executor for the amount, and released his debt against the estate:—Held, that the executor having, by such substitution of his own security for that of the estate, discharged the debt as against the estate, should not be treated as a mere purchaser of the debt of the creditor, and, as such, entitled only to stand in the place of the creditor; but that the executor was entitled to be allowed, in his own discharge, the amount of the debt as a debt of the testator preferred and paid. Hepworth v. Heslop, 6 Hare, 561; 18 L. J., Ch. 352; 13 Jur. 166.

A., who was both heir and administrator, gave to a creditor of the intestate a mortgage on the descended estate for his debt, which he covenanted to pay. The creditor thereupon gave to A., as administrator, a receipt for the debt, but no money passed:—Held, in taking an account of the personal estate of the intestate as against A., that he was entitled to charge the amount of this debt as a payment out of the personal estate. George v. George, 35 Beav. 382.

Executor pays debts with money received under a decree which is reversed; he must refund; otherwise, if the appeal is delayed. Pickering v. Stamford (Lord), 2 Ves. Jun. 582.

—— Interest.]—An executrix, who advanced money for the payment of simple contract debts charged on the testator's real estate, allowed interest on such advances. Biggar v. Eastwood, 15 L. R., Ir. 219.

Executor borrowing or advancing money to pay testator's creditors, who were very importunate, is entitled to allowance of interest thereon. Small v. Wing, 5 Bro. P. C. 66.

Interest on Advances by.]—By the will of a trader, the residue of his real and personal estate, including his stock-in-trade and effects used therein and the goodwill of his business, was bequeathed to a trustee and executor, upon ordinary trusts for sale and conversion. The executor had from time to time out of his own moneys advanced various sums in excess of the balance in his hands. The court allowed the executor 4*l.* per cent. on the balances appearing due to him at the end of each year, without including any interest in the computation of such balances. Finch v. Prescott, 43 L. J., Ch. 728; L. R. 17 Eq. 554; 30 L. T. 156; 22 W. R. 437.

Payment after Suit—Debts.]—No allowance to administrator for debts paid after a decree to account, but he shall stand in the place of the creditors paid. Jones v. Jukes, 2 Ves. Jun. 517; 2 R. R. 308.

After a bill and answer put in the executor voluntarily paid a bond debt, and allowed on the account. Darston v. Orford (Earl), Pre. Ch. 188; Colles, 229.

After a decree in a suit for the administration of assets, an executor is not at liberty to do any act which affects the relative rights of creditors. Shewen v. Vanderhorst, 2 Russ. & M. 75; 1 L. J., Ch. 107.

Executor or administrator, after suit for account, may pay simple contract or specialty debts. Maltby v. Russell, 2 Sim. & S. 227; 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 85; 25 R. R. 191.

Payments made to creditors by executors after the decree in an administration suit, were not allowed to them, the utmost they were entitled to being to stand in the place of the creditors as to such payments. Mitchelson v. Piper, 8 Sim. 64; 5 L. J., Ch. 294.

When, after a decree directing a legal personal representative to admit assets or to account, he pays debts, he will be allowed them, though the estate should be deficient. But when such a payment is made after a decree for the administration of the estate the rule is otherwise. George v. George, 35 Beav. 350.

If after a decree an executor thinks fit to pay a creditor, he does so at his own risk, and he is only entitled to stand in the place of his creditor against the estate. Irby v. Irby, 24 Beav. 525; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1314.

A testator had mortgaged his real estate to secure moneys held on the trust of his marriage settlement. A suit was instituted to administer his estate, and to realise the mortgage. After the decree (in 1832) the executors advanced considerable sums out of the rents and personal estate, on account of interest, to the persons entitled to the mortgage. The estate proved deficient to pay all the creditors:—Held, in 1857, that the payments could not be justified, that the executors must repay the amount and be charged with interest on the balances, composed of the money so improperly paid by them. Ib.

—— Since Judicature Act.]—Where an executor or administrator, after the commencement of a creditor's administration action and before judgment, has voluntarily paid any creditor in full, the rule in equity and not at law must now prevail, under Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-s. 11; and he will accordingly be held to have made a good payment, and will be allowed it in passing his accounts, even though he may have had notice of the action before payment. Radcliffe, In re, European Assurance Society v. Radcliffe, 7 Ch. D. 733; 26 W. R. 417. S. P., Vibart v. Coles, 59 L. J., Q. B. 152; 24 Q. B. D. 364; 62 L. T. 551; 38 W. R. 359—C. A.

To prevent such payments being made in any such action, the plaintiff should, immediately upon issuing the writ, apply for and obtain a receiver. Ib. But see next case, contra.

An administrator or executor may prefer one creditor to another, and there is no equity which entitles the court to interfere except after judgment for administration. Therefore the plaintiff in a creditor's action for administration is not entitled to interim relief against the executor or administrator unless a case is shewn of the assets being wasted. Harris, In re, Harris v. Harris, 56 L. J., Ch. 754; 56 L. T. 507; 35 W. R. 710. Approved, Wells, In re, Molony v. Brooke, 59 L. J., Ch. 810; 45 Ch. D. 569; 63 L. T. 521; 39 W. R. 139.

—— Legacy.]—Where an administrator, possessed of the intestate's goods, gave legacies and died, and his executor, without compulsion, and pending a suit in right of the intestate to recover the goods, paid the legacies, the court would not relieve him, for his payment was voluntary, and with notice that the intestate's right to the goods was controverted. Hodges v. Waddington, 2 Ch. Ca. 9.

f. Right of Indemnity.

In General.]—The court will protect an executor having done that which it would order him to do. Howe v. Dartmouth, 7 Ves. 150; 6 R. R. 96. And see Lee v. Brown, 4 Ves. 369; 4 R. R. 208.

Under Lord St. Leonards' Act—Notice to Creditors by Advertisement.]—The 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, is retrospective in its operation. Smith v. Smith, 1 Dr. & Sm. 384; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 652; 4 L. T. 44; 9 W. R. 406.

An executor who has distributed the assets of his testator, after issuing advertisements and taking the steps pointed out by the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 29, will have the same protection as if he had administered the estate under a decree of the court, and if he should have retained any legacies as trustee, after appropriating them for the benefit of the cestuis que trustent, he will no longer be under any liability qua executor. Clegg v. Rowland, 36 L. J., Ch. 137; L. R. 3 Eq. 368; 15 L. T. 385; 15 W. R. 251.

—— Next of Kin.]—The 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 29, is not confined to claims of creditors of the testator or intestate, but applies also to persons having claims as next of kin. Newton v. Sherry, 45 L. J., C. P. 257; 1 C. P. D. 246; 34 L. T. 251; 24 W. R. 371.

—— Sureties in Administration Bond.]—It also affords protection to the sureties in an administration bond, where the administrator, before distributing the assets of the intestate, has pursued the course pointed out by that section. Ib.

—— Sufficiency of Notice.]—A notice addressed to "creditors and other persons having claims or demands against or upon the estate of the intestate," requiring them to send in particulars of their claims or demands upon the estate to the administrator, or that, in default thereof, he would, at the expiration of the time mentioned in the notice, proceed to administer the assets of the deceased, having regard only to the claims and demands of which he should then have had notice, is a sufficient notice under the statute to a person having a claim as next of kin. Ib.

The daughter of the intestate left her home at an early age (in 1857), changed her name, and, without notice to any of her relatives, went to America. In 1871 she returned to England and endeavoured to find her mother; but, the mother having changed her residence and married again, she was unable to find her. She again came to England in 1874, when she found that her mother was dead. In the meantime a sister of her mother had obtained letters of administration, and, after advertising in the "London Gazette" and in "The Times" and another London newspaper, in the terms of s. 29 of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, for "creditors and other persons having claims or demands against or upon the estate of the deceased," distributed the assets amongst the brother and two sisters (herself being one) of the deceased, being ignorant that the daughter of the intestate was still living. In an action by her (who had procured the revocation of the letters of administration granted to her aunt, and a fresh grant to herself, and an assignment of the administration bond) against the sureties: —Held, that the notice being good in form, and the publication all that could reasonably be required under the circumstances, s. 29 of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, afforded a good defence. Ib.

The executors of a testator whose estate was liable to replace trust money in consequence of a breach of trust are not protected from liability under 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 29, they having only issued notices for claims against the testator's estate, to be sent in within three weeks, by advertisement in local newspapers in the neighbourhood where the testator resided, and not in the "London Gazette." Wood or Woods v. Weightman, L. R. 13 Eq. 434; 26 L. T. 385; 20 W. R. 459.

There is no absolute rule that notices issued by executors, under s. 29 of the act 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, to creditors and others to come in and claim against the estate of the testator should be published in a London daily newpaper of large circulation, or that a month should be allowed for the bringing in of claims. In determining whether executors have given such notices as are sufficient to entitle them to the protection of s. 29, the court will have regard to the circumstances of the particular case, such as the place of residence of the testator and his position in life. Wood v. Weightman, supra, explained. Bracken, In re, Doughty v. Townson, 59 L. J., Ch. 18; 43 Ch. D. 1; 61 L. T. 531; 38 W. R. 48—C. A.

A testator was a small farmer in the country. He had lived at the same place for forty years previously to his death, and had never been engaged in any other occupation than that of farming his own land, consisting of about fifty-two acres. After his death his executors issued a notice inviting creditors and others to come in and make their claims against the testator's estate. The notice was published once in each of three local newspapers, and once in the "London Gazette," but it was not published in any other London newspaper. The notice fixed the period of a month from its date for the bringing in of claims, but it was not published till a day or two after its date. After the expiration of the notice the executors distributed the estate among the claimants of whose claims they had notice:—Held, that, as against claims of which they had not then any notice, the notice was sufficient to entitle the executors to the protection given by s. 29. Quære, whether an appeal lies against the decision of the judge on such a point. Ib.

The executor of a testator whose estate was liable to replace trust money, in consequence of a breach of trust:—Held, not protected from liability under 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 29, he having published notices in one local paper twice, and in the "General Advertiser" twice, the time allowed by the first notice published in the latter paper being less than one month from the date of publication. Stuart v. Babington, 27 L. R., Ir. 551.

—— Notice of Claim against Estate.]—An executor with notice of a claim against his testator's estate is not discharged from liability to satisfy that claim by the fact that the person entitled to make the claim has failed to send in particulars of it in answer to an advertisement for creditors under 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 29. Land Credit Co. of Ireland, In re, Markwell's Case, 21 W. R. 135.

Notice of a remote contingent liability on the part of a testator is not sufficient to prevent his executor from distributing his residuary estate; and if the executor distributes with such notice, and the liability afterwards ripens into a debt, he will be entitled to call on the residuary legatees to refund. Jerris v. Wolferstan, 43 L. J., Ch. 809; L. R. 18 Eq. 18; 30 L. T. 452.

—— Duty to give Information of Parties receiving Money.]—A personal representative who has duly distributed the assets under 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 29, ought to give an unpaid creditor full information as to particular parties among whom he has so distributed the assets; but for this purpose a reference to the residuary account passed by him is sufficient. Lindsey, In re, Filgate v. Lindsey, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 61.

If he did not give such information before suit instituted by the creditor, he will be refused the costs of defending himself and claiming the protection of the statute. Ib.

—— Calls.] — When an administratrix had distributed the whole of the intestate's assets without making provision for calls on shares after being placed on the list of contributories in a winding-up:—Held, that there ought to be a decree for payment, and in default for administration. Price v. Mayo, 43 L. J., Ch. 402; 22 W. R. 401.

An executor who held shares in a solvent banking company paid a legacy out of the assets. Afterwards the company stopped payment and was ordered to be wound up, and calls were made:—Held, that the executor was not entitled to be allowed the amount of the legacy in his accounts. Taylor v. Taylor, 39 L. J., Ch. 676; L. R. 10 Eq. 477; 23 L. T. 134; 18 W. R. 1102. And see Newcastle Banking Co. v. Hymers, 22 Beav. 367, before the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35.

The executors of a testator had during his lifetime, and at his request, become trustees of a deed, whereby certain shares in an unlimited company were settled on a tenant for life, with remainders over. While the company was a going concern, and believed to be perfectly solvent, they distributed the residuary estate; afterwards the company was ordered to be wound up. Large calls were made in respect of the shares, and the remaindermen all disclaimed: —Held, that the trustees and executors were entitled to be indemnified out of the testator's estate, and to call on the residuary legatees to refund. Jerris v. Wolferstan, 43 L. J., Ch. 809; L. R. 18 Eq. 18; 30 L. T. 452.

Executors are not bound, in distributing their testator's estate, to retain assets in their hands to meet a liability of which they have notice unless the liability amounts to a debt. Subject to s. 75 of the Companies Act, 1862, the liability of a shareholder for future calls is not a debt. Kershaw, In re, Whittaker v. Kershaw, 60 L. J., Ch. 9 ; 45 Ch. D. 320 ; 63 L. T. 203 ; 39 W. R. 23 —C. A. And see further, X. c. 6, col. 1544, post.

—— Mortgage Debt.]—Where executors, who were actually aware of an apparently well-secured mortgage affecting their testator's real estate, having issued the usual statutory advertisement for creditors, and received no reply thereto from the mortgagee, distributed the personal estate among the legatees without providing thereout for the mortgage debt, which the real estate afterwards proved insufficient to meet :—Held, that the executors were personally liable to the mortgagee for such deficiency to the extent of the assets so distributed. Scottish Equitable Life Assurance Society v. Beatty, 29 L. R., Ir. 290—C. A.

—— Unpaid Legacy.]—This was an action by a legatee under the will of F., who died in 1870, asking for payment of her legacy, which was directed to be raised out of real estate, and the non-raising of which she alleged to be a breach of trust, and for the execution of the trusts of F.'s will. There had originally been three executors and trustees of F.'s will ; one of these, J., still survived, and was a party to the action. C. H. F., another of the executors, had died in 1878. The executors of C. H. F. were made defendants, but claimed to be dismissed on the ground that in October, 1879, they had issued advertisements for claims under the provisions of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 29, that no claim had been made for the legacy, and they had distributed the whole of C. H. F.'s estate. The plaintiff insisted that they ought to be retained as defendants : (1) because J., the surviving trustee, had acted as solicitor for the executors of C. H. F., and had committed a breach of trust in not seeing that the plaintiff's legacy was raised, and that the executors of C. H. F. had constructive notice of this breach of trust when they distributed the estate ; (2) because the plaintiff had a right to follow C. H. F.'s estate in the hands of the beneficiaries, and his executors ought to be defendants in order that an account might be had against his estate :—Held, (1) that under the circumstances no notice of the plaintiff's claim could be brought home to the executors of C. H. F. ; (2) that the plaintiff had no right to keep them before the court in order to obtain an account which she could use against the beneficiaries in whose hands she could follow C. H. F.'s assets, but must bring the beneficiaries themselves before the court, if she desired to follow the assets in their hands. Frewen, In re, Frewen v. Frewen, 60 L. T. 953.

Under Judicial Trustees Act, 1896—Devastavit.]—A testator, who at the date of his death was of high reputation, and apparently abundantly solvent, after bequeathing to his widow a sum of 300*l.*, payable immediately after his death, gave the rest of his property to his widow for life, and after her death to his children. The executor, who had reason to believe that the testator's net assets would amount to at least 20,000*l.*, paid the 300*l.* legacy at once, and also paid some small sums out of income. Four months after the testator's death the executor proved the will and advertised in the usual way for creditors. The claims against the estate, with one exception, were of a trifling character. The testator had for many years acted as agent of very large estates, and the present owner of the estates had, previously to the advertisement for creditors, sent in a claim for sums due to him from the testator as his agent. Immediately after the advertisement an action was instituted against the executor by the present owner and the representatives of his predecessor, alleging defalcations by the testator as agent. The executor, notwithstanding the action, continued to make payments of income to the widow. Judgment having been given for the plaintiffs for a sum which more than exhausted the whole assets of the testator, relief was claimed by the executor under the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, in respect of the payments he had made to the widow :—Held, that, under the circumstances, the executor was entitled to be relieved in respect of the payment of the 300*l.* legacy and other sums paid by him before the issue of the writ in the action, but not in respect of sums paid subsequently to the writ. Kay, In re, Mosley v. Keyworth, 66 L. J., Ch. 759 ; [1897] 2 Ch. 518 ; 46 W. R. 74.

—— Alleged Wilful Default—Acting "honestly and reasonably"—"Fairly to be excused."]—Where the executor of a deceased solicitor was bonâ fide and on reasonable grounds satisfied that he could not maintain an action against a client personally to recover costs incurred in an administration action and owing to the solicitor, there being an arrangement between the solicitor and the client to the effect that the latter should not be personally liable to the solicitor for the costs, except in the event of his being unable to recover the same in the administration action, it was held that the principle of Clack v. Holland (19 Beav. 262) was applicable, and that the executor was not guilty of any wilful default ; but that even if the executor was technically liable for a breach of trust, then under s. 3 of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, he having acted honestly and reasonably, ought fairly to be excused. Roberts, In re, Knight v. Roberts, 76 L. T. 479—C. A.

Administration Action—Effect of.]—In an administration suit the order of the court is an indemnity to the executors. Williams v. Headland, 4 Giff. 495 ; 3 N. R. 412 ; 34 L. J., Ch. 20 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 384 ; 9 L. T. 824 ; 12 W. R. 367.

In an administration suit, executors claimed to retain part of the residue as an indemnity against possible liability in respect of mining shares. The court refused the claim, but required the residuary legatees to undertake to answer such liability. Ib. S. P., Addams v. Ferick, 26 Beav. 384.

The decree of the court in an administration suit, where an executor acts bonâ fide, is a complete indemnity to him, and it is not necessary to set apart an indemnity fund. Dodson v. Sammell, 1 Dr. & Sm. 175 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 799 ; 9 W. R. 887.

Where equity has taken the management of assets from an executor, it will not permit him to be charged for what has been done pursuant to its directions. Farrell v. Smith, 2 Ball & B. 342.

A decree in an administration suit practically indemnifies executors against any claim in respect of property of which their testator was the surviving trustee and executor. Lowndes v. Williams, 24 L. T. 465.

A bill was filed for the administration of the estate of the surviving trustee and executor of the will of C. A decree was made, and subsequently a claim was sent in by persons beneficially interested under the will of C. On motion by the executor for leave to take proceedings to administer the estate of C.:—Held, that the executors were practically indemnified by the decree, and the motion was dismissed. Ib.

Where an estate is administered and the residue is paid over under an order of the court, the executor will be protected, and a creditor will not afterwards be allowed to sue him at law. Dean v. Allen, 20 Beav. 1.

An executor who, in an action at law by a creditor of the testator, has pleaded according to the truth of the case, is, when the assets are taken from and administered in equity, entitled to the protection of the court against any personal liability in respect of such plea. Gaunt v. Taylor, 2 Hare, 413.

An estate was administered under the court, and, all claims being provided for, the devisee was let into possession. A further claim was afterwards made against the estate:—Held, that the trustees of the will were not justified, of their own authority, in taking possession, to provide for it. Underwood v. Hutton, 5 Beav. 36.

Leaseholds—Independently of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35.]—Where the respondent, being remainderman under the settlement after the death of the father, tenant for life, demanded the residue of his father's personal estate of the executor, having power to avoid the leases granted by his father, whose executor might therefore be liable in damages in case of eviction:—Held, that the executor was entitled to indemnity from him, or a confirmation of the leases before he could be required to pay over the residue. Vernon v. Egmont (Earl), 1 Bli. (N.S.) 554.

Executor liable to future contingent demands, in respect of covenants entered into by the testator for payment of rent of premises specifically devised, is entitled to a sufficient indemnity to be given by the legatee; but if there is no surplus after payment of debts, the executor is protected against demands on foot of such covenants, by payments made even to simple contract creditors before notice of the breach. Wildridge v. M'Kane, 1 Moll. 122.

Executor claiming to retain out of the residue certain parts of the property, to protect himself against a future contingent demand in respect of covenants entered into by the testator for payment of rents and repairs of an estate held by him under lease from a corporation, though there was no existing breach of covenant, nor arrears of rent, in respect of which he was liable; on a bill by the residuary legatee for the property so retained, ordered that the funds in question be made over to the plaintiff, on his giving a sufficient indemnity to the executor; the terms of such indemnity to be settled before the master. Simmons v. Bolland, 3 Mer. 547.

Where an executor assented unconditionally to a specific bequest of leasehold:—Held, that he could require no indemnity against covenants from the residuary legatees. Shadbolt v. Woodfall, 2 Coll. C. C. 30; 9 Jur. 229.

A testator, to whom the interest in a lease was assigned, entered into an express covenant with his assignors, the Commissioners of Public Works, to pay the rent reserved by the lease to the commissioners, and further to indemnify them from the payment thereof:—Held, that the executor was entitled to an indemnity from the parties entitled to the assets in respect of his liability to the rent, although the commissioners might possibly be entitled to insist that they were not personally liable, having contracted to pay it as commissioners and overseers of public works in Ireland. Trevor v. Thomas, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 222.

In an administration suit, it appeared that the testator and his surviving partners were lessees of certain ironworks and premises for a term of years of which eleven were unexpired, and as such lessees were subject to covenants for rent, repairs, insurance, &c., and that by the articles of partnership the executors of a deceased partner might elect to become partners in the concern, or to withdraw the capital of the deceased therefrom:—Held, that although the executors had elected not to become partners, and no breach of the covenants appeared to have happened, yet as such covenants, if broken, might leave the estate of the testator liable to demands sufficient to absorb it, the interest as well as the principal of the residuary estate must be retained to answer any such possible demands, until the extent of the liability could be ascertained; or if any part of the interest or income should be paid to the tenant for life, it could only be on security to refund the same, if required, to satisfy any future demand. Fletcher v. Stevenson, 3 Hare, 360; 13 L. J., Ch. 202; 8 Jur. 307.

Z. T. bequeathed certain leasehold property, to which she had become entitled by will, to R. A., his executors, administrators and assigns absolutely, during the residue of her term therein, subject to the payment of the rent and performance of the covenants reserved and contained in the lease under which she held the premises; and as to her residuary personal estate, subject to the payment of her debts, funeral, testamentary and other expenses, she gave, devised and bequeathed the same to J. B., his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns absolutely. The lease under which the premises thus bequeathed to R. A. were held contained a covenant, by the lessee, to keep them in repair. It appeared that at the time of the testator's decease dilapidations had taken place, but whether any of them had taken place before she came into possession of the premises was not shewn. An order having been made letting R. A. into possession, and setting aside a sum of stock out of the testatrix's estate to indemnify the executors:—Held, on appeal, that R. A. took the property cum onere, and was liable, as between himself on the one hand and the executors of Z. T. and her residuary legatee on the other, to do the repairs in respect of dilapidations existing at the testatrix's death; held, also, that the executors of Z. T., being liable as between themselves and the lessor in respect of dilapidations which had taken place during their testatrix's lifetime, were entitled to receive from R. A. an indemnity in respect of such liability before he was let into possession.

Hickling v. Boyer, 3 Macn. & G. 635; 21 L. J., Ch. 388; 13 Jur. 137.

Where leaseholds, of which a testator was lessee, have been specifically bequeathed, the executors are entitled to indemnity out of the general estate against liability on the covenants, if the leaseholds do not afford or the legatee cannot give a sufficient indemnity. Garratt v. Lancefield, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 177.

The executors of a lessee held entitled to no further indemnity against the covenants than the personal indemnity of the residuary legatees. Dean v. Allen, 20 Beav. 1.

Executors of an assignee of leaseholds held after an assignment by them, entitled to have a fund set apart for their indemnity, but refused as to valuable leaseholds of which the testator was original lessee. Brewer v. Pocock, 23 Beav. 310.

Where leaseholds were devised to three trustees and executors, and one of them having died, the two surviving trustees and executors (one of whom had never acted as executor) under an order of the court assigned the leasehold in trust for themselves and a newly-appointed trustee:—Held, that by such assignment the leaseholds vested in them, quâ trustees, and not quâ executors, and that they were not entitled to an indemnity upon assigning them to the person entitled under the will. Smith v. Smith, 1 Dr. & Sm. 384; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 652; 4 L. T. 44; 9 W. R. 406.

A lessee by his lease had covenanted to pay rent, to insure, repair, &c., and died leaving several years of his lease to run, but none of the covenants had been hitherto broken:—Held, that the lessor was not entitled to have any portion of the assets brought into court as a security for the performance of the covenants in the lease. King v. Wallcott, 16 Jur. 237.

When there was an indemnity fund in court for the protection of executors against the rents and covenants of the leases which had formed part of their testator's estate, the court, on being satisfied that the risk was very small, and that no claim had been made for twenty-one years, ordered the whole fund to be paid out, notwithstanding that some of the leases had about fifty years to run. Crook v. Hendry, 26 W. R. 325.

On a petition by residuary legatees for payment out of court of their legacy, the executors applied to have part of the funds set apart to indemnify them against a breach of covenant committed by the testator as lessee. No action had been taken by the lessor on the breach, nor had he made any claim under a decree made in a suit for the administration of the testator's estate:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the lessor had lost all remedy against the executors, who therefore required no indemnification against the breach of covenant. Ross v. Tatham, 38 L. J., Ch. 577; 17 W. R. 960.

A testator was the original lessee of certain leasehold property. In a suit to administer the estate the usual advertisement for creditors was made, but the landlord made no claim in respect of any breaches of the covenants. Subsequently he gave notice to the executors of such claim. The court refused to distribute the estate without an inquiry in reference thereto, and making a provision for the indemnity of the executors. Hughes v. Young, 4 N. R. 17.

In an action by the executrix of the assignor of a lease against the executrix of the assignee, upon a covenant by the assignee to perform the covenants in the lease, and indemnify the assignor for the breach of any of them, she pleaded plene administravit, and at the trial proved that the entire assets, including the consideration-money for a sale by him of the lease, had, before the breach of covenant complained of, been applied to the payment of simple contract debts:—Held, a sufficient defence, for that the executrix was not bound to retain the proceeds of such sale for the purpose of indemnifying against any future breach of covenant, although some of the breaches were by non-payment of rent. Collins v. Crouch, 13 Q. B. 542; 18 L. J., Q. B. 209; 13 Jur. 361.

An executor who pays legacies six months after probate cannot plead such payment in discharge of his testator's liability on a covenant. Davis v. Blackwell, 9 Bing. 5; 2 M. & Scott, 7; 1 L. J., C. P. 140.

A testator, after some small bequests, appointed his daughter residuary legatee, and appointed her executrix, and another person executor of his will. Part of the estate consisted of leaseholds. The executor was guilty of great misconduct and obstruction, which occasioned much expense to the executrix and delay in the administration of the estate. His solicitors took out an administration summons on behalf of an assignee of a pecuniary legacy, whose name they had refused to give to the executrix, that she might satisfy his claim. The executor commenced an action for the administration of the estate:—Held, that, notwithstanding the executor's misconduct, he was entitled to obtain an indemnity in respect of the leaseholds, and, therefore, to such costs of the action as would have been occasioned by a simple administration summons, but that he must pay all costs of the legatee's administration summons, including the costs of the affidavits used there and in the action, and that he must be disallowed all other costs, charges and expenses incurred since a certain date, when he declined to entertain a reasonable scheme for the administration of the estate submitted to him by the executrix, but that, subject as aforesaid, he should be allowed his costs, charges and expenses properly incurred before the commencement of the action. Bosworth, In re, Howard v. Easton, 45 L. T. 136; 29 W. R. 885.

—— Since 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 27.]—On the sale of a leasehold before the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, the purchaser covenanted to indemnify the vendor against the covenants of the lease. He bequeathed the leasehold to his widow and appointed her his executrix:—Held, that the act applied, and that the executors of the widow were at liberty to distribute her estate without setting apart any fund to provide against the liability under the covenants. Green, In re, 2 De G. F. & J. 121.

Where an indemnity fund is set apart by the court in respect of leasehold property belonging to a testator, it is done for the security of the ground landlord and not for the protection of the executors; and the parties beneficially interested are not entitled to have it paid out, under s. 27 of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 35, without the consent of the ground landlord. Bunting v. Marriott, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 565; 9 W. R. 264.

A fund set apart in 1857 to answer liabilities of an intestate's estate in respect of leasehold covenants, was distributed in 1865 amongst the next of kin, it appearing that all the leases had either been sold or surrendered, and the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 27, having passed in the meantime. Reilly v. Reilly, 34 Beav. 406.

Service on the ground landlord of a petition for payment out of a fund set aside as an indemnity to executors on sale of their testator's leaseholds is unnecessary. Sowdon v. Marriott, 28 L. T. 867; 21 W. R. 808.

When there was an indemnity fund in court for the protection of executors against the rents and covenants of the leases which had formed part of the testator's estate, the court, on being satisfied that the risk was very small and that no claim had been made for twenty-one years, ordered the whole fund to be paid out, notwithstanding that some of the leases had about fifty years to run. Crook v. Hendry, 26 W. R. 325.

—— Administration Action, Effect of.]—In an administration suit, instituted before the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, a fund was set apart as an indemnity to the executors in respect of any possible breaches of covenant by their testator, in regard to his leasehold property. After the passing of the act the party entitled to the residuary estate petitioned for payment out of court of the indemnity fund. The court being of opinion that the act was not retrospective, that petition was dismissed. Dodson v. Sammell, 29 L. J., Ch. 335; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 137; 1 L. T. 429; 8 W. R. 252.

It being subsequently held that the act was retrospective, a petition for rehearing was presented with the same object as the original petition:—Held, that the decree of the court in an administration suit, where an executor acts bonâ fide, is a complete indemnity to him, and it is not necessary to set apart an indemnity fund, and an order was made according to the prayer. S. C., 1 Dr. & Sm. 575; 30 L. J., Ch. 799; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 584; 9 W. R. 887.

The case of an assignment of a leasehold to a residuary legatee is not within the meaning of s. 27 of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35. Ib.

Where an executor administers his testator's estate under the direction of the court, and brings fully before its attention the covenants in respect of which the estate is liable, he is protected from all future liability. Waller v. Barrett, 24 Beav. 413; 27 L. J., Ch. 214; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 128. S. P., Sanford, In re, Bennett v. Lytton, 2 John. & H. 155. Smith v. Smith, 1 Dr. & Sm. 384. Contra, Garratt v. Lancefield, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 177. Brewer v. Pocock, 23 Beav. 310. Dobson v. Carpenter, 12 Beav. 370. Cochrane v. Robinson, 11 Sim. 378; 10 L. J., Ch. 109; 5 Jur. 4.

Therefore, where a testator was possessed of leasehold estate in respect of which he was liable upon onerous covenants, in a suit for administration of his estate, the leaseholds were sold and the money brought into court:—Held, that the suit indemnified the executor from all future breaches of covenant; that no part of the testator's estate ought to be set aside to meet contingent liabilities; that the estate ought to be distributed, and that the remedy of any future creditor was not against the executor, but against the parties among whom the estate had been distributed. Ib.

g. Right of Retainer.

In General.]—An executor, by an established rule of law, may retain to pay his own debt, and he is not obliged to take in part where there are not assets enough to pay the whole. Robinson v. Cummings, 2 Atk. 411.

The executor or administrator may retain out of the assets, as well for a debt due in trust for himself as for a debt due to himself. Cockroft v. Black, 2 P. W. 298.

Who entitled.]—Each executor has entire control over a testator's personal estate; he may release, pay or transfer without the others; and so as to each administrator, though formerly questioned; one executor may retain in satisfaction of his own debt, if no fraud. Jacomb v. Harwood, 2 Ves. Sen. 265. S. P., Stewart, In re, Crowder v. Stewart, 50 L. J., Ch. 136; 16 Ch. D. 368; 29 W. R. 331.

The court, in a creditors' suit, refused to order an executor to pay into court money which in his answer he stated to have retained in satisfaction of a debt due from the testator. Middleton v. Poole, 2 Coll. C. C. 246.

—— Executor of Executor.]—The executor of an executor is entitled to retain out of the balance of the produce of the original testator's West India plantation, received by him as consignee appointed by the court, debts due from the testator to him, either in his own right, or as an executor of the deceased executor. Thomson v. Grant, 1 Russ. 540, n.

O., as executor of A., received 2,010*l.*, the amount of a policy of insurance effected by A. on his life:—Held, that P., who was executor of O., was bound as such to retain that sum as a security against a sum of 8,250*l.*, for which O. had made his assets liable as a security for A. Owen, In re, 23 L. R., Ir. 328.

—— Representative of two Estates.]—The personal representative of A. has a right of retainer, in respect of a sum due to him from A.'s estate as personal representative of B. Thompson v. Cooper, 1 Coll. C. C. 85; 13 L. J., Ch. 416; 8 Jur. 164. S. P., Wynch v. Grant, 2 Drew. 312; 3 Eq. R. 60; 24 L. J., Ch. 6; 18 Jur. 1010; 3 W. R. 6.

The same individual was administrator both of A. and B., whose estates were being administered by the court. A.'s estate was found indebted to B.'s:—Held, that the administrator was entitled, and was bound, at the instance of the parties interested in B.'s estate, to retain the debt out of A.'s assets in preference to A.'s other creditors. Fox v. Garrett, 28 Beav. 16; 29 L. J., Ch. 423; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 208; 1 L. T. 474.

The administrator of a sole trustee who has died insolvent is entitled, in respect of the trusteeship which has devolved upon him as such administrator, to exercise the legal right of retainer in respect of any debt due to the trust estate, and is bound to do so if required by the cestuis que trustent. Sander v. Heathfield, 44 L. J., Ch. 113; L. R. 19 Eq. 21; 31 L. T. 400; 23 W. R. 331.

—— Joint Executors.]—Joint executors and administrators must retain their debts ratably, and in proportion to the assets. Chapman v. Turner, 9 Mod. 268.

One of two executors has a right to retain his own debt out of a balance due from both to the testator's estate. Kent v. Pickering, 2 Keen, 1; 6 L. J., Ch. 375.

Retainer allowed to one executor out of a legacy to his co-executor, in respect of a devastavit. Sims v. Doughty, 5 Ves. 243.

—— Executor who has renounced Probate.]—An executor who has renounced probate of the will, is not entitled to retain a debt, due to him from the testator, out of assets in his hands. Smith v. North, 13 Jur. 998.

—— Right of Representatives of Deceased Executor—Debt under Covenant.]—An executor's right of retainer is limited to so much of the assets of his testator as comes into the possession or under the control of the executor, or is paid into court during his lifetime. If an executor asserts in his lifetime a right of retainer, but dies without having exercised it, his representatives may exercise that right for the benefit of his estate only as to anything which came into the actual possession or under the actual control of their testator, or which was paid into court during his lifetime. Claims by an executor for breach of a covenant to assign a policy, and to replace furniture, if sold, by other furniture of like value, are claims for damages for breach of pecuniary contracts for which there is a certain standard or measure, and may, therefore, on the authority of Loane v. Casey (2 W. Bl. 965), be retained. Compton, In re, Norton v. Compton, 54 L. J., Ch. 904; 30 Ch. D. 15; 53 L. T. 410—C. A.

—— After Death of Executor.]—Executor of an executor may retain towards satisfaction of the debt owing by the first testator, because he is executor of the first testator; but if one be indebted by bond to A., and makes A. and B. executors, and dies, and then A. makes C. executor, and dies; in this case C. cannot retain, because he is not executor of the first testator; but B. is executor by survivorship; and the only reason for allowing retainer is because the executor cannot sue himself. Hopton v. Dryden, Pre. Ch. 179.

But if an executor dies after having claimed a right of retainer, but without having actually exercised it, leaving another executor of the original testator surviving, the executors of the deceased executor have the right of retainer for the benefit of his estate. Wilson v. Coxwell, 52 L. J., Ch. 975; 23 Ch. D. 764.

The representative of a deceased executor, in accounting for the executor's receipts of the trust estate:—Held, not to be entitled by way of discharge to the amount of a debt owing to the executor from his testator, without evidence of retainer of the debt by the executor in his lifetime. Burge v. Brutton, 2 Hare, 373; 12 L. J., Ch. 368; 7 Jur. 988.

What amounts to.]—An administrator having claimed his debt before the master, that is sufficient to entitle him to retain it. The administrator entitled to his costs out of the produce of the sale of real estate, his intestate having been a trader. The heir-at-law entitled to his costs from the plaintiff, who may be reimbursed out of the fund in court, without prejudice to the costs of the administrator. Winter v. Hicks, Taml. 475.

In respect of what Matters—Joint Debts.]—One of three executors, who is also one of two joint creditors, has a right of retainer in respect of his joint debt. Stewart, In re, Crowder v. Stewart, 50 L. J., Ch. 136; 16 Ch. D. 368; 29 W. R. 331.

One of two executors has a right to retain his own debt out of a balance due from both to the testator's estate. Kent v. Pickering, 2 Keen, 1; 6 L. J., Ch. 375.

—— Unliquidated Demand.]—An executor's right to retain his testator's assets for his own debts extends as well to a debt which can only be ascertained by taking accounts in a court of equity as to a debt which is ascertainable at law. Morris, In re, Morris v. Morris, 44 L. J., Ch. 178; L. R. 10 Ch. 68; 31 L. T. 491; 23 W. R. 120.

—— Trade Debts.]—A testator carried on business in partnership under two firms, both composed of the same individuals, and died, having appointed one of the surviving partners his executor. In a suit for administration of his estate the chief clerk found that the executor had in his hands a balance of 1,675*l.*, including 964*l.* due to the estate from one of the firms; that no account of the dealings and transactions between the partners in either business was ever taken, and it would not answer any useful purpose that the accounts should be taken; but it was alleged that the other of the businesses was carried on at a loss, and that there was due from the testator's estate in respect of the liabilities of the firm carrying on that business 3,105*l.*, and there was due to his estate in respect of his share as a partner in the other firm the sum of 964*l.*:—Held, that the executor was entitled as surviving partner in the creditor firm to retain out of the 1,675*l.* the amount of 964*l.* due from the one firm to the estate, by way of set-off against the amount due to the other firm, and as executor to retain the balance of the 1,675*l.* in part satisfaction of the same debt. Ib.

The testator carrying on trade in partnership, and being indebted to the partnership, appoints his partner executor. The executor continues to employ the ships in which the testator had an interest, and dies after the institution of a creditors' suit for the administration of the testator's estate:—Held, that the executor had a right to retain against the testator's debt all profits made during his, the executor's life, notwithstanding the institution of the suit. Thornton v. Stokill, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 751.

—— Debt due to Attorney and Agent.]—A testator, at his death, was indebted to A. B., his attorney and general agent, in 900*l.* and upwards; the agent had in his hands a sum of 900*l.*, and he was appointed executor. On a deficiency of assets:—Held, that A. B. was entitled to retain the 900*l.*, in payment of his claim against the testator. Potter v. Fowler, 6 L. J., Ch. 273.

—— Contract of Indemnity.]—A., at the request of and on a verbal offer by B. to indemnify him against loss, joined with C. in a joint and several promissory note, which he was afterwards compelled to pay:—Held, that the offer to indemnify A. was not an agreement within the Statute of Frauds, and therefore need not be in writing, and that A. having afterwards become the executor of B., was entitled to retain the amount paid by him on the note as a debt due from B.'s estate. Wildes v. Dudlow, L. R. 19 Eq. 198.

—— Trusteeship.]—The administrator of a sole trustee who has died insolvent is entitled, in respect of the trusteeship which has devolved upon him as such administrator, to exercise the legal right of retainer in respect of any debt due to the trust estate, and is bound to do so if required by the cestuis que trustent. Sander v. Heathfield, 44 L. J., Ch. 113; L. R. 19 Eq. 21; 31 L. T. 400; 23 W. R. 331.

B. was the executrix of her late husband, whose estate was insolvent, and who was indebted to the estate of A., of which he was sole trustee, in a considerable sum of money in respect of the proceeds of sale of certain real estate, and therefore the right to receive the money and the obligation to pay were centred in the same person. Under these circumstances B. claimed to be entitled, in priority to all other creditors upon her late husband's estate, to retain out of his personal assets which had come to, or were in her hands, or had been paid into court, a sum in respect of the proceeds of sale of the real estate. The question was, whether an executor or administrator was bound to retain for debts to which he was entitled as trustee when required to do so by his cestui que trust:—Held, on the authority of Sander v. Heathfield (L. R. 19 Eq. 21), that the right of retainer must be allowed. Faithfull, In re, Hardwick v. Sutton, 57 L. T. 14.

A marriage covenant with a trustee for securing a provision for the wife may be given in evidence by her, under a plea of plene administravit, in an action brought against her as executrix; and she may retain out of the personal assets so much as is equal to the damages she has sustained by the breach of such covenant. Loane v. Casey, 2 W. Bl. 965.

But where a covenant was made with trustees in a deed of settlement before marriage, that the intended husband, in case the marriage should take place, would pay or cause to be paid to his intended wife an annuity of 20*l.*; or that his heirs, executors or administrators should pay or cause to be paid to the trustees, or the survivor of them, or the heirs, &c., of such survivor, within —— months after his decease, 400*l.*, to remain vested in them:—Held, that this was not such a covenant as would enable the widow to retain the 400*l.* as administratrix of her husband, and set up the retainer under the plea of plene administravit, because the corpus was to be paid to the trustees. Thompson v. Thompson, 9 Price, 464.

An executrix gave an acceptance for a debt due from her testator, taking an engagement from the drawer to renew the bill from time to time, until sufficient effects were received from the estate of the testator:—Held, that this meant sufficient effects in the ordinary course of administration; and that she had not precluded herself from first applying assets to pay 3,000*l.* to trustees for her own use in discharge of a bond given by her husband before marriage to that effect, before she paid the acceptance. Bowerbank v. Monteiro, 4 Taunt. 844; 14 R. R. 679.

Where in a marriage settlement a husband covenanted to pay to a trustee certain sums of money upon trust to pay the income to the wife for life, with an ultimate trust for himself absolutely, and died without performing his covenant, having appointed his wife sole executrix; and his creditors brought an administration action against the executrix and obtained an order for accounts under Ord. XV. r. 1, without a decree for administration, and the executrix was afterwards appointed trustee of marriage settlement, and the testator's estate proved insolvent:—Held, that the executrix, notwithstanding the order for accounts, was entitled to apply the assets in her hands as executrix in payment to herself as trustee of the debt due on the covenant in the marriage settlement. Barratt, In re, Whitaker v. Barratt, 59 L. J., Ch. 218; 43 Ch. D. 70; 38 W. R. 59.

A testator appointed his wife sole executrix of his will. By a settlement executed on the marriage of the testator and his wife certain funds were settled upon trust for the wife for life, with remainder to the children of the marriage. The testator, who acted as solicitor for this trust, appropriated certain of the trust funds. He also appropriated to his own use the residuary estate to which his children were entitled under the will of a testatrix and of which he was one of the trustees. The testator died, and an action was brought by a creditor for the administration of his estate, which was insolvent. The executrix, on behalf of her own life interest, and also on behalf of her children, claimed the right to retain out of the estate of the testator the amounts appropriated by him as above stated:—Held, that the trustees of the settlement and will being the persons to sue for and recover the funds appropriated, and not the executrix, she had no right of retainer. Dunning, In re, Hatherley v. Dunning, 54 L. J., Ch. 900; 53 L. T. 413; 33 W. R. 760—C. A.

—— Suretyship.]—An executor, being surety for his testator, paid the debt after the testator's death:—Held, that he had a right to retain his debt in preference to the other creditors of equal degree. Boyd v. Brooks, 34 Beav. 7. Affirmed, on appeal, 34 L. J., Ch. 605; 12 L. T. 38; 13 W. R. 419. S. P., Bathurst v. De la Zouch, Dick. 460.

A surety has a right to retain out of the estate of an intestate against specialty creditors the whole amount of a debt for which he is surety, where the principal debtor, whose administrator he is, has covenanted with him for the due payment thereof to the creditor, although the surety has not himself paid any part of the debt to the creditor. Allen, In re, Adcock v. Evans, 65 L. J., Ch. 760; [1896] 2 Ch. 345; 75 L. T. 136; 44 W. R. 644.

Quære, whether in such case the surety has the same right under a covenant only of indemnity by the principal debtor. Ib.

An executor who is surety for a debt of his testator has a right of retainer by way of indemnity out of legal assets paid by him into court, though at the date of payment into court he has not paid or been called upon to pay the debt to the creditor. Ferguson v. Gibson (41 L. J., Ch. 640; L. R. 14 Eq. 379), and Harrison, In re, Latimer v. Harrison (55 L. J., Ch. 687; 32 Ch. D. 395), discussed. Proof allowed after expiration of time fixed by advertisement for bringing in claims. Giles, In re, Jones v. Pennefather, 65 L. J., Ch. 419; [1886] 1 Ch. 956; 74 L. T. 21; 44 W. R. 283.

—— After Judgment for Administration.]—An action was brought by creditors for the administration of the estate of an intestate, a widow, against the administrator, who was her eldest son, and who was acting under letters of administration granted to him previously. The defendant had joined, as surety, with the intestate in giving a security for certain loans which had been procured by her for her own purposes, and he claimed to retain out of the assets of the intestate, in or coming to his hands as administrator, a sum sufficient to repay these loans with interest. He had not, in fact, repaid them, although he was personally liable to do so. The defendant was at one period engaged in farming, and the intestate from time to time made him small advances when he was in want of money, to assist him in carrying on his business, or for his maintenance. The intestate never attempted to recover these moneys, and she took no acknowledgment for them. The plaintiffs sought to charge the defendant with the moneys so received by him. By the chief clerk's certificate it was certified, amongst other things, that the defendant had made the claim above mentioned, which the chief clerk had allowed, and that the plaintiffs had brought in the set-off before referred to, but which the chief clerk had disallowed. The plaintiffs took out a summons to vary the chief clerk's certificate:—Held, that the right of the retainer existed notwithstanding the judgment for administration, and notwithstanding that the defendant had not in fact repaid the loans before the judgment; and that, upon his repaying them, he would be permitted to retain. Orme, In re, Evans v. Maxwell, 50 L. T. 51.

—— Legacy.]—In an administration suit an executor has no right of retainer in respect of a debt proved by a creditor under the decree, and subsequently bequeathed to him by the creditor. Jones v. Evans, 45 L. J., Ch. 751; 2 Ch. D. 420; 24 W. R. 778.

On motion by the plaintiffs (residuary legatees), that the executor, who was one of the pecuniary legatees under the will should pay into court the amount admitted by his answer:—Held, that the executor was not entitled to retain the amount of his legacy before the accounts had been taken. Harding v. Harding, 16 L. J., Ch. 179.

—— Debt in respect of Annuity.]—An intestate by deed covenanted to pay to a woman, who afterwards became his administratrix, an annuity of 6*l.* a week. The intestate's estate was insolvent:—Held, that the administratrix was not entitled to retain the present capitalised value of her future annuity, but was only entitled to retain arrears due, and to prove for such value against the estate. Beeman, In re, Fowler v. James, 65 L. J., Ch. 190; [1896] 1 Ch. 48; 73 L. T. 555; 44 W. R. 247.

—— In respect of Administration Expenses.]—Under the plea of plene administravit, an administrator may prove the expenses of administration, and shew that he retained money to that amount. Gillies v. Smither, 2 Stark. 528.

—— Debt to Firm—Right of Executor Partner.]—A. being indebted in his individual capacity to a house in trade, of which he himself was a partner, in a sum of money, the amount of which could not be exactly ascertained, covenanted to pay the firm all his then debts, and such other debts as should subsequently accrue. A. died without having satisfied the original debt, and having contracted further debts subsequently to the execution of the deed:—Held, that his executors, two of whom were partners in the house in trade, could not plead either of these debts by way of retainer, or as an outstanding specialty debt. De Tastet v. Shaw, 1 B. & Ald. 664.

—— Husband Executor—Funeral Expenses of Wife.]—A husband, executor of his wife's will made under a testamentary power of appointment, is entitled to retain out of her estate the expenses of her funeral, though such estate was insufficient for creditors, and her will did not contain any charge of debts and funeral expenses. McMyn, In re, Lightbown v. McMyn, 55 L. J., Ch. 845; 33 Ch. D. 575; 55 L. T. 834; 35 W. R. 179.

—— Loan by Wife to Husband to be used in Business.]—Sect. 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875, does not operate to introduce s. 3 of the Married Woman's Property Act, 1882, into the administration of a deceased person's estate so as to deprive his widow and administratrix of her right to retain out of his estate the amount of a debt due to her from the deceased, even though such debt is due in respect of moneys advanced by her to him for the purpose of being used, and which were in fact used, by him in his business. May, In re, Crawford v. May, 60 L. J., Ch. 34; 45 Ch. D. 499; 63 L. T. 375; 38 W. R. 765. And see Leng, In re, Turn v. Emmerson, 64 L. J., Ch. 468; [1895] 1 Ch. 652; 12 R. 202; 72 L. T. 407; 43 W. R. 406—C. A. Moore v. Smith, [1895] 1 Ir. R. 512—C. A.

Effect of Proceedings — Insolvent Estate, Petition for Administration of.]—The right of an executor to retain a debt due to himself from the testator is not affected by s. 125 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, where such right has been exercised before the notice prescribed by that section has been given to the executor of the presentation to the court of a petition for an order for the administration of the estate of the deceased debtor according to the law of bankruptcy. Lewis, Ex parte, Williams, In re, 8 Morrell, 65.

—— Balance Order for Amount of Calls.]—A balance order obtained by a liquidator of a company in course of winding up against the executors of a deceased contributory for the payment of the amount of calls due from him, does not operate as a judgment to destroy the executors' right of retainer in respect of a debt due to them from their testator's estate. Hubback, In re, International Hydropathic Co. v. Hawes, 54 L. J., Ch. 923; 29 Ch. D. 934; 52 L. T. 908; 33 W. R. 666—C. A.

—— Order for Inquiries as to Persons entitled to Fund in Court.]—By an order made in the presence of A., the legal representative of B., B.'s share of a fund in court was carried to a separate account, and inquiries were directed as to the persons entitled thereto. A. was also in the position of a statute-barred creditor of B. to the full amount of his share. Pending the prosecution of the inquiries, A. applied to have the money paid out to him as the legal personal representative of B. in order to exercise his right of retainer in respect of the statute-barred debt:—Held, that by submitting to the order for inquiries he had waived his right of retainer. Trevor v. Hutchins, 65 L. J., Ch. 738; [1896] 1 Ch. 844; 74 L. T. 470; 44 W. R. 417—C. A.

—— Administration Action—Receiver appointed.]—A creditor who has been appointed executor by his debtor, and who, as executor, has got in assets to the full amount of his debt, is entitled to priority, in respect of his right of retainer, after a creditor's administration action has been commenced, and he has handed over the assets to a receiver appointed in the action, and this notwithstanding that he has proved for his debt in the action. Harrison, In re, Latimer v. Harrison, 55 L. J., Ch. 687; 32 Ch. D. 395; 55 L. T. 150; 34 W. R. 736.

In a creditor's administration action brought against an executrix, who was also a creditor of the testator, a receiver was appointed, who obtained possession of certain legal assets as to which the executrix would have had a right of retainer if they had come to her hands:—Held, following with reluctance, Richmond v. White (12 Ch. D. 361, post), and Birt, In re (22 Ch. D. 604, post), that after the appointment of the receiver the executrix could not claim retainer out of any assets got in by him. Williams' Estate, In re (L. R. 15 Eq. 270), distinguished. Jones, In re, Calver v. Laxton, 55 L. J., Ch. 350; 31 Ch. D. 440; 53 L. T. 855; 34 W. R. 249.

The estate was insolvent, there were both specialty and simple contract creditors, and the executrix, who was a simple contract creditor, had got in certain legal assets before the receiver was appointed:—Held, that she could only exercise her right of retainer as against creditors of equal degree with herself; and accordingly, that the assets being treated as divided ratably among the specialty and simple contract creditors, she could retain her debt against the dividends payable to the simple contract creditors to the extent of the legal assets received by him. Ib.

Hinde Palmer's Act, 1869, the object of which was only to place specialty and simple contract creditors on an equal footing inter se for the purpose of distribution, ought not to be so construed as to give incidentally to an executor the power to defeat specialty as well as simple contract creditors; although the act, by augmenting the fund for the payment of simple contract debts, has to that extent enlarged the right of retainer. Ib.

Out of what Assets—Equitable Assets.]—There is no right of retainer out of equitable assets. Poole, In re, Thompson v. Bennet, 46 L. J., Ch. 803; 6 Ch. D. 739; 37 L. T. 119; 25 W. R. 862. S. P., Duignan v. Croome, 41 L. T. 672. What are equitable assets, see x. a. 1, post, col. 1418.

—— Legacy.]—G., in 1836, borrowed 1,000*l.* of C. upon the promissory note of himself and his brother W., who joined as surety, which sum (together with a further loan of 1,000*l.* from C.) he further secured, in 1839, by depositing with C. a policy of assurance upon his own life for 2,000*l.* In 1841 C. bequeathed a deferred legacy of 1,000*l.* to W., and in 1843 C. died. In 1845 G. became a bankrupt. The executrixes of C. then surrendered the policy, and proved for the balance of the debts against the estate of G. The legacy became payable to W. in 1859:—Held, that the surviving executrix was entitled to retain out of the legacy the amount due from W. as surety, notwithstanding the bar of the Statute of Limitations; and also that the surrender of the policy of assurance was a proper act, and did not release the surety or prejudice the right of retainer of the executrix. Coates v. Coates, 33 L. J., Ch. 448; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 532; 9 L. T. 795; 12 W. R. 634.

A wife whose husband was indebted to a testator, having become entitled under his will to a legacy in reversion not limited to her separate use, joined with her husband in assigning it for value, by deed duly executed and acknowledged by her under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 57. On the reversion falling in, the executors of the testator claimed to be entitled to retain the amount of the debt out of the legacy:—Held, that there was no right of retainer, and that the assignee must be paid in full. Batchelor, In re, Sloper v. Oliver, 43 L. J., Ch. 101; L. R. 16 Eq. 481; 21 W. R. 901.

Executors who have set apart and appropriated assets to meet a legacy, cannot retain or impound any part of the appropriated assets to meet a debt from the legatee to the general estate of the testator. Ballard v. Marsden, 49 L. J., Ch. 614; 14 Ch. D. 374; 42 L. T. 763; 28 W. R. 914.

Where executors and trustees have paid a pecuniary legacy, not charged on real estate, to a legatee, who is also one of the residuary legatees of the proceeds of sale of the testator's real estate, the legatee covenanting to repay the legacy if required so to do; on the personal estate, after defraying prior charges upon it, proving to be insufficient to meet the pecuniary legacy, the executors and trustees are entitled, as against a mortgagee, subsequent in date, of the legatee's residuary interest in the proceeds of sale of realty, to retain thereout a sum equal in amount to the pecuniary legacy which was paid in advance. Moore, In re, Moore v. Moore, 45 L. T. 466.

Retainer allowed to one executor out of a legacy to his co-executor in respect of a devastavit. Sims v. Doughty, 5 Ves. 243.

—— Surplus of Mortgage Debt.]—A mortgagee of a policy who, after a mortgagor's death, has received the policy moneys and paid his mortgage debt, is simply a trustee of the surplus for the mortgagor's estate, and cannot retain it to satisfy a simple contract debt due to himself in preference to the claims of other creditors. Talbot v. Frere, 9 Ch. D. 568; 27 W. R. 148.

The fact of his being the mortgagor's executor gives him no right so to retain the surplus in preference to creditors of a higher degree. Ib.

—— Proceeds of Mortgaged Premises—General Assets.]—Where in a suit by an equitable mortgagee against the executor and devisee, the general assets proved insufficient to pay the debts and costs, and the parties beneficially interested under the will disclaimed:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged premises, and the executors to retain their own debts in full out of the general assets, and the residue to be applied, first, in satisfaction of the costs of the executor; secondly, of the plaintiff and the purchaser; thirdly, of the devisee, the defendant beneficially entitled under the devise; and lastly, of the debts remaining due of the plaintiff and the other creditors. Tipping v. Power, 1 Hare, 405; 11 L. J., Ch. 257; 6 Jur. 434.

—— Proceeds of Sale of Realty.]—If lands are devised to trustees for payment of debts, simple contracts and specialities shall be paid in proportion, and, though the trustees are creditors and sureties for the testators, they shall not prefer themselves. Anon., 2 Ch. Ca. 54.

Devisee has a right to retain specialty debt due to himself or to his trustee out of the produce of the estate devised to him. Loomes v. Stotherd, 1 Sim. & S. 458; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 220.

So also if devisee be executor for deceased creditor, he may first retain for his own debt, and next for the debt of his testator, the creditor. But not in priority to costs. Ib.

Real estate is by the statute 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, made assets for the payment of debts only in equity, and an executor has no right of retainer against it. Personal estate being the primary fund for the payment of specialty debts, the circumstance that the specialty debts of a testator, whose personal estate is insufficient to pay those debts in full, have been actually paid in the first instance partly out of the proceeds of the sale of real estate, will not give the executor a right to retain his own simple contract debt out of personal estate subsequently realised, which he would not have had if the whole personal estate had been applied in the first instance in payment of the specialty debts. Walters v. Walters, 50 L. J., Ch. 819; 18 Ch. D. 182; 44 L. T. 769; 29 W. R. 888.

A trustee for sale of a testator's real estate for the payment of debts has no right of retainer for a debt due to him from the testator, although he may be also executor. Bain v. Sadler, 40 L. J., Ch. 791; L. R. 12 Eq. 570; 25 L. T. 202; 19 W. R. 1077. But see Hall v. Macdonald, 14 Sim. 1.

Where real estate has been sold by the court under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, the heir-at-law or devisee has no right to retain out of the proceeds the amount of a simple contract debt due to himself. Ferguson v. Gibson (L. R. 14 Eq. 379) post, explained. Illidge, In re, Davidson v. Illidge, 53 L. J. Ch. 991; 27 Ch. D. 478; 51 L. T. 523; 33 W. R. 18—C. A.

There is nothing in Hinde Palmer's Act to prevent a specialty creditor, where the heirs are bound, if he is the heir-at-law, from retaining the amount of his debt.—Per Cotton, L. J. Ib.

—— Assets received Subsequent to Decree.]—Administrator may retain his debt, though decree has been made for administration of assets in suit by other creditors, and though assets out of which he seeks to retain came to his hands since decree. Nunn v. Barlow, 1 Sim. & S. 588; 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 123; 24 R. R. 242.

Priority.]—An executor is not entitled to retain in preference to a creditor in higher degree. Talbot v. Frere, 9 Ch. D. 568; 27 W. R. 148.

An administrator in India, being a creditor of the intestate by specialty, and also by simple contract, possesses himself of assets not sufficient to discharge the two debts which are due to him, and claims against the assets possessed by another administrator in England:—Held, that his right of retainer must be exercised in satisfaction of the specialty debt; and that he will rank only as a simple contract creditor upon the assets in England. Johnson v. Ward, 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 137.

—— Against Specialty Creditors.]—A father died leaving a deficient estate, his wife and daughter being executrixes. The wife having real estate settled on her for life, with a general power of appointment, had appointed it as collateral security for a mortgage debt of her husband. This debt had not been paid at the date of the decree:—Held, that the right of the widow as surety to be indemnified created a simple contract debt only, and did not entitle her to retain as against specialty creditors. Ferguson v. Gibson, 41 L. J., Ch. 640; L. R. 14 Eq. 379. And see Illidge, In re, Davidson v. Illidge, 53 L. J., Ch. 991; 27 Ch. D. 478; 51 L. T. 523; 33 W. R. 18—C. A., supra.

The daughter was absolutely entitled under a settlement, subject to her father's life interest, to funds out of which the trustees had power to advance 2,000*l.* to the father on his bond, which they did. They afterwards made large further advances to him on promissory notes:—Held, that the daughter had a right to retain as against specialty creditors the 2,000*l.* and interest from his death, but not the subsequent advances. Ib.

Extent of Right — Against Compounding Debtor.]—D., who was indebted to his father L., on a bill of sale, and a promissory note, was adjudicated bankrupt. At a meeting of the creditors of D. a composition of 2*s.* 6*d.* in the pound was accepted in satisfaction of the debts due to them, and the bankruptcy was annulled. L., who did not prove his debt, and was not paid the composition, died, having bequeathed to D. a share of his estate. The executors who proved the will (D. being an executor, who did not prove) did not prove the debt under the composition. D. assigned his share of the estate to B., who brought an action for the administration of L.'s estate. The executors claimed a right of retainer against B. for the debt:—Held, that the amount of composition was substituted for the provable debts, whether such debts were proved by the creditors or not; and that the executors were not entitled to the right of retainer against the bequest of the share of the estate for the whole debt, but only for the composition on the debt and interest; six years' arrears of interest on the promissory note, and the whole arrears on the bill of sale. Orpen, In re, Beswick v. Orpen, 50 L. J., Ch. 25; 16 Ch. D. 202; 43 L. T. 728; 29 W. R. 467.

How Lost—Renunciation.]—An executor, who has renounced probate of the will, is not entitled to retain a debt, due to him from the testator, out of assets in his hands. Smith v. North, 13 Jur. 998.

—— Taking Grant as Nominee of Creditor.]—A right of retainer is not prejudiced by the circumstance that the administration is granted to another for the use of the creditor, a lunatic, any more than if durante minore ætate, nor that the debt is due to a trustee. Franks v. Cooper, 4 Ves. 763.

—— Executor, Mortgagee and Legatee.]—Where an executor is mortgagee and also a legatee, and the personal estate is insufficient to pay the mortgage debt and legacies, the executor is not bound to pay the mortgage debt out of the first assets in his hands, and is not prejudiced by not doing so. Binns v. Nichols, 35 L. J., Ch. 635; L. R. 2 Eq. 256.

—— Executor Suing on Behalf of Himself and all other Creditors.]—In the administration of a testator's estate, the right of an executor to retain for his debt is not affected by the circumstances that he is himself the plaintiff, suing on behalf of himself and all other the creditors, and that he has submitted to account in the ordinary form of an administration decree. Campbell. In re, Campbell v. Campbell, 16 Ch. D. 198; 43 L. T. 727; 29 W. R. 233.

—— Administration Decree.]—The right of a personal representative to retain, out of the assets in his possession, a debt due to him from the deceased, is not affected by the circumstance that he did not acquire the character of personal representative till after the usual decree had been made in a suit instituted by creditors against the former administrator. Nunn v. Barlow, 1 Sim. & S. 588; 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 123; 24 R. R. 242.

An administrator of a deceased executor of a testator in a cause is entitled, as against specialty creditors of such testator, to retain assets of his intestate, who had died indebted to the estate of the testator, towards payment of a judgment debt, recovered by himself against his intestate in his lifetime. Horne v. Shepherd, 26 L. J., Ch. 817; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 806.

In taking the accounts of the estate of S. S., who died insolvent, the master found that C. S., who died insolvent and intestate, had, as executor and trustee, received and paid several sums, and that there remained a balance due from C. S.'s estate. D. was appointed administrator of the estate of C. S., and in that capacity received 446*l.* 18*s.*, and paid 142*l.* 10*s.* 11*d.*, and the balance he claimed to retain in part payment of a judgment recovered by him against C. S. for debt and costs, but which had not been registered. D. also claimed to retain the outstanding estate of C. S. towards the payment of his judgment debt:—Held, on a bill filed by creditors of S. S. for the administration of his estate, and claiming to have the assets of C. S. handed over, that D. was entitled to retain such assets in part payment of his judgment debt. Ib.

—— Payment into Court.]—An administrator does not lose his right of retainer by paying the assets into court, where the fund in court is insufficient to discharge the administrator's debt; his right of retainer will prevail against the plaintiff's right to have the costs of the suit satisfied. Chissum v. Dewes, 5 Russ. 29; 29 R. R. 10.

The right of retainer of an executor is not lost by payment into court, and takes precedence of the costs of suit. Tipping v. Power, 1 Hare, 405; 11 L. J., Ch. 257; 6 Jur. 434. S. P., Langton v. Higgs, 5 Sim. 228; 1 L. J., Ch. 150; Hall v. Macdonald, 14 Sim. 1.

Semble, that the executor's right to retain for his own debt may be asserted, not only after the assets have been paid by him into court, but at any time before the distribution of the estate. Stahlschmidt v. Lett, 1 Sm. & G. 415.

An executor admitting assets, and ordered to bring them in, cannot rely upon his own demands set forth in a charge under the decree, but not proved, as cause against the issuing of an attachment for noncompliance with the order; nor would the court extend the time for bringing in the money until after the master should have made his report; there having already been unreasonable delay. D'Arcy v. D'Arcy, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 407. But see Middleton v. Poole, 2 Coll. C. C. 246.

—— Payment by Person other than Executor.]—In an action by residuary legatees against an executor to administer an insolvent estate, after the usual administration judgment had been given, an order was made in chambers, on the application of the plaintiffs and in the presence of the executor, pursuant to which an insurance company paid certain policy moneys which formed part of the assets of the testator into court to the credit of the cause. Upon the further consideration of the action, the executor, who was a creditor of the testator, claimed to retain his own debt out of the moneys so paid in, in priority to the costs of the action and the debts of the other creditors:—Held, that the payment into court was in substance a payment by the executor, and that he was entitled to a right of retainer out of the fund. Richmond v. White, 48 L. J., Ch. 798; 12 Ch. D. 361; 41 L. T. 570; 27 W. R. 878—C. A.

—— Appointment of Receiver.]—The retainer of his debt by an executor as against a receiver appointed by the court is improper. Davenport v. Moss, 14 L. T. 133; 14 W. R. 453.

—— Appointment of Receiver—Solicitor—Administrator.]—In a creditor's administration action, brought against the administrator of an intestate (the defendant being a solicitor, and a member of the firm of solicitors who were acting for the plaintiff), after judgment for administration had been pronounced, an order was made on the application of the plaintiff by his solicitors for the appointment of a specified person, "upon his giving security," to receive the rents of the intestate's real estate, and to collect and get in his outstanding personal estate. On the application for this order the defendant made an affidavit stating his approval of the person proposed. Before the receiver had perfected his security some money arising from the sale of furniture belonging to the intestate was received by the defendant's firm, and appropriated by him, and he claimed to retain out of it a debt due to him by the intestate:—Held, that, by reason of the relation in which the defendant stood to the plaintiff as a member of the firm of solicitors who were acting for him, the defendant stood in no better position than he would have stood after the receiver had perfected his security, and that the defendant could not under the circumstances exercise his right of retainer. Wickens v. Townshend (1 Russ. & My. 361) applied. Birt, In re, Birt v. Burt, 52 L. J., Ch. 397; 22 Ch. D. 604; 48 L. T. 67; 31 W. R. 334.

How affected by Statute—Hinde Palmer's Act (32 & 33 Vict. c. 46).]—The right of retainer is not affected by Hinde Palmer's Act abolishing the distinction between specialty and simple contract debts. Stewart, In re, Crowder v. Stewart, 50 L. J., Ch. 136; 16 Ch. D. 368; 29 W. R. 331.

The right of retainer by an executor has not been abolished by Hinde Palmer's Act, nor has it been enlarged so as to enable the executor to retain his debt as against a creditor of higher degree than himself. Notwithstanding the act, an executor who is only a simple contract creditor of his testator cannot retain his debt as against a specialty creditor. If an executor dies after having claimed a right of retainer, but without having actually exercised it, leaving another executor of the original testator surviving, the executors of the deceased executor have the right of retainer for the benefit of his estate. Wilson v. Coxwell, 52 L. J., Ch. 975; 23 Ch. D. 764.

A right of retainer being claimed on behalf of the estate of an executor who was a simple contract creditor of the testator, and there being a specialty creditor:—Held, that the assets must (after payment of costs) be apportioned on the footing of giving an equal dividend to all the creditors (specialty and simple contract); that the dividend must be paid in full to the specialty creditor; that the executor must then retain his debt out of the residue; and that the surplus (if any) must be divided equally among the simple contract creditors. Ib.

—— Judicature Act, 1875—Executor not a Secured Creditor.]—An executor's right to retain a debt due to himself does not make him a secured creditor within the meaning of the Judicature Act, 1875, s. 10, and his right to retain is not affected by that section. Lee v. Nuttall, 48 L. J., Ch. 616; 12 Ch. D. 61; 41 L. T. 363; 27 W. R. 805—C. A.

—— Statute of Limitations.]—An executor may pay a debt proved to be justly due by his testator, although barred by the Statute of Limitations; and on the same principle may have a right to retain his own debt, although barred by the statute. Stahlschmidt v. Lett, 1 Sm. & G. 415. S. P., Hill v. Walker, 4 K. & J. 166.

One of several executors, after a decree for administration of assets, may retain his own debt, although there has been no acknowledgment of it within six years before the death of the testator. Sharman v. Rudd, 27 L. J., Ch. 844; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 527.

Executors or administrators may retain for debts barred by the Statute of Limitations, though it is set up by the legatees or next of kin. Clinton v. Brophy, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 139.

A testator devised and bequeathed his personal estate and a portion of his real estate to his executor, the plaintiff, subject to debts. The other portion of his estate he gave to the defendant, charged with a specific debt. The executor sold the estate devised to himself, and paid debts; but other debts remaining due, the rest of the real estate was ordered to be sold under the statute 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104. The executor claimed, as against the proceeds of this estate, a debt due to himself, which was barred by the Statute of Limitations:—Held, that the devisee might set up the statute, and the plaintiff's claim could not be sustained. Dring v. Greetham, 23 L. J., Ch. 156; 1 W. R. 528.

—— Statute of Frauds—Claim within Statute of Frauds.]—An executor or administrator would commit a devastavit who paid a debt to a creditor who is prevented from enforcing it by the Statute of Frauds. And for the same reason an executor or administrator cannot retain such debt if due to himself. A father in consideration of the marriage of his daughter made a verbal promise to pay his daughter and her husband 500*l.* He died intestate without performing his promise, and the daughter took out administration to his estate:—Held, that the administratrix could not retain the debt out of the assets. Rownson, In re, Field v. White, 54 L. J., Ch. 950; 29 Ch. D. 358; 52 L. T. 825; 33 W. R. 604; 49 J. P. 759—C. A.

Other Matters.]—Under the common decree in a suit by creditors against an administrator:—Held, upon the authority of Spicer v. James (2 Myl. & K. 387) that the master had no jurisdiction to decide and report upon a question of retainer, the claim as to which had been set up by the defendant in his answer, but was disputed by the plaintiff. Thompson v. Cooper, 1 Coll. C. C. 81; 13 L. J., Ch. 416; 8 Jur. 164.

A testator, who died in 1833, bequeathed two cottages to his executor, in trust to sell and retain a debt due to him from the testator, and hold the surplus for other persons. The executor never proved the will, but retained the property in discharge of his debt. He bequeathed it by his will, and it was enjoyed by the tenant for life thereunder until 1852. A legatee in remainder under the second testator, afterwards instituted a suit to recover the cottages, which was resisted by a person claiming under the will of the first testator. The executor's debt was alleged to be 300*l.*, and the value, according to one side, was 300*l.*, and on the other, 360*l.*, but the value of the property had lately greatly increased from local circumstances. The court, notwithstanding the lapse of time, granted relief by ordering sale. Smith v. Bakes, 20 Beav. 568.

An executor, who was also named as devisee in a will, not attested so as to pass real estate, entered into possession of the real estate, expended his own moneys in improvements, and died intestate. His administratrix took a transfer to herself of a mortgage on the estate, and claimed it as assets under an alleged arrangement with the testator's widow, that her husband took the estate in discharge of debt due from the testator. On a bill by the testator's heiress:—Held, that the executor must account for the rents from the testator's death, with an allowance for permanent improvements. Pelly v. Bascombe, 4 Giff. 390; 33 L. J., Ch. 100. Affirmed 34 L. J., Ch. 233; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 52; 13 W. R. 306

h. Right of Set-off.

By Executors.]—An executor, sued as such for a debt which accrued to the plaintiff from the testator in his lifetime, cannot set off a debt for money had and received to the defendant's use as executor, such debts not being mutual within 2 Geo. 2, c. 22, s. 13. Mardall v. Thellusson, 6 El. & Bl. 976; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 314; 5 W. R. 25—Ex. Ch. Reversing, 21 L. J., Q. B. 410.

Action for money paid and money due, on an account stated with a testator. A plea of a set-off for money had and received to the defendant's use, as executor, and money due on an account stated with him as executor, after verdict for the defendant, is a bad plea, and it cannot be severed. Ib.

B., a residuary legatee, and surviving executrix of her husband, to whom C. and O. had given a joint bond; C. died, and the plaintiff was indebted on her own private account to O., who was a bankrupt; the bill brought against his assignees for an injunction, and to set off what was become due to her as executrix against the debt from herself to the bankrupt. Injunction denied; for as such a set-off could not be done at law there is no instance of its being allowed here; for the debts are due in different rights and 2 Geo. 2 does not comprehend it. Bishop v. Church, 3 Atk. 691; 2 Ves. Sen. 100, 371.

A demand, in the character of trustee or executor, cannot be set off against a debt due from the trustee or executor personally, although the executor gives evidence to shew that he is, in fact, personally, beneficially entitled to the amount which is due to him in the character of executor. Middleton v. Pollock, Nugee, Ex parte, 44 L. J., Ch. 584; L. R. 20 Eq. 29; 33 L. T. 240; 23 W. R. 766.

The only cases in which such a set-off of claims arising in different rights can be allowed are those where the person claiming the benefit of it can shew some equitable ground (other than the mere claim of set-off) for being protected against the legal demand. Ib.

A. was an executor and trustee of a fund to which as to one moiety he was entitled beneficially. The fund was in the hands of P., who died insolvent; at the time of P.'s death A. was indebted to P.:—Held, that A. could not set off the debt to the trust against his debt due to P. Ib.

F. had an account with a banking firm, with which bank A. also had an account. At the end of 1869 A. died, leaving F. her executor and sole residuary legatee. At the time of A.'s death there stood to her account in the bank book 600*l.*, and this balance was at once transferred by the bank to the credit of F., in a fresh account with him as "executor of the late Mrs. A." Of this sum F. drew out about 200*l.*, and paid in about 100*l.*, thus leaving 500*l.* standing to his credit. He overdrew his own private account to the extent of 300*l.* In July, 1870, the bank stopped payment and was declared bankrupt; at that time, after satisfying the legacies in A.'s will, there would have been a surplus of about 1,900*l.* of her estate, inclusive of the 500*l.* in the bank, to which F. was entitled as residuary legatee. B., as trustee of the bankrupt firm, brought an action against F. for the 300*l.*, the amount of his overdrawn private account:—Held, that F. could set off the 500*l.* balance of the executorship account, to which he was entitled as residuary legatee, against the 300*l.*, the amount of his overdrawn private account due from him to B., inasmuch as there were no equitable interests existing at that time of legatees or other third parties that could affect the 500*l.* standing in F.'s name as executor in the books of the bank. Bailey v. Finch, 41 L. J., Q. B. 83; L. R. 7 Q. B. 34; 25 L. T. 871; 20 W. R. 294.

To an action against an executor, on an account stated by him as executor, a set-off for debts due from the plaintiff to the testator in his lifetime may be pleaded. Blakesley v. Smallwood, 8 Q. B. 538; 15 L. J., Q. B. 185; 10 Jur. 470.

To an action against an executor for a debt due by his testator, he pleaded a set-off for the use and occupation of the testator's house, and for money lent by the testator; the plaintiff replied, on equitable grounds, that the testator bequeathed to the plaintiff and his other children certain sums of money, and declared by his will that the moneys and other effects then already advanced and delivered by him to his children were, and should be deemed, advancements, and that they should not be required to account for the same. Averment, that the matters of set-off were money and effects then already advanced and delivered by the testator to the plaintiff:—Held, that the replication was bad. Gulliver v. Gulliver, 1 H. & N. 174; 25 L. J., Ex. 341; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1051; 4 W. R. 653.

—— Debt of Husband to Testator—Against Wife's Share in Residue.]—A testator bequeathed to his married daughter, after the death of his wife, a share of the residue of his real and personal estate. The daughter's husband owed the testator 725*l.*, a sum equal to or in excess of her share of residue. There were six children of the marriage. The daughter had about 70*l.* a year derived from an uncle, for her life, with remainder to her children, and her husband had no private means, and made only some 60*l.* a year by his business. The testator left six children him surviving. He died in 1877:—Held, the case not coming within the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, that although the executors had a right to set off the debt due from the husband against the share given to the wife, yet as the claim of the husband, if there had been no debt, would have been subject to the wife's equity to a settlement, which would therefore have been prior to the husband's claim, the wife's equity was also prior to the executor's right of retainer. Knight v. Knight (L. R. 18 Eq. 487) distinguished. Briant, In re, Poulter v. Shackel, 57 L. J., Ch. 953; 39 Ch. D. 471; 59 L. T. 215; 36 W. R. 825.

—— Debt of Heir-at-Law—Against Descended Realty for.]—A testator devised his realty to his executors and trustees, to be converted and divided equally amongst five persons, one of whom died in his lifetime, and a portion of the testator's realty lapsed to his heir-at-law, who was indebted to the testator. The realty was sold and the proceeds received by the surviving executor and trustee, who claimed to set off the debt against the value of the descended realty:—Held, that the executor could not set off the debt against the lapsed realty which had descended to the debtor as heir-at-law. Milnes v. Sherwin, 53 L. T. 534; 33 W. R. 927.

—— Undischarged Debtor—Against Legacy to.]—A. owed B. a sum of 668*l.* In May, 1883, A. filed a liquidation petition. B. proved for his debt, but did not receive any dividend. On the 4th December, 1886, the liquidation was closed, but no discharge had been granted to A. In January, 1888, B. died, leaving A. a legacy of 1,000*l.* by his will:—Held, that, inasmuch as there was no debt which could be enforced until the expiration of three years from the close of the liquidation, the executors of B. could not retain or set off the debt as against the legacy. Rees, In re, Rees v. Rees, 60 L. T. 260.

—— Debt incurred as Receiver—Counterclaim for Money paid as Executor.]—The defendant was receiver and manager of the estate of John Grimes, deceased, under an order of Chitty, J., as well as his executor. John Grimes had guaranteed a loan made by the plaintiff to Joseph Grimes, in respect of which, in default of payment by Joseph Grimes, the defendant had paid the sum of 550*l.*, for which he obtained judgment against Joseph Grimes. In the course of his management of the farms of John Grimes the defendant bought lambs of Joseph Grimes, for which he owed 45*l.*, a debt which Joseph Grimes assigned to the plaintiff. In an action for the 45*l.* brought by the plaintiff as such assignee the defendant sought, by way of set-off and counter-claim, to set up the unsatisfied judgment for 550*l.* against Joseph Grimes, the assignor, on the ground that he was acting as receiver and manager of John Grimes' estate in buying the lambs, and that he was entitled to set off a debt due to him as executor against a debt due from him as receiver in respect of the same estate :—Held, that, as between the defendant and Joseph Grimes, the assignor, the liability in respect of the lambs was a purely personal one, and that the defendant was therefore not entitled to set off against it a debt due to the estate. Nelson v. Roberts, 69 L. T. 352.

—— Debt due by Legatee on Bond—Contract by Legatee to Purchase Part of Estate—Bankruptcy of Legatee—Disclaimer by Trustee.]—Where a residuary legatee is indebted to the estate on a bond, and has entered into a contract to purchase part of the estate, and on his bankruptcy the contract is disclaimed by his trustee, and no claim proved by the executors, the latter are entitled to set off against his interest under the will the sum due on the bond, but have no claim which they can set off in respect of the contract. Stammers v. Elliott (L. R. 3 Ch. 195), discussed and distinguished. Palmer, In re, Palmer v. Clarke, 13 R. 220.

—— Retainer against Share of Beneficiary—Testator Surety for Legatee—Bankruptcy of Legatee.]—Executors who have paid money out of a testator's estate in respect of a liability incurred by the testator as surety for the debt of a person to whom he bequeathed a share of his residuary estate, and who was made bankrupt after the testator's death, have (if they have not proved in the bankruptcy) a right of retainer of the amount paid by them, with interest at 4 per cent., out of the share of the legatee in the testator's estate. Watson, In re, Turner v. Watson, 65 L. J., Ch. 553 ; [1896] 1 Ch. 925 ; 74 L. T. 453 ; 44 W. R. 571.

They may also retain as against the legatee's share the sum deducted by the creditor in satisfaction of his claim from the proceeds of sale of property mortgaged by the testator as a collateral security for the debt. Ib.

An executor or trustee of a will cannot, as against the trustee in bankruptcy of a legatee or beneficiary who has become bankrupt after the testator's death, retain a legacy or share of residue in respect of a continuing collateral liability of the testator's estate by way of suretyship for a debt that has been proved by the principal creditor in the bankruptcy. Watson, In re, Turner v. Watson (supra) distinguished. Binns, In re, Lee v. Binns, 65 L. J., Ch. 830 ; [1896] 2 Ch. 584 ; 75 L. T. 99.

Statute-barred Debt—Residuary Real and Personal Estate.]—A testator devised and bequeathed all his residuary real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to convert, and out of the moneys to arise from the conversion to pay his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses and legacies, and divide the net residue into seven parts, three of which were given to three of his sons absolutely. The testator in his lifetime had advanced sums of money to each of the three sons, but any right of action in respect of such sums, assuming them to be debts owing to the testator, was at the time of his death barred by the Statute of Limitations :—Held, that a person who owes an estate money—that is to say, who is bound to increase the general mass of the estate by a contribution of his own, cannot claim an aliquot share given to him out of that mass without first making the contribution which completes it ; and that by the application of this principle to the present case, the three sons were bound to bring into account as against their respective shares, as well of the proceeds of sale of the residuary real estate as of the residuary personal estate, any sums due by them to the testator at the date of his death, with interest at 4 per cent. from that date. Akerman, In re, Akerman v. Akerman, 61 L. J., Ch. 34 ; [1891] 3 Ch. 212 ; 65 L. T. 194 ; 40 W. R. 12.

—— Specific Gifts.]—By the will freehold and leasehold hereditaments were given specifically to the three sons :—Held, that they were respectively entitled to the properties specifically given without first making good what (if anything) they owed to the testator's estate. Ib.

A testator specifically bequeathed the profits of his share in a brewery in trust for his son, who was indebted to his estate upon two promissory notes. The debt was barred by the Statute of Limitations. The executors had not assented to the legacy :—Held, that moneys in the hands of the executors on account of profits of the said business ought to be retained by them against the debt owing to the testator's estate by the legatee. Akerman v. Akerman ([1891] 3 Ch. 212) distinguished, and dictum not followed. Taylor, In re, Taylor v. Wade, 63 L. J., Ch. 424 ; [1894] 1 Ch. 671 ; 8 R. 186 ; 70 L. T. 556 ; 42 W. R. 373.

—— Pecuniary Legacy.]—In a suit by a legatee to obtain payment of the legacy out of the assets of the testator, in a due course of administration, the executors may retain so much of a legacy as is sufficient to satisfy a debt due from the legatee to the testator at the time of his death, although the remedy for such debt is at the time of the death of the testator barred by by the Statute of Limitations. Courteney v. Williams, 3 Hare, 539 ; 13 L. J., Ch. 461. Affirmed 15 L. J., Ch. 204 ; 8 Jur. 844—L. C.

Although a debt due to a testator's estate is barred by the Statute of Limitations, his executors may set off a legacy bequeathed by him to the debtor against the debt, and retain the same accordingly. Coates v. Coates, 33 L. J., Ch. 448 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 532 ; 9 L. T. 795 ; 12 W. R. 634.

By Executor against Administrator.]—Cross demands, existing in separate rights, are not, in equity (except under special circumstances), allowed to be set off one against the other ; and therefore an executor and trustee of a legacy, who was also the residuary legatee, and had become a creditor of the husband and administrator of a deceased legatee, was not, in the absence of any special agreement, allowed to set off his debt against the legacy to which the husband (having survived his wife, the legatee) was, as such administrator, entitled. Freeman v. Lomas, 9 Hare, 109 ; 20 L. J., Ch. 564 ; 15 Jur. 648.

By Administrators.]—A debt due to the administrator of an intestate in his own right from one of the next of kin may be set off in a suit by the next of kin for administration of the estate against a sum due from the administrator in respect of the next of kin's share of the intestate's estate. Taylor v. Taylor, 44 L. J., Ch. 718 ; L. R. 20 Eq. 155.

An administrator is entitled to set off against the share of one of the next of kin in the intestate's estate, the whole of a debt of which part had become barred by the Statute of Limitations. Cordwell, In re, White v. Cordwell, 44 L. J., Ch. 746 ; L. R. 20 Eq. 644 ; 23 W. R. 826.

Where some of the next of kin of an intestate have brought an action against an administrator, acting as executor of another estate, and have been ordered to pay the costs of the action which failed, the administrator will be entitled to set off his debt due for costs against the shares in the intestate's estate due from him to such next of kin. Jones, In re, Christmas v. Jones, 66 L. J., Ch. 439 ; [1897] 2 Ch. 190 ; 76 L. T. 454 ; 45 W. R. 598.

—— Against Wife's Share of Estate for Debt of Husband to.]—Upon the bill of a married woman entitled to a share of the personal estate as one of the next of kin of the intestate against her husband and administrator, the latter claiming to retain toward satisfaction of a debt by bond from the husband to him, it was declared he was not entitled to retain, but that the plaintiff's share was subject to a further provision in favour of her and her children, the settlement on her marriage being inadequate to the fortune she then possessed ; and it was referred to the master to see a proper settlement made on her and her children ; regard being had to the extent of her fortune, and the settlement already made upon him. Elibank (Lady) v. Montolieu, 5 Ves. 737.

Against Executors.]—A., one of the executors of the will of B., was entitled thereunder to a share of the estate. A., being at the time a debtor to B. for 500*l.*, was adjudicated bankrupt in the lifetime of B. :—Held, that the debt of 500*l.* could not be retained by way of set-off against the share payable to A., nor any dividend in respect thereof, but that the share must be paid over intact to A.'s trustee in bankruptcy, and the executors must put in their proof as ordinary creditors. Hodgson, In re, Hodgson v. Fox, 48 L. J., Ch. 52 ; 9 Ch. D. 673 ; 27 W. R. 38.

Where a stranger received rent due to the testator in his lifetime, and afterwards by desire of the tenant in possession, paid a demand for ground-rent due at the same time for the same premises :—Held, that he might deduct such payment in an action by the executor for the rent received, but not a payment of ground-rents arising after the death of the testator. Wilkinson v. Cawood, 3 Anst. 905.

The widow of a testator, with the acquiescence of his heir, was let into possession of certain freehold houses under an erroneous supposition that they passed by the will along with other property, in which a life interest was devised to her ; and before the error was discovered, or her right disputed, she died. On a bill filed by the heir, against her personal representative, praying the delivery of title deeds, and an account, it was held, that the suit was maintainable for the rents received during her continuance in possession ; that, as the defence of the Statute of Limitations was not raised upon the pleadings, the account should be taken from the time when the plaintiff's title first accrued ; and that the plaintiff was not at liberty to set off the amount of such rents against the amount of payments made by the widow in her character of executrix, those payments not forming a personal demand against the plaintiff. Monypenny v. Bristow, 2 Russ. & M. 117 ; 1 L. J., Ch. 88.

—— Bankrupt Executor—Costs of Suit.]—A bankrupt executor was charged with interest on his balances, but he was allowed his costs of suit : —Held, that the costs subsequent to the bankruptcy were not to be set off against his debt, which had accrued prior to his bankruptcy. Cotton v. Clark, 16 Beav. 134 ; 16 Jur. 879.

Against Administrator—Loss of Trust Fund by Administratrix's Solicitor—Settlement by Administratrix prior to Breach of Trust.]—The defendant, Mrs. P., was the administratrix of H., and as one of the next of kin of the intestate was entitled, after payment of debts, to one moiety of the residue, which amounted to 20,000*l.* In 1869, before the death of H., Mrs. P. settled all her property by a covenant to settle after-acquired property. The money was misappropriated by the solicitors of Mrs. P., and in an action to administer the estate of H., the chief clerk found that Mrs. P. must replace the balance of the money so lost, part of it having been recovered. The plaintiff, Mrs. S., was entitled to the other moiety of the residue. She, in 1879, had settled her share by a covenant to settle after-acquired property. A summons taken out by Mrs. P. to vary the chief clerk's certificate, was dismissed with costs. On the same summons : —Held, that Mrs. P., as one of the next of kin of H., could take nothing out of the personal estate until the amount which she was liable as administratrix to replace had been made good by her. Held, also, that the trustees of her marriage settlement were subject to the same equity. Hervey, In re, Short v. Parratt, 61 L. T. 429.

A. was indebted on bond to B. B. died, leaving C. his sole next of kin, who obtained letters of administration of his estate. The estate of B., after all debts, &c., were paid, left a clear residue exceeding the amount of the bond debt. A. became surety for C. by joining in promissory notes. C. became an insolvent debtor, and A. was compelled to pay the notes. C. died, and then the assignee under his insolvency took out letters of administration de bonis non of B., and sued A. on the bond :—Held, that A. might set off the sums which he had been compelled to pay as surety for C. against the bond debt. Jones v. Mossop, 3 Hare, 568 ; 13 L. J., Ch. 470 ; 8 Jur. 1064.

To an action by an administrator de bonis non, who sues in his representative character, for a debt due after the death of the intestate, and in the lifetime of the first administrator, the defendant cannot set off a debt due to him from the first administrator. Allison v. Smith, 10 B. & S. 747.

To an action by an administrator for the balance of the intestate's banking account at the time of his death, the defendants in their statement of defence sought to avail themselves, either by way of set-off or of counter-claim, of a debt due to them from the intestate as one of several makers of a promissory note for 1,000*l.* which did not become due until after the intestate's death. Reply, that before action, an order was made in an administration suit in the Chancery Division, to take an account of the debts and liabilities affecting the personal estate of the deceased, of which the defendants before action had notice ; and that, under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 14, equity would restrain any proceedings on the note until the account had been taken :—Held, that the claim in respect of the promissory note could not be relied on as a set-off; and that in accordance with the practice in equity, the defendants must under the circumstances be restrained from setting it up by way of counter-claim, and be left to prove for it in the administration suit. Newell v. National Provincial Bank of England, 45 L. J., C. P. 285; 1 C. P. D. 496; 34 L. T. 533; 24 W. R. 458.

A creditor of an intestate purchasing part of the intestate's goods from his administrator cannot set off the amount against a debt due to him from the intestate at his decease. Lambarde v. Older, 17 Beav. 542; 23 L. J., Ch. 18; 17 Jur. 1110; 2 W. R. 32.

To an action by an administrator, who sues in his representative character for a debt due after the death of the intestate, the defendant cannot set off a debt due to him from the intestate in his lifetime. Rees v. Watts, 11 Ex. 410; 25 L. J., Ex. 30; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1023; 3 W. R. 575—Ex. Ch.

To an action for money received to the use of the plaintiff as administrator, and on an account stated with him as administrator, with promises to him as administrator, the defendant cannot plead a set-off for money due from the intestate in his lifetime. Schofield v. Corbett, 11 Q. B. 779, n.; 6 N. & M. 527.

Debt from Estate to Joint Trustees—Debt due from one Trustee to Estate.]—Crombie and Storer were two trustees of an estate administered by the court. Crombie became bankrupt after 1869. A balance of 896*l.* was found due from Crombie to the estate and a balance of 745*l.* was found due from the estate to the two trustees jointly:—Held, that the debt due from the estate to the two trustees could not be set off against the debt due from one; that the plaintiffs were entitled to an inquiry what part of the 745*l.* found due to the two trustees was, as between the two, due to Crombie the bankrupt, but as that inquiry was not asked for, and as there was evidence shewing that all the money was in fact due to Storer, the debt so due must be paid to him. McEwan v. Crombie or Porter v. Grant, 53 L. J., Ch. 24; 25 Ch. D. 175; 49 L. T. 499; 32 W. R. 115.

Other Cases.]—In a sale by an executor of "book debts" due to his testator, the purchaser is entitled not to the sums appearing in the books as due to the testator, but only to what, on a proper adjustment of accounts between his debtors and his estate, should be found to be due to his estate. Chick v. Blackmore, 2 Sm. & G. 274; 23 L. J., Ch. 622; 2 W. R. 488.

The executor of A. sold A.'s book debts to B. At the time of A.'s death, A. was himself indebted to several of the persons who appeared as his debtors in his books. The executor, instead of setting off the debts due by A. against the debts due to him, paid in full the debts from A. In a suit for the administration of A.'s estate:—Held, that the executor was not entitled to be allowed these sums in his accounts. Ib.

Executor becoming indebted as such to the estate of a testator in respect of receipts, annuity given him by will directed to be applied to repay estate. Skinner v. Sweet, 3 Madd. 244; G. Coop. 54.

i. Respecting Creditors.

1. Right of Preference.

Simple Contract Debts.]—Payment by an executor of a simple contract debt before breach of the condition of a bond is good, and no devastavit in case of deficiency of assets; but payment of legacies is not. Hawkins v. Day, Amb. 160; Dick. 151.

An executor will be allowed payments made by him to simple contract creditors of his testator, a bond being in existence, but not payable, but he will not be allowed payments to legatees, notwithstanding he had no notice of the bond. Norman v. Baldry, 6 Sim. 621.

Payment by an executor of simple contract debts before he has notice of a specialty debt is good. Hawkins v. Day, Amb. 162; Dick. 151. S. P., Bettenson v. Winder, Dick. 468.

An executor may, after allowing a reasonable time to elapse after the testator's death, pay simple contract debts in priority to specialty debts, of which he has no notice; and where the testator lived and died in India, and the executor seven months afterwards received notice of the existence of the will and his own appointment as executor, and three months afterwards repaid to the testator's widow moneys for which his estate was liable on simple contract, and which she had paid out of her own moneys, and then sixteen months afterwards received notice of a specialty debt due to a creditor of the testator in India:—Held, that he was justified in making the payment which he had made to the widow, she having by those payments placed herself in the position of the creditors whose claims she had discharged, and that the date of his repayment to her was the date at which the payment by him out of the estate of the so discharged debts must be considered to have been made. Le Geyt, In re, Nosotti v. Jefferson, 3 De G. J. & S. 570; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 656; 8 L. T. 589; 11 W. R. 841.

Payment of simple contract debts by executors allowed, where the testator had been a shareholder in a banking company by deed under seal, and calls had been afterwards made in respect of the shares held by him, to meet which calls there were no assets. Henderson v. Gilchrist, 22 L. J., Ch. 970; 17 Jur. 570; 1 W. R. 426.

Executor liable to future contingent demands in respect of covenants entered into by the testator for payment of rent of premises specifically devised, is entitled to a sufficient indemnity to be given by the legatee; but if there is no surplus after payment of debts, the executor is protected against demands on foot of such covenants by payments made even to simple contract creditors before notice of the breach. Wildridge v. M'Kane, 1 Moll. 122.

An executor having assets of his testator, either in money or goods, before any bill had been filed for the administration of the estate, applied to a creditor of the testator for a loan of a sum of money equal in amount to the debt; and the creditor accepted the personal security of the executor for the amount, and released his debt against the estate:—Held, that the executor having, by such substitution of his own security for that of the estate, discharged the debt as against the estate, should not be treated as a mere purchaser of the debt of the creditor, and, as such, entitled only to stand in the place of the creditor; but that the executor was entitled to be allowed, in his own discharge, the amount of the debt as a debt of the testator preferred and paid. Hepworth v. Heslop, 6 Hare, 561; 18 L. J., Ch. 352; 13 Jur. 166.

A direction in will to pay simple contract creditors before specialty ones, is not void, being within the exception in the Statute of Fraudulent Devises. Millar v. Horton, Coop. 45.

When there is a sufficiency of assets for payment of debts, executors may pay simple contract debts not bearing interest, before specialty debts bearing interest, if not objected to by the specialty creditors; and the legatees are not at liberty to complain of the order of payment. Turner v. Turner, 1 Jac. & Walk. 39.

—— After Action brought.]—Where an executor or administrator, after the commencement of a creditor's administration action and before judgment, has voluntarily paid any creditor in full, the rule in equity and not at law must now prevail, under Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-s. 11, and he will accordingly be held to have made a good payment, and will be allowed it in passing his accounts, even though he may have had notice of the action before payment. Radcliffe, In re, European Assurance Society, v. Radcliffe, 7 Ch. D. 733; 26 W. R. 417.

To prevent such payments being made in any such action, the plaintiff should, immediately upon issuing the writ, apply for and obtain a receiver. Ib. Overruled on this point, Harris, In re, Harris v. Harris, 56 L. J., Ch. 754; 56 L. T. 507; 35 W. R. 710. Wells, In re, Molony v. Brooke, 59 L. J., Ch. 810; 45 Ch. D. 569; 63 L. T. 54; 39 W. R. 139.

An executor or administrator is entitled, after action brought against him by a creditor of the deceased for his debt, to apply the assets in payment of the debt of another creditor, inasmuch as, the rules of law and equity on the subject having been in conflict, the equity rule must now prevail. Radcliffe, In re (7 Ch. D. 733), followed. Vibart v. Coles, 59 L. J., Q. B. 152; 24 Q. B. D. 364; 62 L. T. 551; 38 W. R. 359—C. A.

Specialty Debt.]—The effect of Hinde Palmer's Act being to place simple contract creditors and specialty creditors on an equal footing in the administration of an estate, an executor may, in exercise of his right of preference, pay a simple contract creditor in priority to a specialty creditor of his testator. Orsmond, In re, Drury v. Orsmond, 58 L. T. 24.

2. Compromises and Compounding Debts.

The Trustee Act, 1893, s. 21, replacing the repealed s. 37 of Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, gives an executor or administrator full powers to compromise and compound debts, and enter into arrangements.

Apart from Statute.] — Though, generally speaking, an executor or trustee compounding or releasing a debt, must answer for the same, yet, if this appears to have been for the benefit of the trust estate, it is an excuse. Blue v. Marshall, 3 P. W. 381.

Executor having, under a misconception of a will, at the trial of an issue upon a debt, entered into an improper compromise with the creditor, expressly subject to the approbation of the court, was permitted to try the issue, paying the costs. Legh v. Holloway, 8 Ves. 213.

A testator who was tenant for life of his real estate, bequeathed to a trustee the residue of his real and personal estate, and all rent and arrears of rent which might be due to him at the time of his decease, and all timber or other trees he might be entitled to, upon trust, to sell and convert into money, get in, and recover so much thereof as should not consist of ready money; and declared certain trusts of the proceeds. He authorised the executors of his will, of whom the trustee was one, to compromise and compound, or submit to arbitration and settle, all debts owing to or from him; and generally to act in relation to the premises as they should think expedient, without being liable to any loss which might be occasioned thereby:—Held, that this will did not authorise the trustee or executors to sell the arrears of rent to the remainderman. Alexander, In re, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 137.

The executors, one of whom became agent to the remainderman, sold the arrears, which amounted to 49,000*l.*, to the remainderman for 20,000*l.* Almost the whole amount of arrears was collected by the remainderman:—Held, that the executors were to be charged with the entire amount of the arrears which had been received. Ib.

Testatrix contracted with A. for the sale of an estate for 1,000*l.* She, by will, directed the executor to complete it, and pay plaintiff the 1,000*l.*, and devised other estates to A. and her executor, who compromised, for 500*l.* each, a claim set up after her death, impeaching the title to her estates, the executor becoming by the compromise owner of the contracted estate, and A. owner of the other estates:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the 1,000*l.* from the executor without contributing to the payment of the 500*l.* for the compromise, which must fall on the residuary estate devised to the executor, the compromise being a device between A. and the executor to avoid the consequence of A. becoming owner of the contracted estate. Mark v. Willington, Beat. 128.

A parol agreement was entered into between the executors of L. and T., that various old accounts between the testators should be settled without reference to the time that they had been running, and that a balance should be struck. The accounts were accordingly settled, and the executors of L. were allowed the value of a promissory note, which, but for the agreement, would have been barred by the Statute of Limitations. The executors of T. afterwards discovered a note from L. to T., which but for the same reason, would have been barred by the statute:—Held, that the agreement was one for valuable consideration, on both sides, to waive the benefit of the statute, and ought to be enforced. Lade v. Trill, 6 Jur. 272.

One of several executors may settle an account with a person accountable to the estate, and, in the absence of fraud, the settlement will be binding on the others, though dissenting. Smith v. Everett, 27 Beav. 446; 29 L. J., Ch. 236; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1332; 7 W. R. 605.

But where one of three executors, against the will of his co-executors, compromised a claim against the testator's estate, and the effect of the compromise was to relieve him from a liability which he was under to the estate jointly with the creditor the compromise was held not to bind the estate, and, at the instance of the co-executors, it was set aside. Stott v. Lord, 31 L. J., Ch. 391; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 249; 5 L. T. 817; 10 W. R. 284.

About a year after a testator's death, the executrix brought an action against a debtor, and recovered judgment, but she did not issue execution until a year after, when a bankruptcy ensued, and the debt was lost. The executrix was empowered to compound or allow time for the payment of any debts :—Held, that she was not liable for a devastavit. Ratcliffe v. Winch, 17 Beav. 217.

—— Several Executors—Debt Due from one.]—A. C., being one of several executors, a debtor to his testator's estate in the sum of 20,130*l.*, and entitled to one-sixth of the said estate (estimated at 6,000*l.*) as legatee under the will, agreed with his co-executors, in accordance with the terms of the will and without objection from the parties interested, to set off the said 6,000*l.* against the like amount of the debt then payable by him, at the same time paying about 1,000*l.* in cash. Thereafter having become insolvent, A. C. agreed, by way of compromise with his creditors, including the said executors, that they should accept 5*s.* in the pound in full of their demands, secretly arranging with some of the said creditors to pay to them further sums if he should be in a position so to do, and subsequently paying to them, or some of them, further sums. For the purposes of the compromise the debt due to the testator's estate was treated by the executors as amounting to 19,808*l.*, thus in effect reviving the debt of 6,000*l.* which had been previously discharged, and accepting in respect of it a composition of 5*s.* in the pound ; and the executors also treated as revived A. C.'s right to one-sixth of the testator's estate. In a suit brought by a legatee against the executors, all of whom proved the will :—Held, that the above agreement of set-off extinguished A. C.'s debt pro tanto, and had the same effect as if A. C. had paid 6,000*l.* in cash. It also extinguished A. C.'s right under the bequest, unless it should turn out that the one-sixth share exceeded the estimated 6,000*l.*, and subject to his liability to refund pro tanto in case the same should fall short of the estimated 6,000*l.* De Cordova v. De Cordova, 4 App. Cas. 692 ; 41 L. T. 43—P. C.

Held, also, that the agreement of compromise was a breach of trust and void as against the plaintiff, and that it was fraudulent as regards A. C. The secret arrangement, though not legally binding, was sufficient to vitiate the compromise. Ib.

Held, further, that A. C. was liable to the estate for the full amount of what would have been due and payable by him if the compromise had never been effected, and that the co-executors were severally liable for so much of the said amount as would or might at any time have come to their hands but for their wilful neglect and default. Ib.

23 & 24 Vict. 145, s. 30.]—Section 30 of the Trustees and Mortgagees Act, 1860, which empowers executors to compromise claims relating to the estate of their testator is not confined to claims outside his will, but applies to the claim of a legatee. Warren, In re, Weedon v. Reading, 53 L. J., Ch. 1016 ; 51 L. T. 561 ; 32 W. R. 916. And see now Trustee Act, 1893, s. 21.

44 & 45 Vict. c. 41, s. 37.] — Semble, that the effect of s. 37 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, is, that an executor is only liable for delay in suing for his testator's debt when he has not acted bonâ fide. Owens, In re, Jones v. Owens, 47 L. T. 61—C. A.

Even before the passing of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, executors had a fair discretion, whether they would or would not immediately sue a debtor of the testator for the amount due to the estate, and their not doing so, although loss occurred by the delay, was not necessarily wilful neglect or default for which they were liable. Ib.

And see now Trustee Act, 1893, s. 21.

Partnership Property.]—A testator, who died in 1879, by his will gave an annuity to his wife, and legacies of considerable amount to trustees for the benefit of his seven daughters and their husbands and children, and he bequeathed one moiety of his share of the businesses carried on by him in partnership with his two eldest sons to trustees upon trust for his youngest son, and he devised and bequeathed the residue of his real and personal estate to his two eldest sons in equal moieties, and he authorised his trustees to postpone the realisation of his estate, and to carry on and manage any trades or businesses in which he might be engaged at his death, for so long as they should think fit. The testator at the time of his death, carried on business in partnership with his two eldest sons, in various mining and colliery properties and ironworks. Actions had been commenced for the administration of his estate, and it was stated that the testator's share in the partnership businesses could not be realised without considerable loss, and if realised at once would not be sufficient to pay all the legacies bequeathed in full. Application was made for the sanction of the court to a scheme whereby a limited company was to be formed to take over the businesses in which the testator was a partner, and to consist in the first instance, of persons interested in the testator's estate, to whom it was proposed to allot debentures, preference and ordinary shares, in lieu of their several interests in the testator's estate :—Held, that the court had no jurisdiction to sanction such a scheme, which was in no way authorised by the testator's will. Crawshay, In re, Dennis v. Crawshay, 60 L. T. 357.

A., B., C., D., and E. obtained a concession from, and entered into a contract with, the Egyptian government for the construction of certain works. Before the works had been actually begun A. died. Doubts existing as to the rights of A.'s trustees and executors (who by his will had the fullest power of management given them, and of completing any existing contracts), and the other contractors inter se, a contract was, after considerable negotiation, drawn up between B., C., D., and E., and " executors and trustees of the will of " A., and signed by B., C., D., and E. before the will of A. had been proved. The agreement was that the work should be completed in the joint interests of the survivors and the estate of A. Subsequently one of the executors and trustees renounced and disclaimed, and the others signed the agreement. B., C., D., and E. filed a bill to set aside the agreement for a declaration that the partnership was dissolved by A.'s death, and for winding-up : —Held, first, that the agreement was binding on all parties. McClean v. Kennard, 30 L. T. 186 ; 22 W. R. 382.

Held, secondly, that independently of the agreement, the right of A.'s representatives was to have the contract completed, the estate being liable to contribute towards the required capital, and liable for any losses. Ib.

A testator, who carried on business in partnership with his brother, by his will, dated the 23rd November, 1861, directing payment of his debts, and, after bequeathing specific and pecuniary legacies, he devised and bequeathed all his real and leasehold and personal estate to trustees, upon trust for sale and conversion into money, and to hold the proceeds of sale on certain trusts. In 1872 the brother and the testator's widow, who was then the sole trustee and executrix of the will, joined in selling and conveying real estate, of which the brother and the testator had been tenants in common, and which was in fact partnership property, to a limited company who purchased the business. The purchase-money was to be paid partly in cash and partly in fully paid-up shares and debentures of the company. At the same time an arrangement was made for the handing over of the whole purchase-money to the bankers of the partnership, to whom the partnership was largely indebted, and whose debt was secured by mortgages of the partnership property, in satisfaction of the debt due to the bankers, the bankers undertaking to pay the other creditors of the partnership, and handing back to the executrix a sum of cash and some of the debentures, and providing certain other benefits for the brother. The conveyance of the real estate to the company contained a recital that the brother and the widow were entitled to the property in equal undivided moieties, and the widow purported to convey as trustee of her husband's will, but it was not stated in the deed that she was his executrix or that the property was partnership property. On a subsequent sale of the property by the company, the purchaser objected that the sale by the widow was not authorised by the trust for sale, the consideration not being entirely paid in money: — Held, that the arrangement as to the disposition of the purchase-money received from the company amounted to a compromise by the widow with the creditors and with the surviving partner into which it was competent to her as executrix to enter under s. 30 of the act 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145. West of England and South Wales Bank v. Murch, 52 L. J., Ch. 784; 23 Ch. D. 138; 48 L. T. 417; 31 W. R. 467.

A., B., C. and D. purchased land on a joint speculation, reserving to each other a right of pre-emption over the shares of any that might wish to withdraw. A. died, leaving B. and C. executors and trustees, devising to them his fourth share, with power to join with the other parties in managing, selling, conveying or making partition of the property. C., who was indebted to the concern, on mortgage of his share for the amount of his purchase-money, then agreed with B. and D. to release to them absolutely, in discharge of his mortgage, but subject to his mortgage, the greater part of his fourth share, the remainder of his share being conveyed to him in severalty. B. and D. then carried to the account of A.'s estate one-fourth of the amount of C.'s mortgage-money: — Held, on a suit by the parties interested under A.'s will, that A.'s estate was not entitled to the benefit of the agreement for the purchase of C.'s share, by reason of there being no power in A.'s will to purchase land, and because his executors had no right to subject his estate to the payment of C.'s mortgage-money. Peck v. Cardwell, 2 Beav. 137.

j. Respecting Legacies.

1. Right of Assent.

What constitutes Assent.]—H. devised a term to his nephew for life, with remainder over, with a leasing power for twenty-one years, and made him and two others executors; the nephew entered and was possessed, and alone demised the premises for forty-two years, reserving rent to himself, his executors, &c.:—Held, that neither his entry on the land, nor his sole lease reserving rent to himself and his executors, which was alike inconsistent with his interest as tenant for life and his duty as executor, should be deemed an assent to the legacy; and that the lease should therefore take effect for the whole forty-two years, out of the lessor's legal interest as executor. Doe d. Hayes v. Sturges, 7 Taunt. 217; 2 Marsh. 505; 17 R. R. 491.

Where an executrix has a life estate in a chattel under a bequest, her taking possession of the chattel is no assent to a further bequest thereof in remainder. Richards v. Browne, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 493; 4 Scott, 262; 3 Hodges, 27; 6 L. J., C. P. 95.

A testator made the following will: "Subject to my debts, I bequeath to my wife the clear rentals of my two (leasehold) houses, Nos. 17 and 19, P. Street, for her life, to be paid to her every month; and after her decease, I leave No. 17 (and other property) to my son R.; and I direct that the rents shall be received and the property be under the management of my executors. After R.'s decease I direct his share of the property be equally divided between his children; but, should he die without leaving lawful issue, I direct the same to be equally divided amongst the surviving children of my daughter M. A. C. I appoint my son-in-law, J. C., and his wife, M. A. C., my executors." The executors proved the will, and collected the rents of the property, and paid the rents of No. 17 to the widow during her life, and, after her death, to R., who died without leaving issue:—Held, that the assent of the executors to the life estates was an assent to the bequest in remainder. Stevenson v. Liverpool Corporation, 44 L. J., Q. B. 34; L. R. 10 Q. B. 81; 31 L. T. 673; 23 W. R. 246. And see Webster v. Johnson, 3 W. R. 60.

Payments made by an executor for the benefit of the legatee of specifically bequeathed leaseholds, generally out of funds coming to his hands, and not specially out of the rents of the leaseholds, will not, without more, constitute an assent by the executor to the bequest. Thorne v. Thorne, 63 L. J., Ch. 38; [1893] 3 Ch. 196; 8 R. 282; 69 L. T. 378; 42 W. R. 282.

Bequest of Residue.]—Testator bequeathed the residue of his estate, including the lease of a colliery, to trustees, who were also executors of his will, on trust for his son on his attaining twenty-one years of age. On the son attaining that age, the trustees let him into possession, but made no formal assignment of the lease, and there were still debts due from the testator's estate:—Held, that the assent of the executors was sufficient to pass the property in the colliery, and that it was competent for them to assent to the bequest of part of the residue of the estate without assenting to the rest. Austin v. Beddoe, 3 R. 580; 41 W. R. 619.

An executor, by assenting to a bequest of residue, does not thereby constitute himself a trustee of the fund so as to prevent the operation of the Statute of Limitations. An executrix in 1870 signed a declaration at the foot of her residuary account, whereby she declared that the residue of the estate which she was administering was 607*l.* 7*s.* 9*d.*, being the residue and moneys which she intended to retain to her own use and the use of J., being a sister and a descendant of a brother of the deceased. J. was in fact the residuary legatee. In 1887 the representative of the residuary legatee instituted an action against the representative of the executrix to recover the fund :—Held, that the Statute of Limitations was a defence to the action. Rowe, In re, Jacobs v. Hind, 58 L. J., Ch. 703 ; 61 L. T. 581—C. A.

Effect of.]—Whenever an executor assents to a bequest in his testator's will, there is an end of his interest in the things bequeathed, and he cannot afterwards dissent. And it is equally true that the executor's assent to the first devise is an assent to the remainder over. Foley v. Burnell, 4 Bro. P. C. 34.

Where a person, executor and trustee of legacy to be laid out in stock, has fully administered estate and assented to legacy, and retains legacy in his hands not as assets but as trustee, he is liable for breach of trust, and ordered to purchase stock at price of time when he was first able to invest. Byrchall v. Bradford, 6 Madd. 235 ; 23 R. R. 204.

Before Probate.]—An assent to a legacy, given by an executor who dies without proving the will, becomes operative, on administration being afterwards taken out, with the will annexed. Johnson v. Warwick, 17 C. B. 516 ; 25 L. J., C. P. 102.

Evidence as to.]—A. devised the residue of a term determinable on lives to B. After the decease of the testator the administrator with the will annexed paid the rent reserved for six years, and charged it to B. :—Held, that this was sufficient evidence of his assent to the bequest to enable B. to maintain ejectment. Doe d. Mabberly v. Mabberly, 6 Car. & P. 126.

A. bequeathed to his two sons his two carriage manufactories, with all fixtures, implements, tools, stock, job-carriages, harness, and everything appertaining to his trade in the manufactories. At the time of his death a carriage was in one of the manufactories, unfinished, which was being built to the order of a purchaser. A question arose between the executors and the sons, whether this carriage fell within the bequest ; and the executors paid the legacy duty on the whole, but annexed the following memorandum to the legacy receipt :—"A disagreement arising between the sons and the executors, as to whether the whole of this item belongs to the sons, or part to the residue, the executors desire to pay the duty on the whole, leaving it for them to settle with the legatees the proportion of duty when the matter in dispute shall be determined." The sons retained possession of and finished the carriage, delivered it to the purchaser, and received the price. In an action by the executors against them for money had and received, commenced two years afterwards :—Held, that there was no evidence to go to the jury of assent by the executors to the legacy of the carriage to the sons. Elliott v. Elliott, 9 M. & W. 23 ; 11 L. J., Ex. 3.

F., the elder, bequeathed leasehold premises to F., the younger, in trust to sell the same, and out of the proceeds to retain for his own use 150*l.* to reimburse himself funeral expenses, and to divide the surplus, if any, amongst the testator's children and grandchild. F. did not take out probate of his father's will, but entered into possession of the premises and retained them till his death, having by his will bequeathed them to his executors, who demised them to the defendant. The plaintiff having taken out administration with the will annexed of F., the elder, and brought ejectment to recover the premises :—Held, that he was not entitled to recover, as the act of bequeathing the premises by F., the younger, was evidence of the latter having elected to take the premises as legatee. Fenton v. Clegg, 9 Ex. 680 ; 2 C. L. R. 1014 ; 23 L. J., Ex. 197.

Leasehold property was bequeathed to three persons, who were also appointed executors of the will, upon certain trusts. One only of the executors proved the will. Six years afterwards he conveyed the whole property, professing to do so as executor :—Held, that lapse of time from the probate of the will was no evidence of an assent to the legacy, and that, therefore, the whole property passed. Hawkins v. Williams, 10 W. R. 692.

The doctrine that slight evidence of the assent of executors to a bequest is sufficient, or that it may be implied, only applies in ordinary cases, where the assent would be rightful, and not where it must be implied against their own acts. Tudor v. Guest, 27 L. J., Ex. 395.

Where a bequest to the defendant was by a husband of leasehold property devised to his deceased wife for her separate use, and which she had bequeathed to the plaintiff, and the husband's executors joined with the devisee of the wife in suing :—Held, that even supposing that the husband's assent was necessary to the validity of the wife's will, the assent of the executors to the bequest by him to the defendant required to be proved by express evidence, and was not to be presumed or implied in opposition to their own act in suing. Ib.

Question of Fact for Jury.]—Where A., the legatee of a term, entered and occupied for a short time, and then quitted the possession, it is a question for the jury whether the executors have or have not assented to the bequest ; and if a party contracts with A. for an underlease, it may be left to the jury to say whether the contract was made with A. in his own right, or as agent to the executors. Richardson v. Gifford, 3 N. & M. 325.

The assent of an executor to a bequest is not a matter of law, but a question of fact for the jury. Mason v. Farnell, 12 M. & W. 674 ; 1 D. & L. 576 ; 13 L. J., Ex. 142.

2. Interest on.

In General.]—It is a general rule for convenience, to consider the personal estate to have been reduced into possession in a year from the death of the testator, and therefore interest is given upon legacies from that period, unless some other is fixed by the will, though actual payment within that time may in many instances be impracticable. Wood v. Penoyre, 13 Ves. 333 ; 9 R. R. 185. S. P., Bourke v. Ricketts, 10 Ves. 333.

Interest on legacies is given for delay of payment, and, consequently, until the day of payment arrives, no interest is, in general, demandable. Donovan v. Needham, 9 Beav. 164; 15 L. J., Ch. 193; 10 Jur. 150.

The rule that general legacies bear interest only from the end of a year from the death of the testator, applies to similar legacies under a feme covert's will made in exercise of a power of appointment. Tatham v. Drummond, 2 H. & M. 262.

Legacy to Infant.]—A legacy to a child carries interest, on the ground of the presumed intention of the parent to fulfil his moral duty of providing for the maintenance of his child; but if he has discharged that duty by providing for the maintenance of the child out of another fund, the legacy does not necessarily carry interest. Rouse, In re, 9 Hare, 649.

A testator made a settlement on his daughter, who was adult, and gave her a legacy by his will:—Held, that the legacy did not bear interest from the death of the testator, but only from the end of the first year after that event. Wall v. Wall, 15 Sim. 513; 16 L. J., Ch. 305; 11 Jur. 403.

Legacy to be paid within Four Years after Testator's Decease.]—A testator directed that certain legacies given by his will should be paid within four years after his decease. The executors paid some of the legacies within one year after the testator's decease, but others of them remained unpaid by reason of the inability of the legatees, being infants, to give receipts. It was not necessary for the convenient administration of the estate that the payment of any of the legacies should be postponed:—Held, that the unpaid legacies carried interest from the expiration of one year after the testator's death. Olive, In re, Olive v. Westerman, 53 L. J., Ch. 525; 50 L. T. 355.

Reversionary Interest not realised at once.]—Where it is for the benefit of all entitled that a reversionary interest should not be realised at once, a legatee, whose legacy could not be paid out of any other fund than this reversion, is entitled, not only to six years' interest, but to interest from the expiration of one year from the death of the testatrix. Blachford, In re, Blachford v. Worsley, 54 L. J., Ch. 215; 27 Ch. D. 676; 33 W. R. 11.

Contingent deferred Legacy.]—Where a contingent deferred legacy has been severed from the general estate of the testator, such severance will not entitle the legatee to interim interest thereon unless the severance has been necessitated by something connected with the legacy itself. Judkin's Trusts, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 496; 25 Ch. D. 743; 50 L. T. 200; 32 W. R. 407.

Release—Subsequent Acquisition of Funds.]—A testatrix by her will bequeathed several pecuniary legacies on various persons, who, on the estates proving insufficient to pay the legacies in full, executed a deed of release to the executors. One of the legatees afterwards died, and her share, by the terms of the will, formed part of the residuary estate, which was now sufficient to pay the other legacies in full:—Held, that the legatees would be entitled to interest on the balances at the rate of four per cent. from one year after the testatrix's death. Ghost's Trusts, In re, 49 L. T. 588.

Out of what Fund Payable.]—The testator bequeathed the lands of B., in which his brother R. and his sister had life estates by title paramount, upon trust to sell after the death of his brother and sister, and out of the proceeds to pay, among other legacies, to his said brother R. the sum of 5,000*l.* R. died in the testator's lifetime; and by a codicil the testator bequeathed the 5,000*l.* to R.'s daughter and directed that she should be paid the legal interest thereon from the time of his decease till the said sum of 5,000*l.* be paid in due course of law:—Held, that interest on this legacy from the testator's death was properly paid by the executors out of his residuary personal estate. Greene v. Flood, 15 L. R., Ir. 450.

Rate.]—A testator, by his will, gave certain legacies payable five years after his death and interest in the meantime to be paid on them at the rate of three per cent. half-yearly:—Held, that the rate of interest to be paid was six per cent. per annum. Booker, In re, Booker v. Booker, 54 L. T. 239.

Deduction for Property-Tax.]—Where executor paid interest on legacy for seventeen years without deducting property-tax:—Held, he could not afterwards deduct out of future interest due the amount of property-tax on preceding payments. Currie v. Goold, 2 Madd. 163.

How Calculated.]—The allowance of interest upon a legacy charged upon real estate, and due upwards of six years, is to be calculated from the filing of the bill in equity and not from the date of the decree, though the bill is not filed by the legatee. Chappell v. Rees, 1 De G. M. & G. 393; 16 Jur. 417.

Statute of Limitations.] — A., who died in 1823, directed the trustees of his will to raise a legacy by sale of his real estates:—Held, that the legatee was not barred by the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42, from claiming interest on the legacy from the end of the first year after the testator's death. Gough v. Bult, 16 Sim. 323; 17 L. J., Ch. 486; 12 Jur. 859.

A testator, after bequeathing an annuity, charged the same upon his real estates, and then devised his real estates, subject to, and charged with, the payment of the annuity, to his grandson in fee:—Held, that the grandson was not a trustee for the annuitant, within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 25, so as to entitle the latter to recover more than six years' arrears of the annuity. Francis v. Grover, 5 Hare, 39; 10 Jur. 280. And see further cases under WILL.

3. Appropriation to Satisfy.

The Land Transfer Act, 1897, gives the personal representatives power to appropriate any part of the residuary estate in or towards satisfaction of legacy or share. See s. 4.

Appropriation, Power of—Mortgage in Part Satisfaction of Share.]—Testator devised and bequeathed his residuary estate upon trust for sale and conversion, and directed the proceeds to be divided into sixths — three-sixths to be held in trust respectively for G., and two other persons absolutely, and three-sixths to be settled. G. agreed with the trustee to accept a mortgage belonging to the testator's estate in part satisfaction of his share, and the deeds were handed over to him, but no transfer was executed. The trustee subsequently made away with part of the residuary estate. The owners of the settled shares disputed the right of G. to the mortgage:—Held, that the agreement was within the powers of the trustee, and that G. was entitled to the mortgage. Lepine, In re, Dowsett v. Culver, 61 L. J., Ch. 153; [1892] 1 Ch. 210; 66 L. T. 360—C. A.

In 1836, shortly after a mortgage of certain freeholds had been executed, the mortgagee died intestate, leaving four next of kin, viz. his brothers R. F. and C. F., another brother, and a lunatic sister. R. F. was the heir-at-law of the intestate. C. F. took out letters of administration to the intestate's estate and paid his lunatic sister's share into court; paid to his two brothers their shares and took receipts, and retained a fourth of the estate, including the mortgage, for himself. Interest on the mortgage was paid by the tenant for life of the equity of redemption to C. F., the administrator, till his death in 1863; then to his widow, executrix and residuary legatee under his will, till 1883, when she died intestate; and then to her administrator and sole next of kin till 1886. In an action by the last-named person for foreclosure of the mortgage, all the defendants admitted the payment of interest, but two of them set up the defence of the Statute of Limitations, and argued that an administrator had no power to appropriate a chose in action; that the mortgage was, therefore, not properly appropriated by C. F., and did not pass under his will; that after his death there was no legal personal representative of the mortgagee, and consequently, that the subsequent payments of interest were not made to persons entitled to receive them:—Held, that the Statute of Limitations did not apply; that an administrator had no power to appropriate a debt in this way; that the right of an administrator, who was also one of the next of kin, to appropriate part of the estate to his own share was a right entirely independent of the agreement of the next of kin, and this right was not confined to chattels; and that the payments of interest were made to the right persons:—Held, therefore, that there must be the ordinary foreclosure judgment. Barclay v. Owen, 60 L. T. 220.

—— Appropriation of Assets before Final Division.]—Executors may, before final division, appropriate particular assets on account of a share in the residue of the estate without making a similar appropriation in respect of the other shares. Richardson, In re, Morgan v. Richardson, 65 L. J., Ch. 512; [1896] 1 Ch. 512; 74 L. T. 12; 44 W. R. 279.

Before final division the executors of a testator appropriated certain stock forming part of the estate at the market price of the day to one of themselves, as part of his one-fifth share of the testator's estate under his will, but did not at that time appropriate a proportionate amount of such stock in respect of certain settled shares of the estate. Prior to the final division of the estate the balance of this stock in the executor's hands had risen in value:—Held, that the appropriation was valid as against persons entitled to the settled shares. Ib.

—— Power to retain Investments.]—A testator gave specific property upon trust to sell and invest the proceeds, and set apart portions to answer settled legacies, and he gave power to the trustees to retain any part of his personal estate in the investments in which they were at the time of his decease, and the residue he bequeathed upon trust for all his children and the issue of such as should be dead, in equal shares, the shares of daughters to be settled. Part of the securities held by the testator at the time of his death consisted of shares in a brewery which had been very successful. Some of these the trustees appropriated to answer one of the settled legacies, and the remainder to the same legatee in part satisfaction of her share of residue. On a summons asking whether they were justified in so doing:—Held, first, as to the settled legacies, that there was power to appropriate, having regard to the power to retain existing investments, and to the decision in Fraser v. Murdoch (6 App. Cas. 855); and secondly, as to the residue, that, these shares being an authorised investment, there was no duty to sell and invest on security of the like nature, and that they, therefore, might be appropriated, even, according to Richardson, In re ([1896] 1 Ch. 512), in advance; that all such appropriations must be fairly made, and, there being no allegation of unfairness, that the trustees had acted within their powers. Brooks, In re, Coles v. Davis, 76 L. T. 771.

Legacies Payable in Futuro.]—T., by his will, gave all his real and personal estate to his wife for life or widowhood, and if she married again gave her an annuity of 2,000*l.* a year, and he gave legacies amounting to 157,700*l.*, which, according to the construction put upon the will by the Court of Appeal, were not payable until the widow's death. The widow had married again. This was a summons taken out by one of the executors for directions as to what securities should be set apart to meet the legacies payable at the death of the widow:—Held, that the right of the legatees was to have the amount of their legacies brought into court and invested in consols. But, as the 2¾ per cent. consolidated annuities would certainly fall in price when the reduction of interest to 2½ per cent. took place, and it was not certain that the legacies would be payable before then, the amounts must either be invested in 2½ per cent. consolidated annuities, or an additional sum equal to one-tenth of the amount of each legacy must be invested in the 2¾ per cent. consols to cover the risk of loss. The consols purchased were ordered in either case to be transferred into court to the separate accounts of the respective legatees. Tredwell, In re, Jaffray v. Tredwell, 65 L. T. 742.

4. Other Matters.

Inoperative Bequest.]—A testator directed his executors to apply 600*l.* in getting an act of parliament to continue an invalid disposition made by him of real estate to a charity:—Held, that this imposed no duty or obligation on the executors. Wickham v. Bath (Marquis), 35 Beav. 59.

Annuity—Fund to answer—Right of Residuary Legatee to Balance.]—Where residue is bequeathed on trust to pay an annuity to A., and after the decease of A. to pay the corpus to B., the court has jurisdiction to order, in spite of opposition by A., that a fund shall be set apart to answer the annuity, and the balance be paid over to B. Harbin v. Masterman, 65

L. J., Ch. 195 ; [1896] 1 Ch. 351 ; 73 L. T. 591 ; 44 W. R. 421—C. A.

Discretionary Gift.]—Direction in will that executors shall pay annuity, "unless circumstances render it unnecessary, impracticable and inexpedient," means unless in the opinion of executors it shall become so, and court has no control over such discretion, unless they act malâ fide. French v. Davidson, 3 Madd. 396.

One, by will, gives annuities, and directs the residue of her estate to be disposed of in charity to such persons, and in such manner, as her executors or survivor shall think fit. On the death of them new trustees were appointed to sustain the annuities, but they could not dispose of the residue, it being a trust confined to the executors personally. Hibbard v. Lamb, Ambl. 309.

Costs of Release—Legatee not bound to Pay.]—Executors refused to pay a legacy to the legatee until he would execute a release and pay the costs of it. He offered to execute the release, but refused to pay the costs. The executor, therefore, brought the amount of the legacy into court, deducting from it the costs of bringing it into court. On a petition by the legatee to have the money paid out to him :—Held, that the executors had no right to call on him to pay the costs of a release, and that they should pay the costs of the petition. Fortune, In re, Ir. R. 4 Eq. 351.

k. AUTHORISING AGENTS.

To Accept Bill of Exchange.]—Semble, that a letter of attorney given by an executor to A., enabling him to transact the affairs of the testator in the name of the executor, as executor, and to pay, discharge and satisfy all debts due from the testator, conveys a sufficient authority to A., to accept a bill of exchange in the name of the executor, drawn by a creditor for the amount of a debt due from the testator, so as to make the executor personally liable. Howard v. Baillie, 2 H. Bl. 618 ; 3 R. R. 531. And see Atwood v. Munnings, 7 B. & C. 278 ; 1 Man. & Ry. 66 ; 6 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 9 ; 31 R. R. 194.

But if the executor admits that a bill, which has been accepted by a third person with the knowledge of the executor, is for a just debt, and that it ought to be paid, it affords sufficient evidence of an authority given by him to such person to accept that particular bill, without resorting to the letter of attorney. Ib.

But it was afterwards held, that a power of attorney given by an executrix to act for her as executrix, did not authorise the accepting of bills so as to charge her in her own right, though for debts due from her testator. Gardner v. Baillie, 6 Term Rep. 591 ; 1 Bos. & P. 32 ; 3 R. R. 531, 538.

Liability of Agent.]—Bankers, the agents of executors, and authorised by them to receive certain assets, remitting the amount to the executors in the course of their duty as agents, and the assets when received being afterwards applied in payment of the amount of such remittances, are not responsible in respect of a misapplication by the executors, they not being privy to any intention of such misapplication. Keane v. Robarts, 4 Madd. 332 ; 20 R. R. 306.

If a person, employed by the administrator of a deceased debtor to wind up the concerns of the deceased's business, gives an undertaking to a creditor of the deceased to furnish money to meet an acceptance which such creditor has given in furtherance of an accommodation arrangement for delaying payment in the hope that funds may be forthcoming, he is liable on such undertaking, though he was merely a clerk, and had no interest in the goods sold by the creditor, and had not received any funds which he could apply to the discharge of the debt. Maud v. Waterhouse, 2 C. & P. 579.

A person who becomes possessed of property of an intestate, as agent of his executor de son tort, or administrator, is not, after handing it over to the administrator, liable either at law or in equity, to account for it to the persons beneficially interested in it. Hill v. Curtis, 14 W. R. 125.

Agent of an administrator keeping money of the intestate in his hands, which he had proposed to his principal to lay out in the funds, ordered to pay interest with annual rests. Brown v. Southhouse, 3 Bro. C. C. 107.

III. LIABILITIES.

a. FUNERAL EXPENSES.

Are generally Liable for.]—An executor, who has assets sufficient for that purpose, is liable, upon an implied promise, to pay for a funeral suitable to the degree of the testator, furnished by the directions of a third person. Rodgers v. Price, 3 Y. & J. 28.

If executors neglect to give orders for the funeral of the testator, and have sufficient assets for that purpose, they are liable upon an implied promise to the person who furnishes the funeral in a manner suitable to the testator's degree and circumstances. Tugwell v. Hayman, 3 Camp. 298 ; 13 R. R. 810.

—— If Reasonable.]—The estate of a deceased person is always liable for the reasonable expenses of his funeral, and can in no event be liable beyond them. Green v. Salmon, 3 N. & P. 388 ; 1 W. W. & H. 460 ; 8 A. & E. 348 ; 7 L. J., Q. B. 236 ; 2 Jur. 567.

As against creditors, an executor can only be allowed for funeral expenses what is absolutely necessary, regard being had to the degree and condition of the deceased. Hancock v. Podmore, 1 B. & Ad. 260 ; 8 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 403.

An executor, who gives no orders for the funeral of his testator, is liable only to the extent of the expenses of a funeral suitable to the rank and circumstances of the testator. And it seems that he is not liable at all where the funeral is ordered by another person, to whom the undertaker gives credit. Brice v. Wilson, 3 N. & M. 512 ; 3 L. J., K. B. 93.

A plea by an executor, of money paid for expenses attending his testator's funeral, and for proving the will, amounting to 70*l.*, and no assets, except, &c., which were not sufficient to pay and satisfy the expenses, is bad, as against the Crown, on a writ of diem clausit extremum against the estate of the deceased Crown debtor, on general demurrer, such a plea not being perfect either as a plea of retainer, or of plene administravit, or fairly issuable in the pleaded form, and wanting necessary averments, as that the assets had been retained on account of the funeral expenses, or that the sum laid out was reasonable. Rex v. Wade, 5 Price, 621 ; 19 R. R. 664.

The expenses which executors will be justified in incurring about the funeral of the deceased, when his estate turns out insolvent, must be reasonable, according to the circumstances of each particular case, with reference to the testator's condition in life. Edwards v. Edwards, 4 Tyr. 438; 2 C. & M. 612; 3 L. J., Ex. 204.

—— What Reasonable.]—The usual allowance for funeral expenses to be paid from an insolvent estate is 20*l.* Yardley v. Arnold, Car. & M. 434.

Where the deceased was a small tradesman, the sum of 10*l.* is a reasonable allowance to the executrix for funeral expenses, as against a creditor. Reeves v. Ward, 2 Scott, 390; 2 Bing. (N.C.) 235; 1 Hodges, 300; 5 L. J., C. P. 67.

The sum of 79*l.* is too much where the deceased was a captain in the army on half-pay. Hancock v. Podmore, 1 B. & Ad. 260; 8 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 403.

The court refused to allow 2,210*l.* for the funeral expenses of a deceased nobleman, whose personal estate was believed to be solvent at his death, but ultimately, from unforeseen circumstances, proved to be insolvent. Bissett v. Antrobus, 4 Sim. 512.

Even in an insolvent estate, the personal representative will be allowed a sum expended for funeral expenses, acording to the situation of life in which the deceased had lived. Pitchford v. Hulme, 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 223.

One hundred pounds only was allowed out of 145*l.*, expended by executors for funeral expenses, on an estate of about 12,000*l.* Bridge v. Brown, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 181.

—— Contagious Illness—Liability for Value of Infected Property.]—The testator, while on a visit, died of a malignant fever. The furniture was, by the advice of the medical advisers, destroyed, and the friend was obliged to remove from his house:—Held, that the testator's estate was liable for the damage. Shalleross v. Wright, 12 Beav. 558; 19 L. J., Ch. 443; 14 Jur. 1037.

Special Agreement as to.]—Where an administrator received a sum of money, which it was agreed by the parties entitled to it should be applied in the reimbursement of the plaintiff, who had laid out money for funeral expenses, and promised so to apply it:—Held, that he was entitled to recover it in an action for money had and received. Meert v. Moessard, 1 M. & P. 8.

Ratification of Charges by Executor.]—If an executor ratifies orders given by another person for an extravagant funeral, he may be sued by the undertaker individually, and not as executor, for the whole expense. Brice v. Wilson, 8 A. & E. 349.

A testator's widow ordered an extravagant funeral without the knowledge of the executor, who, however, was present at the funeral, and did not object to it as extravagant. The undertaker in his bill charged the widow, but subsequently applied for payment to the executor, who promised to pay. An action was brought against the executor in his own right, in which he suffered judgment by default:—Held, that under these special circumstances, the executor was liable for the whole amount of the reasonable charges for the funeral as ordered by the widow. Ib.

The assent of a party, before taking out administration, to the correctness of the funeral expenses ordered by another, is binding on such first-mentioned party when he subsequently takes out administration. Lucy v. Walrond, 5 Scott, 46; 3 Bing. (N.C.) 841; 3 Hodges, 215; 6 L. J., C. P. 290.

The defendant's mother died, and, in his absence, his uncle ordered an expensive funeral. In a letter written after the funeral, the defendant expressed his acknowledgments to his uncle for all that he had done, "which were certainly the best, and all that could be done." A year after, the defendant took out administration, and was sued by the undertaker for the expenses of the funeral:—Held, that after taking out letters of administration, the defendant was liable, in the capacity of administrator, for these expenses; and that, although he ratified the order long before he became administrator, he was bound by it, on the same principle that a creditor is bound after administration by an assent given before, to a particular disposition of the intestate's effects. Ib.

Third Person Promising to Pay.]—The widow of a publican employed an undertaker to conduct the funeral of the deceased, and deposited with him the beer and spirit licences of the house, as a security for the payment of his bill. A., one of the firm of distillers who supplied the house with spirits, by arrangement with the widow, took out administration; B., the other partner in the firm, promised the undertaker that, if he would give up the licences to him, he would pay his bill for the funeral:—Held, that the undertaker, having given up the licences to B., might recover his bill against B., although the widow was his original employer, and although he had made out his account, charging the administrator as his debtor. Walker v. Taylor, 6 Car. & P. 752.

Third Person Paying.]—Where an heir-at-law had voluntarily paid the funeral expenses of an intestate, the court would not allow the expenses to be refunded out of the intestate's personal estate. Coleby v. Coleby, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 496; 14 L. T. 697.

Mourning not a Funeral Expense.]—A demand for mourning furnished to the widow and family of a deceased person is not a funeral expense, and cannot be claimed against his estate by the executor, if he gives the order. Johnson v. Baker, 2 Car. & P. 207; 31 R. R. 663.

A payment for mourning rings, though not directed by the will, allowed under the direction given to the executors. Paice v. Canterbury (Archbishop), 14 Ves. 364.

Married Woman.]—The estate of husband is liable to funeral expenses of wife, though she lived separate from him, and had separate maintenance. Bertie v. Chesterfield (Lord), 9 Mod. 31.

Vice-Chancellor doubted whether husband has a general right to throw wife's funeral expenses on her separate estate. Gregory v. Lockyer, 6 Madd. 90; 22 R. R. 246.

A married woman, by her will, in exercise of a power of appointment over trust moneys, made several bequests, and "after payment of her just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and the expenses attending the execution of her will, appointed" the residue of her trust moneys among her nieces:—Held, that the charge of funeral expenses was not contingent upon her surviving her husband, and that her husband surviving was entitled to repayment, out of trust moneys, of money paid by him in respect of such expenses. Willeter v. Dobie, 2 Kay & J. 647; 5 W. R. 669.

A husband, executor of his wife's will made under a testamentary power of appointment, is entitled to retain out of her estate the expenses of her funeral, though such estate was insufficient for creditors, and her will did not contain any charge of debts and funeral expenses. McMyn, In re, Lightbown v. McMyn, 55 L. J., Ch. 845; 33 Ch. D. 575; 55 L. T. 834; 35 W. R. 179.

b. EXECUTORSHIP EXPENSES.

What are.]—The term "executorship expenses" in a will means expenses incident to the proper performance of the duty of an executor, and includes costs incurred by executors in obtaining the advice of solicitors or counsel as to the distribution of their testator's estate; also the costs of the executors and other parties in an action, whether instituted by the executors themselves or by a beneficiary, for the administration of the testator's personal estate; also the testator's funeral expenses; also expenses incurred by the executors for the protection of specific legacies—as, for instance, for warehousing furniture specifically bequeathed—pending the distribution of the assets; and payments by the executors in discharge of debts falling due from the testator's estate after his death—as, for instance, rent due after the testator's death for a house of which he was tenant from year to year. Sharp v. Lush, 48 L. J., Ch. 231; 10 Ch. D. 468; 27 W. R. 528.

The costs of executing the will are always paid out of a residue undisposed of. Howse v. Chapman, 4 Ves. 550; 4 R. R. 292.

Four persons were entitled to a fund; one had mortgaged her share beyond its value, and died. A suit was instituted to administer the fund. Another of the persons entitled took out administration, and the costs of it were directed to be borne by the whole estate, and not by the particular fund. Cotton v. Penrose, 18 L. J., Ch. 128; 13 Jur. 761.

The executor of an administrator who died in England, proved his will in Ireland, for the purpose of taking administration de bonis non to the intestate, but afterwards did not do so:—Held, that the costs of such probate were not chargeable against the intestate's estate. Langford v. Mahony, 2 Con. & L. 317; 4 Dr. & War. 81; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 569.

—— Expenses relating to Real Estate.]—As to what expenses relating to real estate are properly payable out of a fund set apart to pay, amongst other things, the expenses of executing the trusts of the will. Brougham (Lord) v. Poulett (Lord), 19 Beav. 119; 24 L. J., Ch. 233; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 151.

A testator declared trusts relating to his real and personal estate, and gave his personal estate to trustees, in trust to set apart and invest a sufficient fund to pay his debts, legacies, funeral expenses, expenses of proving his will, "and the execution of the trusts thereof":—Held, that the "expenses in the execution of the trusts of the will" were limited to those properly payable by the executors, in their character of executors alone, and therefore that the costs of executing the trusts of the various real estates fell on the cestuis que trustent. Ib.

Devise of a copyhold estate to three trustees upon trust, to permit A. to occupy the same or receive the rents and profits thereof for his life; and after the death of A., upon trust, to sell the estate, and divide the proceeds amongst the children of A.; and gift of the testator's residuary estate to the trustees upon other trusts, but charged with debts and "the costs and charges of proving and executing" the will:—Held, that the fines payable on the admission of the devisees in trust to the copyhold estate were not part of the costs and charges of executing the will to be borne by the residuary estate, but that such expenses of admission were a charge upon the copyhold estate so devised. Cole v. Jealous, 5 Hare, 31.

An heir-at-law is not entitled to have the costs of the conveyance of an estate, contracted for after the date of the will, paid out of the personalty. Waite v. Barnes, C. P. Coop. 502.

—— Direction to Pay, Effect of—Charge.]—As a general rule, where the executor is indebted to the estate of his testator to an amount equal to or exceeding the amount due for testamentary expenses, those expenses are not a charge upon the estate for the benefit of the person to whom they are due. But where the will directs the testamentary expenses to be paid, those expenses are a charge upon the estate. Tanner v. Carter, 25 L. J., Ch. 664; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 413; 4 W. R. 533.

A testatrix directed all her debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, to be first paid. Her executrix died indebted to her estate, and without having paid the testamentary expenses. A bill was filed to administer both estates, and the decree directed payment of testamentary as well as other expenses:—Held, upon petition by the proctor, that he was entitled to payment of the testamentary charges out of the estate of the testatrix before distribution of the assets. Ib.

And see COSTS, LIABILITY FOR, XIII. i. post.

c. FOR PERSONAL ACTS AND OMISSIONS.

Generally.]—Executor acting with regard to the testator's property, in any other manner than the trust requires, is answerable to the cestui que trust for any gain, and is liable for any loss. Piety v. Stace, 4 Ves. 622.

Wilful Default—What is.]—Wilful default means improper neglect to receive assets, not the misapplication of assets once received. The latter act is a devastavit, for which executors are chargeable, under the ordinary decree to account. Blount v. O'Connor, 17 L. R., Ir. 620.

Neglect or default may be wilful, though it may have been unintentional, and have arisen from forgetfulness. Elliott v. Turner, 13 Sim. 477.

—— Delay in Probate—Loss of Interest.]—The loss of interest, if any, arising from a debtor's refusal to pay an executor a debt before probate is too remote a consequence of a delay in proving the will to render the executor liable to account on the footing of wilful default. Stevens, In re, Cooke v. Stevens, 66 L. J., Ch. 155; [1897] 1 Ch. 422; 76 L. T. 18; 45 W. R. 284. Affirmed, [1898] 1 Ch. 162; 46 W. R. 177—C. A.

—— Division of Securities.]—After payment of the debts and legacies, &c., the trustees divided the securities representing the residue, into four parts, and allocated a part to each of the four persons entitled to the residue with their assent, and out of the two parts purchased residences for the persons entitled to them, at their request, charging the sums so invested as payments on account of their respective shares:—Held, that the executors were not guilty of wilful default or breach of trust. Blount v. O'Connor, 17 L. R., Ir. 620.

—— Investment.]—Executors are not bound to make any investments within the year, notwithstanding all the liabilities of the testator are apparently liquidated, and they have a fund of realty ample to indemnify them against any debts which could come forward. Johnston v. Newton, 22 L. J., Ch. 1039; 17 Jur. 825.

The executors invested part of the assets in the purchase of railway stock and of freehold premises in England, and on the security of a mortgage:—Held, not wilful default, but acts which (if not authorised by the will) would render them liable to account for the money so invested, under the ordinary decree to account. Blount v. O'Connor, supra. See also TRUST AND TRUSTEE.

Debts not got in.]—Executor having three guineas per annum for collecting rents, and being a trustee as to the residue of personal estate, and not having brought an action to recover a bond debt, was charged therewith. Having put the next of kin to prove their relationship, ordered to pay the costs of taking the accounts. Lowson v. Copeland, 2 Bro. C. C. 156.

By the decree in a suit instituted by persons beneficially interested under a will, one object of which was to charge two of the executors with a debt which the third (who had become insolvent) owed to the testator at his decease, an inquiry was directed at the suggestion of the solvent executors, whether, if they had taken measures to call in the debt, it could have been recovered; but neither they nor the plaintiffs prosecuted the inquiry. On the hearing for further directions, the court held, that the solvent executors ought to have prosecuted the inquiry, notwithstanding they must have proved a negative; and, as they had not done so, it ordered them to pay the amount of the debt into court, with interest, from the testator's death. Stiles or Styles v. Guy, 16 Sim. 230. And see Id. 233, n. Affirmed, 1 Macn. & G. 422; 1 H. & Tw. 523; 19 L. J., Ch. 185; 14 Jur. 355.

—— Rent.]—Executor charged with arrears of rent unreceived, and balances in his hands, together with interest at rate of 4 per cent., and costs of suit relating to such arrears and balances. Tebbs v. Carpenter, 1 Madd. 290; 16 R. R. 224.

The difficulty of collecting arrears of rent does not excuse executors for not collecting them, without some evidence that in fact they could not have been recovered. Alexander, In re, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 137.

—— Insuring Debtor's Life.]—An executor, without a special authority applied the testator's assets for several years in insuring the life of a debtor to the estate. He then dropped the policy without consulting the parties beneficially interested, and without applying for the direction of the Court of Chancery, in a suit for administration of the estate then pending:—Held, that he was liable for the whole sum, which would have been recovered if he had kept up the policy. Garner v. Moore, 3 Drew. 277; 24 L. J., Ch. 687; 3 W. R. 497.

—— Out of Partnership Assets—Moneys Lent by Testator to his Firm.]—In 1825 Henry Wyatt, and his son Henry E., who had previously carried on business as brewers, admitted another son, George, into partnership. By the partnership-deed it was agreed that the plant, &c., which was stated to have been valued at 63,000*l.*, exclusive of the stock and debts, should be the capital, to a moiety of which the father was to be entitled. His surplus moneys in the business were stated to amount to 48,915*l.*, on which he was to receive interest. He died in July, 1826, having, by his will, given his surplus capital to his executors in trust to invest the same in government or other security, and pay the income to his wife, and after her death to set apart two legacies of 12,000*l.* each for each of his two daughters and their children. He gave his interest in the business and the stipulated ordinary capital to his sons Henry E., George, and William, who was a minor; and he directed his executors to carry on the business, in conjunction with his two sons, until William attained twenty-one, and he empowered them to sell his share in the brewery during his minority. He charged his freehold and other property with the payment of his surplus capital, and directed mortgages of his real estate for securing the legacies. The will was not proved till December, 1827, the executors having in the meantime left the surviving partners in undisturbed possession of the partnership property; and the business, although they did not take any active part in it, was carried on with their concurrence. Disputes having arisen between the surviving partners, the adult legatees filed a bill in 1827, for administration, which, through the interference of the executors, was abandoned. In 1828 the executors joined in deeds whereby the partnership was dissolved, and Henry E. assigned his interest to George in consideration of 20,000*l.*, and the executors released Henry E. from all claims in respect of any surplus capital. The business, which was afterwards sold with the sanction of the court, was found to be insolvent, and the partnership property turned out to be wholly unproductive to the testator's estate. The executors then filed a bill for administration of the estate, and in January, 1831, a bill was filed by the children of the testator's two daughters, seeking to charge the executors with wilful default in not having obtained payment of the legacies out of the surplus capital. By several decretal orders, made in both causes, accounts were directed to be taken as to the accuracy of the recitals in the partnership-deed, the value of the plant, and the surplus money due to the testator at his death, and accounts were directed to be taken of the partnership dealings and transactions; and if the master should find that he was unable to take such accounts, by reason of the non-production of books of account, he was to state the circumstances. The master having reported that he could not take the accounts for non-production of books, he was, by another order, directed further to inquire by whom the partnership property was possessed at the death of the testator, and how disposed of, and whether the executors with due diligence, and without their wilful default, might have possessed themselves out of the partnership property of sufficient to pay the two legacies of 12,000*l.* The master again reported that he was unable to take the accounts, by reason of the non-production of the books; he found, however, on the evidence before him, large sums to have been due to the testator at his death, and large partnership assets, and that the executors might, with due diligence, and without their wilful default, have possessed themselves out of the partnership property of a sufficient sum to pay the two legacies. The court upon exceptions, negatived the finding of wilful default :—Held, by the House of Lords, that there was no just ground of appeal against the order directing further inquiries as to sufficiency of assets, and wilful default of the executors. Rowley v. Adams, 2 H. L. Cas. 725. And see Ward v. Ward, 2 H. L. Cas. 777, n.

Held, also, by their lordships, affirming the order of the court below upon the exceptions, that the master's findings of the sufficiency of assets and wilful default were displaced by his former findings, confirmed by the court, of the impossibility of ascertaining the testator's surplus capital; that there was no reason for thinking that the surplus capital could, if at all, have been realised without putting an end to the business, which the executors could not do without breach of their duty; that though the executors had not properly performed their duty, still, as it had not been satisfactorily made out that there ever were partnership assets, out of which the legacies could have been recovered or secured, the executors ought not to be charged with the wilful default. Ib.

Executors are not chargeable with the value of their testator's property, as stated by himself and others in deeds to which the executors are not parties. Ib.

—— Discretion as to.]—Even before the passing of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, executors had a fair discretion, whether they would or would not immediately sue a debtor of the testator for the amount due to the estate, and their not doing so, although loss occurred by the delay, was not necessarily wilful neglect or default for which they were liable. Owens, In re, Jones v. Owens, 47 L. T. 61—C. A. And see now the Trustee Act, 1893, s. 21.

Borrowing Money.]—An executor or an administrator borrowing money in that character, does not give the lender any claim against the testator's or intestate's estate. The contract simply creates a personal liability on the part of the executor or administrator. Farhall v. Farhall, 41 L. J., Ch. 146; L. R. 7 Ch. 123; 25 L. T. 865; 20 W. R. 157.

Loan out of Assets and Private Moneys—Deficient Security.]—An administrator having advanced a sum consisting partly of the intestate's, and partly of his own moneys on a security which it was apprehended would prove deficient :—Held, that the deficiency, if any, must be borne by his own share of the moneys advanced in exoneration of the intestate's estate. Lambe v. Orton, 33 L. J., Ch. 81.

For Loss by Retaining Leaseholds—Duty to Assign.]—Where the testator was assignee of a leasehold which it had become a loss to retain, an order directing the executors "to take such steps as might be necessary to put an end to all liability on the testator's estate in respect of such lease," and a subsequent order declaring that they had not used due diligence in carrying out the first order, and referring it to the master to state when they might with due diligence have put an end to the liability—were on appeal confirmed with costs; the Lord Chancellor treating it as clear law that the liability on the testator's estate would have ceased by an assignment; and holding that the executors were bound to effect such assignment if possible, and that it did not appear that they had used any endeavours for that purpose. Rowley v. Adams, 4 Myl. & C. 534; 9 L. J., Ch. 34; 3 Jur. 1069; 2 Jur. 915.

For Loss by Fire—Duty to Insure.]—A testator who was at his death lessee of a house under a lease, in which he had covenanted to keep the house insured, appointed A., his son, his executor. The testator had effected a policy of insurance. The policy expired on the 25th of March. He died on the 27th of March. The house was burnt down on the 26th of May. A. proved the will on the 17th of June. Evidence was given that between the death of the testator and the 26th of May, A. had received money of some of the customers of the testator, who had been a tradesman :—Held, that A. was not liable in respect of the breach of the covenant. Fry v. Fry, 27 Beav. 146; 28 L. J., Ch. 593; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1047. And see Bailey v. Gould, 4 Y. & C. 221.

Contract for Sale by Executor under Mistake.]—One of two executors, erroneously believing that he was acting with the authority of the other, contracted to sell a leasehold house, part of the testator's estate :—Held, that the purchaser could not enforce a specific performance of the contract. Sneesby v. Thorne, 7 De G. M. & G. 399; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1058; 3 W. R. 604.

Losing Assets.]—When assets have come into the possession of an executor and are afterwards lost to the estate, the rule as well at law as in equity now is, that the executor stands in the position of a gratuitous bailee, and therefore cannot be charged without some wilful default by virtue of the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-s. 11. Job v. Job, 6 Ch. D. 562; 26 W. R. 206.

For Dividends of Funds left in Court.]—The court in a case of mistake permitted an executor to transfer a principal sum of stock standing in bank in his name, and purchased out of estate of testator a considerable time before, without the dividends which had accrued in the meantime. Della Cainea v. Hayward, M'Clel. 16.

Release set aside.]—The rule that an executor who pays a legacy is personally liable to pay the amount of the legacy to any creditor of the testator whose claim is unsatisfied, whether he has notice or not of the claim, applies to a case in which the creditor has given the testator what purports to be a release of his claim, and the executor bonâ fide believes the release to be valid, and the creditor does not question its validity till some years after the executor has paid the legacy, and fails in the first instance, but succeeds in setting aside the release on appeal. Bewley, In re, Jefferys v. Jefferys, 24 L. T. 177; 19 W. R. 464.

Before Lord St. Leonards' Act—Advertisement for Legatees.]—Legatees are not precluded from claim by non-appearance in pursuance of advertisement, to come in under decree, or to be excluded from benefit of it. Anon., 9 Price, 210.

—— Advertisement for Creditors.]—In the case of a claim under an agreement creating, as was alleged, a trust for plaintiff, brought forward nine years after testator's death, at which time the agreement was first discovered; it was held that the executor, who, after duly advertising, had long ago distributed the estate, would have been liable if the agreement had been valid. The plaintiff was an infant within six years of bringing the suit. Hill v. Gomme, 1 Beav. 540; 8 L. J., Ch. 350; 3 Jur. 744. Affirmed, 5 Myl. & C. 250; 9 L. J., Ch. 54; 4 Jur. 165.

—— Claim after Payment of Legacies.]—The executors of a deceased trustee, having admitted the receipt of assets which would have been sufficient to answer a particular breach of trust committed by their testator besides his other debts:—Held, chargeable with the loss occasioned by such breach of trusts, although they had paid all his debts of which they had any knowledge out of the assets, and had distributed the whole surplus among his residuary legatees many years before, and at a time when they had no notice of the breach of trust, or of any claim in respect of it. Knatchbull v. Fearnhead, 3 Myl & C. 122; 1 Jur. 687. And see 6 L. J., Ch. 13, n.

Overholding by Sub-Tenant.]—H. held certain premises as yearly tenant from the plaintiffs up to his death, which occurred in the month of October, 1879. He had sublet a portion of them. The defendant, as his administratrix, became entitled to the premises. The plaintiff terminated the tenancy on the 1st of February, 1880, by a notice to quit, and on that day the defendant quitted the premises, gave notice of such quitting to the plaintiffs, and offered to give them possession of all save the portion in the possession of the sub-tenant, but they refused to accept such possession. The defendant never again went into possession of the premises, but the sub-tenant remained in possession and refused to leave, and the plaintiffs were obliged to bring an action of ejectment to recover possession. The defendant was unable to evict the sub-tenant, because the term for which H. had made the subletting was unexpired. The defendant, after the said 1st of February, 1880, did not derive, and could not with reasonable diligence have derived, any profits from the premises. The plaintiffs brought an action against the defendant for trespass for mesne profit, from the 1st of February, 1880, and for the costs of evicting the sub-tenant:—Held, on demurrer to a defence setting out the above facts, that a good answer to the action was thereby shewn, as the defendant was not personally liable for the refusal of the sub-tenant to give up possession. L. & N. W. Ry. v. Hill, 12 L. R., Ir. 140.

Held, also, that an action for mesne profit lay only against such persons as had been actually or virtually in possession of the premises at the time when the plaintiffs became rightfully entitled to such possession. Henderson v. Squire (L. R. 4 Q. B. 170) distinguished. Ib.

An administrator having let lands of the intestate under a written agreement for a lease, which could not be enforced, and neglected to take legal proceedings to remove an occupier in order to give possession in pursuance of the agreement, in consequence of which the tenant refused to take the lease, and the lands remained unlet for half a year, was charged with a year's rent and the costs of the abortive letting. Connolly v. Connolly, 17 Ir. Ch. R. 208.

Wilful default in an executor does not imply deliberate or intentional default. He may be charged with a loss arising from mere negligence or imprudence if unexcused. Ib.

Executor indebted to Estate—Mortgage of Assets by.]—A testatrix bequeathed a leasehold estate to trustees and executors, in trust for sale, and gave one of such executors a beneficial interest for his life in one-fourth part of the estate. The latter executor, being at the time indebted to the estate of the testatrix, made an assignment of his beneficial interest by way of mortgage, to secure a private debt which he owed to a creditor, and deposited the title-deeds with the creditor:—Held, on a bill by his co-executors, to recover the title-deeds, that the estate of the testatrix was entitled to a lien on the interest of the defaulting executor in the premises comprised in the deeds, in priority to the lien created by his assignment to the mortgagee; and the court decreed the title-deeds to be delivered up, with a declaration that they belonged to the three trustees. Cole v. Muddle, 10 Hare, 186; 22 L. J., Ch. 401; 16 Jur. 853.

R., a surviving executor, entitled as next of kin and personal representative of W., a deceased co-executor, deposits a lease belonging to his testator with creditors for a private debt of his own. W. is an appointee under a power created by the will of the testator. In an administration suit R. is found to be a defaulting executor; and a bill being filed to recover the lease by parties interested under the testator's will:—Held, that R.'s interest, as personal representative and next of kin of W., is not liable for R.'s default; that the lease must be brought into court, with an inquiry as to what was due from the estate of the deceased executor, W. Wilson v. Leslie, 5 W. R. 815.

For Fraudulent Omission from Inventory—Law of Isle of Man.]—By the ecclesiastical law of the Isle of Man, an executor or administrator becomes liable for the full amount of the debts of the deceased: first, if he be executor de son tort; secondly, if he omits to return an inventory of the assets to the episcopal registry, as he is sworn to do; and thirdly, if there be a fraudulent omission in the inventory of any part of the assets of the deceased, of which he has taken possession. Where, therefore, an executor omitted from the inventory a sum of 25*l.* taken by him out of the desk of the deceased, the judicial committee held (affirming the judgment of the courts below) that such omission was fraudulent, and rendered the executor liable to the full amount of the deceased's debts. Jackson v. Wilson, 3 Moore, P. C. 177.

Statute of Frauds.]—An administrator is not bound to set up the Statute of Frauds in respect of the payment of the balance of a sum of money promised by the deceased to be paid to his daughter on her marriage. Garratt's Trusts, In re, 18 W. R. 684. But see Rownson, In re, Field v. White, 54 L. J., Ch. 950; 29 Ch. D. 358; 52 L. T. 825; 35 W. R. 604; 49 J. P. 759—C. A.

Lapse of Time—Presumption.]—Circumstances under which, from distance of time and the necessity of presuming that what has been done has been honestly done, executors have been exonerated from the consequences of a breach of trust in not taking steps to recover a fund which has been misapplied by the trustees. Taylor v. Millington, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 204.

For Profits—Purchase by Executor of Debts due from Estate.]—An executor cannot buy for his own benefit debts due from the testator's estate. James, Ex parte, 8 Ves. 346; 7 R. R. 56.

—— Purchase of Equity of Redemption by Executor of Mortgagee.]—The executor of a mortgagee purchased the equity of redemption of the mortgaged estate in his own name, with the money due on the mortgage, and a small advance beyond it:—Held, that he was a trustee of the purchase for the benefit of the testator's estate. Fosbrooke v. Balguy, 1 Myl. & K. 226; 2 L. J., Ch. 135. And see further, TRUST AND TRUSTEE.

—— Onus of Proof on Sale of Legacy to.]—If a legatee agrees to sell to the executor of the will his legacy for an annuity, the burden will lie on the executor to shew that there was no unfairness in the transaction. Gray v. Warner, Biel, In re, 42 L. J., Ch. 556; L. R. 16 Eq. 577; 28 L. T. 835; 21 W. R. 808.

—— Gift to Executor by Beneficiary—Onus of Proof.]—Where a document has been obtained by an executor named in a will, before probate, from a beneficiary, for a gift by the latter to the former, the court will regard the transaction with great suspicion, and will not uphold it unless the circumstances shew that there was no misrepresentation, pressure, or unfairness on the executor's part, that the beneficiary acted deliberately and thoroughly knew and appreciated what he was doing, that he signed the document independently of any influence on the executor's part and without being actuated by any fear of not complying with the wishes of the executor. Wheeler v. Sargeant, 3 R. 663; 69 L. T. 181.

—— Corrupt Presentation set aside.]—Where executor or trustee, entrusted with disposition of some church preferments, made a presentation to A., under a secret condition for his own benefit, the presentation was set aside, and he was decreed to present a more proper person. Richardson v. Chapman, 7 Bro. P. C. 317. And see ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.

For Costs.]—See XIII. i. post.

d. FOR ACTS OF EACH OTHER.

In General—At Law.]—It is not sufficient to charge an executor with assets, to shew that he has acquiesced in the receipt of assets by his co-executor. Stearne v. Mills, 1 N. & M. 434; 4 B. & Ad. 657; 2 L. J., K. B. 106.

In order that an executor may be liable for the act of his co-executor, the co-executor must have acted in his representative capacity. Scholey v. Walton, 12 M. & W. 510; 13 L. J., Ex. 122.

—— In Equity.]—Notice to one executor, who concealed it from the other, will not affect the latter. Executors are not affected by each other's acts. Hawkins v. Day, Ambl. 162; Dick. 131.

One will not be answerable for a sum come to the hands of the other, unless they have done joint acts; but each will be liable to the whole costs. Littlehales v. Gascoyne, 3 Bro. C. C. 73.

An executor doing any act by which property gets into possession of another executor is equally answerable. Otherwise if he is merely passive. Langford v. Gascoyne, 11 Ves. 333; 8 R. R. 170.

The relative liabilities of executors and trustees concurring in acts to enable their co-executors or co-trustees to receive money considered. General rule, that executors joining in a receipt are all chargeable; in the case of trustees, only the person receiving the money. The reason of the distinction. Chambers v. Minchin, 7 Ves. 186; 6 R. R. 111.

A., B., C., D. and E. (the two latter being married women) take out administration to an intestate, and afterwards appoint C. to be the acting administrator, and direct the debtors to pay their debts to him. C. becomes insolvent:—Held, that A., B. and C., and the husbands of D. and E., are responsible for C.'s receipts. Lees v. Sanderson, 4 Sim. 28.

Forgery by One Executor.]—Where an executor, personating the testator (who was his father), mortgaged freeholds and leaseholds of the father, and applied the money to his own use, the deeds were held to be forgeries, and to have passed nothing but the beneficial interest of the executor, and that the co-executrixes were entitled to recover the property mortgaged. Cooper, In re, Cooper v. Vesey, 51 L. J., Ch. 862; 20 Ch. D. 611; 47 L. T. 89; 30 W. R. 648—C. A.

A testatrix, who had a general power of appointment over a sum of consols comprised in her marriage settlement, gave certain specific legacies of this stock. On her death the stock was sold by the trustees of the settlement, and the proceeds paid into a bank to the joint account of the two executors of the will. Crossed cheques for the legacies were drawn by the executors, payable to the order of the legatees respectively. The indorsements were forged by one of the executors, who obtained payment to himself, and absconded. The legatees never consented to the payment being made in cash:—Held, that it was the duty of the executors to have re-converted the money into stock, and that the remaining executor was liable for the value of the legacies. Bennison, In re, Cutler v. Boyd, 60 L. T. 859.

Where the Executor has had Control.]—If executor possesses testator's estate and trusts it to other executors, first is liable for any risk. Townsend v. Barber, Dick. 356.

An executor administering, having once received money, assets of his testator, cannot discharge himself under the plea of plene administravit to an action by a bond-creditor of his testator, by shewing that he paid the money over to his co-executor for the express purpose of satisfying such bond-creditor, although his co-executor may have misapplied such money by using it in discharge of his own simple contract debts. Crosse v. Smith, 7 East, 246; 3 Smith, 203.

An executor doing any act by which property gets into possession of another executor, though with an innocent motive, is equally answerable. Langford v. Gascoyne, 11 Ves. 333; 8 R. R. 170.

A co-executor, who proved, but never acted, cannot be charged by receiving a bill by the post on account of the estate, and sending it immediately to the acting executor. Balchen v. Scott, 2 Ves. J. 677; 3 R. R. 29. S. P., Hovey v. Blakeman, 4 Ves. 596.

One of two executors under a will, which directed the accumulation of a residue:—Held, not answerable for the misapplication of the dividends of stock, part of the testator's estate, which the other executor, who was the acting one, had received. Williams v. Nixon, 2 Beav. 472; 9 L. J., Ch. 269.

Two executors sold out stock, and the produce was received by one:—Held, that the other was responsible for its misapplication, but was entitled to an inquiry whether any part had been applied in discharge of claims against the testator. Ib.

Testator having devised a real estate to his three executors, upon trust to sell and apply the produce of the sale as part of his personalty, and having given to one of his executors an option to purchase the estate at a certain price, the two other executors conveyed it to him, and joined in a receipt for the purchase-money. The purchase-money was, in fact, not paid, and afterwards the third executor became bankrupt:—Held, that the two other executors were answerable to the residuary legatee for the deficiency. Gregory v. Gregory, 2 Y. & C. 313; 6 L. J., Ex. Eq. 52.

One of three executors who had not proved, but acted in the receipt and application of some of the testator's moneys, as the agent or assistant of the other executors:—Held, to be answerable only for what he had actually received. Lowry v. Fulton, 9 Sim. 115; 8 L. J., Ch. 314; 3 Jur. 454.

A testator who died in 1835 directed his executors and trustees (A. and B.) to convert his real and personal estate, and after paying his debts to invest the proceeds on mortgage of freeholds, or on government securities. A. and B. deposited the proceeds in a bank at interest in their joint names. A. died in 1842, and B. drew out the balance and applied it to his own use. No sufficient reason being shewn for retaining the money in the bank:—Held, that the estate of A. was liable to make good the loss. Gibbins v. Taylor, 22 Beav. 344.

An executor who is employed by his co-executor as his agent to sell an estate, which, under the will of the testator, the co-executor alone had power to sell, and who hands over the price of the estate to his co-executor, is not accountable for the misapplication of that price by the executor, because he had no legal right to retain it, although by the will of the testator the price of the estate, when sold, was to be considered as part of his personal estate. Davies v. Spurling, 1 Russ. & M. 64; Taml. 199; 31 R. R. 78.

Three executors, A., B. and C., were appointed; two (A. and B.) proved the will; the third (C.) did not prove, but administered part of the assets. A. and B. sold the stock-in-trade of the testator to C.:—Held, that he, having paid part of the purchase-money into the hands of A., was answerable for his misapplication, and that, although as mere purchaser the payment would be a complete discharge, he is liable as executor: having acted in one instance he cannot exclude a particular part of his dealings with the assets, but is completely executor, notwithstanding his intention of not interfering generally, and his own transaction as purchaser is not an exception. But, although payment by executor to co-executor is no discharge, subject, however, to its being shewn, notwithstanding waste of the assets by the co-executor, that the specific moneys paid were duly applied, payment into a bank to the credit of the executors' account by one executor, although the money lodged was thereby put in the power of a defaulting executor (one executor being competent by the custom of bankers to withdraw funds standing to the credit of the executors generally), and it was drawn out upon his single draft and misapplied, is sufficient. The lodgment, being an absolute discharge, does not involve him in such breach of trust. Kilbee v. Sneyd, 2 Moll. 186.

If one executor does an act which enables his co-executor to obtain sole possession of money belonging to the estate, and which but for that act he could not have obtained possession of, and the money is afterwards misapplied by such co-executor, both are liable for the loss. Candler v. Tillett, 22 Beav. 257; 25 L. J., Ch. 505; 4 W. R. 160.

C., who knew that T., his co-executor, owed money to the testator on an equitable mortgage, allowed him to keep the title-deeds in his sole possession, taking no steps to compel payment, though he was very active in recovering a debt due to himself personally from T. S. deposited his title-deeds with another person as a security for fresh advances, and the testator's debt was lost:—Held, that C. was liable for the loss. Ib.

A testator placed his securities in the custody of T., his confidential solicitor. By his will he appointed him and C. his executors. T. made out a list of such securities, which he signed and retained in a box, but he gave the key to C. Afterwards T. sent the box to C., requesting him to take out a mortgage security, and send it to him for the purposes of an intended transfer. C., having no reason to suspect T., complied, and the mortgage money was received by T. alone, and misapplied by him:—Held, that his co-executor C. was not liable, it appearing from the evidence that the solicitor had a second key to the box, and could, and probably did, open the box himself. Ib.

Two executors and trustees who, bonâ fide and without reason for suspicion, act according to the usual course of business, and put it into the power of a third (whom they properly employ as a stockbroker in the trust) to unregister certain bonds which he then misappropriates, are not liable for his defalcations. Gasquoine, In re, Gasquoine v. Gasquoine, 63 L. J., Ch. 377; [1894] 1 Ch. 470; 7 R. 449; 70 L. T. 196—C. A.

—— Joint Acts and Receipts.]—Where executors are jointly charged, one only having received the money, and the other joined in the receipt, it is on the ground that the property is under the control of both; the question in such a case is, whether the executor joining in the receipt had a control, and of that joining in the receipt is evidence. Doyle v. Blake, 2 Sch. & Lef. 231; 9 R. R. 76. S. P., Hovey v. Blakeman, 4 Ves. 596; Joy v. Campbell, 1 Sch. & Lef. 341; 9 R. R. 39.

Executors drawing a joint draft for property of the testator, and suffering it to remain in the hands of a tradesman, both held liable, although one of them had done no other act in execution of the will. Sadler v. Hobbs, 2 Bro. C. C. 114.

An executor who proves a will may be wholly passive, or active, so far as it is necessary to enable his co-executor to act in the administration of the estate; but the acts in which he joins must be necessary for the purpose of such administration. Terrell v. Matthews, 11 L. J.,

Ch. 31; 5 Jur. 1074. Semble, S. C., 1 Macn. & G. 433, n.

A., an executor and trustee, concurs with his co-executor and co-trustee, B., in selling out public stock, part of their testator's property, and in conveying and surrendering the testator's freehold, leasehold, and copyhold estates to purchasers, and they both subscribe the receipts in writing for the amount of the respective purchase-moneys, which were endorsed on the back of the purchase-deeds; but B. alone received the moneys, and the purchase of the stock:—Held, that the acts in which A. had joined with B. being indispensable and necessary for the administration of the testator's estate, he was not liable for a devastavit thereof committed by B. Ib.

If an executor or trustee, without taking due means to learn from his co-executor or co-trustee, whether it is necessary, in the due execution of the trust, to sell stock, concurs in the sale of stock, and leaves it in the disposition of his co-executor or co-trustee, he is liable for the stock so sold. Harrington v. Harrington, 1 L. J., Ch. (O.S.) 41.

Where a surviving executor denied by his answer that he had ever acted during the lifetime of the co-executor, and it was clear that he had not proved till after his death, yet there being some slight evidence of his acceptance of the office during the life of his co-executor, and he having been a party to a composition deed, entered into by the executors of such co-executor, the court held there was ground for special inquiries with a view to charge him for devastavits committed during the life of the other. James v. Frearson, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 370.

—— Extent of Liability.]—Executors charged for negligence by joining in a transfer to a co-executor, upon his representation that it was required for debts; but not liable so far as they can prove the application to that purpose, though he possessed other funds, part of the assets, not through them, which funds he wasted. Shipbrook (Lord) v. Hinchinbrook (Lord), 11 Ves. 252; 8 R. R. 138. S. P., Underwood v. Stevens, 1 Mer. 712; Moses v. Levi, 3 Y. & C. 359; Hewitt v. Foster, 6 Beav. 259; 7 Jur. 228.

In Action for Use and Occupation.] — An action was brought against two persons, being the executors of a deceased termor, for the use and occupation by them of the demised premises; an entry and occupation by them were proved:—Held, that it did not enure as that of both, so as to make them jointly liable de bonis propriis, in an action for use and occupation. Nation v. Tozer, 4 Tyr. 561; 1 C. M. & R. 172; 3 L. J., Ex. 234.

To an action for use and occupation, for a quarter's rent from Lady-day to Midsummer, the defendant pleaded, that by an agreement between the executors of T. and the defendant, the defendant agreed to take of the executors the premises; that it was afterwards agreed between them and W., that W. should become tenant to the executors from Lady-day, and that the defendant should be discharged from all liability to subsequent rent; that the defendant accordingly gave up possession to W., and the executors accepted him as tenant:—Held, that this plea was not proved by evidence that one of the executors had so agreed to accept W. as tenant in lieu of the defendant. Turner v. Hardy, 9 M. & W. 770; 1 D. (N.S.) 954; 11 L. J., Ex. 277.

In Action on Covenant for Quiet Enjoyment.]—In an action against two executors upon a covenant of their testator for quiet enjoyment against all claiming under him, the breach assigned was, that the executors having, at the time when the demise was made, lawful title in their own right, entered and evicted the covenantee. Entry and eviction by the two were proved, the only evidence shewing that it was under lawful title, being a declaration by one after the entry, that the two had lawful title through the testator under a deed prior to that sued upon. Quære, whether the declaration was admissible at all as evidence of the title without production of the deed. Foæ v. Waters, 4 P. & D. 1; 12 A. & E. 43; 9 L. J., Q. B. 329.

But held, that assuming it to be admissible as against the party making it, the declaration was not evidence against the other, as it did not relate to the affairs of the executorship. And therefore that no proof had been given to support the action. Ib.

When the Executors have become Trustees.]—Two executors permitting their co-executor to retain in his hands the ascertained residue, held liable as for a breach of trust. Lincoln v. Wright, 4 Beav. 427.

Upon assenting to a specific bequest given them in trust, executors forthwith became trustees. Dix v. Burford, 19 Beav. 409.

A testator bequeathed a mortgage secured by a conditional surrender, and which had become absolute, to his two executors, upon trust to continue and hold it on certain trusts. The executors assented to the legacy, but did not procure themselves to be admitted, and by reason thereof, one of them was enabled to receive money and release the estate. The money being misapplied:—Held, that the co-executor had become a trustee, and was liable for his default. Ib.

Testator bequeathed 500*l.* to his executors, upon trust that they should lay out and invest the same in the public funds, or in such other security, or in such other manner as to them should seem expedient, at interest, and apply the produce to a charitable purpose. One of the executors, who took the entire management of the estate, paid the debts, and most of the legacies of the testator, but neither specifically appropriated nor invested 500*l.* for the charity. He paid interest, however, on 500*l.* to the charity; at the same time receiving interest on the promissory note of a debtor to the estate who was in good credit, but whose debt was the only fund available for payment of the legacy. The executor afterwards died. On the admission, by his representatives, that he had, in his lifetime, assented to the payment of the legacy to himself as trustee:—Held, that his estate was severally answerable as for a breach of trust. Att.-Gen. v. Higham, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 634.

Where the Executor has acted Negligently.]—Two of three executors, with the knowledge that there were unsettled accounts subsisting at the testator's death between the testator and their co-executor, in respect of which they had reason to believe that the latter was considerably indebted to the estate, took no effectual steps to compel him to account and pay, or secure the balance due for several years after the testator's death, at the end of which he became bankrupt. The solvent executors, being unable to prove that an attempt to recover the money at an earlier period would have been fruitless, were decreed to make good the loss, as having been occasioned by their wilful neglect and default. Styles or Stiles v. Guy, 1 Macn. & G. 422; 1 H. & Tw. 523; 19 L. J., Ch. 185; 14 Jur. 355. Affirming on this point, 16 Sim. 230. And see Id. 233, n.

It is the duty of executors, no less than of trustees, to keep a check upon each other's conduct, and an executor is equally chargeable with neglect in allowing a part of the estate to remain outstanding in an improper state of investment, whether the party in whose hands it is so outstanding be a co-executor or a stranger. Ib.

A testator gave annuities to the plaintiffs and appointed three executors, one of whom, A., was the residuary legatee. No fund was set apart to answer the annuities, but A. was permitted by his co-executors to receive the assets which he wasted, though he paid the annuities for eighteen years, at the end of which he became insolvent: —Held, that the co-executors were liable to the plaintiff's for A.'s receipts. Egbert v. Butter, 21 Beav. 560.

The acts of one of several executors cannot bind their testator's estate so as to preclude other persons interested in that estate from relying on their legal title, unless the legal owner himself, or some predecessor of his in title, has personally either been guilty of misconduct or conferred on the mortgagor an apparent authority to deal with the mortgaged property as if it were unincumbered. Ingham, In re, Jones v. Ingham, 62 L. J., Ch. 100; [1893] 1 Ch. 352; 3 R. 126; 68 L. T. 152; 41 W. R. 235.

Administrator de bonis non.]—An administrator de bonis non is not responsible for the assets which came to the hands of his predecessor. Att.-Gen. v. Köhler, 9 H. L. Cas. 654; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 467; 5 L. T. 35; 9 W. R. 933.

Personal Representative.]—Where one executor, who has been allowed by the other executor improperly to receive part of the trust funds, dies, the estate of the executor so dying is liable to make good the amount so received. Pattenden v. Hobson, 22 L. J., Ch. 697; 17 Jur. 406; 1 W. R. 282.

Indemnity Clause.] — Where testator had directed that his executors should not be liable for each other's acts, one of them, who was in good credit at the time, having called in a mortgage, and received the money, sends round the assignment to his co-executors, who execute it and sign a receipt:—Held, that as no part of the money had come to their hands, they should not be answerable. Westley v. Clarke, 1 Eden, 356; Dick. 329.

A testator authorised his two trustees and executors, A. and D., to carry on his business, giving them full discretion as to its management, and power to employ collectors of debts and accountants. The will contained an indemnity clause, that each trustee should be answerable only for losses arising from his own default, and that any trustee who should pay over to his co-trustee, or should concur in any act enabling him to receive any moneys for the purposes of the will, should not be obliged to see to the application thereof, nor should such trustee be rendered responsible by an express notice of the actual misapplication of the same moneys. The business was carried on, with the consent of the beneficiaries, by one trustee, A., the testator's son, and an account was opened at the bank, and a letter signed by both executors and trustees, authorising the bank to honour the signature of the one trustee, viz., A. the son. Under this authority, the trustee (A.) drew out, nominally for the business, large sums of money, which he misappropriated to his own purposes:—Held (following Wilkins v. Hogg, 3 Giff. 116; 10 W. R. 47), that, in the absence of proof of gross negligence or personal misconduct on the part of the trustee, D., he was fully protected by the indemnity clause from liability in respect of the loss to the estate occasioned by the defalcations of his co-trustee, A. Pass v. Dundas, 43 L. T. 665; 29 W. R. 332.

Persons liable—Generally.]—Whoever deals with an executor for the assets of a testator for a purpose perfectly inconsistent with a due administration of those assets, subjects himself to the consequences of a devastavit. Downes v. Power, 2 Ball & B. 498.

—— Executors of Executors and Administrators.]—It is not enough for the executor of an executor, sued for breach of covenant made by the original testator, to plead plene administravit all the goods and chattels of the original testator at the time of his death, come to the hands of the defendant, &c., without also pleading plene administravit by the first executor; or at least that he, the second executor, had no assets of the first; so as to shew that he had no fund out of which any devastavit by the first executor could be made good. Wells v. Fydell, 10 East, 315.

In an action against the executor of A., the declaration alleged that the plaintiff had recovered judgment against A., executor of R., and that A. had been guilty of a devastavit. The defendant pleaded that R. appointed A. and B. his executors; that B. was still living; that A. at his death, and after his death B., had effects of R. sufficient to satisfy the judgment, and that the defendant never had in his hands any effects of R. as executor:—Held, that the plea was bad, as, by 30 Car. 2, st. 1, c. 7, the defendant was responsible as executor for A.'s devastavit, which the plea admitted. Coward v. Gregory, 36 L. J., C. P. 1; L. R. 2 C. P. 153; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 1000; 15 L. T. 279; 15 W. R. 170.

The death of an executor before payment of his testator's debts is no excuse to a charge of devastavit. Ib.

—— Executors of Executor de son tort.]—J. being indebted to the plaintiff for 360*l.* died intestate, and his widow, A., without obtaining letters of administration, intermeddled with his assets, and on the plaintiff suing her as executrix of her husband for that sum, she allowed judgment to go by consent. A. died shortly after, having appointed the defendants her executors. The plaintiff then brought an action against her executors to recover the 360*l.*, suggesting a devastavit by A.; they pleaded no assets and denied the devastavit; the plaintiff replied, by way of estoppel, the judgment against A. The jury found that at A.'s death there remained assets of J. to the amount of 154*l.*:—Held, that the judgment against A. was conclusive to shew that she had then assets of J. to the amount of 360*l.*, and that therefore a devastavit must be presumed to have been committed by her to the extent of the difference between 360*l.* and 154*l.* Ennis v. Rochford, 14 L. R., Ir. 285.

—— Married Women.]—See cases under MARRIED WOMAN EXECUTRIX OR ADMINISTRATRIX, VIII. post.

—— Infants.] — See cases under INFANT EXECUTOR OR ADMINISTRATOR, IX. post.

Debt by—Nature of.]—A devastavit by an administrator only creates a simple contract debt to the next of kin. Dunne v. Doran, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 545.

Specific legacy to an executor who afterwards becomes bankrupt, and commits a devastavit. The subject of the specific bequest being sold by his assignees:—Held, the produce in their hands not specifically liable to make good the devastavit in favour of the parties beneficially entitled under the will, but that such parties are only entitled to prove the amount of the devastavit. Geary v. Beaumont, 3 Mer. 431.

—— Retainer for against Co-executor.] — Retainer allowed to one executor out of a legacy to a co-executor in respect of a devastavit. Sims v. Doughty, 5 Ves. 243.

Difference between Sum accepted by Administrator and Amount of Verdict.]—An administrator, having arrested a debtor to the intestate for money had and received to the defendant's use, obtained a verdict and charged him in execution. The defendant obtained a rule for a new trial, and petitioned the insolvent court for his discharge. Under these circumstances the debtor requested to be discharged on payment of a sum considerably less than that recovered in the action, and less than the costs. The administrator consented to the terms, and the debtor was liberated. A creditor of the intestate sued the administrator:—Held, that the administrator was not personally liable, as for assets, for any part of the sum given by the verdict against the debtor, and was not guilty of a devastavit in permitting his liberation. Pennington v. Healey, 3 Tyr. 319; 1 C. & M. 402; 2 L. J., Ex. 98.

Lending Money.]—If an executor lends money belonging to the testator, but not wanted for the immediate uses of the will, to a third person on private security, it does not amount to a devastavit, provided he exercised a fair and reasonable discretion. Webster v. Spencer, 3 B. & Ald. 360; 22 R. R. 427.

One executor lent to his co-executor their testator's money, taking a bond for the same, payable to himself and his executors. The lender died, and afterwards the borrower:—Held, first, that this was a misapplication of the assets, and therefore, that the personal representatives of the lending executor might sue on the bond in order to exonerate their testator and themselves; and, secondly, that the rule against circuity of action did not apply. Gleadow v. Atkin, 2 Tyr. 593; 2 C. & J. 548; 1 L. J., Ex. 223.

Executors cannot lend money on personal security, though words which may imply a discretion so to do are used by the testator. Wilkes v. Steward, G. Coop. 6.

Where a testator authorises his three executors to lend money on personal security, it is a breach of trust if two of the executors lend it to the third. —— v. Walker, 5 Russ. 7.

Laches—Effect of.]—Mere laches in abstaining from calling upon the executors to realise for the purpose of paying his debt will not deprive a creditor of his right to sue the executors for devastavit, unless there has been such a course of conduct, or express authority on his part, that the executors have been thereby misled into parting with the assets, available to answer his claim. Birch, In re, Roe v. Birch, 54 L. J., Ch. 119; 27 Ch. D. 622; 51 L. T. 777; 33 W. R. 72.

Delay, Effect of—Specialty Debt.]—There is no rule in equity, any more than at law, that the mere nonsuing by a specialty creditor for any period within the statutory limit of twenty years is such negligence as deprives him of the right of requiring payment of the specialty debt. S. covenanted with B. for immediate payment of a sum of money in exoneration of B., and in substitution for a similar sum which B. was liable to pay within six months of his death. S. died without having paid, or been called on to pay that sum, leaving property amply sufficient to meet it, but her executor, instead of providing out of her estate funds to meet the liability on her covenant, left her estate, consisting entirely of shares in a bank, which afterwards failed, unconverted. The investment in bank shares was authorised by the will of S.:—Held, that the executors of B. were entitled, after a lapse of eighteen and a half years, to enforce that covenant against the estate of S., and that the executor of S., having committed a devastavit in not converting the shares to provide for payment of the debt, was liable to make good the amount for which his testatrix was so liable under her covenant. Baker, In re, Collins v. Rhodes, 51 L. J., Ch. 315; 20 Ch. D. 230; 45 L. T. 658; 30 W. R. 858—C. A.

—— Mortgage Debt.] — Testator mortgaged an estate to plaintiffs, and devised it to three executors upon trusts in favour of his daughters, and after the death of all his children, for sale. The executors distributed the whole personal estate without providing for the mortgage debt. After this one of the executors died. The daughters occupied the farm for twenty years after the distribution of the personal estate, paying rent to the executors, and, until 1880, paying the interest on the mortgage. The mortgagees then brought an action for foreclosure or sale, and claimed to have any deficiency made good by the two surviving executors and the executors of the deceased executor:—Held, that any claim founded on the devastavit in distributing the personal estate was barred after six years, but that the plaintiffs were entitled to foreclosure, and to an order for administration of the mortgagor's estate. Gale, In re, Blake v. Gale, 22 Ch. D. 820; 48 L. T. 101; 31 W. R. 538.

A testator mortgaged freeholds, and died in May, 1867, having devised all his real and personal estate to A. and B. upon certain trusts, and having appointed them his executors. The executors, without making provision for the mortgage debt, applied the whole of the personal estate in payment to simple contract creditors and beneficiaries. In 1869, A. died, and C. was appointed trustee in his place in 1871. The rents of the real estate were received by A. and B., and by B. and C., and after payment of the interest on the mortgage the balance was applied in accordance with the trusts of the will. The mortgaged property became an insufficient security, and interest having fallen into arrear, the mortgagees in 1886 commenced proceedings against B. and C., under which accounts of the testator's personal estate received by A. and B., or by B. alone, were directed, and also the usual accounts of the testator's real estate, including an account of rents and profits against B. and C. Accounts were accordingly carried in, in which B. and C. claimed credit for all payments and disbursements made to simple contract creditors and beneficiaries, and further that as to such of the payments as were made by A. and B. upwards of six years prior to the action any claim on a devastavit was statute barred, and that as to the rents and profits they were not liable to account for them at all:—Held, following Marsden, In re (26 Ch. D. 783), on this point, and distinguishing Gale, In re (22 Ch. D. 820), that B. could not set up his own and A.'s wrongful payment by way of devastavit as a defence in order to claim the benefit of the Statute of Limitations. Hyatt, In re, Bowles v. Hyatt, 57 L. J., Ch. 777; 38 Ch. D. 609; 59 L. T. 227.

That as to the rents and profits which had been received by B., or B. and C. jointly, that they were under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, assets by accretion liable under the circumstances for payment of creditors by specialty just as much as the real estate was assets under that statute. Ib.

The executors of a testator who had mortgaged certain leasehold property belonging to him continued to pay interest on the mortgage debts, but applied the surplus of the testator's estate in payments to beneficiaries under his will, making no provision for meeting the mortgages. The mortgaged property proved insufficient for payment of the mortgages. In an action commenced for administration of the testator's estate, the mortgagees claimed that the executors were liable to them for the payment made to beneficiaries. The executors claimed to be credited with these payments on the ground of acquiescence by the mortgagees, and as to such of them as were made more than six years before the commencement of the action, they claimed the benefit of the Statute of Limitations:—Held, that there had been no acquiescence by the mortgagees, and that the executors, being trustees for the creditors, could not set up the Statute of Limitations as a bar to a claim in respect of a devastavit committed by them. Marsden, In re, Bowden v. Layland, 54 L. J., Ch. 640; 26 Ch. D. 784; 51 L. T. 417; 33 W. R. 28.

Statute-barred Debt—Res Judicata—Subsequent Payment of Debt by Executor.]—An executor who pays a statute-barred debt after a judicial decision that the debt is not recoverable out of the testator's estate by reason of its being statute-barred, commits a devastavit; and the creditor who receives payment of such debt, with knowledge of the circumstances, is also liable to the testator's estate for its repayment. Midgley v. Midgley, 62 L. J., Ch. 905; [1893] 3 Ch. 282; 2 R. 561; 69 L. T. 241; 41 W. R. 659—C. A.

Claim within Statute of Frauds.]—An executor or administrator commits a devastavit by paying a creditor who is prevented from enforcing his claim by the Statute of Frauds. Rownson, In re, Field v. White, 54 L. J., Ch. 950; 29 Ch. D. 358; 52 L. T. 825; 35 W. R. 604; 49 J. P. 759—C. A.

Loss, how Borne—Liability of Legal Life Estate Devised to Executor.]—A testator devised a real estate to A. for life, in terms which gave him the legal estate, and he bequeathed to him his personal estate, subject to some annuities bequeathed to other parties, and appointed him an executor. A. wasted the assets:—Held, that his life estate in the realty was not liable to make good the annuities. Egbert v. Butter, 21 Beav. 560.

A testator devised real estate for life to one of his executors and trustees: the devisee afterwards committed breaches of trust and then filed a petition for liquidation:—Held, that, as against the trustee in the liquidation, the life estate of the executor and trustee being legal, could not be taken and applied in replacing losses occasioned by the breaches of trust. Fox v. Buckley, 3 Ch. D. 508; 25 W. R. 508. And see Barff, Ex parte, Cousen, In re, De G. 613; 17 L. J., Bk. 22; 12 Jur. 668.

—— By Legatees.]—A loss happening by the default of a trustee appointed by a testator, falls on the legatees, and the estate is discharged from it. Hutchinson v. Massareene (Lord), 2 Ball & B. 54.

A testator bequeathed stock to his executors, subject to his debts, to pay the dividends to his wife for life, and at her death to sell the capital, and out of the proceeds to pay certain legacies which would exhaust about one-half of the fund, and he made A. his residuary legatee. Thirty years before the death of the tenant for life, the stock, not being wanted for the payment of debts, was set apart in accordance with the will. Shortly before the death of the tenant for life, the administrator of the last surviving trustee, who in that capacity had control over the stock, misappropriated a part of it:—Held, that the loss arising from this misappropriation must fall upon the residuary legatee. Baker v. Farmer, 37 L. J., Ch. 820; L. R. 3 Ch. 537; 16 W. R. 923.

An executor, who was also trustee, divided his assets; he paid to the adult legatees their shares, and invested the shares of the infants in his own name, but he executed no declaration of trust thereof; he afterwards applied these sums to his own use. Further assets having unexpectedly fallen in:—Held, that they ought in the first place, to be applied in making good the infants' legacies. Willmott v. Jenkins, 1 Beav. 401.

—— As between Creditors of Deceased Executor and Unpaid Legatees.]—The testator devised his real estate to trustees for a term, in trust, to pay debts and legacies, if his personal estate should be deficient; and, subject to the term, he gave his real estates, and the residue of his personalty, to A., B. and C., and named them his executors. The personalty which came to the hands of the executors was more than sufficient to pay all the debts and legacies, but was misappropriated by them:—Held, that the legatees were entitled to the benefit of the term, in priority to the claims of the creditors of one of the executors who was dead. Humble v. Humble, 2 Jur. 696.

f. INTEREST.

1. Simple Interest.

When Liable for.] — Executor keeping the money of testator longer than the exigencies of his affairs require shall pay interest. But one executor shall not be answerable for the sums come to the hands of another; unless they have done joint acts; but each shall be liable to the whole costs. Littlehales v. Gascoyne, 3 Bro. C. C. 73.

Executor keeping money of testator's in his hands, liable to interest and costs. Lord Chancellor said, if he laid it out in the 3 per cents., the court would affirm his act. Franklin v. Frith, 3 Bro. C. C. 433.

An executor retaining a large part of testator's personal estate, during the pendency of divers suits touching the validity of some of his debts, shall be chargeable with interest for the annual balance in his hands. Kildare v. Hopson, 4 Bro. P. C. 550.

An executor and trustee having for several years retained in his hands uninvested funds which he ought to have invested:—Held, not to be chargeable with interest at 5 per cent., or upon the principle of annual rests, but with simple interest only at 4 per cent., there being no circumstances to lead to the conclusion that he had made any profit by his misconduct. Att.-Gen. v. Alford, 4 De G. M. & G. 843; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 361; 3 W. R. 200.

The principle applicable to charging executors and trustees with interest in such cases considered. Ib.

The court will only charge an executor or trustee with the interest which he has received, or which he ought to have received, or which it is fairly to be presumed that he did receive, and misconduct on the part of an executor or trustee will not, generally speaking, warrant such a presumption. Ib.

Under what circumstances an executor or trustee shall be chargeable with interest for the money in his hands. Lincoln (Earl) v. Allen, 4 Bro. P. C. 553.

Executors not liable to interest on balance, unless the purposes for which the money is retained appear to be answered; but trustees and guardians are, without such proof. Dawson v. Massey, 1 Ball & B. 231.

Executor charged with arrears of rent unreceived and balances in his hands, together with interest at the rate of 4 per cent. and costs of a suit relating to such arrears and balances. Tebbs v. Carpenter, 1 Madd. 290; 16 R. R. 224.

Trustees and executors, under the will of a testator, who had directed them to invest a share of his residuary estate, either in the public funds, or on mortgage, at 5 per cent., having admitted by their answer that they had from time to time balances in their hands, and it being proved that many years after the death of the testator they had not invested the share either in the funds or on mortgage, inquiries will be directed at the original hearing concerning the balances retained by them, and the price of 3 per cent. stock at the several times when such balances were in their hands. Hockley v. Bantock, 1 Russ. 141; 25 R. R. 16.

Interest against executors for balances in their hands, with costs, upon the circumstances, but not, as of course. Ashburnham v. Thompson, 13 Ves. 402.

General principle on which the court proceeds in making declarations, in directing inquiries as to wilful default and interest on balances in the hands of executors or trustees. Jones v. Morrell, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 241.

An administrator, who allowed balances of the intestate's property to remain uninvested for a considerable length of time, standing at the banker's to the credit of the intestate's estate, was ordered to pay interest at 4 per cent. on the shares of those balances which belonged to some infants. Gresley v. Heathcote, 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 107.

Executors having left money lying at a banker's, who paid 2½ per cent. for it, ordered to pay interest themselves on the balances from time to time at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum. Williams v. Williams, 1 W. R. 237.

A testator directed his trustees and executors to invest the residue of his estate on good freehold security; the trustee retained in his hands a balance of between 300*l.* and 400*l.* for a period of more than two years, part of which money was in the hands of his bankers:—Held, under the circumstances, that he was not responsible for interest during that time, although he had been informed of certain persons who were desirous of borrowing money on freehold security, he having employed a solicitor to procure a proper investment. Wyatt v. Wallis, C. P. Cooper, 155, n.; 8 Jur. 117.

An executor held chargeable with interest upon certain sums which he retained, and mixed with his own moneys at his banker's, the sum being retained out of the income of the testator's residuary estate, in order to satisfy a debt which there was probable ground to believe was due to the testator's estate from a person entitled to a share of such income, but which turned out not to be due to the extent supposed. Melland v. Gray, 2 Coll. C. C. 295.

Where executors, directed to invest, allowed the property to be enjoyed by the tenant for life in specie, and three years after her death accounted for the value, and paid it into court, held liable also for interest from the death of the tenant until the day of payment. Mackenzie v. Taylor, 7 Beav. 467.

Executor charged with interest on dividends of stock received by him and kept at his banker's with his own money for a number of years, instead of being invested to accumulate. Goodchild v. Fenton, 3 Y. & J. 481.

A testator by his will gave his residuary real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust for his wife for life, and after her decease upon trust for his children; and he directed that, after the death of his wife, and during the minority of any of his children, the trustees should apply, towards the maintenance of his children, a certain portion of the income of their then expectant shares, and accumulate the surplus income of each such share at compound interest. After the death of the widow the sole surviving trustee neglected to accumulate the surplus income of each child's share, and invested large portions of the testator's estate in exchequer bills and other securities not authorised by the trusts of the will:—Held, that the investments which had been made being improper investments, the executor was chargeable in the same manner as if he had retained the moneys in his own hands; but, under the circumstances of the case, as it did not appear that he had benefited himself by it, and had not employed the sums so retained in trade, that he was chargeable only with interest at 4 per cent.; held, also, that as the trustee had been guilty of a breach of trust in neglecting to accumulate the surplus income of each child's share, he was to be charged with annual rests; held, also, notwithstanding he was chargeable as above, that he was entitled to his usual cost of suit, as between solicitor and client, out of the estate. Knott v. Cottee, 16 Beav. 77; 16 Jur. 752.

An administrator unnecessarily retained a balance of 3,700*l.* in his hands for three years. He was charged with interest, but was allowed his costs of an administration suit:—Held, also, that the pendency of a suit for administration in the Duchy Court of Lancashire during the time was no justification for the non-investment. Holgate v. Haworth, 17 Beav. 259.

An executor who had unnecessarily retained in his hands uninvested a balance of 655*l.* for a year and a half, charged interest thereon. Stafford v. Fiddon, 23 Beav. 386.

Where there is a direction in a will to accumulate a residue, with which the executor and trustee does not comply, he will not be allowed to pay the bare residue into court, but must pay also interest from the expiration of one year after the testator's decease up to the date of filing the answer. Amiss v. Hall, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 584.

An executor charged, on further consideration, with interest on balances retained in his hands for various periods, varying from 670 to 229 days. Johnson v. Prendergast, 28 Beav. 480.

Executors, in passing their residuary account, erroneously stated the degrees of relationship of the legatees to the testator, in consequence of which a large sum was paid to the Crown for legacy duty in excess of that properly chargeable. The liability for the principal being admitted:—Held, that the executors were also chargeable with interest. Shaw v. Turbett, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 324.

The executors, by their answer, submitted that they were not liable for interest, and the decree at the first hearing was silent upon the subject:—Held, that the charge for interest could properly be made on further directions. Ib.

An executor, under a bonâ fide belief that on the true construction of the will they were entitled thereto, sold out stock, retained one-third and paid two-thirds to the co-executors. It having been declared in the suit that the next of kin were entitled to this fund, and that the executor was bound to restore it:—Held, that he was only liable to pay interest on the one-third retained by himself. Saltmarsh v. Barrett, 31 Beav. 349; 31 L. J., Ch. 783; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 737; 5 L. T. 87; 10 W. R. 640.

The decision in Saltmarsh v. Barrett (31 Beav. 349), that executors who, acting bonâ fide, have distributed the assets upon what turns out to be an erroneous construction of the will, are not liable to be charged with interest upon the principal sums wrongly paid, which must be refunded to the estate, dissented from as departing from the principle established in Att.-Gen. v. Köhler (9 H. L. Cas. 654), post, and Att.-Gen. v. Alford (4 De G. M. & G. 843), ante. Hulkes, In re, Powell v. Hulkes, 55 L. J., Ch. 846; 33 Ch. D. 552; 55 L. T. 209; 34 W. R. 733; 35 W. R. 194.

Although, as a general rule, executors are liable to be charged with interest at 4 per cent. on sums improperly paid or improperly retained by them, they are not liable for interest to the legatee (or his representatives) to whom, with full knowledge on his part and in common mistake, the payments which he must refund have thus been erroneously made. Ib.

Mere delay in taking accounts is not sufficient to charge an executor with interest on the balance retained in his hands. Blogg v. Johnson, 36 L. J., Ch. 859; L. R. 2 Ch. 225; 16 L. T. 306; 15 W. R. 626.

A bill was filed by the executor of a tenant for life under a will against the executor of the testator for an account of income due at the decease of the tenant for life, and considerable delay took place in taking the accounts, but ultimately a large balance was found to have been due from the defendant at the death of the tenant for life, and he was ordered to pay the amount so found due to the plaintiff. The delay in taking the accounts not being attributable to the defendant:—Held, that he was not liable to pay interest, except from the date of the order. Ib.

Administrator on Behalf of Crown.]—Where administration of the effects of an intestate has been granted to the nominee of the Crown in the absence of any next of kin, the nominee of the Crown is liable to pay interest to the next of kin upon the balance in the hands of the nominee. Edgar v. Reynolds, 4 Drew. 269; 27 L. J., Ch. 562; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 399; 6 W. R. 404. S. P., Att.-Gen. v. Köhler, 9 H. L. Cas. 654; 5 L. T. 35; 9 W. R. 933.

A., on behalf of the Crown, took out administration to the estate of B., who, it was alleged, had died without leaving any next of kin, and as such administrator sold out a sum of stock belonging to B., and paid the proceeds into the Treasury. Some years after, a suit was instituted by the next of kin of B. against A., and a decree obtained in his favour:—Held, that interest was payable on the proceeds of the sale of the stock since the time of the sale. Turner v. Maule, 3 De G. & Sm. 497; 18 L. J., Ch. 454; 14 Jur. 165.

Dividends received by Solicitor of.] — An administratrix, who had permitted her solicitor to receive dividends of a fund set apart for an infant next of kin, was ordered to account for the dividends, with interest at the rate of 3*l.* per cent. with half-yearly rests. Gilroy v. Stevens or Stephen, 51 L. J., Ch. 834; 46 L. T. 761; 30 W. R. 745.

Administrator pendente lite.]—An administrator pendente lite is not liable for interest upon a balance in his banker's hands during the pendency of the suit in the Ecclesiastical Court. Gallivan v. Evans, 1 Ball & B. 191.

Executor of Executor.]—A. S., the sole executrix and tenant for life, died, having 12,500*l.* of the assets in her hands. Her executors admitted assets:—Held, that in the absence of any further proof, they were not liable for interest. Davenport v. Stafford, 14 Beav. 319.

Executor of Receiver.]—Admission of assets to answer rents by the executor of a receiver, makes him liable to interest, if made. Foster v. Foster, 2 Bro. C. C. 616.

Contract to pay.]—B. having died indebted to G. for work and labour done, his executors signed the following memorandum on the back of G.'s account: "Mr. G. having consented to wait for the payment of the within account, we, as the executors of B., engage to pay Mr. G. interest for the same at 5*l.* per cent. until the same is settled":—Held, that the executors were personally liable to pay the debt and interest. Bradly v. Heath, 3 Sim. 543; 30 R. R. 217.

Retained under a Misapprehension of Right.]—Executor not charged with interest for a balance in his hands, retained under a fair misapprehension of his right to it. Bruere v. Pemberton, 12 Ves. 386.

An executor is charged with interest not by way of punishing misconduct, but of protecting the interests of the persons entitled, and must, therefore, pay interest for a balance retained under a fair misapprehension of his right to it. Meader v. M'Cready, 1 Moll. 119.

Need not be prayed by Bill.]—Executors charged with interest on balances, though not prayed by the bill. Turner v. Turner, 1 Jac. & Walk. 39. S. P., Hollingsworth v. Shakeshaft, 14 Beav. 492; 21 L. J., Ch. 722; Woodhead v. Marriott, C. P. Cooper, 62.

On what Balance.]—No interest upon balances held to answer demands, which, though not actually made, might have been made at any time upon the executor, such balances being only ostensible. Although anticipated payments to legatees are not credited to the executor in taking the account of assets, they reduce the balance for the purpose of interest to be charged against him. Flanagan v. Nolan, 1 Moll. 84.

Under a decree to account, against executors, the master had charged them with certain funds, and with certain balances, from time to time, in their hands; but had not charged interest on the balances, and had given them credit for payments on account of interests on legacies bequeathed by their testator. By a subsequent decree it was referred back to the master, to ascertain the balances, from time to time, in the hands of the executors, and charge them with interest on those balances:—Held, that the master was not merely to charge simple interest on the balances before ascertained, but was to take a new account of the balances, and to apply such interest in discharge of the disbursements made by the executors before any of such disbursements were to be deemed as paid out of sum found due from them on the previous balance. Irwin v. Knox, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 503.

2. Compound Interest.

Special Case must be made.]—Executor directed to lay out testator's personalty in the funds; unnecessarily selling out stock, keeping large balances in his hands, and resisting payment of debts by a false pretence of outstanding demands, charged with 5*l.* per cent. interest and costs; but the court refused to make rests in the account. Crackelt v. Bethune, 1 Jac. & Walk. 586; 21 R. R. 241.

Where there is a Trust to accumulate.]—Executor charged with compound interest at 5 per cent. under a direction for half-yearly rests, as not having attempted to execute a trust to accumulate, though no loss happened, and a due execution of the trusts could not have produced so much; allowed subsequent costs of proceedings consequential upon those of which the costs were allowed him by the original decree, not as to the inquiries and accounts relating to the breach of trust, not charged with those costs arising principally from a necessary investigation as to the rule by which he ought to be charged. Raphael v. Boehm, 13 Ves. 407; 8 R. R. 95.

Executor bound by will to accumulate, cannot account as if the money had been laid out in the funds, if it was not so laid out, or, being so, he had sold out at an advance. S. C., 11 Ves. 108.

Executor under a direction to accumulate for an infant, having become a bankrupt, his estate was charged with interest at 5 per cent., with rests. Dornford v. Dornford, 12 Ves. 127; 8 R. R. 316.

In other Cases.]—Principles on which, in cases of breach of trust, trustees are charged with simple and compound interest, and with the profits made in the investment of trust money in trade. Jones v. Foxall, 15 Beav. 388; 21 L. J., Ch. 725.

Generally an executor improperly retaining balances is charged with interest at 4 per cent.; but if, in addition, he commits a breach of trust, or changes money from a proper into an improper state of investment, he is charged 5 per cent. If he employ the trust money in trade, he will be charged either with the profits, or 5 per cent. compound interest. Ib.

From 1834 to 1850 a trustee who ought to have withdrawn a trust fund from a trading firm, of which he was a member, neglected to do so. He was charged with compound interest at 5 per cent., and with costs. Ib.

An executor and trustee having for several years retained in his hands uninvested funds which he ought to have invested:—Held, not to be chargeable with interest at 5 per cent., or upon the principle of annual rests, but with simple interest only at 4 per cent., there being no circumstances to lead to the conclusion that he had made any profit by his misconduct. Att.-Gen. v. Alford, 4 De G. M. & G. 843; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 361; 3 W. R. 200.

The principle applicable to charging executors and trustees with interest in such cases considered. Ib.

The court will only charge an executor or trustee with the interest which he has received, or which he ought to have received, or which it is fairly to be presumed that he did receive, and misconduct on the part of an executor or trustee will not, generally speaking, warrant such a presumption. Ib.

Rule as to charging executors and trustees with interest on balances, and at what rate, and whether with annual rests. Knott v. Cottee, 16 Beav. 77; 16 Jur. 752.

An executor and trustee who was directed to invest in government stocks of Great Britain, or upon real security, and accumulate the surplus, after maintaining infants, invested the estate in the foreign funds. It was held, that the investment was improper, and he was charged with 4 per cent., with annual rests. Ib.

In 1846 an executor invested part of the assets in exchequer bills; they were ordered into court and sold in the same year at a loss. In 1848 it was declared by the decree, that the investment was improper, but at that time the price of exchequer bills had risen, so that there would have been then no loss if they had been retained:—Held, that the executor ought to be charged with the amount improperly invested, and credited with the produce of the exchequer bills in 1846. Ib.

Administration is taken out in 1771. Distribution to certain extent is made, but a large sum is retained on fraudulent pretences. No effectual stir is made against administrators till 1792, and that is protracted in great measure by administrator's fault in court below till 1810:—Held, that notwithstanding lapse, administrator should be charged with full interest on sum remaining undistributed during the whole period of retention, with annual rests and costs incurred since original decree. Stackpoole v. Stackpoole, 4 Dow, 209.

W., a solicitor, having been appointed and acting as an executor in the administration of the affairs of the estate, brought and defended many suits, in which he employed himself as the attorney. Upon a bill filed by the residuary legatees against the executor, by the decree upon further directions, it was ordered that interest should be charged upon all balances in the hands of the executor, at the end of every year, and that interest should be charged against the residuary legatees upon all advances made to them by the executor from the time of the advances. Upon appeal, this order was varied by declaring that the master should be directed in taking the accounts, to make a rest, and state the balance at the end of each year, and to charge the executor with interest on such balance, and to apply such interest as might be so found due from him in each year; in the first place, towards his future payments, before any application should be made of the balance of principal money in his hands. Carmichael v. Wilson, 4 Bligh (N.S.) 145. Varying on this point, S. C., 3 Moll. 79. See S. C., 2 Dow & Cl. 51.

When the executor has unduly held the assets in his hands, the court will give a direction to take the account with rests, and charge him with compound interest, although there be no accumulation clause in the will. S. C., 3 Moll. 79.

An administrator, who had without reason sold out stock specifically bequeathed to an infant, and retained the produce after an order for payment, charged with compound interest. Walrond v. Walrond, 29 Beav. 586.

A defendant having stated in his answer, that by carrying on business on a farm, and with stock belonging to the assets of an intestate, he had made no profit; but that, as he had not kept any accounts, and had blended the transactions of the farm with his other concerns, he could not set forth the amount of the profits; it was ordered, that in taking the accounts against him, annual rests should be made, and interest calculated at 5 per cent. upon those annual rests. Walker v. Woodward, 1 Russ. 107; 25 R. R. 9.

Form of Decree.]—By the decree, it was directed that the master should ascertain what balances the defendant had in his hands unapplied at the end of twelve months from the testator's death, and also what balances at the end of each year since that time; and it was ordered that the master should compute interest at the rate of 5*l.* per cent. per annum on the balances in the defendant's hands at the end of each year; and the master, in taking the accounts, was to make annual rests; and it was ordered that the defendant be charged with interest after the rate and in manner aforesaid upon such balances:—Held, that the master was wrong in not charging the defendant with compound interest. Heighington v. Grant, 10 L. J., Ch. 12; 4 Jur. 1052.

3. Rate.

Penal Rate—Special Case must be shewn.]—Executor charged for withholding money and not putting in his examination, with interest; but not beyond 4 per cent., except in a special case. Rocke v. Hart, 11 Ves. 58. S. P., Woodhead v. Marriott, C. P. Cooper, 62.

—— Discretion of Court.]—As to discretion of the court as to the rate of interest to be charged upon balances in the hands of executors, administrators, &c. Cuffe v. Cuffe, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 469.

The rate of interest upon balances retained by an executor is in the discretion of the court, governed by the fact of his having used the fund or otherwise. Flanagan v. Nolan, 1 Moll. 84.

—— Where his Conduct causes Loss to the Estate.]—Where an executor appears to have made 5 per cent. of the assets in his hands, or where he has by the nonapplication of assets done damage to the estate to the amount of 5 per cent., in either case he shall be charged with interest at that rate. Hall v. Hallet, 1 Cox, 134; 1 R. R. 3.

Executor and trustee having been guilty of a breach of trust, by selling out stock and dealing improperly with the money, the cestuis que trustent have an option to have the stock replaced, or the money produced by the sales, with interest of 5 per cent. or more, if more has been made by it, and the costs occasioned by his misconduct. Pocock v. Reddington, 5 Ves. 794.

—— Where Estate is retained.]—At death of testatrix, her executor, a banker, has funds belonging to her in his hands, it does not appear upon what terms. The executor dies three months after his testatrix; there was no evidence that he had committed any breach of trust, or made any use or profit of the money in his business:—Held, that his estate could only be charged 4 per cent. on the money. Penny v. Avison, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 62.

An executor keeping the fund, and using it for his own benefit, contrary to his trust, decreed to account, with interest at 5 per cent. and costs. Piety v. Stace, 4 Ves. 620.

Executor in trust for infants unnecessarily calling in the property out upon good security, at 5 per cent., except a small part, keeping large balances in his hands, and using it as his own, charged with interest at 5 per cent. and costs. Mosley v. Ward, 11 Ves. 581; 8 R. R. 249.

Where the master by his report finds a fact involving, according to the practice of the court, a particular consequence, the court will act upon the fact so found, and it is not a ground of exception, that such consequence is not stated in the report. The master found that two executors had, by signing joint cheques, enabled each other to receive sums belonging to the estate of their testatrix, when they were both largely indebted to that estate, and that the sums so received by them were debts provable under their respective commissions, both executors having become bankrupt:—Held, that interest at 5 per cent., as the consequence of the devastavit, was to be added to the principal sums found to be provable against the bankrupt estates of the executors. Beck v. Motley, 2 Myl. & K. 312; 4 L. J., Ch. 63.

It is not according to the ordinary course or practice of the court to direct the master, in taking the accounts against an executor, to calculate interest upon an unascertained residue. It is the duty of an executor to distribute the assets in payment of legacies when the time for distribution has arrived; and if, having ample funds in his hands, and there being no excuse for retaining the money, the executor, instead of paying the legacies and dividing the residue amongst the residuary legatees, retain the money in his own hands, he is guilty of a breach of trust, and will be charged 5 per cent. interest on the money so retained; and if he pays the money into his banker's and mixes it with his own money, he will be considered to have had the same benefit in respect of it as if he had embarked it in trade, and will be charged with annual rests on the balance in his hands, and the burthen lies on the executor to shew that he has derived no benefit from the balance thus in his banker's hands. Williams v. Powell, 15 Beav. 461; 16 Jur. 393.

Executor directed to lay out testator's personalty in the funds, &c. unnecessarily selling out stock, keeping large balances in his hands, and resisting payment of debts by a false pretence of outstanding demands, charged with 5 per cent. interest and costs; but the court refused to make rests in the account. Crackelt v. Bethune, 1 Jac. & Walk. 586; 21 R. R. 241.

Where trustees and executors, after payment of a testator's debts, kept the balance of the personal estate at their bankers, the court charged them with interest on the balance at 5 per cent. from the date of the payment of the debts, but allowed them their costs. Jones, In re, Jones v. Searle, 49 L. T. 91.

—— Estate employed in Private Trade.]—A trustee, in a will which directed money to be lent, at such rate of interest as they should think reasonable, by consent of his co-trustee, keeps it at 4 per cent.; ordered to pay 5, and the executors to pay the costs of taking the accounts as to that interest. Forbes v. Ross, 2 Bro. C. C. 430; 2 Cox, 113.

Interest to be computed at 5 per cent. when the property has been employed in trade. Heathcote v. Hulme, 1 Jac. & Walk. 122; 20 R. R. 248.

An executor, being a trader, who, after paying pecuniary legacies in due time, retains for many years balances belonging to the residue and mixes them with his own moneys, will be charged with interest at 5*l.* per cent., though it could not be ascertained, without a decree of the court, who were the persons entitled to the fund. Sutton v. Sharp, 1 Russ. 146.

A defendant having stated in his answer that by carrying on business on a farm, and with stock belonging to the assets of an intestate, he had made no profit, but that as he had not kept any accounts and had blended the transactions of the farm with his other concerns, he could not set forth the amount of the profits; it was ordered that in taking the accounts against him, annual rests should be made, and interest calculated at 5 per cent. upon the annual rests. Walker v. Woodward, 1 Russ. 107; 25 R. R. 9.

g. For Acts and Defaults of Agents.

Generally.]—Executor is liable for the default of clerk or agent employed in the administration of assets; but if testator recommend a particular person to be employed, then executor is not liable merely for his default unless there has also been laches on his part in not making him account. Kilbee v. Sneyd, 2 Moll. 186.

Executors depositing moneys belonging to the estate with the same persons as the testator intrusted with the moneys in his lifetime, although they are not bankers, are not liable for a loss sustained by their bankruptcy. Dorchester v. Effingham, Taml. 279; 31 R. R. 97.

Loss by Agent's Insolvency—Onus of Proof.]—A common order having been made for the administration of a testator's estate, the district registrar by his certificate found the outstanding personal estate to consist in part of book debts amounting nominally to 291*l.*; as to 113*l.*, part of which he certified that it represented a portion of book debts which the executors had employed H. to collect, and for which H. had not accounted, and had claimed to deduct 55*l.* for remuneration, but that 25*l.* was enough. The certificate went on to say, that H. had gone into liquidation and that no part of the 113*l.* was likely to be recovered. No application was made to vary this certificate. It appeared that H. had collected in all 168*l.*, had paid to the executors in April, May and June, 1880, sums amounting in all to 55*l.*, and had gone on collecting without making any further payment to the executors till July, 1881, when a receiver was appointed in the action, but it did not appear when he became insolvent, nor at what times the moneys received came to his hands. The action having come on for further consideration:—Held, that where an executor or trustee employs an agent to collect money under circumstances which make such employment proper, and the money collected is lost by the agent's insolvency, the burden of proof is not on the executor to shew that the loss was not attributable to his own default, but on the persons seeking to charge him to prove that it was. Brier, In re, Brier v. Evison, 26 Ch. D. 238; 33 W. R. 20—C. A.

What Agent—To get in Debts.]—A testator directs that his business shall be carried on by E. The executors permit E. to get in the outstanding debts. There being no such direction in the will, the executors are liable. Pistor v. Dunbar, 1 Anstr. 107, 186; 3 R. R. 561.

Executors held, under the circumstances, justified in appointing an agent to get in the testator's debts, and in allowing him a salary for his trouble. Hopkinson v. Roe, 1 Beav. 180.

Executors employed an auctioneer, who received the deposit. After some necessary delay the purchases were completed on the 17th December, 1831. The auctioneer failed to pay over the deposit. The executors, acting under legal advice, took no legal proceedings against him till the 14th March 1832, and the money was lost. The auctioneer was not at the completion of the sale, or afterwards, in circumstances to pay the balance:—Held, under the circumstances, that the executors were not personally liable. Edmonds v. Peake, 7 Beav. 239; 13 L. J., Ch. 13.

—— Auctioneer — Insolvency.]—An auctioneer, in good credit and extensive business, was employed by executors to sell the testator's leasehold estates. Owing to objections raised by the purchaser's solicitors, the purchases were not completed until six months afterwards. On the day on which the purchases were completed, the auctioneer failed to attend or to account for the deposit moneys in his hands, but shortly afterwards admitted to the executors his inability to pay the amount due from him in respect of such deposits, and promised to pay the same shortly, out of moneys coming to him in respect of a sale of large property which he was about to effect. The executors, by the advice of their solicitors, did not issue legal process against the auctioneer until two months after the time appointed for the completion of the purchases, when it was found that the defendant, being in insolvent circumstances, had absconded:—Held, that the executors were not liable to make good the loss sustained by the auctioneer's insolvency. Edmonds v. Peake, 7 Beav. 239; 13 L. J., Ch. 13.

—— Bankers—Failure.]—Executor directed, with all convenient speed, to pay debts and lay out the residue in mortgages:—Held, not answerable for a loss by the insolvency of the testator's banker, after selling negotiable securities deposited with him by the testator. Routh v. Howell, 3 Ves. 565.

Executor placing testator's money, which he ought to have invested in stock, in banker's hands, mixedly with his own, is liable to loss by failure of bankers. Fletcher v. Walker, 3 Madd. 73; 18 R. R. 195.

Executors depositing moneys belonging to the estate with the same persons as the testator entrusted with his moneys in his lifetime, although they are not bankers, are not liable for a loss sustained by their bankruptcy. Dorchester v. Effingham, Taml. 279; 31 R. R. 97.

A testator directed his executors to invest money within six months after his decease. This was not done for many years. In the meantime, part of the money was lost by the bankruptcy of a banker, in whose hands it was lodged. The surviving executor directed the money to be properly laid out, but it was not done; and, the banker having failed, the court ordered him to pay interest upon the balances from time to time in the hands of himself and his co-executors, and to repay the money lost by the bankruptcy. Newton v. Reid, 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 273.

Trustees and executors who, for upwards of a year after their testator's death, allowed a considerable portion of the assets to lie unproductive in the hands of a banker who failed, were, under the circumstances, charged with the loss. Moyle v. Moyle, 2 Russ. & M. 710.

A testator resident in India directed his trustees and executors to invest his residue in government or other good securities, and then declared trusts of it for the benefit of his children and other persons, all of whom were resident either in England or Ireland, and were mentioned so to be in the will. The residue was allowed to remain in the hands of the testator's bankers and agents in India, who ultimately failed:—Held, that the acting executor and trustee was responsible for the loss thereby occasioned to the estate. Lowry v. Fulton, 9 Sim. 115; 8 L. J., Ch. 314; 3 Jur. 454.

An executrix allowed 190*l.* (part of the estate) to remain at a banker's in her name, as executrix. A loss occurred, by his bankruptcy, a year after the testator's death:—Held, that she was not personally liable for the loss. Swinfen v. Swinfen, 29 Beav. 211.

A testatrix gave some legacies absolutely, others to tenants for life with remainders over, and directed the settled legacies to be invested in the funds or on mortgage. The assets were sufficient to pay all legacies and to leave a trifling residue. The executors paid all the legacies which were given absolutely, and left the remaining cash in hand, amounting to 500*l.*, at a bank, until the money due on some mortgages which were about to be paid off came in, intending them to invest the whole on a mortgage which they were negotiating. Fourteen months after the death of the testatrix, the bank, which up to that time had been in high repute, stopped payment, half of the 500*l.* was lost, and the estate was rendered insufficient for payment of the legacies in full:—Held, that the executors were not responsible for the loss, and that as the assets had been originally sufficient to pay all the legacies in full, the legatees who had been paid were not liable to contribute to the loss, which must fall wholly on the unsatisfied legatees. Fenwick v. Clarke, 4 De G. F. & J. 240; 6 L. T. 393; 10 W. R. 636.

A. at the time of his death had about 3,000*l.* in the hands of his bankers, and his executors paid some money which they received on account of the estate to their account at the same bank, and drew out such sums as they required. About nine months after A.'s death the bankers became bankrupt, having at that time a balance of about 2,000*l.* belonging to the estate in their hands, of which 1,000*l.* was ultimately lost by the bankruptcy. The Master, on a reference thereupon, found "that there was not any purposes of their trust which rendered it necessary for the executors to retain the balance, or any part of it with the bankers:" but the court held that they were not answerable for the loss. Johnson v. Newton, 11 Hare 160; 22 L. J., Ch. 1039; 17 Jur. 825.

A decree in an administration suit directed a contract for the sale of a particular house to be completed, but contained no directions as to the investment or otherwise of the purchase-money. The administratrix, with the knowledge of the solicitor of the testator, and of other persons interested under his will, paid the purchase-money for the house, and other moneys, into a private bank. The bank failed and the moneys were lost:—Held, that the administratrix was not liable for the moneys so lost. Wilks v. Groom, 3 Drew. 584; 25 L. J., Ch. 724; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 681; 4 W. R. 697.

Executors of a testator, who died in 1862, had, in March 1865, a balance of nearly 3,000*l.* at their bankers, who had been the bankers of the testator for twenty years. The estate realised more than 30,000*l.*, and considerable sums were from time to time required to be paid into and out of the account, and the balance was larger than it would otherwise have been in expectation of a mortgage having to be paid off. A loss having resulted from the failure of the bank:—Held, that the executors were not justified in keeping a balance of more than 1,000*l.* and the loss upon the excess above that sum must be borne by them. Astbury v. Beasley, 17 W. R. 638.

An administrator who had deposited trust moneys in a private bank on a separate account current, using ordinary prudence, was held not to be liable for the loss of the moneys through the failure of the bank, although the moneys had been suffered to remain so deposited for three and a half years after the death of the intestate, and for nearly a year and a half after the administrator had carried into chambers in the suit, his accounts showing a large balance against himself. Marcon, In re, Finch v. Marcon, 40 L. J., Ch. 537.

—— Solicitor.]—An administratrix, who had permitted her solicitor to receive dividends of a fund set apart for an infant next of kin, was ordered to account for the dividends, with interest at the rate of 3*l.* per cent. with half yearly rests. Gilroy v. Stephens, 51 L. J., Ch. 834; 46 L. T. 761; 30 W. 745.

A testator died in August 1861, and his executors remitted to their solicitor 80*l.* to obtain probate, and 25*l.* to pay legacy duty. The solicitor became bankrupt in November 1861, and the money was lost. The court allowed the executors the 80*l.* but not the 25*l.*, the latter advance being premature, the legacies not having been paid in 1863. Castle v. Warland, 32 Beav. 660.

—— Misappropriation by Solicitor.]—One of three executors having employed in proving the will the solicitor who was employed by the testatrix in making it, also employed the same solicitor to negotiate for the compromise of a debt due from the estate. The executor and the creditor were both living in London. In June 1872 the solicitor wrote to the executor, informing him that a compromise had been effected of this particular debt for 260*l.*, and of another debt for 50*l.*, and asking for a cheque. The executor on the 4th July sent a cheque for 310*l.* to the solicitor, who paid it in to his own account. The compromise, in fact, had not been effected, and the money was misappropriated; but the executor, having taken no step in the meantime, did not find out the loss until December 1872: —Held, that the 310*l.* ought to be allowed to the executor. Bird, In re, Oriental Commercial Bank v. Savin, L. R. 16 Eq. 203; 28 L. T. 658; 21 W. R. 725.

A., one of two trustees and executors of a will, and resident in London, authorised a person to get in three mortgages (part of the estate). The solicitor forwarded the deeds of conveyance to B., the other trustee, in the country, who executed and returned them. The solicitor received the money and paid it to A. alone who misapplied it:—Held, that B. was liable for the amount. Cowell v. Gatcombe, 27 Beav. 568.

—— Goods of Deceased Stolen from Solicitor.]—A decree having been made for a general account, and payment of a balance against a party who died, and his personal representative having delivered certain goods, part of the effects, to her own solicitor, to be delivered over, is not answerable in the event of his being robbed of them. Tender of the goods not incumbent on her, she would not have been answerable if they had remained in her own possession till the accident. Jones v. Lewis, 2 Ves. Sen. 240.

IV. RIGHTS PECULIAR TO EXECUTORS.

a. LEGACY TO.

In General.]—Presumption that a legacy to a person appointed executor is given to him in that character, though not apparently connected, unless there are circumstances showing that it is intended for him personally. Stackpoole v. Howell, 13 Ves. 417; 9 R. R. 200.

If a legacy is given to a man who is appointed executor, he must prove the will in order to entitle himself to the legacy, though not made a condition by the will; but he may prove at any time. Reed v. Devaynes, 2 Cox, 285; 3 Bro. C. C. 95; 2 R. R. 48.

Deferred Legacy.]—The circumstance of payment being deferred rebuts the presumption that a legacy is given to the legatee in the character of executor. Reeve In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 412; 4 Ch. D. 841; 36 L. T. 906; 25 W. R. 62. Contra, Slaney v. Watney, 35 L. J., Ch. 783; L. R. 2 Eq. 418; 14 L. T. 657; 14 W. R. 818.

Inequality in Gifts.]—A testator, after giving a legacy to his friend and partner P., appoints him one of his executors, and makes other devises and bequests in his favour, so that P. is entitled under the will to much greater benefits than any of the other executors. By a codicil in which P. is described as one of the executors, a further legacy is given to him; these legacies are not given to P. in his character of executor. Cockerell v. Barber, 2 Russ. 585; 1 Sim. 23; 5 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 77; 28 R. R. 181.

A testator bequeathed to A., one of the two persons whom he named in his will as executors, a leasehold house; to B., the other, a legacy of 100*l.*; describing either of them in either gift as "one of my trustees and executors hereinafter named." B. died without having proved the will, but without having renounced or disclaimed: —Held, that the inequality of the subject-matter of the two bequests rebutted the presumption of the legacy being conditional on the executor proving the will; and that B.'s representatives were entitled to the legacy. Jewis v. Lawrence, L. R. 8 Eq. 345.

Savings Bank Deposit—Nomination of Executor of Will.]—Where a testatrix, subsequent to the execution of her will, filled up a nomination in the prescribed form of the amount (being under 100*l.*) due to her by the Post Office Savings Bank at her decease in favour of one of her executors, and there was sufficient evidence to rebut the presumption that such executor should receive such amount as a gift, it was held that he received the same in his capacity of executor, and he was ordered to account for the same accordingly. Read, In re, Turner v. Read, 75 L. T. 295.

Construction of Will—Gift annexed to Office.]—A testatrix gave legacies of 100*l.* each to A., B., and C.; and in a subsequent part of her will she appointed them her executors. In the preceding clauses she made devises and bequests "to her executors thereinafter named, and to her executors and trustees." A. neither proved nor acted: —Held, that he was not entitled to the legacy. Piggott v. Green, 6 Sim. 72.

Testator appointed A. and B. his executors, and after making certain bequests gave them by name legacies of 500*l.*, giving also in the same sentence legacies of the like amount to two other parties; A. and B. renounced:—Held, that they were not entitled to their legacies. Calvert v. Sebbon, 4 Beav. 222.

—— When not so annexed.]—A legacy given to the testator's trustees and executors as a mark of his respect for them:—Held, not revoked by a codicil appointing other trustees in their room, and giving a legacy of equal amount to the newly-appointed trustees and executors in similar language. Burgess v. Burgess, 1 Coll. C. C. 367; 8 Jur. 660.

Upon the construction of a will:—Held, that a legacy was given to an executor not in his character of executor, and that he did not lose the legacy by not proving and not acting under the will. Compton v. Bloxam, 2 Coll. C. C. 201; 14 L. J., Ch. 380; 9 Jur. 935.

Testator named two persons as executors, with legacy of 50*l.* each, conditioned on their taking upon themselves the trusts; and then says, "I give to my cousin, T. K., 50*l.*, whom I appoint joint executor"; and also to T. K.'s sisters 50*l.* each:—Held, legacy to T. K. was not annexed to and depending upon his taking the office. Dix v. Reid, 1 Sim. & S. 237.

A testator, by a codicil, gave to M. 200*l.*, and named him joint executor with the executors in the will; and in case the testator's son should die lunatic, then he gave 200*l.* to the said M.:—Held, that the latter gift was not annexed to the office, and that M. took, though he did not prove the will. Wildes v. Davies, 1 Sm. & G. 475; 22 L. J., Ch. 495; 1 W. R. 253.

A legacy was given to a party who was appointed an executor as follows: "I give to my friend, J. S., banker's clerk, and one of the executors of this my will, 50*l.*" J. S. renounced probate:—Held, that the legacy was not conditional on the acceptance of the executorship. Dendy, In re, 3 De G. F. & J. 350; 31 L. J., Ch. 184; 5 L. T. 514; 10 W. R. 115.

A testator appointed his friend A. an executor of his will, and gave him 1,000*l.* as a remembrance:—Held, that the legacy was not conditional on acceptance of the office of executor. Bubb v. Yelverton, L. R. 13 Eq. 131; 20 W. R. 164.

A testator appointed A. and B. his executors, and in a subsequent part of his will, with another legacy, gave to each of them 100*l.*, and also, in certain events, a share of his residuary estate, and appointed B., on a certain contingency happening, guardian of his daughter. B. renounced probate, but was willing to act as guardian, if the contingency happened:—Held, that the legacy was not annexed to the office of executor, and that B. was entitled to the legacy. Brand v. Chaddock, 24 L. T. 347; 19 W. R. 378.

A testator, having bequeathed 2,000*l.* to G., and appointed him executor and trustee, made a codicil whereby he revoked his appointment as executor and trustee, and nominated T. in his stead, and directed that the will, and a codicil previously executed, should be received and construed "as if the name of T. had been inserted in the place and stead of G.":—Held, that the legacies were not revoked, it appearing on the construction of the will and codicil that they were not gifts to G. virtute officii. Bunbury, In re, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 408.

—— Right of Substituted Executor.]—A testator, appointed A. B. and C. D. trustees and executors of his will. By a codicil he bequeathed to each of the trustees named in his will the sum of 5,000*l.* on condition that he accepted the trusts thereof. By a subsequent codicil he revoked all that part of his will which related to C. D., and requested E. F., "to undertake and fulfil the same purposes and intentions, and on the same conditions, for the effecting of which he had appointed the said C. D." By a subsequent codicil he revoked the appointment of A. B. and C. D. as trustees and executors, and all legacies to them, and he nominated E. F. executor and trustee thereof:—Held, that E. F. was entitled to the legacy of 5,000*l.* Radburn v. Jerris, 3 Beav. 450.

Upon the construction of a will and codicil:—Held, that a substituted executor was not entitled to a legacy of 100*l.* given by the will to the original executor for his trouble in the execution of it. Finch v. Secker, 1 De G. & Sm. 34; 11 Jur. 34.

A testatrix, by her will, gave to A., B., and C. distinct legacies, and appointed A. and B. executors, and gave "to her executors A. and B." her residuary estate. By a codicil she appointed C. executor and trustee of her will, "as if his name had been inserted therein as a trustee and executor," and gave C. a legacy for his trouble, "in addition to the benefit he derived under her will," and she declared that her trust estate should vest in A., and B. and C., and confirmed her will in all other respects. C. claimed one-third of the residue, but the court held that it was divisible between A. and B. Hillersdon v. Grove, 21 Beav. 518.

—— Gift void for Uncertainty.]—A request by a testator that a handsome gratuity should be given to each of his executors is void for uncertainty. Jubber v. Jubber, 9 Sim. 503.

What necessary to entitle—Proving Will.]—If a legacy is given to a man, who is appointed executor, he must prove the will in order to entitle himself to the legacy, though not made a condition by the will; but he may prove at any time. Reed v. Devaynes, 2 Cox, 285; 3 Bro. C. C. 95; 2 R. R. 48.

One of two executors, to whom a legacy was bequeathed, renounced in 1853, but afterwards, in 1859, he retracted and proved the will. An administration suit was subsequently instituted against him as an executor, and it appearing that the estate had not been administered when the executor proved:—Held, entitled to his legacy, but with interest only from the time of proving. Angermann v. Ford, 29 Beav. 349; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 668; 4 L. T. 230; 9 W. R. 512.

An executor who proves the will, but not with an intention of really acting in the execution of it, is not entitled to his legacy. Harford v. Browning, 1 Cox, 302.

—— Proof prevented by Age or Sickness.]—An aged executor, who was incapable by bodily and mental infirmity of proving the will:—Held, not entitled to a legacy given by the testator's will to him as executor. Hanbury v. Spooner, 5 Beav. 630; 12 L. J., Ch. 434.

A legacy to an executor for his trouble. He was prevented by illness from proving the will, and died without having done so:—Held, that the legacy failed. Hawkins, In re, 33 Beav. 570; 34 L. J., Ch. 80; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 922; 10 L. T. 557; 12 W. R. 945.

—— Acting without Proving.]—An executor, to whom a legacy was left for his trouble, being in Australia at the death of the testator, sent home a power of attorney, under which another person administered the estate, and under which the rents of the real estate were received. The executor died without proving the will:—Held, that the executor had sufficiently shown his intention to act under the trusts of the will to entitle his representatives to the legacy. Lewis

v. Mathews, 38 L. J., Ch. 510; L. R. 8 Eq. 277; 20 L. T. 905; 17 W. R. 841.

An executor, who died before probate, was held entitled to a legacy given for his care and loss of time in the execution of the trusts of the will, by having concurred with the other executors in directions for the funeral, and in paying some small sums on that occasion, Quære, whether an executor was entitled to a legacy in that character, who died at a distance without manifesting any intention to accept the trust, or without knowing it. Harrison v. Rowley, 4 Ves. 212: 4 R. R. 199.

Trustee dying nineteen months after the testatrix, without having acted, held entitled to a legacy given as a token of regard, and a recompense for his trouble; no refusal nor neglect to act where necessary appearing. Brydges v. Wotton, 1 Ves. & B. 134: 12 R. R. 200.

When a period of payment is appointed, the subsequent failure or breach even, of an express condition, annexed to a legacy, cannot affect the right to receive. Ib.

—— Refusal to Act.]—Legacy to a man as executor is forfeited by his refusal to act. Abbot v. Massie, 3 Ves. 148; 3 R. R. 79. S. P., Freeman v. Fairlie, 3 Mer. 24, 31; 17 R. R. 7.

For whose benefit the Gift Lapses.]—Devise to executors, as an encouragement to accept the trust, of 100*l.* a-piece, and 12*l.* for mourning, and a ring and 10*l.* a-piece per annum for their trouble; one refuses, yet he shall have his mourning and ring, but not the 100*l.* legacy, and the 10*l.* a year, which, in such case, shall not go to the acting executors, but sink into the estate. Humberston v. Humberston, 1 P. W. 333.

A bequest "to my two executors, whom I appoint to this purpose (i.e., the performance of trusts of the will, in trust to see the above fulfilled), I bequeath ten guineas, together with all the rest and residue of my estate, whether real or personal, wherever deposited, after my funeral expenses, &c., are paid by them, my executors": —Held, that legacies lapsed fall into the general residue, and that one executor having died in the lifetime of the testator, the other executor, though he died shortly after the testator, and had done no act manifesting an intention to take upon himself the excution of the will, was entitled to the whole of such general residue. Parsons v. Saffery, 9 Price 578; 23 R. R. 724.

A testator gave certain property, the produce of a mixed fund, in certain events, to A., B., C., and D. (whom he appointed his executors), to be divided betwixt them in equal proportions and to their heirs for ever, and in addition to these four he appointed two others his executors, and declared that, if any of those parties refused to act as executor, he annulled the bequest to him. D. declined to prove:—Held, that his share lapsed for the benefit of the next of kin, and did not belong to A., B., and C. Barber v. Barber, 3 Myl. & C. 688; 8 L. J., Ch. 36; 2 Jur. 1029.

Abatement.]—When a legacy is given to an executor generally, or for his care and pains, it makes no difference; for if there be a deficiency of assets, he must abate in proportion with other legatees. Anon, 2 Atk. 171. S. P., Fretwell v. Stacey, 2 Vern. 434. See also Att.-Gen. v. Robins, 2 P. W. 25; Heron v. Heron, 2 Atk. 162.

A bequest of an annuity to an executor, for his trouble in the conduct and management of the testator's affairs, has no priority over other legacies, in case of a deficiency, and it must abate. Duncan v. Watts, 16 Beav. 204. S. P., Debney v. Eckett, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 805.

Retainer.]—On motion by plaintiffs (residuary legatees), that the executor, who was one of the pecuniary legatees under the will, should pay into court the amount admitted by his answer: —Held, that the executor was not entitled to retain the amount of his legacy before the accounts had been taken. Harding v. Harding, 16 L. J., Ch. 179.

b. Right to Residue.

Before 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 40—In General.]—At law the appointment of executor is a gift of everything undisposed of by will. Urquhart v. King, 7 Ves. 225.

Strange, M. R., held, that executor, as such, takes all such as is not disposed of, whether by lapse or otherwise, unless a contrary intent is clearly shewn, calling him a "legal residuary legatee." Wilson v. Irat, 2 Ves. Sen. 166.

Residue, if nothing given to them, and no intention to the contrary, belongs to executors. Wilson v. Wombwell, Dick. 477.

There is an old-established difference between an executor and trustee; a trustee has a mere legal right only, but an executor has more; for if there is a surplus he has a beneficial interest. Mabank v. Metcalf, 3 Atk. 96.

An executor or residuary legatee stands in the same light as to personalty, as an heir does to the realty, so as to take all that falls in beyond the intent of the testator, as by operation of law. Marlborough (Duke) v. Godolphin (Lord), 2 Ves. Sen. 74.

The rule that naming an executor is a gift to him of all the estate not otherwise disposed of, can only rationally be applied to cases in which the testament is perfect. Browne v. M'Guire, Beat. 366.

It is sufficient to exclude the executor, as such taking beneficially, that the testator professes to dispose of the whole of his property, although by the construction of his will he has not in fact done so. Oldham v. Carleton, 2 Cox, 399.

When executors are made trustees, they can take nothing for their own benefit unless it be particularly given to them; nor, as they have no ownership, can they alter the interest of the cestui que trust. Read v. Snell, 2 Atk. 643.

Legacy to an executor, who is also a trustee, excludes him from the beneficial interest in the residue, unless expressly given. Bull v. Kingston, 1 Mer. 314. S. P., Seley v. Wood, 10 Ves. 71.

Executors appointed expressly in trust, take the residue undisposed of, not beneficially, but in trust for the next of kin. Pratt v. Sladden, 14 Ves. 198. S. P., Powell v. Marett, 1 Sm. & G. 381; 22 L. J., Ch. 408; 17 Jur. 449; 1 W. R. 243.

Personal estate bequeathed to trustees upon trust; the executors, one of whom was also one of the trustees not entitled beneficially, in default of the declaration of trust. Milnes v. Slater, 8 Ves. 295; 7 R. R. 48.

One of the executors being a trustee of the residue, all are trustees. White v. Evans, 4 Ves. 21. S. P., Sadler v. Turner, 8 Ves. 617. Griffiths v. Hamilton, 12 Ves. 308.

No instance of an issue upon the question between executor and next of kin as to the residue. Walton v. Walton, 14 Ves. 323.

—— Husband Sole Executor.]—Where a husband is left sole executor he is entitled to the surplus, and it shall not be construed a resulting trust. Partridge v. Powlet, 1 Atk. 466.

—— Legacy to the Next of Kin.]—A legacy to the next of kin does not exclude him from taking the residue. Att.-Gen. v. Parkin, Ambl. 568. S. P., North (Lord) v. Purdon, 2 Ves. Sen. 495; Seley v. Wood, 10 Ves. 71; Griffiths v. Hamilton, 12 Ves. 310; Andrew v. Clark, 2 Ves. Sen. 162.

—— Legacy to Heir-at-Law.]—One devises lands to his executors (who are not relations) to sell for the best price, and to pay his debts, legacies, and funeral, so far as the same will extend, and gives legacies to his heirs-at-law, and 100*l.* to the children of one of his executors, but nothing to his executors; in such case the executors shall be but trustees for the heirs-at-law after debts paid. Starkey v. Brooks, 1 P. W. 390.

—— Gift to Wife of Executor.]—Under the law, prior to the 1 Will. 4, c. 40, the gift of a legacy to the wife of the executor did not prevent his taking the undisposed of residue beneficially. Fruer v. Bouquet, 21 Beav. 33. S. P., Wilson v. Irat, 2 Ves. Sen. 166.

—— Gift to Daughter of Executor.]—Legacy to the daughter, &c., of an executor is not to be deemed a legacy to him, so as to prevent his taking the surplus, merely for that reason. Cloyne (Bishop) v. Young, 2 Ves. Sen. 91.

—— Non-Proving Executor.]—If an executor is also residuary legatee he is entitled to the residue, although he does not prove the will. Griffiths v. Pruen, 11 Sim. 202.

In no case has the gift of a residue to an executor been lost by his refusal to prove. Christian v. Devereux, 12 Sim. 264. S. P., Parsons v. Saffery, 9 Price, 578; 23 R. R. 724.

—— What is Residue.]—The general residue of personal property comprehends everything not otherwise effectually disposed of; and no difference whether a legacy falls into it by lapse, or as void at law; the next of kin, therefore, excluded by an express bequest of the residue. Dawson v. Clark, 15 Ves. 409. Affirmed, 18 Ves. 247; 11 R. R. 188. S. P., Parsons v. Saffery, 9 Pri. 578; 23 R. R. 724.

—— Legacy to Sole Executor.]—Executor is entitled to an unbequeathed residue, unless there is a strong and violent presumption against him; a legacy to him affords such presumption; but parol evidence of the intention is admissible to rebut that, and is not to be confined to the time of making the will, but it must be to shew the intention at that time only. Residue unbequeathed, decreed to the executor, who was a legatee upon the intention appearing in the will, and by parol evidence. Clennell v. Lewthwaite, 2 Ves. J. 465. Affirmed Id. 644; 2 R. R. 285. S. P., Rutland (Duke) v. Rutland (Duchess), 2 P. W. 209. Martin v. Rebow, 1 Bro. C. C. 154. Lowson v. Copeland, 2 Bro. C. C. 156. Holford v. Wood, 4 Ves. 76. Abbott v. Abbott, 6 Ves. 343.

—— Legacy to Wife Executrix.]—Wife excluded from taking the undisposed residue as executrix, by having a legacy. Lake v. Lake, Ambl. 127. S. P., Gobsall v. Sounden, 2 Eq. Abr. 445, pl. 58. But see Lawson v. Lawson, 4 Bro. P. C. 21.

—— Legacy for Care and Trouble.]—An executor cannot take the residue of a testator's property for his own benefit, where the will contains a specific bequest to him for his care and trouble. Whitaker v. Tatham, 7 Bing. 628; 5 M. & P. 628; 9 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 189. S. P., Davers v. Dewes, 3 P. W. 43.

—— Legacy to one or more of Several Executors.]—Where a legacy is left to one of two executors, neither of them is thereby excluded from the surplus of the personal estate undisposed of. And though there have been a variety of opinions, and some different determinations, touching the residue of personal estates not expressly bequeathed by will, yet it has never been carried so far as to exclude two executors by reason of a legacy given only to one of them; decree affirmed. Mason v. Hawkins, 4 Bro. P. C. 7. S. P., Cloyne (Bishop) v. Young, 2 Ves. Sen. 91.

Executors entitled to the residue undisposed of; no inference against their legal right by any interest under the will, one only having a legacy; and, though called trustees as to specific trusts imposed upon them, distinct from their appointment as executors, no clear intention to make them trustees of the residue, which requires a strong and violent, though not irresistible, presumption. Pratt v. Sladden, 14 Ves. 193.

Legacies of a diamond ring to one, and of 200*l.* each to some of the others for mourning rings, as a token of affection, &c., would not make the executors trustees. Sadler v. Turner, 8 Ves. 617.

Executors held beneficially entitled, two of them only having a legacy, expressed to be a testimony of regard, and immediately following a particular trust imposed upon them. Griffiths v. Hamilton, 12 Ves. 298.

—— Equal Legacies to Executors.]—Executors having equal legacies for care, &c., are trustees of residue for next of kin. Gibbs v. Rumsey, 2 Ves. & B. 294; 13 R. R. 88. S. P., Southouse v. Bate, 2 Ves. & B. 396. King v. Denison, 1 Ves. & B. 277; 12 R. R. 227. Carey v. Goodinge, 3 Bro. C. C. 110. Nisbett v. Murray, 5 Ves. 149; 5 R. R. 6. Cordell v. Noden, 2 Vern. 148; Pre. Ch. 12.

Equal legacies to two executors makes them trustees for residue undisposed of, notwithstanding inequality as to the real estate. So, though legacies are given by a subsequent instrument. Muckleston v. Brown, 6 Ves. 64; 5 R. R. 211.

Testator, after bequeathing to A. and B. legacies of stock unequal in amount, and giving several legacies to public charities, requests the said A. and B. to be his executors, and gives them as such one hundred guineas each; he then orders his books, jewels, plate, and household furniture to be sold, and after desiring mourning to be provided for his servants, and five guineas each to be given to several persons named in the will, and to his executors for a ring as a token of remembrance, concludes his will in the following manner: "In case there is any money remaining, I should wish it to be given in private charity": —Held, that the executors having, as executors, equal legacies, could not take beneficially, and that the next of kin were therefore entitled to the general residue of the testator's personal estate, including what was comprehended in the residuary clause. Ommanney v. Butcher, Turn. & R. 260; 24 R. R. 42.

A testator gives to two persons, successively for their lives, his house and garden, with the furniture, and an income of 300*l.* a year to maintain it; and he directs that, at the death of the survivor, the whole of the premises shall become the property of the executors:—Held, that this bequest will not exclude the executors from taking the beneficial interest in the residue. Gascoigne v. Lynde, 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 54.

A testator gave several legacies of considerable amount to his children, to be paid out of his real and personal estate; and he gave 10*l.* each to his two executors, in case they accepted and acted in the executorship of his will. He then made various specific bequests: "and as to the rest, residue, and remainder of his real and personal estate, not thereinbefore otherwise disposed of," he gave, devised, and bequeathed the same to A. B. and C. D. and made them sole executors of his will. By a codicil, he devised to his executors a particular house, not before mentioned, in trust for sale, and the proceeds to be divided between all his children:—Held, that the facts of the executors having equal legacies given them, and taking the residue in joint tenancy, though sufficient to have prevented them from taking the residuary personal estate beneficially by virtue of their office, were insufficient to prevent the operation of the clear gift to them as individuals, and that they took the residue under the will beneficially. Henshaw, In re, 34 L. J., Ch. 98; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 837; 11 L. T. 17; 12 W. R. 1139.

—— Unequal Legacies.]—Executors having legacies under the will held not to be precluded from taking property undisposed of by the will to their own use, the legacies being unequal in amount. Russell v. Clowes, 2 Coll. C. C. 648; 10 Jur. 732. S. P., Bowker v. Hunter, 1 Bro. C. C. 328. Oliver v. Frewen, 1 Bro. C. C. 590. Griffiths v. Hamilton, 12 Ves. 309. Rawlings v. Jennings, 13 Ves. 39; 9 R. R. 137.

—— Parol Evidence to rebut Presumption.]—Courts of law and equity admit parol evidence in two cases only,—to ascertain the person, where there are two persons the same name; and in resulting trusts, relating to personal estate, as where an executor has a small legacy, and the next of kin claim the residue, there parol proof is admitted to ascertain who shall have it. Ulrich v. Lichfield, 2 Atk. 372.

Executor having a legacy expressly for his care, etc., cannot produce evidence of intention that he should take the residue beneficially. Langham v. Sanford, 17 Ves. 435. Affirmed 19 Ves. 641; 2 Mer. 6.

One executor having a legacy for his trouble, parol evidence was admitted on behalf of his co-executrix, an infant, to rebut the presumption for next of kin, and she was held entitled to the residue undisposed of. Williams v. Jones, 10 Ves. 77.

One makes a will and an executor, and gives a legacy of 500*l.* to the executor, but makes no disposition of the surplus, parol evidence of the intention and declaration of the testator touching the surplus admitted. Rutland (Duke) v. Rutland (Duchess), 2 P. W. 209.

Parol evidence admitted in favour of the legal title of the executor to the residue, unless plainly and unequivocally declared a trustee; so for a devisee for a particular purpose against an implied trust for the heir. Walton v. Walton, 14 Ves. 322.

A paper, proved as a will, reciting the marriage articles of the testator's daughter with A. confirming those articles, and directing that all the testator's property and effects shall be vested in A., preferable to any executor or administrator, upon and after the testator's decease, for all and every the purposes of his said agreement, expressed or intended. The probate obtained by A. as executor, held conclusive, and he was held not a trustee for the next of kin, upon parol evidence of declarations subsequent to the will. Ib. And see Docksey v. Docksey, 3 Bro. P. C. 39. Buckley v. Littlebury, 3 Bro. P. C. 43. Beaufort (Duke) v. Granville (Lady), 3 Bro. P. C. 37. Clennell v. Lewthwaite, 2 Ves. J. 465. Affirmed Id. 644; 2 R. R. 285; White v. Evans, 4 Ves. 22.

Executor, taking a contingent reversionary interest under the will, not precluded from giving evidence of the intention that he should have the residue beneficially, nothing upon the face of the will indicating that he was to take office merely. Lynn v. Bearer, Turn. & R. 63; 23 R. R. 185. S. P., Oldman v. Slater, 3 Sim. 84.

Claiming the residue as executor is sufficient to let in parol evidence in support of the legal title, without alleging a title by the effect of the parol evidence. Id. 66.

The motives which might influence the testator in favour of the executor are to be considered in determining whether the executor takes the residue beneficially. Id. 68.

A direction in will "to keep accounts," held to afford presumption that executrix was not to take beneficially; but parol evidence is admissible to explain away this uncertainty. Gladding v. Yapp, 5 Madd. 56; 21 R. R. 277.

Executor having general and specific legacies, not expressly for his care, etc., was not precluded from giving evidence of the intention that he should have the residue beneficially, by an exception of plate out of furniture bequeathed to him, and by a bequest to him of a contract for a leasehold house, subsequent to the appointment of executor; the effect being only that he should not take the plate under that bequest of furniture, and a future disposition of the residue might have been contemplated. Upon the evidence raising no direct intention from equivocal declarations, with an intention to make an express residuary disposition, the executor declared a trustee of the residue for the next of kin. Langham v. Sanford, 17 Ves. 435. Affirmed 19 Ves. 641; 2 Mer. 6.

The parol evidence need not to be confined to the time of making the will, but it must be to shew the intention at that time only. Residue unbequeathed, decreed to the executor, who was a legatee upon the intention appearing in the will, and by parol evidence. Clennell v. Lewthwaite, 2 Ves. J. 465. Affirmed Id. 644; 2 R. R. 285.

Testator manifesting an intention to dispose of the residue, but leaving it inchoate, inasmuch as he did not name the residuary legatee, it was held that the executors were not entitled to the surplus. Where parol evidence can be read, to shew no resulting trust, like evidence may be read contra, to disprove the implication from the former. Cloyne (Bishop) v. Young, 2 Ves. Sen. 91.

Testatrix, who made her will on a printed form, after giving certain legacies, gave all her estate real and personal "unto to and for own use and benefit absolutely," and then appointed C. W. C. to pay all her debts, &c., and to be executor of her will. The chief clerk certified that the testatrix was illegitimate, and that she left no issue or next of kin. The Crown and the executor claimed the residue, and the executor tendered evidence to prove that the intention of the testatrix was, that he should take the residue, if any, for his own benefit:—Held, that, under the peculiar circumstances, parol evidence was admissible to rebut the presumption against the executor arising from the blanks in the will, and that the executor, subject to the payment of costs, was entitled for his own benefit to what should remain. Bacon's Will, In re, Camp v. Cox, 55 L. J., Ch. 368; 31 Ch. D. 460; 54 L. T. 150; 34 W. R. 319.

—— On the Construction of the Will.]—Executors, though not having legacies, held trustees for next of kin of residue. Urquhart v. King, 7 Ves. 225.

Where there appears "a plain implication or strong presumption" that the testator, by naming an executor, meant only to give the office of executor, and not the beneficial interest, the person named shall be considered a trustee for the next of kin of the undisposed surplus. Ellcock v. Mapp, 3 H. L. Cas. 492. Affirming 2 Ph. 793; 18 L. J., Ch. 217; 13 Jur. 290.

A testator devised "all my estate, both real and personal, to E. E., his executors, administrators, and assigns, to and for the several uses, intents, and purposes following, that is to say": and then, after specifying various objects of his bounty, appointed "the said E. E. executor of this my last will and testament." The trusts of the will did not exhaust the estate:—Held, affirming a decree of Lord Cottenham, that E. E. did not become entitled, for his own benefit, to the personal estate undisposed of, but was a trustee thereof for the widow and next of kin of the testator, according to the Statute of Distributions. The case of Dawson v. Clark (18 Ves. 247; 11 R. R. 188) commented on, and Lord Eldon's opinions adopted. Ib.

Where a man gives his wife a legacy of 300*l.*, which he declares to be her own money, and makes her executrix, but makes no disposition of the residue of his estate, this legacy shall not exclude her from being entitled to such residue. Both the decrees of the Lord Chancellor reversed. Lawson v. Lawson, 4 Bro. P. C. 21.

Where lands are devised to the executors to be sold for several purposes, and the surplus is expressly devised to them, there can be no resulting trust for the benefit of the heir. Dormer v. Bertie, Pre. Ch. 94.

Bequest of annuities for life, and when dead to return to executors:—Held, executors were beneficially entitled. Selby v. Wood, 10 Ves. 71.

A testatrix by her will gave the residue of her estate to A. B., whom she appointed her sole executor, and by a codicil after giving several legacies she added, "I direct that all my goods and chattels real and personal, except as before mentioned, shall go to my executor to be assets in his hands towards execution of the codicil to my will, and of the surplus, if any, I direct him to apply the whole in charity." The next of kin held to have no claim. Henniker v. Henniker, 17 L. J., Ch. 120; 12 Jur. 618.

One makes his wife his sole heiress and executrix of all his real and personal estate, to sell and dispose thereof at her pleasure to pay his debts and legacies, and gives his brother (who was his next of kin and heir) 5*l.*; the wife has the residue to her own use, and not as a trustee. Rogers v. Rogers, 3 P. W. 193; Sel. Ch. Ca. 81; Cas. t. Talb. 269.

By will testator nominated his wife his executrix, "thereby bequeathing to her all the property of whatever description or sort that I may die possessed," etc.:—Held, she is entitled, though not as executrix, to all his property, that such a will could pass. Noel v. Hoy, 5 Madd. 38; 21 R. R. 271.

Testator, after reciting that his property consisted of a house at C—— (which was freehold) and of mortgages, etc., directed the house to be sold, and then gave several pecuniary legacies, and amongst them 300*l.* to G. and 100*l.* to P., whom he appointed his executors. The will concluded thus: "And to Mr. G., who is likewise my executor, any sum then appearing after the contents of this my will are fully complied with and fulfilled." G. died the day after the testator, without having proved the will:—Held, in a suit by his executors against the testator's heir and next of kin, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the residue of the testator's estate, including the proceeds of the house. If an executor is also the residuary legatee he is entitled to the residue, although he does not prove the will. Griffiths v. Pruen, 11 Sim. 202.

Testator bequeathed his residuary estate to A., the executor and trustee of his will, with a gift over in case of the death of A., so that he might not be enabled to perform the duties thereby required of him. A. proved the will, but died before he had fully performed the trusts of it:—Held, that by merely proving the will he entitled himself to the residue absolutely. Hollingsworth v. Grasatt, 15 Sim. 52; 9 Jur. 932.

A testator beginning his will by expressing an intention to give the bulk of his property to two of his sisters, gave them only a life interest in the greater part of it; and after giving legacies to others of his sisters, he expressed his wish that A., and the testator's servant B., should be his executors, and that B. should live with his two sisters and take care of them and their property; and by a codicil he directed that the interest of 300*l.* should be paid to B., half-yearly, as wages, for taking care of his two sisters; and that, after the death of B. and his two sisters, the 300*l.* should be paid to P.:—Held, that the legacy given to B. by the codicil, was not a legacy given for her care and trouble, so as to convert her into a trustee of the residue for the next of kin, but that A. and B., in their character of executors, took the residue beneficially; that after the death of the two sisters, though the services for which the legacy was given as wages could no longer be performed, B. would still be entitled to the interest of the 300*l.* during her life. Dawson v. Thorne, 3 Russ. 235.

A testatrix by her will bequeathed all her personal estate to C., whom she appointed one of her executors, for her own use and benefit for ever, trusting and wholly confiding in his honour, that he would act in strict conformity with her wishes. Afterwards, on the same day, she executed a testamentary paper, which contained a list of the number of persons by name, and among others, the name of the person who was her sole next of kin, with the several sums to be given them respectively, and concluded with a declaration that such was the testatrix's wish:—Held, upon appeal, that C. took the personal estate for his own use absolutely, subject only to the payment of the legacies specified in the testamentary paper, and of three other sums, which C. by his answer admitted that the testatrix had directed him, and which he submitted to pay. Wood v. Cox, 2 Myl. & C. 684; 6 L. J., Ch. 366; 1 Jur. 720.

A gift of residuary real and personal estate to the person appointed executor, and who was a stranger to the testator, "to enable him to carry into effect the purposes of this my will": —Held, that these words did not express the motive of the gift, but only what the executor was bound to do; and, therefore, that he was not entitled beneficially, but was trustee for the heir of the surplus real estate. Barrs v. Fewkes, 2 Hem. & M. 60; 33 L. J., Ch. 484; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 466; 10 L. T. 232; 12 W. R. 666.

Testator, revoking all wills and codicils, declared that to be his codicil by which he directs that the whole of his property "shall pass by this my codicil, according to law," save and except some legacies mentioned; and appointed his brother sole executor, requesting him to make such little arrangements as he has reason to think the testator should wish. The executor is a trustee for the next of kin and widow, according to the Statute of Distribution. Cranley (Lord) v. Hale, 14 Ves. 307.

Construction of an obscure will; executors not beneficially entitled. Munyard v. New, 3 Swan. 119.

Upon the construction of a will:—Held, that the executors were not entitled to a beneficial interest in the testator's residuary personal estate. Andrew v. Andrew, 1 Coll. C. C. 686.

Where there is no gift of the undisposed-of residue, a testator cannot by negative words exclude one of his next of kin from participating in it. Johnson v. Johnson, 4 Beav. 318. Contra, Brasbridge v. Woodroffe, 2 Atk. 69.

—— Imperfect Disposition.]—If property is given to executors as trustees generally, and the beneficial interest is only partially disposed of by the will, the executors are trustees of so much of the beneficial interest as is not disposed of, either for the next of kin, or for the heir, according to the nature of the property. Madgin v. Lumley, 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 236.

Testatrix by will appointed an executor, and gave him a legacy; afterwards, by a testamentary paper, she directed the residue to be disposed of according to the private instructions to him; and having by a subsequent codicil added another executor, died without giving any instructions; the executors are trustees of the residue of the next of kin. Mordaunt v. Hussey, 4 Ves. 117.

Bequest of various particulars, comprising all the testator's personal estates, to his wife for life; then, after specifically disposing of and charging with legacies certain parts after the death of his wife, he appointed her executrix, she paying debts and funeral expenses:—Held, a resulting trust as to the residue, there being no further disposition and no evidence. Dicks v. Lambert, 4 Ves. 725; 4 Bro. C. C. 326.

If a testator means to create a trust, and the trust be ineffectually created, or fails, the next of kin take. Ommanney v. Butcher, Turn. & R. 260; 24 R. R. 42.

Residue to trustees, on trust for purposes too general for court to execute, next of kin shall take. Vezey v. Jamson, 1 Sim. & S. 69.

Testator appoints A. and B. his executors, together with his wife, "hoping they will be so good, out of respect to his wife, to accept the office"; and as to what worldly property he had, "I dispose of the same in the manner following": the testator then gave several specific and pecuniary legacies, but made no disposition of the residue:—Held, that the intention was clearly expressed by the clause requesting the executors to accept the office, followed by the declaration as to his disposal of his own property, that the executors should not take the residue beneficially. Giraud v. Hanbury, 3 Mer. 150.

Testator by will, without date, signature, or attestation, after giving several legacies, bequeathed unequal legacies to two persons, requesting them to see his will executed, leaving the residue undisposed of; probate afterwards granted to those persons as executors by implication. They are trustees of the residue for the next of kin, and take nothing beyond the legacies given them as compensation for their trouble in seeing the will executed. For the will being incomplete, afforded intrinsic evidence that the testator had not done all he intended in the way of testamentary disposition; therefore, the operation of the will was confined to that portion of the assets specifically bequeathed, and that portion, of which casualty prevented the disposition, was left to the rules of distribution, as in case of pure intestacy. Browne v. M'Guire, Beat. 358.

Construction of a will with this residuary clause, "all the remainder of my different bequests" to trustees for charitable purposes, and any thing not specified, "I commit to the discretion of my executors," as passing the general residue by the former words to the charity, not by the latter to the executors, who would not, under those words, have been trustees for the next of kin. Paice v. Canterbury (Archbishop), 14 Ves. 364.

Bequest to executors in trust not declared, or failing, is a trust for the next of kin. Id. 378.

If a trust is imposed, the trustees cannot take beneficially, though the trust may be too indefinite for execution. Gibbs v. Rumsey, 2 Ves. & B. 294; 13 R. R. 88.

Residuary bequest to trustees and executors, describing both by their character and names, to be disposed of to such person and persons, and in such manner and form, and in such sum and sums of money as they in their discretion shall think proper and expedient, an absolute interest to them beneficially; or an absolute power of appointment, excluding the next of kin and the heir, as to the produce of real estate. Ib.

Residuary bequest cancelled by striking through with a pencil all the general description, with notes in pencil in the margin, indicating alteration, and a different disposition of certain articles, a resulting trust for the next of kin. Mence v. Mence, 18 Ves. 348.

Testator, after devising real estates to his daughters L. and P., directed J. C. to pay to his grand-daughter M. C. the interest of 400*l.* for life, and after her decease to her heirs; and if she should have no issue, equally between his daughters L. and P. "And I appoint the said J. C. to be the whole and sole executor of my will; and I appoint my said daughters, L. and P., executrixes of my will":—Held, they could not after claiming in their answer as next of kin, now claim the residue as executors. Green v. Chaloner, 1 Jur. 132.

Bequest by a testator of 50*l.* per annum to his executor, to be paid for the keep of a mare, with a direction that the executor should consider himself bound in honour to fulfil this wish, and see that she be well provided for:—Held, that the trust in favour of the mare ought to be performed, and that the executor was entitled to the surplus not required for the mare's keep. Pettingall v. Pettingall, 11 L. J., Ch. 176.

—— Residuary Gift — Lapse.] — Residuary legatee dying in the life of testator, executor a trustee of residue for next of kin, though no legacy to them, except 10*l.* to one for mourning. Bennet v. Batchelor, 1 Ves. J. 63; 3 Bro. C. C. 28.

—— Increase of Value after Will.]—A. B. bequeathed dividends of property in funds to C. D. for life, and directed that after his decease principal should be divided amongst his children in manner after mentioned. He then gave children certain sums of money which would have exhausted the whole funded property at date of will. Between that time and A. B.'s death, that property greatly increased:—Held, executors entitled to surplus as undisposed of. Haynes v. Littlefear, 1 Sim. & S. 496; 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 13.

—— Blanks.]—Bequest of residue, to go over in a particular event (which took place) to —— (leaving a blank). The executors excluded by such inchoate gift, and the next of kin entitled. Next of kin are not excluded from taking the residue by a gift to them of legacies, &c. North (Lord) v. Purdon, 2 Ves. Sen. 495. S. P., Nourse v. Finch, 1 Ves. J. 344.

Blank space left between last line of a will and signature raises no presumption of intent to dispose of residue against legal right of executor. White v. Williams, 3 Ves. & B. 72; G. Coop. 58.

—— Direction to keep Accounts.]—A direction in will "to keep accounts," held to afford presumption that executrix was not to take beneficially; but parol evidence is admissible to explain away this uncertainty. Gladding v. Yapp, 5 Madd. 56; 21 R. R. 277.

—— Appointment of Partnership as Executors.]—A partnership in London being appointed, not individually, but as a firm, executors and guardians claimed the residue undisposed of, in exclusion of persons appointed attorneys and executors in India; decreed a trust for the next of kin; and it was referred to the Master to appoint a guardian. De Mazar v. Pybus, 4 Ves. 644.

—— Appointment "to carry out Will," &c.]—A gift of residuary real and personal estate to the person appointed executor, and who was a stranger to the testator, "to enable him to carry into effect the purposes of this my will":—Held, that these words did not express the motive of the gift, but only what the executor was bound to do; and, therefore, that he was not entitled beneficially, but was trustee for the heir of the surplus real estate. Barrs v. Fewkes, 2 Hem. & M. 60; 33 L. J., Ch. 484; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 466; 10 L. T. 232; 12 W. R. 666.

A testatrix appointed A. B. her executor, to see that her will was put in force. The executor is a trustee for the next of kin. Braddon v. Farrand, 4 Russ. 87; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 35.

A testator appoints A. and B. his executors "for the just and due performance of his last will and testament":—Held, that these words will not convert the executors into trustees of the residue, for the testator's next of kin. Gascoigne v. Lynde, 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 54.

—— Investment, Reimbursement and other Trustee Clauses.] — Testatrix by will made defendants trustees, and gave them legacies by codicil; she made them executors, and ordered them to be paid for journeys and expenses; this shews her intention to make them executors in trust only. Dean v. Dalton, 2 Bro. C. C. 634.

The expression, "I give to them" (the executors) "all my estate and effects whatsoever, upon trust," to pay a legacy out of particular part of fund, followed by the expression, "I give and bequeath" such and such legacies to others, with directions to reimburse themselves their costs, &c., out of the trust moneys, and that they shall not be answerable for the insufficiency of any security upon which the said trust moneys shall be placed, and followed by a declaration, that after payment of debts, &c., she gives the residue to the executors in trust to pay dividends to A. and B. for life, and if any children him surviving, to them absolutely, does not give executors the beneficial interest in the event of no children: but testatrix's next of kin are entitled. Woollett v. Harris, 5 Madd. 452.

Testator by his will, which was not affected by the statute 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 40, gave all his personal estate, his leasehold house and premises excepted, unto his cousin and two sisters by name, upon trust to convert the same into money, and apply the proceeds towards payment of his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, but his wearing apparel was to be given away to whom they might think fit. He then gave his freehold and leasehold premises to the same persons, upon trust to sell and divide the proceeds among certain persons, two of whom were the trustees, with a declaration that, in order to facilitate such sale, the receipts of his said trusees should be sufficient discharges. He then, after appointing his said trustees to be his executors, declared that his said executors and trustees might retain to and reimburse themselves all their costs, charges, damages and expenses occasioned by the due execution of the trusts thereby in them reposed:—Held, that the executors did not take beneficially the residue of the personal estate which remained undisposed of after payment of the testator's debts and funeral and testamentary expenses. Mullen v. Bowman, 1 Coll. C. C. 197; 13 L. J., Ch. 342; 8 Jur. 438.

—— Fraudulent Concealment.] — Personal estate not disposed of by a will, drawn by the confidential counsel (the sole executor) without informing the testator of the legal effect of the will:—Held, to be a trust for the next of kin. Segrave v. Kirwan, Beat. 157.

—— Survivorship.] —Surplus of a personal estate bequeathed to A. and B.; it is a joint devise, and shall survive. There are two executors; one dies; his executor or administrator shall not have an account against the survivor. Shore v. Billingsly, 1 Vern. 482.

A., by his will, gives several legacies to his children, and appoints his two eldest sons joint executors; but makes no express disposition of the residue of his personal estate:—Held, that the residue belongs to the executors as joint tenants: and that one of them having died without making any severance, the whole survives to the other. Hall v. Digby, 4 Bro. P. C. 577.

Persons taking a residue as executors, take as joint tenants; therefore, if one dies before severance, his share survives. Frewer v. Relfe, 2 Bro. C. C. 220.

Probate conclusive as to the character of executor. The appointment of executor gives a joint interest in the residue, which, not being severed, survived. Griffiths v. Hamilton, 12 Ves. 298.

Survivorship among executors. White v. Williams, 3 Ves. & B. 72; G. Coop. 58.

A bequest "to my two executors, whom I appoint to this purpose (i.e., the performance of trusts of the will); in trust to see the above fulfilled, I bequeath ten guineas, together with all the rest and residue of my estate, whether real or personal, wherever deposited, after my funeral expenses, &c., are paid by them, my executors":—Held, that legacies lapsed fall into the general residue, and that one executor having died in the lifetime of the testator, the other executor, though he died shortly after the testator, and had done no act manifesting an intention to take upon himself the execution of the will, was entitled to the whole of such general residue. Parsons v. Saffery, 9 Price, 578; 23 R. R. 724.

A bequest of residue "to my executors hereinafter named, to enable them to pay my debts, legacies, funeral and testamentary charges, and also to recompense them for their trouble, equally between them," followed by the appointment of three persons as executors, is a gift to those persons as a class in their official character; and, therefore, one having died in the lifetime of the testator, the whole residue vests in the two survivors. Knight v. Gould, 2 Myl. & K. 295; Coop. t. Brough. 240.

Testator gave 300*l.* to each of his three trustees and executors who should prove and act; but if any of them should die without having acted, or should refuse or decline to act, the legacies intended for them were to go to the trustees, who, under the power for that purpose contained in the will, should be appointed in their place. Two of the trustees died in the testator's lifetime, and two new ones were proposed by the surviving trustees and appointed by the Master, in compliance with the decree in a suit for administering the testator's estate:—Held, that they were not entitled to the legacies intended for the deceased trustees. Walsh v. Gladstone, 14 Sim. 2; 8 Jur. 51.

A testator gave personal property in certain events to A., B., C. and D., to be divided betwixt them in equal proportions, and to their heirs for ever, whom with two others he appointed his executors, and declared that if any of those parties refused to act as executors he annulled the bequest to him. D. declined to prove:—Held, that his share lapsed for the benefit of the next of kin, and did not belong to A., B. and C. Barber v. Barber, 3 Myl. & C. 688; 8 L. J., Ch. 36; 2 Jur. 1029. S. P., Page v. Page, 2 Stra. 820; 2 P. W. 489; Mos. 42.

Where a testatrix gave the residue to "the persons thereinafter appointed her executors," in equal shares:—Held, that the gift was to the executors as individuals, and not as executors, and that the shares which lapsed fell into the residue. Hoare v. Osborne, 33 L. J., Ch. 586; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 382; 10 L. T. 20; 12 W. R. 397.

Since 11 Geo. 4. & 1 Will. 4, c. 40—Effect of Statute.]—The 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 40, has not introduced any new rule for the construction of wills. Its effect simply is that an executor shall no longer take residue by implication of law, and it has therefore no application where there is an express gift of the residue to an executor. Williams v. Arkle, 45 L. J., Ch. 590; L. R. 7 H. L. 606; 33 L. T. 187; 24 W. R. 215.

The question whether the executor or trustee under a will is to take in that capacity only, or is to take the beneficial interest, is a question of intention to be collected from the whole of the will. Ib.

Since the 1 Will. 4, c. 40, the intention that the executor shall take beneficially, must appear from the will, and parol evidence of the testator's intention is inadmissible: where the bequest was to them of all his personal estate, "in trust to pay as follows" (specifying legacies), and concluding, "I wish all this to be paid in six months after my death":—Held, that they did not take the residue unexhausted beneficially, but in trust for the next of kin. Lore v. Gaze, 8 Beav. 472; 9 Jur. 910.

The 1 Will. 4, c. 40 (as to the right of executors to the undisposed of residue) merely shifts the burden of proof from the next of kin to the executor. Read v. Stedman, 26 Beav. 495; 28 L. J., Ch. 481.

—— Construction of Will.]—A testator by his will appointed G. A. his executor and trustee; and, in the event of his death in his lifetime, he appointed B. A. executor and trustee. After giving various legacies, including two of 1,000*l.* each to G. A. and B. A., he left the whole of his real estate, and the residue of his personal estate, "unto G. A. for all my estate and interest therein respectively, if he shall be alive at my decease; but if he shall die in my lifetime, then" to B. A. In a suit by the heiress-at-law, and sole next of kin to the testator, praying that the executor, G. A., might be considered as a trustee for her of the real and personal estate:—Held, that the gift being an express devise to him by name, and not quâ executor, it must be taken to be for him beneficially and not as a trustee, and that 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 40, did not apply. Williams v. Arkle, 45 L. J., Ch. 590; L. R. 7 H. L. 606; 33 L. T. 187; 24 W. R. 215.

A testator appointed A. and B. his executors, and he gave them all his personal estate, "that is to say, for you to pay all as follows." He then gave several legacies, and afterwards said, "I wish all this to be paid in six months after my death":—Held, under the 1 Will. 4, c. 60, that the executors did not take the unexhausted residue beneficially, but in trust for the next of kin. Lore v. Gaze, 8 Beav. 472; 9 Jur. 910.

A testator, by his will, said, "I make H. C. J. my whole and sole executor of all the various properties I may be in possession of at my death; M. C. not to be forgotten if she holds the same position at my decease":—Held, that, under the 1 Will. 4, c. 40, the executor was a trustee of the residue for the next of kin. Juler v. Juler, 29 Beav. 34; 30 L. J., Ch. 142; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1320; 3 L. T. 395; 9 W. R. 61.

A testator bequeathed all his residuary estate to his executrix, upon trust to pay thereout certain legacies which did not exhaust the personal estate:—Held, on construction of the will, that the executrix took the surplus personal estate beneficially, and that she did not hold such surplus in trust for the next of kin. Williams v. Roberts, 27 L. J., Ch. 177; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 18; 6 W. R. 93.

A testatrix, after directing legacies in certain events to fall into the residue, bequeathed specified articles "and other personal effects" to A. and B., in confidence that they would distribute and dispose of them as she by memorandum or otherwise might direct, and appointed A. and B. her executors. By a codicil, she directed her "executors and residuary legatees" to vary certain bequests, and empowered them to postpone legacies, the interest in the meantime "to form part of my residuary estate," and gave a legacy to "A., one of my executors and residuary legatees." By a second codicil, she gave a life interest to a legatee in a sum, which, under the former dispositions, would have fallen into the residue, and stated that the alteration would make but little difference, as the sum would ultimately fall into the residue. After authorising the executors to postpone the payment of legacies, and giving other directions, the codicil concluded thus: "These wishes written by myself, and only concern the interest of my executors, will, I feel sure, be quite sufficient for them to fulfil all herein mentioned, but will perhaps be more correct if I sign my name in the presence of two witnesses, who are also in the presence of each other":—Held, that, on the will alone, the executors would have taken the residue, subject to a trust for the next of kin; but that the word "confidence" in the will admitted of explanation, and was explained by the codicils not to amount to a binding trust. Shepherd v. Nottidge, 2 John. & H. 766; 7 L. T. 399; 1 N. R. 15.

Held, also, that, on the will, as explained by the codicils, the bequest to the executors was not limited to things ejusdem generis with those described, but included the whole residue. Ib.

Held, consequently, that the executors took the whole residue beneficially. Ib.

A. bequeathed an annuity to his wife, to be paid out of his effects, the executors to give security for the same. He then made bequests to three of his children, and expressly declared why he did not provide for three others, and, after appointing distinct trustees, he appointed three of his sons, his remaining children, to be executors. There was no disposition of the residue:—Held, that it appeared by the will that the executors were intended to take the residue beneficially, so as to comply with the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 40. Harrison v. Harrison, 2 Hem. & M. 237; 33 L. J., Ch. 647; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 611; 10 L. T. 569; 12 W. R. 854.

A testator by will, dated 1864, directed his debts to be paid by his executors in trust, M. and B. He then gave several legacies, and amongst them a sum of money to his said trustees to be placed out at interest, and the interest to be applied for the benefit of the poor of a certain parish. He also gave his said trustees another sum to be expended on a window in a church; and directed them out of his residuary estate to palisade and keep in repair the graves of his family. He then gave certain real and leasehold hereditaments to his friends, M. and B., upon certain durable trusts. The will then contained the usual trustees' receipt clause. After giving other legacies, he gave the residue of his real and personal estate, money, securities for money, &c., unto his two friends, M. and B., share and share alike, as tenants in common, to hold to their heirs and assigns for ever. He then gave his trust and mortgage estates to M. and B., subject to the trusts and equities, and so far as he was interested as mortgagee to be disposed of for the purposes of that his will. The will contained a power of appointment of new trustees, which provided for the vesting of "all and singular the said trust estate, moneys and securities" in the new trustees upon the same trusts. The testator then appointed his "said two friends, M. and B., executors in trust" of that his will:—Held, that the trustees took the residue beneficially. Romans v. Mitchell, 15 W. R. 552.

A testator bequeathed all his property to two persons whom he appointed executors (one being a neighbouring farmer, the other a surgeon called in during his last illness to make the will) "in and for the consideration of" paying over the rents and profits to his wife for life:—Held, that they did not take beneficially, but that the estate, subject to the widow's life interest, was undisposed of. Bird v. Harris, 39 L. J., Ch. 226; L. R. 9 Eq. 204; 23 L. T. 213; 18 W. R. 374.

A father appointed two of his sons executors, and gave various legacies, but made no residuary bequest. By a codicil he directed his two executors and three of his principal legatees to pay all expenses attending the proving his will, and administration and winding up of his estate, in equal proportions, according to the nature of the property they derived under his will and codicil, it being his express desire that no part of such expenses should be borne by the residuary legatees, but that they should receive the residue free of all deductions for expenses:—Held, that the appointment of executors had no operation as to the beneficial disposition of the residue; and that being undisposed of by the will, the codicil left the matter in the same position, and there was an intestacy as to the residue. Travers v. Travers, L. R. 14 Eq. 275.

A son, owing his mother 300*l.*, "towards liquidating this" bequeathed to her some chattels, and also "for paying off this debt" bequeathed to her "all and everything not otherwise mentioned" in his will, and appointed his mother executrix:—Held, that she was not made beneficial residuary legatee. Wright v. Revell, 27 L. T. 439.

A testator after directing payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses and legacies, bequeathed some legacies to charities, and gave to three persons legacies of nineteen guineas each, and appointed them executors. He then bequeathed the whole of his "estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever absolutely" to the same three persons by name, their executors and administrators, charged, nevertheless, and he thereby charged certain parts thereof with certain payments, which did not nearly exhaust the estate; and he declared that all costs, charges and expenses which his executors or any of them should incur might be retained by them out of any moneys which might come to their hands from any part of his estate. The testator died in 1837:—Held (the court being equally divided, and the decision below consequently affirmed) that the executors took the residue as trustees for the next of kin. Saltmarsh v. Barrett, 3 De G. F. & J. 279; 30 L. J., Ch. 853; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 813; 4 L. T. 690. Affirming 9 W. R. 564.

A testator gave the whole of his personal estate to his grandson H., his executors, administrators and assigns, "subject to the payment of debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and legacies, and the trusts hereinafter contained." Then followed certain trusts for other people, and for H. himself. The testator appointed his grandson, with three others, executors. There was no residuary bequest:—Held, that after the performance of the trusts H. took the residue for his own benefit. Clarke v. Hilton, L. R. 2 Eq. 810; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 721; 15 L. T. 64; 14 W. R. 827.

The appointment of an executor vests in him all the personal estate of the testator, and if any part (after payment of the funeral expenses and debts) remains undisposed of by will, it vests in the executor beneficially; but where it sufficiently appears on the face of the will that the testator did not intend the executors to take the surplus, they are deemed trustees for those on whom the law would cast the surplus in case of a complete intestacy; and this is so, whether the executors are expressly called executors in trust, or any other expressions occur shewing the office only to be intended for them, and not the beneficial interest. A testator, after giving a number of pecuniary legacies, some of which involved the performance of active trusts on the part of his "executors," appointed A., B. and C. "executors and trustees of this my will." The will contained a clause providing for abatement of the legacies in case of a deficiency, and no residuary gift; but on the testator's death there was a considerable surplus:—Held, that the executors were not beneficially entitled to the undisposed-of residue. Dillon v. Reilly, 9 L. R., Ir. 57.

Observations of the Vice-Chancellor, in Roose v. Chalk (49 L. J., Ch. 625), upon Braddon v. Farrand (4 Russ. 87) commented on. Ib.

A testator bequeathed to his executors the sum of 300*l.* charged upon certain premises, and also a policy of insurance, and after giving certain specific legacies to one of his brothers and one of his sisters, he bequeathed all the rest and residue of his estate to his executors upon trust to sell and convert into money all his said estate and property, "save that thereinbefore specifically devised," and to pay thereout his debts and some pecuniary legacies. He bequeathed the rest, residue and remainder of his estate and property, "save that thereinbefore specifically devised," after payment of his debts and legacies, upon trust for such of his brothers and sisters as should survive him; and he bequeathed to each of his executors (by name) 50*l.* for his trouble:—Held, that the executors were beneficially entitled to the legacy of 300*l.* and the policy of insurance. Consideration of principles by which court is guided in determining whether executors take beneficially or in trust since the statute. Caruth v. Parker, 11 L. R., Ir. 18.

A testatrix, after appointing four executors, made over to them by her will "as such" all her property and effects, "but in trust always for the purposes hereinafter mentioned"; and after directing them to preserve certain houses as a family house, and giving certain specific bequests, disposed of the residue of her estate as follows:—"As regards the remainder of my real and personal property of what kind soever, not already disposed of, I direct that my executors shall receive and collect the same from all persons whatever, and in such manner as to them may seem proper, and I direct that they, their heirs, successors, representatives, or descendants, may apply and distribute the same, all circumstances duly considered, in such manner and to such parties as to them may appear just":—Held, that there was no absolute gift to the executors as individuals. The residue was not severed from the trust with which the testatrix had clothed all her property in the hands of her executors, but although a trust was intended to be created, it failed for want of adequate expression of it. Yeap Cheah Neo v. Ong Cheng Neo, L. R. 6 P. C. 381.

As against the Crown.]—Upon the construction of a will:—Held, that executors were entitled, as against the Crown claiming in default of next of kin of the testatrix, to the surplus proceeds of certain leaseholds which were bequeathed to be sold for payment of the testatrix's debts and legacies. Russell v. Clowes, 2 Coll. C. C. 648; 10 Jur. 732.

B. devised and bequeathed the residue of his freehold, leasehold and personal estates to five trustees (whom he appointed executors), four of them being ministers of the Presbyterian church in London, and the fifth being, as well as the testator, a member of that church. The answer admitted that it was the expressed wish and hope of the testator, as to his residuary property generally, that his residuary legatees would make use of the same for the benefit of the Presbyterian college, to which he had been in his lifetime a benefactor; and the trustees also admitted that they did not allege, or contend, or believe, that the testator intended them to enjoy the property beneficially. There were no next of kin:—Held, that the bequest of the leaseholds was void, and that that portion of the residuary estate belonged to the Crown. Johnstone v. Hamilton, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 777; 12 L. T. 822; 13 W. R. 961. S. P., Middleton v. Spicer, 1 Bro. C. C. 201.

The 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 40, s. 2 does not affect the rule laid down in Middleton v. Spicer, (1 Bro. C. C. 201). Ib.

A testator who died in 1855, by will gave all his property and the residue of his estate to three persons, upon trust to pay various legacies; he also gave legacies of unequal amounts to each of his trustees, whom he appointed executors. The trustees were also empowered to appoint new trustees in the place of those unable to act. The testator afterwards gave an additional legacy to one of his executors. He was illegitimate, and died without having ever been married:—Held, that the undisposed of residue did not belong to the executors, but lapsed to the Crown, and that it was unaffected by the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 40. Read v. Stedman, 26 Beav. 495; 28 L. J., Ch. 481.

The 1 Will. 4, c. 40 (as to the right of executors to the undisposed of residue) merely shifts the burden of proof from the next of kin to the executor. Ib.

Gifts of residue to executors in trust, with equal legacies to the executors by name, do not pass a beneficial interest in undisposed of residue, which came to the Crown. Chester v. Chester, L. R. 12 Eq. 444; 19 W. R. 946.

A testatrix, by her will dated in 1878, after directing her just debts and funeral expenses to be paid by her executors, appointed her friend and medical adviser, R., and her friend, C., solicitor, her executors, and gave a number of legacies, including one of 1,000*l.*, to R., and another of 100*l.* to C., and revoked all other wills made by her. Testatrix died in 1878, without any next of kin, possessed of large personal estate:—Held, that the executors R. and C. were absolutely entitled as against the Crown to the personal estate for their own benefit. Knowles, In re, Roose v. Chalk, 49 L. J., Ch. 625; 43 L. T. 152; 28 W. R. 975.

Where personal property is given to executors upon trust they are excluded from claiming for their own benefit, and if the trust fails and there are no next of kin, the executor is trustee for the Crown. Powell v. Marett, 1 Sm. & G. 381; 22 L. J., Ch. 408; 17 Jur. 449; 1 W. R. 243.

A. devised his residuary personal estate to his executors, upon certain trusts, which failed under the Statute of Mortmain; he then devised real estates to his wife, charged with a mortgage, and also charged with the payment of his debts. The testator made his will and died in 1858, leaving a widow, but no child or next of kin:—Held, that the executors did not take the personalty for their own benefit, but as trustees for the widow and the Crown in moieties: that the general debts were to be paid out of the personalty, but that the devisee of the real estate was not entitled to have the mortgage debt discharged out of the personalty. Dacre v. Patrickson, 1 Dr. & Sm. 182; 29 L. J., Ch. 846; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 863; 8 W. R. 597, 647.

Testatrix devised real estate to A. and B. upon trust for sale. She bequeathed to them all the moneys, stocks, funds, shares and securities which should belong to her at her death, upon trust to convert such part as should not consist of money, and out of the proceeds of such conversion, and of her moneys, to pay her funeral and testamentary expenses and debts, and certain legacies. She gave the residue of the moneys produced by the sale of her real estate, and of the moneys produced by such conversion as aforesaid, and of her other moneys, after payment of such expenses, debts and legacies, unto and equally between A. and B. for their own use and benefit absolutely. She appointed A. and B. executors and trustees of her will. By a codicil, after reciting the residuary gift to A. and B., she revoked it, and instead thereof gave to each of them out of the residue of the trust moneys mentioned in her will a legacy of 500*l.* for his trouble in acting as an executor and trustee of her will. The testatrix died. Her executors sold and converted the property given by the will, and paid the debts and legacies. After doing so they had considerable balances in respect of the proceeds of both kinds of property, and also a sum arising from the sale of certain furniture which was not mentioned in the will. The testatrix had no heir-at-law or next of kin. The question was, whether the executors or the Crown were entitled to these undisposed of residues. The Crown counsel admitted that he could not claim the residue of the proceeds of sale of the real estate:—Held, that there was expressed on the face of the will and codicil an intention on the part of the testatrix to confer a benefit on her executors and trustees to the extent of 500*l.*, and no more, and, consequently, the Crown was entitled to the residue of the money of the testatrix, and the proceeds of the conversion she had directed, and also to the residue of the proceeds of the sale of the furniture. Hudson's Trusts, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 789; 48 L. T. 562; 31 W. R. 778.

V. CREDITOR APPOINTED EXECUTOR.

Effect on Debt.]—The rule at law that where the obligee in a bond becomes executor of the obligor, and receives assets adequate to discharge the debt, it is extinguished, is also the rule at law where only one of two obligees is appointed one of several executors of the obligor. The same rules prevail in equity. And this is so though the obligees are trustees. Richards v. Molony, 2 Ir. Ch. R. 1.

Accordingly, where a father, on the marriage of one of his daughters, entered into a bond to A. and B. conditioned for payment of 4,000*l.*, and, on the marriage of another of his daughters, entered into a bond to A. and C. conditioned for payment of 4,000*l.*, and was a party to the marriage settlement of both daughters, whereby the sums secured by the bonds were limited upon certain trusts, and by his will directing his debts to be paid, and reciting the acknowledgment of his bonds, devised certain lands to A., and other lands to D., and bequeathed legacies to both of his daughters to be paid out of his personal estate, if sufficient, but if not sufficient out of the devised lands, and appointed A. and two other persons to be his executors, and died, and more than sufficient assets for payment of all his debts and legacies reached the hands of A:—Held, that, whether A. had or had not committed a devastavit, the cestuis qui trustent had not any equity to raise the amount of the bond debts out of the lands devised to D., although D. had personally instituted a suit against A. for indemnification of the lands devised to D. against those bond debts. To that suit the cestuis qui trustent were not parties. Ib.

Where one of two joint debtors makes the creditor his executor, and the latter receives assets adequate to discharge the liability, the debt is extinguished. Crampton v. Walker, 31 L. R., Ir. 437.

—— Volunteers under Testator's Deed—13 Eliz. c. 5—Acquiescence.]—Where a testator makes his creditor on bond (who also has a lien on all the testator's real estate for unpaid purchase-money) the executor and trustee of his will, and also a short time before his death executes a voluntary assignment of all his leasehold property, being the larger portion of his personal estate; and the bond creditor directs the preparation of the voluntary deed, and acts in the trusts of the will according to the deed, for seven years:—Held, that there being no evidence of ignorance or mistake on the part of the creditor, the deed was not void under the statute 13 Eliz. c. 5, and could not be impeached by the creditor or any one claiming under him. Creditor is not thereby precluded from enforcing payment of his claim out of all the property of the testator, including, if necessary, that comprised in the voluntary deed. Olliver v. King, 25 L. J., Ch. 427; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 312; 4 W. R. 382—L.JJ.

VI. DEBTOR APPOINTED EXECUTOR.

Effect on Debt at Law.]—If a debtor be made executor, the debt is totally extinguished; otherwise if he be appointed administrator, whose representative will be chargeable at the suit of the administrator de bonis non, of the first intestate; on the authority of Wankford v. Wankford, 1 Salk. 299, and Needham's Case, 8 Co. 136. Hudson v. Hudson, 1 Atk. 461. But see Holliday v. Boas, 1 Roll. Abr. 920.

Effect on Debt in Equity.]—Where testator makes bond-debtor his executor it does not extinguish debt. Errington v. Evans, Dick. 456. And see Philips v. Philips, 1 Ch. Ca. 292; 2 Freem. 11; Fox v. Fox, 1 Atk. 463

The conusee of a judgment appointed the conusor one of his executors: the will was proved by the other executor only:—Held, that in equity the judgment debt was not extinguished, but was assets in the hands of the executor for payment of his testator's debts, and, accordingly, that lands of the conusor, sold subsequently to the condition of the judgment, were in the possession of a purchaser with notice liable to the discharge of the judgment debt. Willock v. Dargan, 1 Ch. Rep. 39.

Executor is a trustee in respect of a debt due by him to a testator. Berry v. Usher, 11 Ves. 87.

The examination of an executor under the usual decree for an account ought to contain an interrogatory whether he is indebted to the testator, the debt from himself being assets. A debt due by the executor is assets for the same reason that he may if a creditor retain. Simmons v. Gutteridge, 13 Ves. 262, 264.

Testator gave his brother and nephew legacies, and appointed them executors, but did not dispose of the residue. They were indebted to him in unequal sums; this is no release of the debts, and they are trustees for the next of kin as to the residue. Carey v. Goodinge, 3 Bro. C. C. 110.

Semble, though persons beneficially interested in an estate may elect to consider a debt owing from the executor as assets in his hands, yet, if he denies the existence of the debt, the plaintiff may treat him as any other debtor of the estate who might be brought before the court on the allegation of colliding with the executor, and would be entitled to a decree for recovering the debt against him, as from a stranger who was indebted to the estate. Tomlin v. Tomlin, 1 Hare, 247.

In a suit by residuary legatees of A. against the personal representatives of B., who was the executor of A., for payment of a debt due from B. to A., the amount of which was not admitted, and also for an account of the personal estate of A.; praying also, unless assets were admitted an account of the personal estate of B., and that being insufficient, seeking to charge his real estate:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a declaration that a particular debt or sum constituted an item in the account to be taken; but that evidence, tending to shew that the defendants should be charged with such particular debt or sum, was admissible. Ib., 236.

A. devises the residue of his real and personal estate, not before devised, to his two executors, as tenants in common, &c.; one of them is bted by bond to the testator; this bond debt not released, but shall be divided between em, and no parol evidence shall be admitted, at the testator intended to release it to the bligor, and had given instructions for that urpose to an attorney who drew his will, &c. Brown v. Selwyn, Cas. t. Tal. 240; 3 Bro. P. C. 595.

A., being possessed of a bond for 1,400*l.*, deposits it in the hands of B., who signs a proper acknowledgment for the same; A. afterwards assigns this bond to B., and takes his promissory note for the value, but the note was never paid. A., by his will, gives several legacies, and appoints B. and another executors, but makes no disposition of the residue of his estate:—Held, that the money due on this bond is part of the residue, and shall go to the executors equally, and that B.'s note is not such a debt as can be extinguished by his being made an executor: decrees affirmed, except as to costs. Matthew v. Fitz-Simon, 4 Bro. P. C. 11.

In 1839 the son of the testator borrowed of his father 300*l.* upon his promissory note. In 1842, before the same was paid, the testator died, having by his will appointed his son, with three other persons, executors. The will was shortly afterwards proved by the executors other than the son, power being reserved for him to come in and prove the same. Subsequently the proving executors all died, leaving the son surviving, who, thereupon, in 1855, proved the will. He had never been called upon by the father during his lifetime, nor by the proving executors of his will during their lives to pay the sum due on the note:—Held, that although the debt could not be recovered at law (because an executor could not sue himself) or in equity (because more than six years had elapsed between the death of the testator and the proof of his will by the son), yet, the son by proving the will had made the debt assets in his hands. Ingle v. Richards, 28 Beav. 366; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 117; 8 W. R. 697.

Interest on the debt allowed at the rate of 4*l.* per cent. from the date of the probate granted to the executor until payment. Ib.

A testatrix bequeathed a leasehold estate to trustees and executors, in trust for sale, and gave one of such executors a beneficial interest for his life in one fourth part of the estate. The latter executor, being at the time indebted to the estate of the testatrix, made an assignment of his beneficial interest by way of mortgage, to secure a private debt which he owed to a creditor, and deposited the title deeds with the creditor:—Held, on a bill by his co-executors, to recover the title deeds, that the estate of the testatrix was entitled to a lien on the interest of the defaulting executor in the premises comprised in the deeds, in priority to the lien created by his assignment to the mortgagee; and the court decreed the title deeds to be delivered up, with a declaration that they belonged to the three trustees. Cole v. Muddle, 10 Hare, 186; 22 L. J., Ch. 401; 16 Jur. 853.

A., by parol, let certain mills to B., his son, at a rent of 1,000*l.* a year, payable each in August. In 1879 B. represented to A. that the business of the mills had fallen off, and that he could not make any profit if he continued to pay the rent, and A. stated he would charge him no more rent till further arrangement. A., by his will, which was confirmed by a codicil dated in 1881, devised and bequeathed all his property in equal shares among such of his sons and daughters as should survive him, and directed that no legatees should, by virtue of his or her bequest, be exonerated from any debt due to testator at his death, and entered against such legatee in testator's books, and A. appointed B. executor of his will, and died in September, 1881,

The rent had been paid by B. up to August, 1876. In the testator's books the rent was entered against B. down to August, 1879, and no rent was entered against him after that date :—Held, that, as the circumstances shewed an intention on the part of the testator to forego his claim to the rent subsequent to August 1879, B. was not liable in equity to any rent after that date. Hamilton v. Todd, 11 L. R. Ir. 178.

Mrs. W. made her daughter, Mrs. P., her sole executrix and universal legatee. At the death of Mrs. W., her son-in-law, P., was indebted to her on a bond conditioned for payment of a sum of money by yearly instalments, some of which did not become due till after her death ; but others which became due before her death remained unpaid. Mrs. P. proved the will, and about twelve months after her mother's death passed the residuary account, shewing that the debts were all paid. P. took the bond into his possession and kept it till his death, which took place more than six months after passing the account, and applied to his own use all the other personal estate of Mrs. W. After the death of P., a decree having been made for administration of his estate, Mrs. P., as executrix of her mother, sought to prove as a creditor on the bond :—Held, that as the debts of Mrs. W. had been paid, and the residue had become a clear fund in the lifetime of P., the liability of P. on the bond was extinguished, and the proof could not be allowed. Price v. Price, 48 L. J., Ch. 478 ; 11 Ch. D. 163 ; 40 L. T. 668 ; 27 W. R. 698.

A. borrowed 1,100*l.* from his step-mother, upon an agreement that the debt should be paid by deductions of 100*l.* from each quarterly payment which she made him for her board. After two deductions had been made she declared she would make no more, and thenceforward continued to pay the quarterly sums in full. She appointed him sole executor of her will, which contained no disposition of her residuary estate : —Held, that although in order to have an effectual release in equity of a debt there must be an actual legal release or transfer of the property, that in this case the debt was satisfied on two grounds. First, because the appointment of the debtor as executor operated as a release at law, and all claim in equity to recover the debt was prevented by the intention of the testatrix to release it : and, secondly, because the testatrix by making the full quarterly payments had actually completed the gift of the instalments she was entitled to retain. Strong v. Bird, 43 L. J., Ch. 814 ; L. R. 18 Eq. 315 ; 30 L. T. 745 ; 22 W. R. 788.

Testatrix, who was a member of the plaintiff's congregation, during her life paid to him or on his behalf various sums of money, and by her will she bequeathed legacies to him and appointed him joint executor with the defendant, to whom she bequeathed her residuary estate. By a codicil she gave additional legacies to the plaintiff, he being then considerably indebted to her. The defendant alone proved the will, and he refused to pay the plaintiff's legacies, on the ground that at the date of her death the plaintiff was indebted to the testatrix to an amount exceeding the value of such legacies. The plaintiff alleged that the sums paid to him by the testatrix were intended by her to be gifts. There was evidence that the defendant was a party to the making of the codicil, and was aware of the testatrix's intention that the plaintiff's legacies should be paid to him in full :—Held, first, that notwithstanding the plaintiff had not proved the will, his appointment as executor was sufficient to release the debt at law, and that any claim in equity was rebutted by the presumption of the testatrix's intention to forgive the debt ; secondly, that evidence of such intention was admissible ; and, thirdly, that even if the debts were not released, yet under the circumstances the defendant could not be allowed to set them up as against the plaintiff. Applebee, In re, Leveson v. Beales, 60 L. J., Ch. 793 ; [1891] 3 Ch. 422 ; 65 L. T. 406 ; 40 W. R. 90.

—— Letter of Instructions Cancelling Debt.]—An executor is liable in equity to account for a debt due from him to his testator's estate, although in a letter of instructions addressed but not communicated to him it is stated by the testator to be cancelled. Strong v. Bird (L. R. 18 Eq. 315) distinguished. Hyslop, In re, Hyslop v. Chamberlain, 64 L. J., Ch. 168 ; [1894] 3 Ch. 522 ; 8 R. 680 ; 71 L. T. 373 ; 43 W. R. 6.

—— Proof of Will.]—A testator died in 1842, having appointed R. and others his executors. R., who owed the testator 300*l.* on a promissory note, did not prove the will until 1855 :—Held, that he could not then set up the Statute of Limitations in respect of the debt ; that the act of proving had relation to the testator's death, and that he must be considered as having the 300*l.* in his hands as assets, and he was charged therewith with interest from 1855. Ingle v. Richards, 28 Beav. 366 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 117 ; 8 W. R. 697.

VII. EXECUTOR DE SON TORT.

a. Constitution of.

Generally.]—What acts make a person liable as an executor de son tort is a matter of law for the judge to decide ; but it is for the jury to say whether the acts are sufficiently proved. Padget v. Priest, 2 Term Rep. 97 ; 1 R. R. 440.

Almost any intermeddling after the death of the party makes a person so intermeddling liable as an executor de son tort. Edwards v. Harben, 2 Term Rep. 587 ; 1 R. R. 548.

If a person sets up in himself a colourable title to the possession of the goods of the deceased, though he may not be able to establish a completely strict and legal title, it is sufficient to exempt him from being charged as executor de son tort. Femings v. Jarrat, 1 Esp. 335.

A person who is permitted by an executor to possess himself of part of the assets of a testator, and who, after the executor's death, and there is no legal personal representative, either of the testator or of the executor, retains the assets, and acts in the execution of the trusts of the will, is not executor de son tort to the original testator. Tomlin v. Beck, Turn. & R. 438 ; 24 R. R. 95.

A person, whose sole act of intermeddling is possession of assets of a deceased person in a foreign country, cannot be sued as executor de son tort in England. Beavan v. Hastings (Lord), 2 Kay & J. 724 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1044 ; 4 W. R. 785.

Held, secondly, that the peculiar liability imposed by the Belgian law on persons taking possession of the assets of deceased persons, being a legal right in Belgium, and requiring no aid from a court of equity, was equally invalid to support the suit; and the bill was therefore dismissed with costs. Ib.

Receipt of Money belonging to Estate.]—If A., the servant of B., sells the goods of C., an intestate, as well after his death as before, though by the orders of C., and pays the money arising therefrom into the hands of B., the latter may be sued as an executor de son tort. Padget v. Priest, 2 Term Rep. 97; 1 R. R. 440.

If a person has money belonging to an intestate in his hands at the time when an action is brought against him as executor for a debt due from the intestate, he is liable as an executor de son tort. Ib.

—— As Agent of Executor de son tort.]—The agent of an executor de son tort, collecting the assets, knowing them to belong to the testator's estate, not knowing that his principal is not the legal representative, makes himself liable to account as executor de son tort, notwithstanding he has duly accounted for his rents to his principal, on the ground that the doctrine that the receipt of the agent is the receipt of the principal, does not apply to the acts of a wrongdoer. Sharland v. Mildon, 5 Hare, 469; 15 L. J., Ch. 434; 10 Jur. 771. And see Mountford v. Gibson, 4 East, 441; 1 Smith, 129.

Sale of Goods belonging to Estate.]—If a creditor takes an absolute bill of sale of the goods of his debtor, but agrees to leave them in his possession for a limited time, and in the meantime the debtor dies, whereupon the creditor takes and sells the goods, he will be liable to be sued as executor de son tort for the debts of the deceased; for the debtor's continuing in possession is inconsistent with the deed, and fraudulent against creditors. Edwards v. Harben, 2 Term Rep. 587; 1 R. R. 548.

—— Payment of Price to Executor.]—The manager of some ironworks, and who as such lived in a house in the neighbourhood, died intestate and insolvent on the 22nd of June, 1877. Shortly after his decease, and before letters of administration could be taken out, the widow was required to vacate the premises, and it became necessary to remove the furniture which belonged to the deceased. Accordingly, part of it was taken by her to a smaller house, and afterwards purchased, and the residue sold by auction. The proceeds of the auction, as well as the valuation price of the goods retained by the widow, were duly handed over to the administrator afterwards appointed. Actions having been brought both against the widow and the auctioneer, charging them respectively as executors de son tort:—Held, that they were not liable, on the ground that there had been no wrongful intermeddling with the assets, or dealing with them in such a way as denoted an usurpation of the functions of an executor. Peters v. Leeder, Peters v. Borguet, 47 L. J., Q. B. 573.

Acting as Agent of Rightful Executor.]—A person who deals with the goods of a testator, as agent of the executor, cannot be treated as executor de son tort, whether the will has been proved or not. Sykes v. Sykes, 39 L. J., C. P. 179; L. R. 5 C. P. 113; 22 L. T. 236; 18 W. R. 551.

When an executor before probate by his agent takes the goods and carries on the business of the deceased, and judgment is recovered against the agent as executor, and a fi. fa. issues thereunder directing the sheriff to levy on goods of the deceased in his hands as executor of the deceased to be administered, the sheriff is not justified, as against the executor, in seizing goods of the deceased in such agent's hands. Ib.

A man who possesses himself of the effects of the deceased under the authority of, and as agent for, the rightful executor, cannot be charged as an executor de son tort. Hall v. Elliott, Peake, 86.

Although a person cannot be charged as executor de son tort while he acts under a power of attorney made to him by one of several executors who has proved the will, yet, if he continues to act after the death of such executor, he may be charged as executor de son tort, though he acts under the advice of another of the executors who has not proved. Cottle v. Aldrich, 4 M. & S. 175; 1 Stark. 37; 16 R. R. 433.

Where a person appointed an executor under a will proves it, and deals with the estate, he cannot be permitted to say that he acts under a delegated power from the other executors, or in any other character than as executor. Graham v. Keble, 2 Dow, 24; 14 R. R. 96.

Providing for Funeral.]—The ordering the funeral of a deceased person is not sufficient to render a party executor de son tort, and he is entitled to collect from the debtors of the deceased such a sum of money as may reasonably be considered sufficient for that purpose; and in an action charging him as executor de son tort, the proper question to be left to the jury is, whether the sum so received by him was, under the circumstances, a reasonable one for the purpose or not. Camden v. Fletcher, 4 M. & W. 378; 1 H. & H. 361; 8 L. J., Ex. 17; 3 Jur. 57.

Auctioneer acting under Executor before Probate.]—An auctioneer who sells assets of a deceased person is liable for debts of the deceased as executor de son tort, unless he can shew that he acted under an executor who has proved the will. Nulty v. Fagan, 22 L. R. Ir. 604.

Creditor recovering Debt from Executrix de son tort.]—Action by a creditor against the widow of an intestate, who had rendered herself liable as executrix de son tort to administer the estate. The deceased at his death owed rent to S., who took over the house, including the stock-in-trade at a valuation, as a going concern in part satisfaction of her debt. The plaintiff joined her as a defendant, suing her as an executrix de son tort:—Held, that a creditor who obtains payment of a debt from an executor de son tort does not thereby become an executor de son tort. Hursell v. Bird, 65 L. T. 709.

Carrying on Trade.]—Living in the house and carrying on the trade of a deceased victualler, is a sufficient intermeddling to make an executor de son tort. Hooper v. Summersett, Wightw. 16.

The widow of a hairdresser who died in October, 1836, continued to reside in his house and keep open the shop (through which was the entrance to the house), but there was no proof of any articles being sold. In December, she received notice of a bond debt of 100*l.* due from him, and had his goods valued. In January, 1837, on the application of a creditor to whom he owed 240*l.* for goods, she gave a promissory note for that amount, payable to the creditor twelve months after date. In March she took out administration :—Held, in an action against her on the promissory note, that this was not evidence to charge her as executrix de son tort. Serle v. Waterworth, 4 M. & W. 9 ; 6 D. P. C. 684 ; 7 L. J., Ex. 202 ; 2 Jur. 745.

Two brothers were in partnership together. One of them became lunatic, when the other carried on the business ; and on the death of the lunatic intestate, he continued to do so. A bill was filed against the surviving brother, and the administrators of the intestate, to have the survivor declared executor de son tort of his brother, for the administration of the lunatic's personal estate, and for an account of the partnership assets. To that bill the brother put in an answer, not stating distinctly that the partnership had been dissolved before the lunatic's death, but that he thought the lunacy a dissolution of it ; that if it had continued till the death of the lunatic, he (the surviving brother) would be a creditor of the estate, and submitted that he was not bound to account for the partnership assets. The plaintiff excepted to the answer of insufficiency :—Held, that the exceptions must be allowed. Leigh v. Birch, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1265 ; 8 L. T. 230 ; 11 W. R. 554.

Possession of Property belonging to Estate.]—A deed of trust conveyed the lease of a farm and all the grantor's effects, and all debts due to him, to trustees, in consideration of a certain sum to be paid to him by one of the trustees, in trust to dispose of all the property, and out of the produce to reimburse the trustee the sum advanced by him to the grantor, and all other the trustees' demand upon him, and then to pay all such debts as were justly due from the grantor as the trustees in their discretion should think proper : the surplus to be holden for the benefit of the grantor's wife (whose property the bulk of it originally was), as a separate maintenance for her, in consequence of a separation between them on account of her husband's ill-usage :—Held, that such deed was not fraudulent or void as against creditors, it appearing to have been made bonâ fide at the time, and that all the creditors of the grantor known at the time had, upon application to the trustees, received payment of their debts. Nunn v. Wilsmore, 8 Term Rep. 521 ; 5 R. R. 434.

Held, also, that the wife was not liable as executrix de son tort, after the death of her husband intestate, on account of her possession of this property under the deed of trust. Ib.

To make a man liable as executor de son tort, it is not essential that the dealing with the chattels of the deceased should be in the character of executor. Sealy v. Powis, 1 H. & W. 2.

A possession of goods which a person has received from the deceased in his lifetime under a colourable sale, may be sufficient to charge him as an executor de son tort. Ib.

A. pledged goods to B. for a debt. B. died, and the parish officers took the goods, and gave them to J., the carpenter who made the coffin of B., on condition of his paying B.'s rent and the funeral expenses :—Held, that by taking these goods, the parish officers became executors de son tort ; and that if they sold the goods to J., they would be liable to A. in trover, because such a sale was so inconsistent with the bailment as to revest the right of possession in A. But if the parish officers merely relinquished their possession, and let J. take possession, this would not make the parish officers liable in trover, as, in this case, a mere seizure of the goods by a stranger, who afterwards relinquished them, would not be a conversion. Samuel v. Morris, 6 Car. & P. 620.

A party who knowingly receives a chattel from an executor de son tort, and deals with it as his own, does not himself become thereby executor de son tort. Paull v. Simpson, 9 Q. B. 365 ; 15 L. J., Q. B. 382.

A declaration charging that a lease became vested in the defendant by assignment is supported, without proof of an assignment in fact, by evidence that the lease vested in the defendant as executor de son tort. Ib.

A creditor of an intestate, who receives goods of the intestate, after his death, from his widow, in payment of his debt, cannot protect his possession against an action of trover by the lawful administrator, upon the ground of such delivery having been made by one, who has, by such intermeddling, made herself executrix de son tort ; no fact appearing to give colour to her having acted in that respect in the character of executrix, except the single act of wrong complained of, in which the defendant participated. Mountford v. Gibson, 4 East, 441 ; 1 Smith, 129 ; 7 R. R. 599.

Where an executor obtained a probate of a will, with notice that the testator had made a subsequent will, appointing another executor, and he acted by taking possession of the testator's effects :—Held, that the executor under the second will, who had obtained probate, might maintain trover for the effects so taken possession of. Woolley v. Clarke, 1 D. & R. 409 ; 5 B. & Ald. 744 ; 24 R. R. 546.

If an executor de son tort hands over the property of which he has wrongfully possessed himself to a second person, that person may possibly be sued in equity, but he is not liable as executor de son tort. Hill v. Curtis, 35 L. J., Ch. 133 ; L. R. 1 Eq. 90 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 4 ; 13 L. T. 584 ; 14 W. R. 125.

—— Abroad.]—A person whose sole act of intermeddling is possession of assets of a deceased person in a foreign country, cannot be sued as executor de son tort in England. Beavan v. Hastings (Lord), 2 K. & J. 724 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1044 ; 4 W. R. 735.

Transfer of Shares in English Company to Foreign Executors—Liability of Company.]—A testator, the registered owner of shares and debentures in an English company, was domiciled and died in America. By his will, made according to American law, the shares and debentures passed to his executors. At the request of the executors the company transferred into their names two of the shares and one of the debentures, and paid them the dividends and interest due thereon. The executors, to the knowledge of the company, had not obtained, and did not intend to obtain, probate of the will in England :—Held, that the company had intermeddled with the estate of the deceased so as to constitute itself an executor de son tort, and had rendered itself liable to the payment of probate duty. Att.-Gen. v. New York Breweries Co., 67 L. J., Q. B. 86; [1898] 1 Q. B. 205; 78 L. T. 61; 46 W. R. 193; 62 J. P. 132—C. A.

b. LEGAL POSITION OF.

Liabilities of—Generally.]—An executor de son tort is subject to all the liabilities, but entitled to none of the privileges of an ordinary executor. Carmichael v. Carmichael, 2 Ph. 101; 10 Jur. 908.

An executor de son tort cannot discharge himself from an action brought by a creditor, by delivering over the effects to the rightful executor after the action is brought. Curtis v. Vernon, 3 Term Rep. 587; 2 H. Bl. 18; 1 R. R. 774.

Nor can he retain for his own debt of a higher nature by consent of the rightful executor, given after the bringing of the action by the creditor. Ib.

At law an executor de son tort cannot discharge himself, unless he hands over the property to the rightful representative before action brought. Hill v. Curtis, 35 L. J., Ch. 133; L. R. 1 Eq. 90; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 4; 13 L. T. 584; 14 W. R. 125.

If an executor de son tort hands over the property of which he has wrongfully possessed himself to a second person, that person may possibly be sued in equity, but he is not liable as executor de son tort. Ib.

The rule in equity follows the rule at law, so that if an executor de son tort can prove a settled account with the rightful representative before suit, it is a sufficient answer to a bill in equity against him for an account. Ib.

A person who is sued as an executor, and who pleads plene administravit, although he thereby admits that he is executor, yet that may be that he is only executor de son tort; and an executor de son tort is not liable to the amount of all the property of the testator that would pass by a will, but only for the amount of assets that come to his hands. Yardley v. Arnold, 2 D. (N.S.) 311; 10 M. & W. 141; Car. & M. 434.

A. was sued as executor of his father, and pleaded plene administravit. The father left no will, and was the owner of a leasehold house, and A., after his father's death, received some small sums which had been due to his father, and paid the expenses of his father's funeral:—Held, that A. was not liable for the value of the leasehold house, and was only liable to the extent of the sums he had actually received, against which he had a right to deduct reasonable funeral expenses. Ib.

To an action by a rightful executor against an executor de son tort, the latter cannot plead, by way of equitable defence, plene administravit before the grant of administration to the former. Elworthy v. Sandford, 3 H. & C. 330; 34 L. J., Ex. 42; 10 L. T. 654; 12 W. R. 1008.

Payments made by an administrator de son tort, pending a suit for an account of an intestate's estate, to a person who took out administration after the institution of the suit, and was thereupon made a co-defendant, will not be allowed. Layfield v. Layfield, 7 Sim. 172; 4 L. J., Ch. 2.

A party sued as executor de son tort jointly with the rightful executor, stated by his answer that he had, before the bill was filed, accounted for his receipts and payments to his co-defendant, and paid over to him the balance:—Held, that such settlement would not be binding on the plaintiff, who was beneficially interested in the estate, and therefore the court refused to insert in the decree the usual direction as to not disturbing settled or stated accounts. Such a direction is applicable only to an alleged settlement of accounts between plaintiff and defendant, and not to one between co-defendants. Carmichael v. Carmichael, 2 Ph. 101; 10 Jur. 908.

—— Plea of Plene Administravit.]—Plene administravit by an executor de son tort is no defence, either legal or equitable, in bar of an action of trover, trespass, or for money received, at the suit of the personal representatives of the deceased. Elworthy v. Sandford, 3 H. & C. 330; 34 L. J., Ex. 42; 10 L. T. 654; 12 W. R. 1008.

—— For Debts of Testator.]—The executor de son tort of an executor is liable at common law in respect of the debts of his original testator. Meyrick v. Anderson, 14 Q. B. 719; 19 L. J., Q. B. 231; 14 Jur. 457.

—— Under Covenants in Lease.]—The assignees of the reversion upon a lease sued the defendant for breach of the covenants therein. The lease had been granted to G., who held the demised premises thereunder until his death. His widow administered to his personal estate. At her death H. received the rents of the demised premises, which were let to under-tenants, and upon his death the defendant received the rents. The covenants in the lease granted to G. had been broken:—Held, that the defendant was liable as executor de son tort upon the covenants. Williams v. Heales, 43 L. J., C. P. 80; L. R. 9 C. P. 177; 30 L. T. 20; 22 W. R. 317.

—— Of Executor of.]—An executor of an executor de son tort is not liable for breach of contract committed by the original testator, although the executor de son tort has actually possessed himself of the particular property or effects of the testator in respect of which the contract was entered into. Wilson v. Hodgson, 41 L. J., Ex. 49; L. R. 7 Ex. 84; 20 W. R. 438.

—— When Sued as Administratrix.]—A bill in equity by a creditor to administer the estate of a testator alleged that the testator by his will gave to his wife the use for her life of half his estate, and appointed her guardian of his children; that administration with the will annexed had been granted to her, who was "the only legal personal representative and also heir of the undisposed-of moveables and immoveables," and that she had received and entered into possession of all the real and personal estate of the deceased. Plea, that she was not, nor had ever been, administratrix with the will annexed or the legal personal representative of the deceased:—Held, that if she was not administratrix, she was executrix de son tort, and the bill could be sustained. Plea ordered to stand for an answer, with liberty to except. Rayner v. Koehler, 41 L. J., Ch. 697; L. R. 14 Eq. 262; 27 L. T. 506; 20 W. R. 859.

—— Of Trustee holding Bond and Creditor.]—H. W., as trustee of a marriage settlement, held a bond to secure 1,200*l.* W., his brother, who was a specialty creditor of the obligor, obtained possession of the obligor's assets, and applied them in payment of his own debt and of simple contract debts before administration, which was afterwards granted to the obligor's widow, the sister of W., who was entirely guided by his advice and under his control. Subsequently W. represented to H. W. that only the sum of 600*l.* was forthcoming on foot of the bond. H. W., acting on this statement, retired from the trust, and a memorandum was endorsed on the trust deed, signed by the administratrix and the tenant for life of the trust fund, stating that the sum of 600*l.* only was available to pay the bond, and W. was appointed trustee of the marriage settlement in place of H. W. The assets of the obligor would have been, if properly administered, sufficient to pay the bond in full:—Held, that W. and H. W. were both liable to the full amount of the bond, but that W.'s assets (he having died) were primarily answerable, as he had received the trust fund. Fetherstone H. v. West, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 86.

Held, also, that in such a state of facts it was not necessary to take an account of the assets of the obligor. Ib.

Joint and Several Liability.]—The liability of one executor de son tort for the acts of another executor de son tort is not limited to the extent to which there has been an actual personal receipt of goods or money by the first named wrongful executor; but one executor de son tort may be liable for the acts of another when such acts have been authorised and directed by him. Kenny v. Ryan, [1897] 1 Ir. R. 513.

Validity of Acts of.]—The act of an executor de son tort is good against the true representative of the deceased only where it is lawful, and such an act as the true representative was bound to perform in the due course of administration. Buckley v. Barber, 6 Ex. 164; 20 L. J., Ex. 114; 15 Jur. 63.

Where an executor de son tort really acts in the character of executor, and out of the assets in his hand makes a payment in satisfaction of a debt due from the deceased to a person who at the time might reasonably suppose that he had authority to act as executor, such payment is valid and binding upon the person who afterwards becomes the rightful administrator. Thompson v. Harding, 2 El. & Bl. 630; 22 L. J., Q. B. 448; 18 Jur. 58; 1 W. R. 468.

But acts sufficient to make the executor de son tort chargeable as such, do not necessarily make the payment good against the rightful executor. Ib.

Rights—To Sue.]—Semble, that an executor de son tort has a sufficient title to maintain an action against a mere wrongdoer, for the seizure of a chattel. Oughton v. Seppings, 1 B. & Ad. 241; 8 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 394.

—— To Repudiate Agreement on Subsequent Grant of Administration.]—An executor de son tort, to whom administration is subsequently granted, may repudiate an agreement made by him to surrender a term of years vested in the intestate. Doe d. Hornby v. Glenn, 3 N. & M. 837; 1 A. & E. 49; 3 L. J., K. B. 161.

—— Allowances.]—An executor de son tort is entitled to retain out of the assets of the deceased come to his hands a reasonable sum for funeral expenses. Yardley v. Arnold, 2 D. (N.S.) 311; 10 M. & W. 141; Car. & M. 434.

An executor de son tort may, after action brought by a simple contract creditor, pay a specialty debt, and plead the payment of that debt in bar of the action. Oxenham v. Clapp, 2 B. & Ad. 309; 9 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 229.

A. ordered a pair of boots of B., and paid B. for them. The boots were never delivered to A.; and being in the hands of the journeyman who made them, A. was obliged to pay the journeyman the price of making them before he could get possession of them. A. being sued as executor de son tort of B.:—Held, that he was liable for the value of the boots as executor de son tort, but that he was entitled to be allowed the sum he had paid the journeyman. Hobby v. Ruell, 1 Car. & K. 716.

A., after the death of B., obtained possession of the cattle of B. from C., with whom they were agisted. A. paying C. for the agisting. A. being sued as executor de son tort of B.:—Held, that he was not entitled to any allowance for the sum he paid to C. for the agisting the cattle. Ib.

An executor de son tort is entitled to payments made by him, which would have been allowed in a due course of administration by the rightful executor. McCarthy v. Donovan, 13 Ir. C. L. R. 195.

Action against—Parties.]—The legal personal representative of a testator is a necessary party to a suit for the administration of his real and personal estate; and if he is not a party, no decree can be made in such a suit, even although an executor de son tort and the trustees of the real estate are before the court. Rowsell v. Morris, 43 L. J., Ch. 97; L. R. 17 Eq. 20; 29 L. T. 446; 22 W. R. 67.

A bill stated a will and codicils giving the plaintiff an annuity and appointing an executor, that the executor had proved the will and also previously meddled with the assets, and praying administration. Plea, that he had not proved the will:—Held, that the plea was good, since the only relief that could be given against an executor de son tort, in the absence of the proper executor, is the appointment of a receiver. Cary v. Hills, 42 L. J., Ch. 100; L. R. 15 Eq. 79; 28 L. T. 6; 21 W. R. 166.

A creditor of a testator brought an action against the executors, who had not proved but had got in part of the assets in Australia, alleging that they had paid some of the legacies, but refused to pay the funeral expenses and debts; and also against other defendants, alleging that they had got in a portion of the assets in England, and that they threatened to dispose of such assets without regard to the debts. The plaintiff claimed, as against the executors, administration of the estate and payment of the debts; and against the other defendants he claimed an injunction to restrain them from parting with the assets:—Held, that the executors were rightly sued, although they had not proved; and that the other defendants were properly made parties as executors de son tort. Lovett, In re, Ambler v. Lindsay, 45 L. J., Ch. 768; 3 Ch. D. 198; 35 L. T. 93; 24 W. R. 982.

When a person possesses himself of the assets of a testator or of an intestate without having administered, a bill for an account, to the extent of the specific assets he has received, will lie against him as executor de son tort, though there is no legal personal representative. Coote v. Whittington, 42 L. J., Ch. 846; L. R. 16 Eq. 534; 29 L. T. 206; 21 W. R. 837.

A creditor of an intestate filed a plaint in a county court against the widow and two other persons for administration of his estate, and for an account against them as executors de son tort. On the plaint coming on for hearing, they demurred to it ore tenus, on the ground that the legal personal representative was not before the court. The hearing was then adjourned, and shortly afterwards the plaintiff took out administration. On the case subsequently coming on again for hearing the county court judge dismissed the plaint so far as it sought relief against the defendants, but made a common administration decree, giving the plaintiff leave to amend the plaint by stating the grant of administration. On appeal:—Held, that a bill for an account against an executor de son tort was sustainable, notwithstanding the absence of the legal personal representative. Ib.

—— Pleading.]—When a person has intermeddled with the assets of a testator without authority, he may be sued by a creditor of the estate as executor de son tort, to the extent of the assets he has received; and it is not necessary, to support such an action, to charge him expressly with having acted as executor de son tort; it is sufficient to allege that he has intermeddled with the assets without authority. Lovett, In re, Ambler v. Lindsay (supra).

—— Evidence—Admissibility.]—In trover by an administratrix against A., who had made himself executor de son tort, evidence was received, in mitigation of the damages against A., of payments made by him, which would have been allowed in a due course of administration by a rightful executor:—Held, that such evidence was properly received. M'Carthy v. Donovan, 13 Ir. C. L. R. 195.

Other Matters.]—A., having proved the will of B., in which she supposed herself to be appointed executrix, employed C., an auctioneer, to sell the goods of B. They were sold to D., who, as an inducement to C. to let him remove them without payment, expressly promised to pay C., as soon as the bill should be made out. Probate was afterwards granted to E., the real executrix, who gave D. notice not to pay the price to C. Notwithstanding the express promise, C. cannot sue D. for the price. Dickenson v. Naul, 1 N. & M. 721; 4 B. & Ad. 638.

VIII. MARRIED WOMAN EXECUTRIX OR ADMINISTRATRIX.

Assent of Husband.]—Administration taken by a feme covert must be presumed to be taken with privity and assent of husband. Adair v. Shaw, 1 Sch. & Lef. 266.

Liability of Husband—Devastavit.]—Feme administratrix wastes the assets, then marries, and dies; husband liable to no more than the value of what came to his or his wife's hands after the intermarriage. Sanderson v. Crouch, 2 Vern. 118.

A man marries an executrix; he shall answer for so much of the personal estate as she possessed, though he took it as a portion with her. Bachelor v. Bean, 2 Vern. 61.

How far the second huband is liable to a devastavit or breach of trust of the wife and her first husband. Norton v. Sprig, 1 Vern. 309.

The defaults of a feme trustee and executrix are chargeable to her husband. Smith's Estate, In re, 48 L. J., Ch. 205.

The husband of an executrix or administratrix is liable for all the assets received or devastavits committed by himself or by his wife during the coverture, and his estate remains liable after his death. Smith v. Smith, 21 Beav. 385.

The husband of an executrix, who was liable for a breach of trust, made his wife and two others his executrix and executors. They possessed themselves of all his assets:—Held, that the husband's liability was not satisfied by the circumstance of his widow uniting in herself the two characters. Ib.

In a suit to charge the husband's assets, an inquiry as to the amount of such assets received by her was refused:—Held, that her legal personal representative was not a necessary party. Ib.

Husband, though parted from his wife, charged in equity with his wife's wasting of goods, which were devised to her for her lifetime. Paget v. Read, 1 Vern. 143.

—— Admission of Assets.]—Executrix marries, and her husband and she admit assets in answer to a bill filed against them. The assets become a debt of the husband in respect of this admission, and may be proved under a commission of bankruptcy issued against him. M'Williams, In re, 1 Sch. & Lef. 173.

—— Liability of his Estate.]—Although the husband of an administratrix may have become liable to make good to the next of kin of the intestate the assets received by himself or his wife during the coverture, yet if the husband, at his death, makes his wife his executrix, and she possesses assets more than sufficient to answer the demands of the next of kin, after paying the other debts, the estate of the husband is discharged; and, therefore, the next of kin cannot sue an administrator cum testamento annexo of the husband. Tyler v. Bell, 2 Myl. & C. 89; 1 Keen, 826; 6 L. J., Ch. 169.

—— Where he Participates in a Breach of Trust.]—Where, upon administration granted to A. and B., A. being a feme covert, the fund was invested in the names of B. and the husband of A. at a banker's to be paid out upon their joint cheques; and, after the death of the husband of A., B. drew out the fund and absconded:—Held, that the husband of the administratrix, having by such deposit put it out of her control, and, on his death, enabled B. to appropriate the money without the control of his co-administratrix, had been guilty of a breach of trust, and his estate was liable to make the fund good. Clough v. Bond, 3 Myl. & C. 490; 8 L. J., Ch. 51; 2 Jur. 958.

Liability of Wife.]—A feme covert executrix answering separately from the husband, is not exempted by her coverture from rendering an account of the assets come to her hands. Pemberton v. M'Gill, 25 L. J., Ch. 49; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1045; 4 W. R. 1.

M., being a married woman living separate from her husband, who was living abroad, was appointed executrix, and one of the residuary legatees of the testatrix. She took possession of some of the assets, sold part, and applied part to her own use, without having ever proved the will. A co-executor proved the will, and filed a bill for an account, and to carry out the trusts of the will:—Held, that the defendant was bound.

to account, not only for the articles taken possession of by her, but for the application thereof, and of the moneys arising therefrom. Ib.

—— For Devastavit of Husband.]—A married woman executrix proving the will and surviving her husband, is liable for a devastavit committed by her husband during their joint lives. Soady v. Turnbull, 35 L. J., Ch. 784; L. R. 1 Ch. 494; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 612; 14 L. T. 813; 14 W. R. 955. S. P., Adair v. Shaw, 1 Sch. & Lef. 266.

During coverture, probate was granted to a feme executrix, who was also a legatee under the will. The husband died insolvent, leaving the wife surviving, who died leaving assets:—Held, that the wife's assets were liable to make good the joint receipts of herself and her husband during coverture. Ib.

—— After Decree for Payment.]—A decree in an administration suit instituted against husband and wife, executor and executrix, directed the payment by the husband and wife of a sum of money. The husband having died, the wife surviving may be personally liable for the amount of this decree. Dunne v. Doyle, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 502.

—— After Proof against Bankrupt Husband's Estate.]—If the husband of a feme covert executrix commits a devastavit, and becomes bankrupt, the wife surviving is not liable. Beynon v. Gollins, 2 Bro. C. C. 323.

Payment to—Discharge of Debtor—Co-executor.]—Payment by a debtor of a testator, and delivery by a bailee of chattels bailed by a testator, to a feme covert who is appointed executrix, are valid as against her co-executor, though the husband of the executrix never assented to his wife acting as executrix, and, subsequently to the payment, refused to allow her to act, and although on that ground probate was refused to her, if the payment and delivery were made bonâ fide, at the request of the executrix as such, without knowledge by the party paying and delivering of the dissent of the husband, though with knowledge that she was a feme covert. Pemberton v. Chapman, 7 El. & Bl. 210; 26 L. J., Q. B. 117; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 339. Affirmed on appeal, El. Bl. & El. 1056; 27 L. J., Q. B. 429; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 567; 6 W. R. 769—Ex. Ch.

Other Matters.]—The husband of an administratrix is in a fiduciary position, and cannot purchase from a co-administratrix, without the consent of all the cestuis que trustent. Pepperell, In re, Pepperell v. Chamberlain, 27 W. R. 410.

Where one of such cestuis que trustent objected to such a purchase, and after a lapse of about fourteen months took legal proceedings to set it aside:—Held, that the purchaser not having been induced to change his position by reason of the plaintiff's delay, the plaintiff was entitled to have such sale set aside, notwithstanding his delay. Ib.

IX. INFANT EXECUTOR OR ADMINISTRATOR.

Prior to 22 & 23 Car. 11, c. 10.]—Though prior to the statute an infant might administer at seventeen, he could not commit a devastavit until twenty-one. Whitmore v. Weld, 1 Vern. 328; 2 Ch. Ca. 167; 2 Ch. Rep. 363.

Since 38 Geo. 3, c. 87, s. 6.]—Where an infant is sole executor, administration shall be granted to the guardian, or such person as the spiritual court thinks fit, till the infant is twenty-one, at which time, and not before, probate shall be granted to him. Sergison, Ex parte, 4 Ves. 149, note (b).

If letters of administration be granted to an infant, under which he receives and disposes of the assets of the intestate, an account cannot be directed in respect of his receipts during infancy. Hindmarsh v. Southgate, 3 Russ. 324; 27 R. R. 81. And see 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 24.

Executor de son tort.]—An executor, an infant, who never proved the will, received during his infancy assets of the testator, and paid them to the tenant for life, by whom they were lost:—Held, that by reason of his infancy at the time of the receipt, he was under no liability to account for them. Stott v. Meanock, 31 L. J., Ch. 746; 6 L. T. 592; 10 W. R. 605—C. A.

X. ADMINISTRATION.

a. ASSETS.

1. Legal or Equitable.

Distinction — Generally.]—Equitable assets, when they come into the hand of the executors in money, are legal assets. Marston v. Downes, 1 A. & E. 31; 3 N. & M. 861; 6 Car. & P. 381.

That which an administrator is entitled to receive as administrator virtute officii can never be equitable assets; and in considering whether assets are legal or equitable, the question is not whether the money is recoverable through the agency of a court of equity or a court of law, but whether it is money which the personal representative is entitled to recover independently of any directions of the testator. Att.-Gen. v. Brunning, 8 H. L. Cas. 243; 30 L. J., Ex. 379; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1083; 3 L. T. 36; 8 W. R. 362.

Distinction between legal and equitable assets, an equity of redemption of an equitable charge on real estate is legal assets because the money is recoverable by the executor, virtute officii. Cook v. Gregson, 3 Drew. 547; 25 L. J., Ch. 706; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 510; 4 W. R. 581.

A testator died in 1842, entitled in reversion to a moiety of a settled fund of personalty. His other property, consisting of real estate charged by his will with debts, was administered by the court. In 1858, the reversion fell into possession, the trustees of the settlement paid the money into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and the testator's moiety was paid out to his executors:—Held, that this fund was distributable as legal assets. Mutlow v. Mutlow, 4 De G. & J. 539.

Held, also, that the fund must bear a share of the costs of suit which had been paid out of the equitable assets. Ib.

Equitable—Charge.]—Charge for payment of debts makes equitable assets. Bailey v. Ekins, 7 Ves. 319. S. P., Shiphard v. Lutwidge, 8 Ves. 26. Pope v. Gwyn, Dick. 683; 8 Ves. 28, n. Silk v. Prime, 1 Bro. C. C. 138, n.; Dick. 384. Wride v. Clarke, Dick. 382.

Held, upon the construction of a will, that a primary direction for payment of all the testator's debts rendered his real property equitable assets, such direction not being controlled by a subsequent disposition of his personal estate expressly subject to the payment of all his debts, &c. Price v. North, 5 Jur. 1147. And see further cases under CHARGE OR TRUST FOR PAYMENT OF DEBTS, X. b. 2, post., col. 1450.

—— Devise for Payment of Debts.]—Testator ordered his estate to be sold, and after giving a legacy to his wife, directs the remainder to be vested in the executors for the payment of debts; the money arising from the sale is equitable assets. Lucas v. Culcraft, 1 Bro. C. C. 135.

Devise to sell the residue after payment of debts, and the money to be part of the personal estate; upon a total insolvency, held to be equitable assets. Batson v. Lindergreen, 2 Bro. C. C. 94.

Where a trader devised real estate to his executor for sale, and with directions to convert all his property into personalty, and after payment of his debts to invest the residue in the funds, or in real securities:—Held, that the real estates were equitable assets for the payment of debts. Shakels v. Richardson, 2 Coll. C. C. 31.

A testator devised his real estate to trustees and their heirs, upon trust to sell, and after declaring his will to be that the clear money arising from such sale should sink into and become part of his personal estate, he gave and bequeathed the same, and also his stock, crops, goods and effects whatsoever, to the same trustees, their executors and administrators, upon trust, after converting the same into money, and paying all his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, to pay legacies and dispose of the residue. This is substantially a devise for payment of debts within the fourth section of the Statute of Fraudulent Devises, 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 14; the produce of the real estate, therefore, is equitable assets, and the specialty creditors having exhausted the personal estate, the simple contract creditors are entitled to have the assets marshalled in their favour. Soames v. Robinson, 1 Myl. & K. 500; 2 L. J. Ch., 153.

A testator devised a freehold house to his son A. (whom he appointed one of his executors), charged with a sum of money, payable within twelve months after his death, to be applied in payment of debts and legacies:—Held, equitable assets in the hands of the executors though not available for distribution till the expiration of the twelve months. Luce v. Peskett, 16 C. B. 500; 24 L. J., C. P. 196; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1049; 3 W. R. 481.

A. made a promissory note, payable, on demand, to his son B., and devised to B. a freehold house charged with 240*l.*, to be raised within a year after his death, and paid to his executors for the liquidation of debts or legacies; and he made B. and C. his executors. The executors proved the will, and B. took possession of the house, and afterwards indorsed the note to D., who sued the executors thereon. To this action B. pleaded plene administravit; and C. pleaded that the note was made payable to B. on demand, and that it was indorsed by B. to D. after the death of the testator, and that B., at the time of such indorsement, had assets of the testator in his hands, whereby the note was satisfied. The only assets that ever came to the hands of B. consisting of the 240*l.* charged upon the house devised to him:—Held, that the plea was not proved; for, that the allegation that B. had assets of the testator in his hands at the time of the indorsement of the note, was a material allegation, and meant legal assets presently available; and the sum of 240*l.* was not legal, but equitable assets, and not available as assets until the expiration of the year. Ib.

—— For Payment of Legacies.]—Money arising from the sale of lands devised to the executors in trust to sell for the payment of legacies, constitutes equitable and not legal assets, and cannot be sued for in the ecclesiastical court. Barker v. May, 4 Man. & Ry. 386; 9 B. & C. 489.

—— Proceeds of Realty under Administration.]—The proceeds of the sale of a testator's real estate, directed by him to be sold for payment of debts, the sale being made under an order of the court in an administration, are equitable assets. Bain v. Sadler, 40 L. J., Ch. 791; L. R. 12 Eq. 570; 25 L. T. 202; 19 W. R. 1077. Not following Loregrove v. Cooper, infra.

The proceeds of real estate directed by the court to be sold for payment of debts, and paid by the purchaser into court, held legal assets. Loregrove v. Cooper, 2 Sm. & G. 271.

—— Unpaid Purchase Money.]—A testator, having no real estate at the time of his death, but being entitled to the unpaid purchase-money of realty contracted to be sold by him during his life, made a will by which he directed all the residue of his furniture, chattels, and effects to be sold by his executors, and, after payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, he directed the balance of the proceeds of such sale, and also all other moneys or securities for money of which he might die possessed, and all other his personal property, to be divided between two persons whom he appointed his executors. The estate was insolvent, and the executor proposed to retain his own debt out of the proceeds of sale which had been paid into court:—Held, that by the words of the will the proceeds of sale were constituted equitable assets, and that the executor had no right of retainer. Duignan v. Croome, 41 L. T. 672.

—— Amount Received on Bond.]—A bond was given by a broker to the corporation of London, to secure the due performance of his duties. He made default:—Held, on his death, that the corporation held the amount recovered on the bond as equitable assets, and in trust for the general body of his creditors, and not exclusively for those who had suffered by his defaults. Nuish v. Bryant, 25 Beav. 533; 27 L. J., Ch. 748; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 550; 6 W. R. 573.

Money Paid into Court.]—Moneys arising under a will and paid by the executors into court in a creditor's suit, held legal assets. Loregrove v. Cooper, 2 Sm. & G. 271.

Property situate Abroad.]—The compensation fund for slaves in Jamaica is legal assets for the payment of creditors. Lyon v. Colville, 1 Coll. C. C. 449.

Although West India estates are made legal assets by 5 Geo. 2, c. 7, s. 4, they may be devised so as to make them equitable assets. Charlton v. Wright, 12 Sim. 274.

Equity of Redemption — Freeholds.]—An equity of redemption of a mortgage in fee is not equitable assets, at least not as against judgment creditors, who have a right to redeem. Sharpe v. Scarborough (Earl), 4 Ves. 538.

The equity of redemption of a mortgage in fee is made legal assets by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, by the proviso in the act saving the preference of a creditor by specialty in which the heirs are named. Foster v. Handley, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 200; 15 Jur. 73. But see now Hinde Palmer's Act, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 46.

—— Chattels Real.]—Equity of redemption of a leasehold estate is equitable assets. Hartwell v. Chitters, Ambl. 308. See also Cox's Case, 3 P. W. 341.

A lease which belonged to an intestate, and on which the plaintiff has a lien, is nevertheless to be considered as assets in the hands of the administrator, who has the power to redeem it, as well as to dispose of the legal estate. Vincent v. Sharp, 2 Stark. 507.

Notwithstanding the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 46, the produce of the sale of an equity of redemption in a chattel real constitutes legal assets, whether the testator has or has not charged all his property with the payment of his debts. Hanley v. McDermott, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 35.

—— Leaseholds for Lives.]—Surplus produce of the sale under the court of leaseholds for lives mortgaged by the testator held legal and not equitable assets. Christy v. Courtenay, 26 Beav. 140.

—— Sub-mortgage.]—An equity of redemption in a sum of money charged on real estate is a legal asset. Cook v. Gregson, 3 Drew. 547; 25 L. J., Ch. 706; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 510; 4 W. R. 581.

A testator died possessed of an equity of redemption of an equitable charge upon real estate:—Held, that although the testator's interest was equitable, the money was recoverable by the executor virtute officii, and it must therefore be regarded as legal, and not equitable assets. Ib. See also Hue v. French, 3 Drew. 716; 26 L. J., Ch. 317; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 428.

Distinction between legal and equitable assets. Ib.

—— Copyholds.]—In the case of a testator who died before the 1st of January, 1870, the equity of redemption in copyholds is to be administered as legal assets under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104. Burrell, In re, Burrell v. Smith, 39 L. J., Ch. 544; L. R. 9 Eq. 443; 22 L. T. 263.

Surplus arising from Sale of Mortgage Property.]—C., in consideration of a loan of 400*l.*, mortgaged his real estate in fee to W. & Co., in trust to sell the same; and, after repaying themselves, to pay over the surplus to himself, his executors or administrators; before the sale was effected C. died, after making his will, by which he devised all his real and personal estates to trustees, whom he also appointed his executors in trust to sell the same, and pay debts and discharge incumbrances. In the lifetime of these trustees, W. & Co., the original mortgagees, sold the estate, and paid over the surplus into the hands of the testator's trustees and executors' attorney. Before the money was disposed of, the trustees and executors, and also their attorney, died; and the plaintiffs took out administration de bonis non, with the will of C. annexed, and sued the attorney's executors for money had and received:—Held, that the money in the hands of the latter was equitable and not legal assets; and, consequently, could not be recovered at law. Clay v. Willis, 2 D. & R. 539; 1 B. & C. 364; 1 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 144.

Surplus produce of the sale under the court of leaseholds for lives mortgaged by the testator held legal and not equitable assets. Christy v. Courtenay, 26 Beav. 140.

Separate Estate of Married Women.]—In the distribution of separate property of a married woman as assets after her death, a bond not entitled to priority. Anon., 18 Ves. 258.

A court of equity, having created for married women a right to separate estate, has enabled them to contract debts in respect of it; and although the persons of married women cannot be made liable to their debts, either at law or in equity, their separate estate may, in equity, be rendered so liable; and a court of equity will give execution against such separate estate, just as a court of law gives execution against the property of other debtors. There is no sound distinction, either in principle or upon the authorities, between the specialty and simple contract debts of a married woman as to the liability of her separate estate for the same respectively, semble. Johnson v. Gallagher, 3 De G. F. & J. 494; 30 L. J., Ch. 298; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 273; 4 L. T. 72; 9 W. R. 506.

—— Married Women's Property Act, 1870.]—The separate estate of a married woman in earnings, under the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, becomes upon her death equitable assets and divisible amongst her creditors pari passu, so that her executor has no right to retain in full his own debt thereout. Poole, In re, Thompson v. Bennett, 46 L. J., Ch. 803; 6 Ch. D. 739; 37 L. T. 119; 25 W. R. 862.

2. What Forms Part of Estate.

Funds in the Hands of Representative.]—Where an executor proves a will, probate has reference back to the death of the testator, and what was then in the hands of the executor is assets for the payment of the testator's debts. Ingle v. Richards, 28 Beav. 366; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 117; 8 W. R. 697.

Money received by an executrix for the goodwill of a public-house is assets in her hands. Worral v. Hand, Peake, 74.

As against an administrator, debts due to the intestate are not to be considered as assets till actually received, although not stated in the administrator's inventory to be desperate. Giles v. Dyson, 1 Stark. 32; 18 R. R. 743.

A remittance in bills and notes for a specific purpose, viz. to answer acceptance received by the administrator, in consequence of the death of the party to whom it was remitted:—Held, not general assets, the special purpose operating a lien, which would also be the effect upon a bankruptcy. Hassall v. Smithers, 12 Ves. 119.

Devise to trustees and their heirs during the life of A. in trust for A., and after his decease to B. in fee. The trustees recover, in his lifetime, damages for breach of covenants in a lease granted by the testatrix, and still subsisting. A. dies. The damages belong to her estate. Noble v. Cass, 2 Sim. 343; 29 R. R. 115.

—— Fund Paid out of Court in respect of Costs.]—A. commenced a suit in chancery for an account under a will, in which she employed as her solicitors, first B., then C., who successively gave up the suit, and then D., who continued to conduct it till her death in 1829. After her death, E., her executor, filed a bill of revivor and D. continued to conduct the suit for him. In 1833, a decree was made, whereby it was ordered that the master should settle the costs of all the parties; and that the same, when taxed and settled, should be paid out of the fund in the following manner, viz. the plaintiff's costs (consisting of the costs both of A. and E.) to D., his solicitor; and the costs of the defendants to their several solicitors. The plaintiff's costs were taxed, and certain sums in respect of them were paid to D. C. sued E. as executor of A. for the amount of his bill, and had judgment of assets quando acciderint. He afterwards brought another action on the judgment, and had given notice of trial; and it was then agreed between them, that, on C.'s withdrawing the record, E. would then pay him 100*l.* on account of his bill, and the remainder out of the assets which should first come to his hands as executor of A.; and the record was accordingly withdrawn. A further sum was afterwards paid out of the Court of Chancery to D., in respect of the same costs:—Held, that this sum was assets in the hands of E., within the meaning of the agreement. Smedley v. Philpot, 3 M. & W. 573; 1 H. & H. 302; 7 L. J., Ex. 314.

—— Policy of Insurance.]—A testator, being indebted to R., deposited with him a policy of insurance on the testator's life, as security for the debt, and for a further advance then made by R., and died, leaving R. and M. his executors; R., still holding the policy, applied to the insurers for the amount due on it (200*l.*), which they refused to pay, unless R. and M. gave a receipt for it, as executors. They did so, R. making protest that he signed it as executor merely to satisfy the insurers. In an action by a judgment creditor, to which the executors pleaded plene administraverunt except as to 4*l.* (the surplus out of the 200*l.* after payment to R.):—Held, that the executors were not chargeable with the 200*l.* as assets, but only with the surplus after payment to R. Glaholme v. Rowntree, 6 A. & E. 710; 2 N. & P. 557; 7 L. J., Q. B. 23.

—— Inscribed Shares—Incomplete Gift.]—This court will not assist a volunteer by making effectual an incomplete gift. Weale v. Ollive, 17 Beav. 252.

A. B. directed the certificates of some United States bank shares standing in his name to be delivered to his nephew, and in a letter to him, stated that "he made a free gift of them" to him. A. B. also executed a power for transferring the shares, but which was not acted on in A. B.'s life. The shares, being found in A. B.'s name at his death, were held to form part of his personal estate. Ib.

—— Trust Fund—Mortmain Act.]—Sums invested by the testatrix in stock, and other sums placed by her in the savings bank, were the produce of moneys which had been partly collected and partly appropriated by the testatrix for the purpose of building and endowing a church in a certain parish. The stock had been invested in the names of the testatrix and of another person. At the time of the decease of the testatrix no deed appointing or declaring the trusts of the money had been executed, and no site for the intended church had been obtained:—Held, that the money and stock were at the death of the testatrix part of her personal estate, and that the liability either of the money or the stock to any charitable use was excluded by the statute 9 Geo. 2, c. 36. Girdlestone v. Creed, 10 Hare, 480.

Exception to statute 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, in the case of a bequest of moneys to the extent of 500*l.* for building or endowing a church. Ib.

—— Bona Vacantia.]—Earl Ellenborough held the office of chief clerk of the Queen's Bench from 1811 to 1838, when the office was abolished by 1 Vict. c. 30. During that time he received the suitors' funds paid into court, and invested them in exchequer bills, and received the interest for his own benefit, but from the date of a report of a select committee of the House of Commons in 1834, the earl, in deference to the report, left the accumulations of interest standing to a separate account at his banker's. He died in 1871:—Held, that the executors were not entitled to the accumulated fund, and that it belonged to the crown. Colchester v. Law, 43 L. J., Ch. 80; L. R. 16 Eq. 253.

Mortgages and Mortgage Money.]—Mortgage money should go to executors or administrators, and not to heir; for equity follows the law. At law, if conditions of mortgages are so penned as not to mention either heirs or executors, there money shall be paid to executors for it came out of personal estate. Thornborough v. Baker, 1 Ch. Ca. 283. S. C., 2 Freem. 143; 3 Swan. 628. And see Ellis v. Guavas, 2 Ch. Ca. 50; Winne v. Littleton. id. 51; Noy v. Ellis, id. 220; Turner v. Turner. 1 Ch. Rep. 115; Pawlett v. Att.-Gen., Hardr. 467.

Where upon mortgage the money is made payable to the heir or executor, in that case, before or at the day of payment, the mortgagor may elect to pay it to either, but after the day is past, and the mortgage is forfeited at law, though equity will relieve the mortgagor on payment of the money, yet it will not revive the election, for the mortgagor must then pay it to the executor, because it came out of the personal fund; so if neither heir nor executor be named, the money shall be paid to the executor. Rightson v. Overton, 2 Freem. 20.

A forfeited mortgage in fee decreed to be personal estate, and to belong to the executor, and not to the heir. Canning v. Hicks, 1 Vern. 412; 2 Ch. Ca. 187.

If mortgage in fee is made, it will descend to heir of mortgagee in trust for executors. Anon, 2 Eq. Abr. 592.

Money due on a mortgage in fee, paid to the heir of the mortgagee, was recovered from him by the executor. Tabor v. Tabor, 3 Swan. 636.

Residuary legatee having been admitted to a copyhold estate, was in possession above nineteen years when the heir obtained possession by ejectment. After acquiescence for nine years, the residuary legatee filed a bill claiming estate as having been a redeemable interest in the testator; and having been treated as such, it was so decreed. Hardy v. Reeves, 4 Ves. 466.

Surrender by mortgagee of copyholds to the use of his will is no proof that he considered it irredeemable. Ib. 480.

Semble, that a mortgage for years, of which a testator has been in possession for upwards of twenty years, without recovering interest, and without any claim being made in respect of the equity of redemption, ought in the administration of assets to be considered as leasehold. Hearn v. Wells, 1 Coll. C. C. 323.

A. B. makes a mortgage in fee, and dies intestate and without heirs:—Held, that the equity of redemption does not escheat to the crown, but belongs to the mortgagee, subject to the debts. Beale v. Symonds, 16 Beav. 406; 22 L. J., Ch. 708; 1 W. R. 137.

A. B. died in 1831, intestate and without heirs, having mortgaged his estate in fee:—Held, that the mortgagee could not, in 1852, make a good title to the fee; for, although he took the equity of redemption as against the crown, yet he held it subject to A. B.'s debts, and there was no proof of their having been satisfied. Observations on the case of Downe (Viscount) v. Morris, 3 Hare, 394. Ib.

—— Of Lunatic.]—It is a rule never to change the property of a lunatic, nor to effect any alteration as to the succession to it. Money of a lunatic lent in discharge of incumbrances of his estate in Scotland shall go as personal in England. Annandale, Ex parte, Ambl. 81.

A representative must take his interest as fortune has directed it, and has no equity to vary it: therefore, where a lunatic dies entitled to an estate, and also to a charge upon it, the heir takes it discharged; a trust term to secure the charge makes no difference; for it remains inert, unless required to be executed for proper purposes; the trustees have no discretion. Oxenden v. Compton (Lord), 2 Ves. J. 260; 4 Bro. C. C. 397. And see S. C., 2 Ves. J. 69; 2 R. R. 131.

—— Of Husband and Wife.]—Husband lends out money in the names of himself and his wife, upon mortgages and bonds, and dies. The wife is entitled to this by survivorship, if there are assets sufficient without this money to pay debts. Christ's Hospital v. Budgin, 2 Vern. 683.

A feme covert being entitled to 1,400*l.* on a mortgage in fee, husband articles to lay out this money in a purchase of land, to be settled as a provision for him and his wife, and their issue; the wife dies without issue; the husband takes out administration to her, and by will devises this money to the plaintiffs before payment of it, and dies. On a bill brought against the administrator de bonis non, &c., of the wife:—Held, that there could be no relief, the law being with the defendants. This money belonged to the administrator de bonis non, &c., of the wife, and is distributable amongst her next of kin. Burnett v. Kinaston, Pre. Ch. 118; 2 Vern. 401; 2 Freem. 239.

—— Of Tenant for Life.]—Tenant for life, with remainder to trustees to preserve, &c., remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, remainder to himself in fee, became entitled to a charge upon the estate, and died without issue and intestate:—Held, the charge should go to his next of kin as personalty, and not be considered as merged for the benefit of his heir, to whom the estate descended. Wyndham v. Egremont, Ambl. 753.

—— Land Tax Redeemed.]—A. being under a settlement tenant for life in remainder, after prior estates for life and in tail, with remainder to his own first and other sons in tail, with an ultimate remainder in fee, which afterwards became vested in the first tenant for life, redeemed the land tax upon the settled estate during the life of the first tenant for life, and took an assignment to himself under the Land Tax Act. The prior tenant for life afterwards died without issue, having devised to A. the ultimate fee; and A. being in a dying state, and having no issue, made his will and devised the fee of the settled estate without declaring any intention with respect to the land redeemed. The land tax at his death continues to be part of his personal estate. Trevor v. Trevor, 2 Myl. & K. 675.

—— Intention, Effect of Manifestation of.]—A man having mortgages, one of which was a mortgage in fee of lands in D., on which he had entered, devises those lands to his two daughters and their heirs, and the other mortgages to them, their executors, &c. One of the daughters dies; her share of the land in D. shall go to her heir, and not to the administrator. Noys v. Mordaunt, 2 Vern. 582. And see Forrester v. Cotten, Ambl. 388; 1 Eden, 532. But see 1 Swan. 408, n.

A man purchases absolutely of a mortgagee in fee in possession, and dies; as between his heir and executor, it shall be considered as real estate, and go to the heir. Cotton v. Iles, 1 Vern. 271; Barnard. 46.

Debt due from Executor.]—A debt due by an executor is assets. Simmons v. Guttridge, 13 Ves. 264.

—— When Released.]—A. borrowed 1,100*l.* from his stepmother, upon an agreement that the debt should be paid by deductions of 100*l.* from each quarterly payment which she made him for her board. After two deductions had been made, she declared she would make no more, and thenceforward continued to pay the quarterly sums in full. She appointed him sole executor of her will, which contained no disposition of her residuary estate:—Held, that although, in order to have an effectual release in equity of a debt, there must be an actual legal release or transfer of the property, in this case the debt was satisfied on two grounds: first, because the appointment of the debtor as executor operated as a release at law, and all claim in equity to recover the debt was prevented by the intention of the testatrix to release it; and, secondly, because the testatrix by making the full quarterly payments had actually completed the gift of the instalments she was entitled to retain. Strong v. Bird, 43 L. J., Ch. 814; L. R. 18 Eq. 315; 30 L. T. 745; 22 W. R. 788.

Debts due to the Testator—Release.]—Notwithstanding declaration of the testator to his executor, that he never meant to call for payment of a promissory note, it was held part of the assets, which were insufficient for the legacies; a charge on the real estate failing for want of a proper attestation of the will. Byrn v. Godfrey, 4 Ves. 6; 4 R. R. 155.

A legatee, son-in-law to testator, was held entitled to his legacy, discharged from debts due by him to the testator and a debt for which the testator was his surety, upon evidence from the testator's accounts, letters, and memoranda in his handwriting. Eden v. Smyth, 5 Ves. 341; 5 R. R. 60.

Annuity.]—A. granted to B. an annuity (in consideration of purchase of trade stock) for their joint lives, and for the life of A. and B.'s wife, unless B. should transfer it in his lifetime. It was provided that B. should have a right to sell his wife's reversionary interest as if it were payable to him in præsenti. B. was indebted at the time of the transaction, and it being determined, after B.'s death, without having alienated the annuity, that the wife's reversionary interest was assets for B.'s creditors, it was afterwards determined that it was legal assets. Shee v. French, 3 Drew. 716; 26 L. J., Ch. 317; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 428.

The 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, schedule, part 3, imposes an ad valorem duty on letters of administration where the estate is above 20*l.* in value, exclusive of what the deceased shall have been possessed of or entitled to as a trustee, and not beneficially. An intestate had granted an annuity to A., and afterwards by deed conveyed his property to B., who covenanted to indemnify him against the payment of the annuity. Default having been subsequently made in the payment during the intestate's lifetime, the annuitant sued his administratrix, and recovered judgment for debt and costs exceeding 20*l.* The administratrix paid this, and then sued B. on his covenant for the amount:—Held, that the right to recover this sum was a part of the intestate's estate, and rendered the letters of administration liable to stamp duty: and that the intestate, if he had lived, could not have been considered, in respect of that sum, as a mere trustee for the annuitant, and having no beneficial interest. Carr v. Roberts, 2 B. & Ad. 905; 1 L. J., K. B. 33.

—— Charged on Lands.]—A testatrix bequeathed an annuity to E., her executors, administrators, and assigns, to be charged upon lands that were then held for years with a perpetual covenant for renewal. After the death of the testatrix a perpetuity grant of the lands was made to her executors. Subsequently E. died intestate:—Held, that the annuity formed part of E.'s personal estate. Martin v. Haynes, 29 L. R. Ir. 416.

—— Insurance by Grantee.]—By a deed dated in 1822, A., in consideration of 600*l.*, granted an annuity of 64*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* to B. for ninety-nine years if A.'s wife should so long live. And by the same deed the wife granted the rents, issues, and profits of copyhold property to which she was entitled for her separate use to B. during her life, upon trust to pay and retain the annuity thereout, and such premiums of insurance as therein mentioned, and subject thereto to account for the residue to the wife. By this deed A. covenanted for his wife's title, for her appearance at any insurance office selected by B., and that she should not during the continuance of the annuity go beyond the seas without notice to B. to enable him to pay the additional premiums. There was a power of sale and a power for A. to repurchase the annuity upon payment of 600*l.* and all arrears of the annuity. B. insured the wife's life for 600*l.* at a premium of 16*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* It was not in dispute that the annuity of 64*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* was made up of this premium and 48*l.* or eight per cent. upon the 600*l.* The representatives of B. entered into possession of the copyhold hereditaments soon after the death of B. in 1824, and had remained in possession down to the present time. After the death of A. and his wife, in a suit by the wife's representative against B.'s representatives for an account of the rents and profits and for redemption of the copyholds and the policy, which had greatly increased in value by means of bonuses:—Held, that the policy did not constitute a security in which A. or his wife had any redeemable interest, and that the surplus proceeds of the policy, after payment of the 600*l.* and all arrears of the annuity, formed part of B.'s personal estate. Preston v. Neele, 12 Ch. D. 760; 40 L. T. 303; 27 W. R. 642.

Payment to Widow for obtaining Appointments.]—The widow of a surgeon, who died intestate, agreed with R., in consideration of 600*l.*, to obtain for him certain appointments held by her late husband. The widow subsequently renounced her right to take out letters of administration to her husband's estate:—Held, that the whole of the 600*l.* belonged to the intestate's estate. Jones v. Jones, 30 L. T. 254.

License for Cart.]—Benefit of license to keep a cart is personalty, and belongs to executor. Hunt v. Hunt, 2 Vern. 83.

Newspaper.]—A share in a newspaper shall be considered as the personal property of the proprietor, and the profits of printing the same, subsequent to his death, be distributed accordingly. Gibblett v. Read, 9 Mod. 459.

Office.]—The grant of a menial office in the House of Lords, for a term of years, liable to creditors, and a daily fee or allowance held to be also subject to their demands. Schellinger v. Blackerby, 1 Ves. Sen. 347.

Property in Settlement set aside for Fraud.]—A suit to set aside a settlement as fraudulent against creditors entertained where the plaintiff subsequently became a creditor by a breach of a covenant previously entered into by the settlor. Where a deed is set aside as fraudulent against creditors, the property becomes assets, and subsequent creditors are let in. Richardson v. Smallwood, Jac. 552.

Property Abroad.]—By the laws of Antigua, all deeds relating to estates within that island must be registered there, in order to make them effectual; and by the same laws all the stock, utensils, erections, and buildings, upon a plantation, are subject and liable to the payment of debts, except negroes and other slaves, which are deemed to be affixed to the freehold, and cannot be sold for that purpose, unless there is a deficiency of general assets. Order of the Lord Chancellor partly reversed, but for the most part affirmed. Meynell v. Moore, 4 Bro. P. C. 103. And see Rucker, Ex parte and In re, 3 Deac. & C. 704.

Freehold lands in Gibraltar are not assets for the payment of simple contract debts. Jephson v. Riera, 3 Knapp, 143.

—— Confiscation.]—The plaintiff's testator's property in America being confiscated, subject to his debts, a creditor there ought first to apply to make that property available for payment of his debt before he sues him personally here. (Sed quære. See 6 Ves. 714.) Wright v. Nutt, 3 Bro. C. C. 326.

—— Colonial Assets — Payment of Colonial Duties.] — A testator domiciled in England, whose assets consisted of considerable personalty in England and also of realty leaseholds and personalty in Australia, by his will, after bequeathing pecuniary legacies of considerable amount, gave his residuary real and personal estate upon trust for such of his five children as should be living at his death, in equal shares, the share of each child being settled upon him or her for life with remainder to his or her children, with power for his trustees to manage and cultivate his real and leasehold estates until sold :— Held, that the duties due to the Government of South Australia were not, like the duties of the English Government, payable out of the share of each child, but were part of the costs of realisation, and were therefore payable out of the testator's general assets before distribution. Maurice, In re, Brown v. Maurice, 75 L. T. 415. S. P. Peter v. Stirling, 10 Ch. D. 279 ; 27 W. R. 469.

And see WILL—REVENUE.

Property Appointed.] — A. had a power to charge a sum of money on land, by deed or will, and executed it by a voluntary deed. The court, in favour of the creditors of A., will consider it as personal assets and lay hold of it for their benefit. Pack v. Bathurst, 3 Atk. 269.

A general power of appointment over an estate, in lieu of a present interest in it, having been executed voluntarily, though for a daughter, was held to be assets in favour of creditors. Townshend v. Windham, 2 Ves. Sen. 1. S. P. Thompson v. Towne, 2 Vern. 319 ; Pre. Ch. 52 ; Troughton v. Troughton. 3 Atk. 656 ; 1 Ves. Sen. 86 ; Bainton v. Ward, 2 Atk. 172. And see 2 Ves. Sen. 2.

Power of appointment over a sum of money to be raised under a trust term executed in favour of volunteers is assets for creditors ; but the equity of purchaser from a party taking under a voluntary deed of appointment was preferred to that of general creditors having no specific charge. George v. Milbanke, 9 Ves. 190 ; 7 R. R. 157.

Where a person has an absolute and general power of appointing a fund, as well in his lifetime as at his death, and there is no gift over, yet if no appointment be made, his administrator cannot claim the fund ; and even creditors will not be entitled to the benefit of it without some step taken towards an appointment, though, where any such appointment be made, the court will arrest the fund, in transitu, for the benefit of creditors. Harrington v. Harte, 1 Cox, 131.

Distinction between a power and absolute property ; a power, unless executed, not assets for debts. Holmes v. Coghill, 12 Ves. 206 ; 7 Ves. 499 ; 8 R. R. 323 ; 6 R. R. 166.

Power of appointment by will executed ; appointee is a trustee for creditors of testator at time of his death, but not at time of making will. Jenny v. Andrews, 6 Madd. 264 ; 23 R. R. 216.

S. made his will, containing a specific bequest of property. He subsequently settled that property, reserving to himself a power of appointment by will, after which he executed a voluntary deed, attested by one witness, by which he covenanted that his devisees and executors should after his death convey, assign, and pay over, all the real and personal estate in which he had any beneficial interest, or which he should then have disposed of by his will, to trustees for certain purposes :—Held, that this instrument was a pure deed, and not a will, and was valid, though voluntary, and was not a revocation of the will. Patch v. Shore, 32 L. J., Ch. 185 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 63 ; 7 L. T. 554 ; 11 W. R. 142.

Held, also, that the specific bequest in the will operated in exercise of the power subsequently reserved, and that the appointed property was assets to satisfy the debt created by the voluntary deed. Ib.

—— Wills Act, s. 27.]—General pecuniary legacies are bequests of personal property described in a general manner, within the meaning of the 27th section of the 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 26, where no particular fund is indicated for payment, and are therefore payable out of personal estate which a testatrix had power to appoint in any manner she might think proper, there being no assets of which the testatrix was possessed as her own personal estate sufficient to pay the legacies. Hawthorn v. Shedden, 3 Sm. & G. 293.

A testatrix, having a general power of appointment over personal property, by her will, made after the Wills Act, directed that her debts and funeral and testamentary expenses should be fully paid by her executor out of her personal estate ; she then gave several pecuniary legacies, with a direction that they should abate ratably if, after payment of her debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, there should not be sufficient to pay them all in full, and she gave all the residue of her estate to certain persons :—Held, that the will operated as an execution of the power in favour of the executor for the purpose of paying the testatrix's debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and legacies, and that only so much of the property, the subject of the power, as remained after making those payments, passed by the residuary bequest. Wilday v. Barnett, L. R. 6 Eq. 193 ; 16 W. R. 961.

—— Married Woman.]—A married woman having a testamentary power to appoint a fund, exercised it in favour of her husband, and appointed him her executor :—Held, that if the husband claimed the fund as his wife's executor, he must pay probate duty on the fund. Nail v. Punter, 5 Sim. 563.

A woman entitled to a sum of stock settled it, on her marriage, for her separate use for life, with power to her to appoint it by will only, but no trust was declared in default of appointment. After her marriage she signed a promissory note, and then, by will, appointed the stock to her husband. Semble, that the holder of the note is not defeated thereby. S. C., 5 Sim. 562.

A married woman died in 1849 possessed of savings of her separate estate amounting to 697*l.*, and having a power of appointment over 21,000*l.* consols, subject to her husband's life interest. By her will she directed, "first," that all her debts should be paid, and she then specifically bequeathed all her ready money. Her debts were paid out of the 697*l.* :—Held, on the death of her husband, in 1855, that the specific legatee was entitled to be repaid the 697*l.* out of the fund over which she had a power of appointment. Laing v. Cowan, 24 Beav. 112.

Where a feme covert has a general power to appoint property by will, and executes it in favour of a legatee, the appointed property does not (as in the case of a man) become assets for the payment of her debts. Hobday v. Peters, 28 Beav. 354.

But the case is otherwise where a feme covert has practised a fraud in her contracts; in such a case the appointed property is liable. Ib.

A married woman, having a life estate to her separate use in certain leasehold and personal property, with a general power of appointment by will only, appointed two children:—Held, that in the administration of her estate a tradesman supplying her with goods while she concealed her marriage, and dealt with him as a single woman, had a claim to be paid out of the appointed fund. Vaughan v. Vanderstegen, 2 Drew. 408.

A married woman, in exercising a power of appointment by will, does not make the appointed property separate estate, so as to render it liable to the payment of her debts. Blachford v. Woolley, 2 Dr. & Sm. 204; 32 L. J., Ch. 534; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 568; 8 L. T. 232; 11 W. R. 478.

In cases not within the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the exercise by the will of a married woman of a general power of appointment, whether the power be exercisable by deed or will, or by will only, does not make the property appointed liable to engagements entered into with her on the credit of her separate estate. Roper, In re, Roper v. Doncaster, 58 L. J., Ch. 215; 39 Ch. D. 482; 59 L. T. 203; 36 W. R. 750.

The testatrix, a married woman, by her will dated before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, directed her executrices (thereinafter named) to pay her debts, and, in exercise of a general power of appointment to which she was entitled over a share in the collieries and property of a coal company, appointed her share in the said company to her executrices upon certain trusts. The testatrix died in 1880:—Held, following Tanqueray-Willaume and Landau, In re (20 Ch. D. 479), that debts incurred by her upon credit of her separate estate were charged upon the corpus of the appointed property. De Burgh Lawson, In re, De Burgh Lawson v. De Burgh Lawson, 58 L. J., Ch. 561; 41 Ch. D. 568; 37 W. R. 797.

A married woman who had a power of appointment over certain trust funds, and was also possessed of separate estate her title to which had accrued before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, died in 1887, having in the same year made a will, by which she exercised her power of appointment over the trust fund and appointed executors, but made no disposition of her separate property. Probate of the will was granted to the executors according to the altered practice introduced by the Probate Rules of 1887, i.e. in the ordinary form without any exception or limitation. The court decided that on the death of the testatrix the title of her husband to her undisposed-of separate estate accrued, and that the executors of her will became trustees of it for him, and not for the next of kin of the testatrix:—Held, that the expenses of proving the will, including the probate duty, must be apportioned ratably between the appointed and undisposed-of property in the same manner in which they would have been apportioned under a grant cæterorum before the change in the form of the grant; but that the costs of the proceedings in which the questions were determined must fall upon the undisposed-of property, as they were occasioned by a contest between the husband and the next of kin. Lambert's Estate, In re, Stanton v. Lambert, 57 L. J., Ch. 927; 39 Ch. D. 626; 59 L. T. 429.

A married woman having separate personal estate, and also a general power to appoint personal estate by will, bequeathed and appointed (after legacies) all her property to her executors on trust for payment of her debts, and funeral and testamentary expenses, and certain legacies, and then in trust for persons named. She survived her husband, and after his death became entitled to other personal estate, and died without re-publishing her will:—Held, that the separate personal property and the personal estate accruing after the coverture must contribute ratably, and before the appointed estate, to the payment of the funeral and testamentary expenses and any debts contracted by the testatrix after the coverture. Williams, In re, Green v. Burgess, 59 L. T. 310.

Remainders and Reversions.]—Reversion in fee, after tail spent, held assets to pay debts. Warwick (Countess) v. Edwards, Dick. 51.

A reversion expectant upon an estate for life, and upon estates tail limited to unborn children:—Held, to be assets for the payment of specialty debts, and decreed to be sold for that purpose. A reversion expectant upon an estate tail may be sold for payment of specialty debts, semble. Tyndale v. Warre, Jac. 212.

In case of judgment recovered against an heir who has a reversion in fee which is only assets cum acciderit, court will not decree a sale of the reversion, but the creditor must wait till it falls. Fortrey v. Fortrey, 2 Vern. 134.

W. after marriage, in consideration of 2,000*l.* portion, in his father's lifetime, settled certain lands on himself and his wife, and their issue, and after his father's death he suffered a recovery, revoked the former uses, and conveyed the estate to trustees to the use of himself for life; then he created a term for raising daughter's children's portions, remainder to his first, &c., son in tail male, remainder to himself in fee. On a bill by a bond creditor for a sale of part of the real estates if the personal should fall short, Lord Chancellor held, that the real estate never having been assets in the hands of W., the lands comprised in the settlement were not liable to his debts by specialty, for they are not specific liens on his estate. Brown v. Durston, 3 Atk. 631.

A person on marriage settled an estate on himself for life, on his wife for life, remainder to trustees to preserve, &c., remainder to his first and every other son in tail male, remainder to himself in fee. A son was born; the father died indebted by bond: the son afterwards died without issue, but by his will devised the estate to the defendant in fee:—Held, the reversion, being come into possession, was assets to pay the father's debts, notwithstanding the devise by the son. Kinaston v. Clark, 2 Atk. 204.

The defect in 13 Eliz. c. 5, of fraudulent conveyances is remedied by 3 Will. & M. c. 14. Ib.

It is an inaccurate expression to say a reversion after an estate tail is not assets, for there is a liability which makes it assets in futuro. Ib.

The son's recovery would have barred the creditors; a fine would not have done it, for the reversion in fee would still have been liable. Ib.

The estate now come into possession is liable to the specialty debts of the father, and by circuity the simple contract creditors are to stand in the place of satisfied bonds. Ib.

Other Interests in Real Estate—Copyholds.]—Trust of a copyhold in hands of heir is assets by descent. Helley v. Helley, 2 Eq. Abr. 509.

Copyhold estates are not liable to debts further than subjected; but when charged with other estates, court will marshal them. Copyhold estate not assets for specialty debts, not even debts to the crown. Aldrich v. Cooper, 8 Ves. 393; 7 R. R. 86.

—— Advowsons.]—An advowson descending to an heir is real assets, and may be sold for payment of debts. Tong v. Robinson, 1 Bro. P. C. 114; 2 Stra. 879.

And is extendible on an elegit. S. C., 3 P. W. 401.

An advowson in gross will not pass by the word "lands," but will by the words "tenements and hereditaments." Westfaling v. Westfaling, 3 Atk. 460.

An advowson in gross is assets by descent to satisfy bond creditors. Ib. 456.

—— Leaseholds for Lives.]—A leasehold for lives, limited to one and his heirs, was devised to trustees in trust for A. and his heirs. A. died intestate and without heirs:—Held, that the leaseholds pur autre vie passed under s. 6 of the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, to A.'s administrator, and did not belong to the trustees. Reynolds v. Wright, 25 Beav. 100; 27 L. J., Ch. 392; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 198; 6 W. R. 301.

—— Rent-charge pur autre vie.]—A. devises to B. rent out of a lease for years, determinable on lives, to be paid half-yearly if the cestuis que vient lived so long. B. dies during their lifetime. Decreed, the rent was not determined, but should be paid to the executors of B. during the term. Gifford v. Goldsey, 2 Vern. 35.

A rent-charge pur autre vie, if the grantee dies, leaving cestui que vie, goes to the grantee's executor, though not named in the grant. Bearpark v. Hutchinson, 7 Bing. 179; 4 M. & P. 848; 9 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 1.

—— Windfalls.]—A testator devised estates upon which there were plantations of larch trees. At the time of his death a great number of the larch trees had been more or less blown down by extraordinary gales:—Held, that having regard to the maxim "quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit," the principle applicable was that if a tree was attached to the soil it was real estate, and if severed, personalty; that the life and manner of growth of any particular tree was no test of its attachment to the soil, and that the degree of attachment or severance was a question of fact in the case of each particular tree. If the tree was severed from the soil it belonged to the executors, if otherwise, to the inheritance. Ainslie, In re, Swinburne v. Ainslie, 55 L. J., Ch. 615; 30 Ch. D. 485; 53 L. T. 645; 33 W. R. 910; 50 J. P. 180—C. A.

—— Where appropriated.]—A., on the marriage of B., his son, settles a lease on B. for life, to the wife for life, and then to the issue of the marriage; and B. covenants from time to time to renew the lease, and assign it on the same trusts; B. renews the lease, but does not assign it, and dies indebted. This lease is bound by the marriage articles, and is not assets for the payment of debts. Plowman v. Plowman, 2 Vern. 289.

A., on his marriage, demises land to B., who redemises them to A. for a lesser term, paying peppercorn rent during the life of A., and after his death an annual sum for the life of his wife for her jointure, and a peppercorn for the remainder of the term. A. dies indebted; the redemised term shall not be assets to pay any debts but what affect the inheritance, the term redemised being raised for a particular purpose. Baden v. Pembroke (Earl), 2 Vern. 52.

A. purchases a lease of a house in the name of B., and takes a declaration of trust to permit A. to enjoy for life, and then in trust for one who lived with him as his wife, and was so reputed. This lease is not assets of A., nor liable to his creditors after his death. Fletcher v. Sedley, 2 Vern. 490.

—— Rents and Royalties.]—Where G. C. made a lease for lives renewable for ever, reserving the yearly rent of 20*l.*, and thereby covenanted that if the lessee, his heirs or assigns, should be minded to fine down the said rent, it should be released on payment of 300*l.*:—Held, that the said sum of 300*l.* being paid after the death of G. C. was personalty, and should go not to his heir but to his executor. Crofton, In re, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 204.

In a mining lease, besides an annual surface rent, certain half-yearly payments, described as further consideration money, and depending upon the rate of working the mines, were reserved to the lessor, his heirs, and assigns:—Held, on the death of the lessor intestate, that these payments were not purchase money passing to the personal representative of the lessor, but in the nature of rent, to which therefore the heir became entitled as incident to the reversion. Barrs v. Lea, 33 L. J., Ch. 437; 10 L. T. 567; 12 W. R. 525; 3 N. R. 635.

—— Term attendant on Inheritance.]—A term vested in trustees is not assets to pay debts; otherwise if the term be in the party himself, and the inheritance in trustees. Thruxton v. Att.-Gen., 1 Vern. 341.

A purchaser takes a term in a trustee's name, and the inheritance in his own; this term, unless declared to attend the inheritance, will be assets in equity. If he takes the inheritance in a trustee's name, and the term in his own, it will be assets at law. Chapman v. Bond, 1 Vern. 188. But see now 8 & 9 Vict. c. 112.

Land converted into Money.]—Creditors of vendor cannot insist that estate, contracted to be sold, has been converted into personal assets, unless the title be such that court will compel purchaser to take it. Johnson v. Legard, Turn. & R. 281; 18 R. R. 234, 301.

Where trustees have a power of selling real estate, and turning it into money, or keeping it in land, at their option, it will be subject to the same trust as the personal estate is applied to, whether sold or kept as real estate. Cook v. Duckenfield, 2 Atk. 562.

Where real estate is given to a devisee of personal, for payment of debts, it is assets. Ib. 566.

Where testator says, "I will my heir shall sell the land," he is not obliged to sell, but if he appoint his executors to sell, it is turned into personal assets. Ib. 568.

Money converted into Land.]—Suppose a direction by which to purchase an estate, which is afterwards swallowed up by an inundation, the money so devised shall not go to an executor, but as the rent would have done when the land was purchased. Coventry v. Coventry, 2 Atk. 369.

Money articled to be laid out in land and settled is not assets even at law. Lechmere v. Carlisle, 3 P. W. 211.

Money, by marriage articles, is agreed to be laid out in land, and settled on the husband and wife and their issue, remainder to the right heirs of the husband. Though the money at first is bound by the articles, yet when the husband and wife are dead without issue, the money is in the disposal of the husband, and will be assets, and go to his executor or administrator, and a portion to his residuary legatee. Chichester v. Bickerstaff, 2 Vern. 295.

Real Estate Descended—3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104.]—The act 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, charges the real estate of any person dying seised of such estates, not only with his debts of every description actually due at his death, but also with all liabilities which may result out of obligations entered into during his life. Hamer's Devisees' Case, 2 De G. M. & G. 366; 21 L. J., Ch. 832; 16 Jur. 555.

Where a person dies seised of land which he has not by will charged with his debts, the stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, makes the lands themselves, and not merely the estate or interest of such person in the lands, assets for the payment of his debts. Downe (Viscount) v. Morris, 3 Hare, 399.

The act of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, which renders freehold estates liable to the payment of all debts, applies only to real estates not charged with payment of debts. Ball v. Harris, 4 Myl. & C. 264; 8 L. J., Ch. 114; 3 Jur. 140.

An estate escheated is, under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, liable in the hands of the lord to the debts of the person last seised; but quære whether it is liable pari passu with lands devised. Evans v. Brown, 5 Beav. 114; 11 L. J., Ch. 349; 6 Jur. 380.

The rights of simple contract creditors of an ancestor as against the descended estates are not defeated by judgments entered up against the heir, for his personal debts, before suit. Watts v. Porter (3 El. & Bl. 743) observed upon. Kinderley v. Jervis, 22 Beav. 1; 25 L. J., Ch. 538; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 602; 4 W. R. 579.

The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, makes real estate assets to be administered in courts of equity for payment of simple contract debts of the deceased; and the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 13, makes a judgment a charge on any lands of which the judgment debtor is seised, or over which he shall have any disposing power, for his own benefit; and it makes such judgment an equitable mortgage thereon:—Held, that judgments entered up against the heir for his own debt, before any action or suit by the simple contract creditors of the ancestor, have no priority over the simple contract creditors of the intestate, in respect of the descended estate. Ib.

It was not the object, nor is it the operation of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, to make the simple contract debts of a deceased person in the nature of mortgages or specific charges on his real estate; but as the statute makes the land assets for the payment of his debts, these debts constitute a general charge upon them, but not so that bonâ fide purchaser of the lands from the heir or devisee is bound to see to the application of the purchase money as he would be in the case of a particular mortgage on any portion of the lands themselves. Ib.

The real estate of a deceased person constitutes assets, to be administered in a court of equity, according to the priorities specified by the statute, and all the incidents of assets attach to it; and, consequently, such assets are liable, in the first place, to pay the debts of the deceased debtor, and, subject thereto, they belong to his devisee or heir-at-law: but the devisee or heir-at-law takes no beneficial interest therein, except subject to and after payment of the debts of the deceased testator or ancestor. Ib.

Real Estate Devised—3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 14, &c.—Devise for Payment of Debts.]—Devising an estate for payment of debts takes it out of the Statute of Fraudulent Devises. Lingard v. Derby, 1 Bro. C. C. 311.

If a devise for payment of debts does not provide for such payment in a practicable manner, it is within the Statute of Fraudulent Devises. Hughes v. Doulbin, 2 Cox, 170; 2 Bro. C. C. 614.

A direction in a will to pay simple contract creditors before specialty ones, is not void, being within the exception in the Statute of Fraudulent Devises. Millar v. Horton, G. Coop. 45.

The Statute of Fraudulent Devises would prevent a devise for legacies to the prejudice of creditors by specialty, but not devise for debts generally, though that might be the effect. Kidney v. Coussmaker, 12 Ves. 154; 2 R. R. 118.

Devise for payment of debts by rents and profits, out of the Statute of Fraudulent Devises; but a gross sum for that purpose will not be limited to annual rents, but is to be paid with all convenient speed. Distinction between debts, and legacies, and annuities, but the same provision for all is evidence, although not conclusive, that all are to be paid in the same way. The same inference as to costs, directed to be paid in the same manner, exonerating the fund generally liable in the first instance. Bootle v. Blundell, 19 Ves. 528; G. Coop. 236; 15 R. R. 93.

A testator devised his real estate to trustees and their heirs upon trust to sell, and after declaring his will to be that the clear money arising from such sale should sink into and become part of his personal estate, he gave and bequeathed the same, and all his stock, crops, goods, and effects whatsoever, to the same trustees, their executors and administrators, upon trust, after converting the same into money, and paying all his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, to pay legacies and dispose of the residue. This is substantially a devise for payment of debts within the fourth section of the Statute of Fraudulent Devises. The produce of the real estate, therefore, is equitable assets, and the specialty creditors having exhausted the personal estate, the simple contract creditors are entitled to have the assets marshalled in their favour. Soames v. Robinson, 1 Myl. & K. 500; 2 L. J., Ch. 153.

The owner in fee of two freehold estates, largely indebted by specialty and simple contract, devises one to A. B. in fee, charged with the payment of one-fifth, but only one-fifth of all his debts, and devises the other to C. D. in fee, charged with the payment of the other four-fifths, but no further part of those debts. These devises are not within the proviso of the Statute of Fraudulent Devises. Lyon v. Colville, 1 Coll. C. C. 449.

—— What Devise Invalid.]—The statute 3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 14, does not require proof of an intent to defraud, hinder or delay creditors, but makes the devise ipso facto void as against creditors. Coope v. Cresswell, 35 L. J., Ch. 496; L. R. 2 Eq. 106; 14 L. T. 262; 14 W. R. 568. On appeal, 36 L. J., Ch. 114; L. R. 2 Ch. 112; 15 L. T. 427; 15 W. R. 242.

—— Heir Devisee.]—The stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 106, s. 3, which provides that land devised to the heir of the testator, shall be considered to have been acquired by such heir as a devisee, and not by descent, applies for all purposes; and therefore a demurrer by the heir, who was also devisee of the lands, to a bill by a legatee seeking to marshal the assets of the testator, with reference to such lands, as against the heir, was allowed. Strickland v. Strickland, 10 Sim. 374; 9 L. J., Ch. 60.

Alienation by Heir or Devisee.]—The devisee aliens; the land is not subject to the specialty debts of the devisor. Mathews v. Jones, 2 Anstr. 506.

The 3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 14, and 47 Geo. 3, c. 74, make the heir or devisee personally liable to the amount of the assets devised or descended, and do not charge the real estate with the debts of the ancestor. Spackman v. Timbrell, 8 Sim. 253; 6 L. J., Ch. 147.

Observations on the practical consequences, in possible cases, of the doctrine established in Spackman v. Timbrell (8 Sim. 253; 6 L. J., Ch. 147), that an heir or devisee may, by alienation of the descended or devised estates, place them out of the reach of the ancestor's or devisor's creditors, while he remains personally liable to them for the value of the estates. Pimm v. Insall, 1 Macn. & G. 449; 1 H. & Tw. 487; 19 L. J., Ch. 1; 14 Jur. 357.

A covenant by an infant heiress and her intended husband, in marriage articles, to settle the descended estate on the issue of the marriage, though effectual to defeat any alienation by the husband and wife during the coverture inconsistent with the articles, is not in itself an alienation of the estate, and therefore has not the effect of withdrawing it from the claims of the ancestor's creditors in a suit subsequently instituted by them for payment of his debts. Ib.

Whether a settlement executed pursuant to such articles after the institution of such suit would have that effect, quære. Ib.

A bankrupt, being entitled to one-third of freehold property in his own right, and to another third as heir-at-law to his brother, deposited the title-deeds of the property with his bankers to secure advances. The personal property of the brother was insufficient to discharge his debts, and his third of this property was under 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 47, s. 9, assets for the payment of his debts:—Held, nevertheless, that the lien of the bank extended to the two thirds of the estate in preference to any claims of the brother's creditors. Baine, Ex parte, Boden, In re, 1 Mont. D. & D. 492; 10 L. J., Bk. 16; 5 Jur. 105.

Settlement by the heir, upon his marriage, of the ancestor's estates, supported against the claims of the specialty creditors of such ancestor. Sir W. H. died indebted in specialty. After his death, on the marriage of his heiress, a settlement was executed whereby (after reciting the insufficiency of the personal estate to pay the debts, and that a considerable sum was due on that account) a part of the estates was conveyed to provide a fund to pay the debts, and the remainder was settled on the heiress, her intended husband, and their issue. Many years after, the produce of the estates appropriated to the payment of the debts was found insufficient:—Held, that the circumstances did not afford any proof of fraud, or any want of bona fides in the execution of the settlement; that the settled estates were not liable to the specialty debts; and that even if a want of bona fides had appeared, relief could only be obtained in a suit putting the mala fides properly in issue. Richardson v. Horton, 7 Beav. 112; 13 L. J., Ch. 186; 7 Jur. 1144.

The liability, under the act 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 47, of the devisee of land, who alienates the land, to the unpaid debts of the testator, is such that on the alienation the debts become his own debts to the extent of the value of the land alienated. Consequently, when a woman to whom land had been devised settled it on her marriage, after the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, the first trust being for herself absolutely until the marriage, and after its solemnization on trust for herself for her life, without power of anticipation, with remainder on trusts for the issue of the marriage:—Held, that the testator's personal estate being insufficient to pay his debts, the life interest of the settlor was, notwithstanding the restraint on anticipation, liable to make good the deficiency, to the extent of the value of the devised land; her liability to satisfy the debts of the testator, which arose on her alienation of the land by the settlement, being a debt "contracted by her before marriage," within the meaning of s. 12 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870. Sanger v. Sanger (L. R. 11 Eq. 470) and London and Provincial Bank v. Bogle (7 Ch. D. 773) followed. Hedgely, In re, Small v. Hedgely, 56 L. J., Ch. 360; 34 Ch. D. 379; 56 L. T. 19; 35 W. R. 472.

A court of equity, in dealing with the real assets of a testator, never considered whether they were legal or equitable. The alienation of the assets by the heir or devisee prevented the creditors of the executor or testator from following the assets in the hands of a bonâ fide purchaser where the alienation was a legal one; and by analogy the court ought to treat an equitable alienation of equitable assets as having the same effect. British Mutual Investment Co. v. Smart, 44 L. J., Ch. 695; L. R. 10 Ch. 567; 32 L. T. 849; 23 W. R. 800.

An equitable deposit with a memorandum of charge by a devisee is an alienation which, pro tanto, prevents a creditor of the testator from subsequently obtaining a charge on the estate as assets under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104. Ib.

Equitable estates are within 3 Will. & M. c. 14. An alienation to new trustees, those appointed by the will having renounced, is not such an alienation as can defeat the claims of the testator's creditors under 3 Will. & M. c. 14, nor was mortgage by equitable tenant for life such an alienation. Coope v. Cresswell, 36 L. J., Ch. 114; L. R. 2 Ch. 112; 15 L. T. 427; 15 W. R. 242.

Real estate cannot be charged with simple contract debts as against a purchaser for valuable consideration from a devisee, although the purchaser had notice of the debts, if there be no fraud on his part, and it is immaterial that the devise was of a residue. Roche v. Roche, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 436.

—— Bankruptcy.]—A specialty creditor has the same right under the bankruptcy of the heir of the debtor as if he had not become bankrupt; and may, therefore, follow the real assets or their specific produce in the hands of the assignees. Morton, Ex parte, 5 Ves. 449.

—— Injunction against Purchaser.]—Injunction against purchaser, on behalf of creditor, to restrain payment to heir. Green v. Lowes, 3 Bro. C. C. 217.

b. ORDER AND CONTRIBUTION.

By the Land Transfer Act, 1897, s. 2 (3), In the administration of the assets of a person dying after the commencement of this act, his real estate shall be administered in the same manner, subject to the same liabilities for debts, costs, and expenses, and with the same incidents, as if it were personal estate; provided that nothing therein contained shall alter or affect the order in which real and personal assets respectively are now applicable in or towards the payment of funeral and testamentary expenses, debts, or legacies, or the liability of real estate to be charged with the payment of legacies.

1. Generally.

Principles.]—Held, that not only an heir, but a devisee or hæres factus shall have the benefit of the personal estate, though a widow, who claimed by the custom of York, be thereby prejudiced, sed quære. Popley v. Popley, 2 Ch. Ca. 84.

Hæres factus or devisee shall have the personal estate applied in ease of the real. Pockley v. Pockley. 1 Vern. 36; 2 Salk. 449. And see Galton v. Hancock, 2 Atk. 436.

If an heir pays the bond debt of his ancestor, the executor shall reimburse him so far as he has personal assets (Armitage v. Metcalfe, 1 Ch. Ca. 74); for by what means soever the heir became indebted as heir, the personal estate had the benefit of the debt contracted. Anon., 2 Ch. Ca. 5.

The order of application to debts: 1st, the personal estate, unless exempted expressly, or by plain implication; 2ndly, estates devised for the particular purpose of paying debts; 3rdly, estates descended; 4thly, estates devised. Manning v. Spooner, 3 Ves. 117; 3 R. R. 67.

In the administration of assets, ordinarily the first fund applicable is the personal estate not specifically bequeathed; then land devised or ordered to be sold for payment of debts, not merely charged; then descended estates; then lands charged with the debts; the distinction is between a mere charge upon the real estates, and proposing the mode in which the debts are to be paid. Harwood v. Oglender, 8 Ves. 124.

The court always primarily takes the account of the personal fortune, and when the trust is clear to pay all debts generally, it does not intermeddle with the real estate, until the insufficiency of the personal appears; but if there be a doubt which fund is first to be applied, the court takes care immediately to preserve both. Fingal (Earl) v. Blake, 2 Moll. 50.

The general direction in a decree to apply the assets in a course of administration applies to equitable as well as legal assets. Hartwell v. Chitters, Ambl. 309.

The cases on, and the distinction between contribution and marshalling assets, reviewed. Toombs v. Roch, 2 Coll. C. C. 490; 15 L. J., Ch. 308; 10 Jur. 534. And see 2 Coll. C. C. 509, n.

Application of Lands — General Power of Appointment — Exercise by Will.]—Freehold estates over which a testator has a general power of appointment, and which he appoints by his will, are assets for payment of his simple contract debts, but are only applicable for that purpose after all the testator's own property has been previously so applied. Fleming v. Buchanan, 3 De G. M. & G. 976; 22 L. J., Ch. 886.

A testator was seised of real estate in fee simple, and was possessed of personal estate, and had also a general power of appointment over other real estate; he executed his will, by which he devised his fee simple estate and bequeathed his personalty, and also executed his power of appointment over the other estate. The personal estate was insufficient for the payment of the testator's debts:—Held, that the devised real estate was primarily liable to the payment of the debts; and if insufficient, then that the appointed real estate was liable, whether the debts were by specialty or by simple contract. Ib.

—— Devised for Debts.]—Though a general charge of debts upon a devised estate will not prevent the previous application of an estate descended, yet if the devised estate is selected and appropriated to the debts, it is liable before the estate descended; but this arrangement does not bind the creditor. Manning v. Spooner, 3 Ves. 114; 3 R. R. 67.

Where the will, going beyond a mere charge, creates a particular fund for payment of debts, that shall be first applied in exoneration of descended estates, whether acquired after the date of the will or not, and of the personal estate even in favour of the next of kin taking it for want of disposition. Devise upon several limitations for life and in strict settlement, with a direction that incumbrances shall remain charged upon the estates respectively, until discharged by the several tenants for life, to whom they are respectively limited; all the rents and profits during the estate for life are to be applied to the incumbrances, principal as well as interest. Milnes v. Slater, 8 Ves. 295; 7 R. R. 48. And see Powis v. Corbet, 3 Atk. 556.

The rule as to the exoneration of estates descended by a devise for the payment of debts, holds even though the estate devised may be equitable assets, and the descended estates legal assets. S. C., 8 Ves. 304.

Although generally descended estate shall be applied in exoneration of a devised estate, though under a charge for payment of debts, yet it shall not be so if the devised estate be expressly pointed out in aid of another fund provided for that purpose. Donne v. Lewis, 2 Anstr. 257.

A testator devised an estate (X.) to trustees, upon trust to raise (in aid of his personal estate) sufficient to satisfy his debts and the mortgages on his estate (Y.), which he devised to his daughters; and he declared that the incumbrances on Y. should be payable out of X. in exoneration of Y. On the testator's death, a real estate (Z.) descended to his heir-at-law:—Held, that as between X. and Z. the former was primarily liable to pay the mortgage and other debts. Phillips v. Parry, 22 Beav. 279.

—— Charged with Debts.]—Testator devised certain estates subject to a general charge for payment of debts: he afterwards purchased another estate, which descended: this shall exonerate the devised, if the personal be insufficient to pay the debts. Davies v. Topp, 1 Bro. C. C. 524.

T. P., in 1832, devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estates to the use of his mother A. P. for life (subject to the payment of debts, &c.); and after her decease, he gave and bequeathed the farming stock, &c., upon the farm at F. unto his sister; and as to all his real estate, and the residue of his personal estate, the testator devised and bequeathed the same to the use of his three sisters E., J. and M. equally, absolutely. E. died unmarried in the lifetime of the testator. The debts of the testator, who died in November, 1838, greatly exceeded his personal estate. After the date of the will, the testator purchased other real estate, which he had not devised:—Held, that the estates which had descended must first be applied in payment of the debts charged upon the estate devised to A. P. for life: that if the descended estates were not sufficient to discharge the debts, then a sufficient part of the devised estate must be applied for that purpose; and that the lapsed remainder in one-third of the estate devised was liable to the charge of debts, on the same footing as the other two-thirds of the same estate. Wood v. Ordish, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 584.

Where freehold, copyhold and leasehold estates are devised, subject to a general charge for the payment of debts, and the freeholds and leaseholds are subject to mortgages, and there is a descended freehold estate purchased after the will, the general personal estate not specifically bequeathed is first to be applied in payment of simple contract debts, as far as it will extend, and the surplus of simple contract debts is to fall proportionately on the freehold, copyhold and leasehold estates devised; then the specialty debts, including all mortgage debts, are to be satisfied out of the descended freehold estate, as far as it will extend, and the surplus of such specialty debts is also to fall proportionally upon the freehold, copyhold and leasehold estates devised. Irvin v. Ironmonger, 2 Russ. & M. 531.

Where testator charges some of his estates with the payment of judgment and bond debts, and charged another estate with a legacy for younger children, the estates charged with the debts failing to satisfy them:—Held, that they had priority over the legacy against the estate charged therewith. Bourerie v. Norbury, 3 Cl. & F. 247; 9 Bli. (N.S.) 611.

—— Lands Descended.]—General pecuniary legatees are to be preferred to an heir-at-law; a fortiori, a specific legatee of land; for it is a rule of law, every devisee is in nature of a purchaser. Galton v. Hancock, 2 Atk. 430; Ridgw. P. C. 301.

Assets descended on the heir must be applied to pay debts before the lands can be charged which are specifically devised. Powis v. Corbet, 3 Atk. 556. S. P., Palmer v. Mason, 1 Atk. 505; Chaplin v. Chaplin, 3 P. W. 367; Reeves v. Newenham, 2 Ridg. P. C. 11.

A mere charge upon a devised estate will not protect a descended estate from being applied first. Milnes v. Slater, 8 Ves. 304; 7 R. R. 48. S. P., Davies v. Topp, 1 Bro. C. C. 524.

Real estate devised, held liable to simple contract debts, under a direction in the beginning of the will that debts and funeral expenses should be first paid; that which descended to the heir by the failure of the devise to be first applied. Williams v. Chitty, 3 Ves. 546; 3 R. R. 71.

A. devised part of a freehold estate (the whole of which was subject to a mortgage), upon trust, to pay his widow an annuity, and out of the surplus income to apply so much as the trustees thought fit for the benefit of his children, and to apply the surplus in paying off the principal and interest of the mortgage debt, and after the death of the wife, and when the whole of the mortgage should be paid off, upon trust for his children. The rest of the property, subject to the mortgage, descended to the heir:—Held, that, against a purchaser from the heir, the descended estate must bear the burden of the mortgage in exoneration of the devised estates. Waterhouse v. Clout, Booker, Ex parte, 41 L. J., Ch. 223; 20 W. R. 277.

Bill against executor and heirs of obligor to be paid out of personal assets, and if not sufficient, out of real assets descended, decreed. Walter v. Goring, Dick. 299.

Bill by single bond creditor, for payment of what was due out of real assets descended. Robinson v. King, Dick. 297.

Testator devises all his real estate in trust for the payment of the debts. At the time of making his will, he is tenant in fee of several estates and tenant in tail, with remainders over, with remainder to himself in fee, of an estate called B., of which he afterwards suffers a recovery, and dies without republishing his will. Quære, whether, in the administration of his assets, the estate B. is applicable to the payment of his specialty creditors before the devised estates. Vickers v. Oliver, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 211; 11 L. J., Ch. 112; 6 Jur. 273.

In a creditors' suit, respecting the assets of a testator who died before the passing of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 106, it was held that land devised to the heir was not, as between him and other devisees, applicable in payment of debts in priority to the land devised to the others. Biederman v. Seymour, 3 Beav. 368; 10 L. J., Ch. 177.

A testator died without heirs, seised of freehold which he had not charged with his debts:—Held, that as against the lord claiming by escheat they were assets for the payment of the testator's debts. Evans v. Brown, 5 Beav. 114; 11 L. J., Ch. 349; 6 Jur. 380.

Quære, whether such freeholds are liable to the debts in priority to, or pari passu with, lands specifically devised. Ib.

A testator gave all and every part of his real and personal property to his executors and trustees, to be disposed of by them according to the directions contained in his will. He directed his executors and trustees, as soon as possible after his death, to pay all his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses; he then gave all his personal estate to his brother absolutely, and he devised specifically various freehold estates, leaving other freehold estates undisposed of, which descended to his heir. The personal estate was insufficient for payment of his debts:—Held, that the specifically devised estates and the descended estates were liable ratably to the payment of debts. Stead v. Hardaker, 42 L. J., Ch. 317; L. R. 15 Eq. 175; 21 W. R. 258.

A father devised his freehold property at M. and at T. to his two children equally. He never had freehold property at M., but he had a share in real estate at R., which adjoined M., and in the parish in which M. was situate :—Held, that the real estate at R. did not pass by the will, but descended to the heir-at-law, and that such descended estate was primarily liable, on the insufficiency of the personal estate, to the payment of debts to the exclusion of the devised estate at T. Barber v. Wood, 46 L. J., Ch. 728 ; 4 Ch. D. 885 : 36 L. T. 373.

The plaintiff, acting as solicitor of a banking firm, in order to prevent the taking out of circulation notes, issued in the lifetime of the testator, who was at the head of the banking concern, induced the mother and guardian of the testator's heir to forego proceedings to compel the application of the primary funds to the payment of the testator's debt, in exoneration of certain descended estate, by representing that such proceedings were wholly unnecessary, and that the property principally liable was abundantly sufficient for the payment of the testator's debts. The plaintiff afterwards filed a creditors' bill against J. W., the executor and devisee of the testator, and against the heir ; and, upon the bankruptcy of J. W., his assignees were brought before the court by a supplemental bill :—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the common decree against the personal and devised real estate of the testator ; but the bill, as against the heir, was dismissed with costs. Jones v. Waters, 2 Myl. & K. 610.

Where settlement was made on wife after marriage in bar of dower, &c., and by wife's waiving it, the lands would go to the heir to the prejudice of creditors ; she was decreed to have the estate for life, according to settlement, but that she should assign it over in trust for the creditors, who should convey to her a third for dower. Mills v. Eden, 10 Mod. 487.

General Legacies.]—Pecuniary and demonstrative legatees, with a deficient fund on which their legacies are charged, have a right to throw simple contract creditors on descended estates, so as to marshal the assets in their favour. Sellon v. Watts, Smith v. Watts, 28 Beav. 519 ; 9 W. R. 847.

A pecuniary legatee has no right to call upon a residuary devisee to contribute to the payment of debts. Dugdale v. Dugdale, 41 L. J., Ch. 565 ; L. R. 14 Eq. 234 ; 27 L. T. 706. S. P., Collins v. Lewis, L. R. 8 Eq. 708.

A testator, after giving a pecuniary legacy, devised his real estate to other persons than the legatee, not charging it with his debts. There being a deficiency of personal estate for payment of debts :—Held, that the real estate was not bound to contribute ratably with the legacy to meet the deficiency. Ib.

A testator made a general and absolute bequest of his personalty, followed by a specific devise of realty for payment of his debts. The realty so specifically devised being insufficient for the payment of debts :—Held, that the residuary real estate must contribute with the personalty. Powell v. Riley, 40 L. J., Ch. 533 ; L. R. 12 Eq. 175 ; 19 W. R. 869.

When the personal estate is insufficient for the payment of debts and legacies, pecuniary legatees and the residuary devisee contribute ratably to the payment of the debts which the general personal estate is insufficient to satisfy. Hensman v. Fryer, 37 L. J., Ch. 97 ; L. R. 3 Ch. 420 ; 17 L. T. 394 ; 16 W. R. 162.

It is still the rule in administering assets that when the residuary personal estate is insufficient to pay the costs of a suit, the deficiency must be made up by the pecuniary legatees in priority to the residuary devisees. Tomkins v. Colthurst, 1 Ch. D. 626 ; 33 L. T. 591 ; 24 W. R. 267.

When there is a bequest of pecuniary legacies and devises of real and residuary real estates, and an insufficient amount of personalty for the payment of debts, the pecuniary legacies must be first resorted to, to make up the deficiency. Farquharson v. Floyer, 45 L. J., Ch. 750 ; 3 Ch. D. 109 ; 35 L. T. 355.

Specific Legacies.]—It is the duty of executor, as far as possible, to preserve articles specifically bequeathed, according to the testator's wish ; and unless compelled, they ought not to apply them to the payment of debts. Clarke v. Ormond (Earl), Jac. 108 ; 23 R. R. 8.

When real estate is devised for payment of debts, and articles of personalty exempted, if the executors, to preserve the latter from the creditors, delay selling them, and in consequence a loss happens, it may be thrown on the real estate, semble. Id. 115.

A testator gave various annuities for lives, with bequests over of them, and charged them upon his freehold and leasehold estates. He gave all his real and personal property to trustees in trust to pay the rents of his freehold, copyhold and leasehold estates ; and the interest of all his stock in the public funds, with the interest of all mortgages, annuities and other securities of which he might die possessed, to his son for life, with a disposition in favour of the son's children, and after his death without any (which happened) the testator gave his freehold, leasehold and copyhold estates to one daughter and her issue, and all his funded property and other personal estate to another daughter and her issue :—Held, that the gift of the leasehold estates to the one daughter was specific, but that the gift of the funded property to the other was not, and that the latter was consequently chargeable with the annuities, in priority to the former. Fielding v. Preston, 1 De G. & J. 438 ; 5 W. R. 851.

A testator directed all his debts in the first place to be paid out of his personal estate, except his leaseholds, if sufficient ; if not, he charged his real estate therewith :—Held, that the specific legacies were liable to the payment of the debts in priority to the real estate. Bateman v. Hotchkin, 10 Beav. 426 ; 16 L. J., Ch. 514 ; 11 Jur. 809.

Specific legacies held to be exonerated from the payment of debts by devised real estates. Plenty v. West, 22 L. J., Ch. 185 ; 17 Jur. 9 ; 1 W. R. 3.

A specific legacy is not discharged from its liability to pay the testator's debts, although the personalty not specifically bequeathed is more than sufficient for that purpose, and although the specific legacy has been in consequence assigned and delivered by the executor to the specific legatee. Davies v. Nicholson, 2 De G. & J. 693 ; 27 L. J., Ch. 719 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 49 ; 6 W. R. 790.

A testator bequeathed leasehold property specifically to A., and he gave to B. the residue of his estate, which included other leasehold property. The leaseholds specifically bequeathed were assigned by the executor to A., who entered into possession. A debt having subsequently arisen in respect of a breach of the covenants in a lease which was included in the residuary bequest, a bill was filed by the lessor of the premises comprised in such lease for the purpose of making the leaseholds specifically bequeathed liable to the payment of the debt due to him. There were no assets of the testator in the hands of his executor:—Held, that the leaseholds specifically bequeathed were liable to the payment of the debt. Ib.

A testator possessed of leasehold estates, some of which were mortgaged and others not specifically bequeathed the latter to the plaintiff, and the former to other parties, and after making other specific and pecuniary bequests, gave the residue of his personal estate to his wife, and directed his trustees and executors to receive the rents of all his property, and to apply the same in payment of his debts, together with the principal money and interest owing upon the mortgage of his property, and of the legacies and annuities given by his will, until the whole should be fully paid:—Held, that the bequest of the incumbered leaseholds was not a bequest of the equity of redemption only; that the relative values of all the leaseholds should be ascertained, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to be let into possession before she had contributed her ratable proportion in discharge of all the debts and legacies. Harper v. Munday, 7 De G. M. & G. 369; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1147; 5 W. R. 62.

A., the executor of B., dealt with canal shares which had belonged to B., as his own property, and ultimately bequeathed them to C.; and he gave certain other chattels, which always had been his own property, to D., and died possessed of but very little other property, leaving some of B.'s debts unpaid, and a balance due from him in respect of his receipts and payments on account of B.'s estate. At his death the canal shares remained standing in B.'s name:—Held, that those shares were not exclusively applicable to pay B.'s unsatisfied debts; but that A.'s general personal estate must be applied first; and that C. and D. must contribute to make up the deficiency in proportion to the value of the articles bequeathed to them respectively. Ibbetson v. Ibbetson, 13 Sim. 545; 7 Jur. 1033.

Where, in a suit for payment of legacies, a contribution was directed, and one legatee afterwards became insolvent, rendering the fund through his default insufficient, a further contribution amongst the solvent ones directed. Conolly v. Farrell, 10 Beav. 142.

A testator directed that every legatee under his will and codicils should contribute 1 per cent. out of their legacies to A. and her children:—Held, that specific and residuary legatees and annuitants were liable to contribute. Ward v. Grey, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 948; 7 W. R. 569.

The testator directed a sum not exceeding 3,000*l.* to be applied by the trustees in rebuilding, enlarging and refurnishing his mansion house:—Held, that the amount was not liable to contribute. Ib.

Held, also, that A. took a life estate in the fund, with power of appointment among her children; and in default to the children equally. Ib.

Specific and Residuary Devises and Specific Legacies.]—A testator having two properties, Blackacre and Whiteacre, subject to one mortgage, made a specific devise of Blackacre, and a residuary devise of Whiteacre:—Held, that Whiteacre must exonerate Blackacre from the mortgage debt. Brownson v. Lawrance, 37 L. J., Ch. 351; L. R. 6 Eq. 1; 18 L. T. 143; 16 W. R. 926.

A. devised real estate upon trust for B. for life, and after B.'s death specifically devised part, and gave the residue to B. in fee:—Held, that B.'s life estate in the residue was applicable in payment of the testator's debts, in preference to the specifically devised estate. Hibon v. Hibon, 1 N. R. 532.

One seised in fee of some lands, and possessed by lease for years of other lands, devises the fee to A. and the lease to B., and dies indebted by bond. On a deficiency of assets, both the devisees shall contribute to the payment of the bond. Long v. Short, 1 P. W. 403; 2 Vern. 756. And see 9 Ir. Eq. R. 650.

A testator having made a particular devise of all his real estates, and having bequeathed several specific legacies, dies indebted by specialty and simple contract. His personal estate not specifically bequeathed is more than sufficient to pay his simple contract debts, but not sufficient to pay his specialty debts:—Held, that the amount necessary to complete the payment of the specialty debts must be contributed ratably by the specific legatees and devisees. Toombs v. Roch, 2 Coll. C. C. 490; 15 L. J., Ch. 308; 10 Jur. 534. And see the cases cited, 2 Coll. C. C. 509, n. S. P., Gervis v. Gervis, 14 Sim. 654; 16 L. J., Ch. 422; 11 Jur. 578; overruling Cornewall v. Cornewall (12 Sim. 298; 10 L. J., Ch. 364; 5 Jur. 744), contra.

—— Heir Devisee.]—Though the creditors of testator have a right to resort to the estates devised to the heir in priority to the other devised estates, yet the heir is entitled to contribution from the other devisees to the extent to which his estate may be exhausted by debts. Biederman v. Seymour, 3 Beav. 368; 10 L. J., Ch. 177.

Whether Residuary Devise Specific—Before the Wills Act.]—Every devise of land must be of necessity specific, whether in particular or general terms: otherwise as to personal property. Howe v. Dartmouth (Earl), 7 Ves. 147; 6 R. R. 96.

Devise of real estate, though in form residuary, is specific. Hill v. Cock, 1 Ves. & B. 175.

—— Since the Wills Act.]—Since the 7 Will. 4, & 14 Vict. c. 26, a residuary devise is still to be regarded as specific, the previous rule to that effect being unaffected by the act. Hensman v. Fryer, 37 L. J., Ch. 97; 3 L. R., Ch. 420; 17 L. T. 394; 16 W. R. 162. Reversing 12 Jur. (N.S.) 681.

A residuary devise of land is specific as well since as before the Wills Act, 7 Will. 4, & 1 Vict. c. 26, and consequently devised estates specifically mentioned in the will are subject, equally with residuary devised estates, to the payment of debts, which the personal estate is insufficient to satisfy. Lancefield v. Iggulden, 44 L. J., Ch. 203; L. R. 10 Ch. 136. Reversing 30 L. T. 156; 22 W. R. 726. S. P., Pearman v. Twiss, 2 Giff. 130; 29 L. J., Ch. 802; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 337; 8 W. R. 329. Clark v. Clark, 4 Giff. 702; 34 L. J., Ch. 477; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 820; 12 L. T. 485; 13 W. R. 735. Eddels v. Johnson, 1 Giff. 22; 27 L. J., Ch. 302; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 255; 6 W. R. 401. Contra, Barnewell v. Iremonger, 1 Dr. & Sm. 242; 30 L. J., Ch. 13; 8 W. R 740. Daly v. Hartridge, 1 Dr. & Sm. 236. Rotherham v. Rotherham, 26 Beav. 465; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 402. Bethell v. Green, 34 Beav. 302.

When the residuary personalty, after payment of the testator's debts, proved insufficient to pay the costs of a suit to administer the trusts of his will :—Held, that the deficiency must be borne by the specifically bequeathed personalty, the specifically devised realty and the residuary realty, ratably, according to value. Jackson v. Pease, L. R. 19 Eq. 96.

Capital and Income — Income during First Year.] — In administering an estate a proportionate amount of capital and the income actually made in the first year are to be applied in payment of debts, legacies, funeral and testamentary expenses and costs, and the profits made in a business are to be treated as income. The rule that in adjusting the accounts of a testator's estate between the tenant for life and the remainderman, the debts and legacies are to be taken as having been paid, not out of capital only, but with such portion of the capital as together with the income of that portion for one year is sufficient for the purpose, is not affected by the circumstance that the debts and legacies have been paid before the expiration of a year from the testator's death, and that the income from the continuance of the estate in the business carried on by the testator has greatly exceeded 5 per cent., so that the rule operates unfavourably to the tenant for life. Lambert v. Lambert, 43 L. J., Ch. 106 ; L. R. 16 Eq. 320 ; 21 W. R. 748.

Where a testator has bequeathed legacies, and given his residue to a tenant for life, with remainder over ; executors, though, as between themselves and the persons interested in the residue, they are at liberty to have recourse to any funds they please in order to pay debts and legacies, yet will be treated by the court, in adjusting the accounts between tenant for life and remainderman, as having paid the debts and legacies not out of capital only, nor out of income only, but with such portion of the capital as, together with the income of that portion for one year, was sufficient for that purpose. Allusen v. Whittell, L. R. 4 Eq. 295.

—— Application as between Principal and Interest of Debts.]—Upon taking the accounts in a suit to administer real and personal estate, if a question arises between the tenant for life and the remainderman as to the proper mode of applying the personal estate, the court will, if the justice of the case requires it, for the purpose of seeing to what extent and in what form the real estate is to be exonerated by means of personalty, investigate the application of the personal estate, and proceed, as a general rule, upon the principle of applying the capital of the personal estate to pay the principal of debts, and the income of the personal estate to pay the interest of debts. Shore v. Shore, 26 L. J., Ch. 386 ; 5 W. R. 250.

Rents and Profits.]—Rents and profits of real estate descended are to be accounted for, and applied before inheritance sold and applied. Rowe v. Beavis, Dick. 178.

—— Account—When Directed by Court.]—In a suit for the administration of the real and personal estate of a deceased party, an account of rents and profits received since the deceased's death is never directed at the original hearing. Schomberg v. Humfrey, 1 Dr. & War. 411.

Such an account is only directed when, upon the cause coming back, the necessity for it is apparent. Ib.

In a creditors' suit, an account of the rents and profits received since the death, is never directed until the produce of the sale of the real estate proves insufficient for the payment of the debts. Stratford v. Ritson, 10 Beav. 25 ; 16 L. J., Ch. 176 ; 11 Jur. 177.

H., the husband of the testator's daughter, was one of the trustees and executors of his will, and also entitled to a life estate under a settlement, the funds subject to which consisted almost entirely of a large debt due from the testator. H. received the rents of the devised estates for a number of years. At the testator's death, the corpus of the estates was sufficient to pay debts and legacies. H. paid more than he received in respect of the personal estate, and treating him as having received the rent in right of his wife, and as only bound to keep down the interest on the debts and legacies as tenant for life, there was nothing due from him to the estate. The estate having become insufficient to pay the debts and legacies :—Held, that an account of rents had been properly directed against H., and that what was coming to him in respect of his life interest under the settlement was liable to be applied in payment of what was found due on such account, and that such liability had priority over the claims of judgment creditors of H., who had obtained a charging order on his life interest, and that it had priority over the claims of the trustees of his settlement for part of the settled fund received by him. Stronge v. Hawkes, 4 De G. & J. 632.

Where an estate was devised to I. subject to several charges, to one of which the devisee was entitled, it was held, that a sum for slave compensation which he received as "devisee" of his father, must, as between the several charges, be applied in reduction of the first charge of 10,000*l.*, and that the personal representative of I. or his father, must account for interest on that sum during the life of I. Clarendon (Earl) v. Barham, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 688 ; 12 L. J., Ch. 215 ; 6 Jur. 962.

Lapsed Interests.]—When there is a charge of debts, a share of realty which lapses to the heir will bear only its proportion of the charge. Ryves v. Ryves, 40 L. J., Ch. 252 ; L. R. 11 Eq. 539.

Real estate devised subject to payment of debts to one for life, with remainder to three persons as tenants in common where one of the shares in remainder lapsed :—Held, that the lapsed share was applicable for payment of debts in the same order as the devised estates, and not till after real estates, which descended as having been purchased after the will. Wood v. Ordish, 3 Sm. & G. 125. S. P., Fisher v. Fisher, 2 Keen, 610.

A lapsed share of a residue of real and personal estate devised, subject to the payment of debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, is not liable to the debts of the testator in exoneration of the rest of the residuary estate, but ratably with it. Rathborne, In re, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 141.

A testatrix, after directing payment of her just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, gave her residuary and personal estate amongst four persons by name, one of whom died in her lifetime :—Held, that the lapsed share was not primarily liable for the cost of an administration suit, but that the costs must be paid before the residue was divided. Trethewy v. Helyar, 46 L. J., Ch. 125; 4 Ch. D. 53. S. P., Fenton v. Wills, 47 L. J., Ch. 191; 7 Ch. D. 33; 37 L. T. 373; 26 W. R. 139. Contra, the dictum in Gowan v. Broughton, 44 L. J., Ch. 275; L. R. 19 Eq. 77; 23 W. R. 332.

The rule that a descended estate must exonerate a devised estate from the payment of the testator's debts and costs of an administration suit equally applies, whether the descended estate has been left undisposed of at the time of making the will, or whether it has become undisposed of through lapse. Scott v. Cumberland, 44 L. J., Ch. 226; L. R. 18 Eq. 578; 31 L. T. 26; 22 W. R. 840.

Paraphernalia.]—Where a man's real and personal estate are charged by his will with the payment of his debts, and afterwards turn out insufficient, his wife's jewels and paraphernalia should be sold towards making good the deficiency. Parker v. Harvey, 4 Bro. P. C. 609; 14 Vin. Abr. 458.

A real estate charged with payment of debts, in aid of the personal estate, shall be applied before the widow's paraphernalia. Boyntun v. Boyntun, 1 Cox, 106.

Jewels of the wife, though given by husband's will to her for life, shall not be sold for payment of husband's debts charged on a real estate in aid of personalty. Boynton v. Parkhurst, 1 Bro. C. C. 576.

Where husband's personal estate is not sufficient to pay his debts, wife cannot set up any claim to jewels, rings, pictures, dressing plate and other trinkets given her before marriage. Ridout v. Plymouth (Earl), 2 Atk. 104.

A. is principal in recognizance of 5,000*l*., and B. and C. are sureties. A. afterwards jointures his wife before marriage in some lands, without notice either to the wife or her friends of this recognizance, and devises his real and personal estate to B., one of his sureties, and dies: first, the personal estate of A., the principal, shall be applied towards this recognizance, then his land devised, the devisee being a volunteer, the paraphernalia of the wife of A., the principal, and lastly, the two sureties shall contribute to make up the deficiency. Tynt v. Tynt, 2 P. W. 542.

Assets Abroad.]—English subject, resident and dying in England, where his will was proved, but having debts and chose in action in Scotland:—Held, that the latter were distributable as the rest of his effects; debts follow the person of the creditors, not of the debtor. As to debts due to a freeman of London. Thorne v. Watkins, 2 Ves. Sen. 35.

Where a testator dies, leaving creditors and assets in England as well as in India, the creditors in England are not entitled to be satisfied out of the assets in England in priority of the Indian creditors. Reynolds v. Lewis, Brett, In re, 29 L. J., Ch. 296; 8 W. R. 272.

A testator domiciled in England died possessed of personal estate and also of real estates in Scotland. His will purported to deal with the Scotch real estates, but was inoperative to pass them, and they descended to the Scotch heir. A suit having been instituted for the administration of the testator's estate against the executors, one of whom was the Scotch heir, he elected to take the descended estates in opposition to the will, and gave up the legacy which had been bequeathed to him by the will:—Held, first, that the liability of the Scotch real estates to the payment of debts, as between the heir and the pecuniary legatees, must be determined by the law of Scotland, and not by the law of the country where the testator's estate was being administered. Harrison v. Harrison, 42 L. J., Ch. 495; L. R. 8 Ch. 342; 28 L. T. 545; 21 W. R. 164, 490.

Held, secondly, that as the law of Scotland threw the general debts primarily on the personal estate, and did not permit them to fall, directly or indirectly, on the real estate until the personal estate was exhausted, there could be no marshalling in the English court against the Scotch heir in favour of the pecuniary legatees. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that no part of the general costs of the suit could be thrown on the Scotch estates; and that the heir was entitled to his costs out of the personal estate except the extra costs occasioned by his election. Ib.

Where a party domiciled in England, but possessed of real estate in Scotland, died intestate, being indebted on bonds which were paid by the heir out of the proceeds of the real estate in Scotland:—Held, that the right which the heir in Scotland paying movable debts has there against the personal estate, may be made available in England, where the personal estate is primarily liable for the payment of all debts. Winchilsea (Earl) v. Garetty, 2 Keen, 293; 7 L. J., Ch. 99; 2 Jur. 367.

—— Confiscated.]—The plaintiff's testator's property in America being confiscated, subject to his debts, a creditor there ought first to apply to make that property available for payment of his debts before he sues him personally here. (Sed quære. See 6 Ves. 714.) Wright v. Nutt, 3 Bro. C. C. 326. And see ASSETS, X. a, 2, ante, col. 1428.

Personal Estate insufficient—Adjustment of Accounts between Tenant for Life of Real Estate and Remaindermen.]—A testator devised all his real estate (except two specified estates) to trustees, upon trust for his son for life, with remainder in strict settlement, and he devised the two specified estates upon similar trusts in favour of his two daughters respectively for life, with remainders to their respective issue. By a deed executed on the marriage of his son, the testator covenanted to pay to the son or his wife during their joint lives an annuity of 700*l*. The testator's personal estate proved insufficient to provide for the annuity:—Held, that the three real estates ought to contribute towards payment of the annuity ratably according to their respective values; and that each tenant for life would have a charge upon the corpus of the estate in respect of the proportion of the annuity paid by him or her, but would have to keep down the interest on the amount so charged. Harrison, In re, Townson v. Harrison, 59 L. J., Ch. 169; 43 Ch. D. 55; 61 L. T. 762; 38 W. R. 265. And see Muffett, In re, Jones v. Mason, 57 L. J., Ch. 1017; 39 Ch. D. 534.

2. Charge or Trust for Payment of Debts.

Charge of Debts—General Directions.]—A mere desire expressed by a testator in his will that his debts shall be paid, creates a charge on his real estate for their payment. Wrigley v. Sykes, 21 Beav. 337; 25 L. J., Ch. 458; 2 Jur.

(N.S.) 78 ; 4 W. R. 228. S. P., Parker v. Marchant, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 290 ; 11 L. J., Ch. 223 ; 6 Jur. 292.

The words "Imprimis, I will that all the debts that I shall owe at the time of my decease be discharged and paid," are sufficient to make the real estate liable, in case of a deficiency of personal assets. Legh v. Warrington (Earl), 1 Bro. P. C. 511.

Where a testator by his will had ordered his trustees to possess themselves of his estates and substance, and to pay debts, it was held that this was a charge on the real estate, and that the assets should be marshalled for the legatees, to let them in so far as the personal estate had paid towards the debts. Foster v. Cook, 3 Bro. C. C. 347.

Devise, after a direction that all the debts shall be paid, amounts to a charge. King v. Denison, 1 Ves. & B. 260 ; 12 R. R. 227. S. P., Williams v. Chitty, 3 Ves. 545 ; 3 R. R. 71 ; Shalleross v. Finden, 3 Ves. 738 ; 3 R. R. 75 ; Withers v. Kennedy, 2 Myl. & K. 607 ; 3 L. J., Ch. 29.

The words "I will and direct that my just debts, &c., be paid and satisfied" in the introductory part of a will, amount to charge of debts on real estates. Clifford v. Lewis, 6 Madd. 33 ; 22 R. R. 228.

Testator, by his will, confined exclusively to real estate, after devising same among the several members of his family, concluded by "desiring that all his just debts should be paid as soon as convenient after his decease" :—Held, that the debts were charged upon the real estate of the testator. Harding v. Grady, 1 Dr. & War. 430 ; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 371.

A testator began his will by directing that all his just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses should be fully paid and satisfied. He then devised all his real estate to his daughter and her issue in strict settlement ; and, after giving one specific and pecuniary legacy, he gave all the residue of his personal estate (after and subject to the payment of all his just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and the legacies before bequeathed) to his said daughter :—Held, that the concluding clause of the will was not sufficient to rebut the presumption arising from the first, of an intention to charge the real estate in aid of the personalty with the debts, and that, consequently, the real estate was equitable assets. Price v. North, 1 Ph. 85 ; 11 L. J., Ch. 68 ; 5 Jur. 1147. Reversing 4 Y. and C. 509.

A testator directed his debts to be paid by his executrix, and he devised his real estate to her for life, with power to mortgage it as far as should be needful for her maintenance and comfort :—Held, on a sale by the executrix for payment of the debts, that the title was too doubtful to be forced on the purchaser. Cook v. Dawson, 29 Beav. 123 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 311 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 130 ; 3 L. T. 801 ; 9 W. R. 305. Affirmed 3 De G. F. & J. 127 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 359 ; 4 L. T. 226 ; 9 W. R. 434.

Where a testator gives a general direction that his debts shall be paid, this amounts to a charge of the debts generally upon the real estate, at least where the real estate is afterwards disposed of by the will. But an exception obtains, where the direction that the debts shall be paid is coupled with the direction that they must be paid by the executor. In that case, it is assumed that the testator meant that the debts should be paid only out of the property which by law passes to the executor. Ib.

Simple contract debts not charged on real estate, by will first directing that all his debts, &c. might be paid by his executors, all the real estate being specifically devised. Powell v. Robins, 7 Ves. 209.

A will began as follows : "In the first place I will, that all my debts and funeral charges be paid and discharged by my executors hereinafter named ; and I give and bequeath unto my eldest son Richard William, my estate at Shap, on condition that he make up the deficiency in the payment of the two legacies which I have left to my younger son and daughter" :—Held, that the testator's debts were not charged on the estate at Shap. Willan v. Lancaster, 3 Russ. 108 ; 27 R. R. 25.

A testator after directing that all his just debts should be paid by his executors, devised to his eldest son certain houses, subject, nevertheless, to his paying off the mortgage thereon, and then having devised to his other sons other houses which he had encumbered, and to his daughters certain houses which were free from encumbrance, empowered his executors to receive all rents due to his estate and pay his debts, and to use such means as should be necessary for recovering all money due to his estate, and also to grant possession to his devisees, and to reimburse themselves :—Held, not a general charge of debts on the whole of the real estate. Wisden v. Wisden, 2 Sm. & G. 396 ; 18 Jur. 1090 ; 2 W. R. 616.

—— Express.] — There is no substantial difference between case of real estate being charged with payment of debts, and where it is directed to be sold for that purpose. Inchiquin v. French, Ambl. 38 ; Ridgw. 230 ; 1 Cox, 1.

Distinction between a devise charged with debts, and on trust to pay debts. The former is a beneficial devise, subject to the particular purpose ; the latter limited to the particular purpose ; and therefore the interest, not exhausted, is a resulting trust for the heir. King v. Denison, 1 Ves. & B. 272 ; 12 R. R. 227.

Distinction between the expression of a desire that all debts shall be paid, followed by a gift of a particular estate for their payment, and a general charge of the real estate with the debts, followed by a particular provision for their payment. In the former, the general charge is qualified and limited to the particular estate, but in the latter it is not. Wrigley v. Sykes, 20 Beav. 337 ; 25 L. J., Ch. 458 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 78 ; 4 W. R. 228.

Whenever debts are directed to be paid they become a primary charge on the fund out of which they are so directed to be paid, unless there is something in the will to confine the generality of the charge. Harding v. Grady, 1 Dr. & War. 430 ; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 371.

Distinction between a charge on real estate for a specific purpose which fails, and a devise of real estate, with something in the nature of a charge excepted out of it. A charge of 4,000*l.* part of a larger charge on a devised estate towards paying the testator's sister a debt due to her on a note of hand. The testator only owed her 3,800*l.* on the note, but owed her besides 200*l.* :—Held, on the context of the will, that the whole was payable ; secus, on the mere language, unaided by the context. Sutcliffe v. Cole, 3 Drew. 135 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 486 ; 3 W. R. 265.

A testator devised certain equitable real estates to his executor as such, in trust for his wife and children, and bequeathed everything else to his wife, and he stated as follows, "My executors are charged with the payment of my just debts, of which I shall leave an account with the letter to my wife" :—Held, that the testator's debts were charged on these real estates; and, secondly, that the charge was general, and not limited to those enumerated in the account. Dormay v. Borradaile, 10 Beav. 263; 16 L. J., Ch. 337.

A son died before his father, leaving a widow, to whom he gave all his property. The son's estate being insufficient for the payment of his debts, the father, by a codicil to his will, directed his trustees and executors to pay his son's debts, and named the son of his son residuary devisee and legatee. The true construction of the father's codicil is that he intended only the payment of such portion of the debts of the son, as his son's estate would be insufficient to pay. Walker v. Lodge, 3 Russ. 452.

—— Specific Devises—Specific Bequest of Property charged by Testatrix in her Lifetime.]—A testatrix, after directing that her debts should be paid as soon as conveniently might be after her decease, specifically devised all her real estate, and specifically bequeathed certain personalty which in her lifetime she had specifically charged with a debt :—Held, that such personalty must be applied in payment of the debt before the real estate could be resorted to, notwithstanding that the direction to pay debts was a constructive charge of debts on the latter. Butler, In re, Le Bas v. Herbert, 63 L. J., Ch. 662; [1894] 3 Ch. 250; 8 R. 504; 43 W. R. 190.

—— Where Executors are Devisees.]—Where there is a direction that the executors shall pay the testator's debts, followed by a gift of all the real estate to them, either beneficially or on trust, all the debts will be payable out of all the estate so given to them, unless upon the whole will a contrary intimation is clear. The same rule applies whether the executors take the whole beneficial interest, or only a life interest, or no beneficial interest at all. Tanqueray Willaume and Landau, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 434; 20 Ch. D. 465; 46 L. T. 542; 30 W. R. 801—C. A. S. P., Bailey, In re, Bailey v. Bailey, 48 L. J., Ch. 628; 12 Ch. D. 268; 41 L. T. 157; 27 W. R. 909. Henrell v. Whittaker, 3 Russ. 343; 5 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 158. Finch v. Hattersley, 3 Russ. 345, n. Bridgen v. Lander, 3 Russ. 346, n. Dover v. Gregory, 10 Sim. 393; 9 L. J., Ch. 81. Dormay v. Borradaile, 10 Beav. 263; 16 L. J., Ch. 337. Hartland v. Murrell, 27 Beav. 204. De Burgh Lawson, In re, De Burgh Lawson v. De Burgh Lawson, 58 L. J., Ch. 561; 41 Ch. D. 568; 37 W. R. 797.

Where a testator directs that his debts and funeral expenses are to be paid by his executors, it is prima facie to be considered that he means the payment to be made by them out of the funds which come to their hands as executors. Whether he intends that all property which he gives to his executors shall be subject to the payment of his debts and legacies, must be gathered from the whole will. Wasse v. Heslington, 3 Myl. & K. 495; 3 L. J., Ch. 221.

A preliminary direction by the testator that all his debts should be paid by his executors as soon as conveniently could be done :—Held, upon the intention, as shewn by the whole will, not to have the effect of charging the real estate therewith, whether devised to the executors or not. Symons v. James, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 301.

Testator devises to A. and B. (whom he appoints his executors), upon trust, to sell for such purposes as he shall hereafter appoint, and then directs his debts to be paid by his executors. Under this devise A. and B. are authorised to sell for payment of debts. Barker v. Devonshire (Duke), 3 Mer. 310.

A testator devised all his property, real and personal, to A., B. and C., on trusts thereinafter mentioned; he then directed that his just debts should be paid by his executors thereinafter named, as soon as conveniently might be after his decease, and nominated A., B. and C. his executors :—Held, that there was a trust created for the payment of debts. Bentley v. Robinson, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 287.

A testator directed his debts and funeral expenses, and the charge of proving his will, to be paid by his executor thereinafter named, and then devised all his copyhold lands, &c., to his son, without any words of inheritance, and appointed him his sole executor and residuary legatee :—Held, that the son took the inheritance of the said copyhold lands charged with the testator's debts in the event of the personal estate being insufficient. Doner v. Reynolds, 4 Jur. 362.

In a suit for foreclosure, the executrix of a deceased mortgagor, who had devised the mortgaged premises, subject to the payment of debts, to his executrix for life, with remainder to his issue, has a power of sale, available for the plaintiffs in a creditor's suit, but not in a suit for foreclosure. Bolton v. Stannard, 27 L. J., Ch. 845; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 576; 6 W. R. 570.

—— Where Executors are Devisees—Effect of Authority to Adjust and Pay all Claims upon Testator's Estate.]—Testator, who died on the 7th of November, 1889, by his will, gave certain real estate, and also the residue of his estate of whatever nature, to two persons upon certain trusts, and he authorised his said trustees or trustee to release or compound any debts owing to him or his estate, or to give time, or take security for payment, "and to adjust and pay all claims made upon my estate." The two trustees were appointed executors of the will :—Held, that the will did not create a charge of debts upon the real estate. Head's Trustees and Macdonald, In re, 59 L. J., Ch. 604; 45 Ch. D. 310; 63 L. T. 21; 38 W. R. 657—C. A.

—— Where one of the Executors is not Devisee.]—Where introductory words in a will, directing payment of all the testator's just debts, were followed by specific devises to two of the executors, it was held, upon the whole context of the will, that the testator had not charged his real estate generally with the payment of debts. Braithwaite v. Britain, 1 Keen, 206.

A testator in the first place directs the payment of his debts and legacies by his executors afternamed. He afterwards devises a real estate to his son T. D. in fee, and in a subsequent part of his will names T. D. and another person, his executors, who both prove the will. The estate devised to T. D. not being a devise to the executors after-named, is not charged with debts and legacies. Warren v. Davies, 2 Myl. & K. 49; 2 L. J., Ch. 203.

A testator ordered his debts to be paid by his executors, and, after giving legacies, he gave the residue of his real and personal estate, subject as aforesaid, to A., and he appointed A. and B. executors :—Held, that if the legacies were charged on the real estate, the debts must also be charged thereon, and that therefore A. was able to give valid receipts for the purchase-money of the real estate, which relieved a purchaser from the necessity of seeing to its application. Dowling v. Hudson, 17 Beav. 248.

Order made against trustees of a term, who did not object. Fletcher v. Houghton, 5 Ves. 550.

—— Interest.]—A provision by will for payment of interest of debts held not to extend to a debt by simple contract. Tait v. Northwick (Lord), 4 Ves. 816; 4 R. R. 358.

Devise in trust to sell and apply money to such persons as trustees should think had a just demand, &c., on A. at his death in equal degree and proportion, according to principal sum, as far as the money would extend, the securities would be delivered up, but the money should be received in no other way than as a voluntary bounty. The fund being more than sufficient is liable to interest of bonds to extent of penalties. Aston v. Gregory, 6 Ves. 151.

Charge by will on real estate of simple contract debts of another person, considered as a legacy carrying interest from the death of the testator at 4 per cent. Shirt v. Westby, 16 Ves. 393; 10 R. R. 210. S. P., Spurway v. Glynn, 9 Ves. 483; 7 R. R. 279.

Estate devised with direction that the executors should pay interest of a mortgage upon it out of the rents until the mortgage should be paid off, and that such mortgage should be the first which his executors should discharge from other sources mentioned in his will: the estate is liable to such interest for one year only from testator's death. Beanland v. Hallewell, C. P. Cooper, 344.

A testator directed his real estate to be sold "immediately, or as soon as conveniently might be," and applied in aid of his personal estate in payment of his debts; but until the settlement should be made as after directed, the rents were to be applied in keeping down the mortgages, and the residue to be paid to the persons entitled under the settlement. He then directed the unsold hereditaments to be settled on A. for life, with remainder over. The testator was greatly indebted on bonds, and his personal estate was largely deficient. More than a year elapsed before the sale of the real estates:—Held, that the interest on all the debts for the first year was payable out of the corpus of the real estate, but that the tenant for life was bound to keep down the subsequent interest. Greisley v. Chesterfield (Earl), 13 Beav. 288.

Direction in a will to pay and discharge all the just and lawful debts owing by a deceased brother at the time of his death:—Held, upon the terms of the will, and looking to the circumstance that the brother had been dead about forty years at the date of the will, to comprise debts, but not interest. Askew v. Thompson, 4 Kay & J. 620.

Extent—As regards Property Charged.]—A general charge of debts and legacies upon all the real estates of the testator, not annulled by a subsequent power to sell a particular estate only, and to apply the produce to the same purpose; but that estate was first applied. Coxe v. Basset, 3 Ves. 155.

Upon the construction of a will:—Held, that the effect of general words of charge at the commencement was not cut down by subsequent words. Jones v. Williams, 1 Coll. C. C. 156; 8 Jur. 373.

Testator having first directed his debts to be paid out of his real and personal estate, afterwards by a separate clause provided, that if his personal estate should fall short of paying his debts, then his executor should enter into possession of the real estate, and apply the rents in payment of the debts. The personal estate was sufficient:—Held, nevertheless, that such a trust had been created for payment of the debts out of the realty as to prevent the Statute of Limitations from running against the debts, and that the real estate remained liable to pay a simple contract debt left unpaid after distribution of the residuary personal estate. Crallan v. Oulton, 3 Beav. 1; 9 L. J., Ch. 319.

Direction to pay debts, then legacies to B., then devise of lands to A. and B., who were appointed residuary legatees and executors, and A. was directed to pay out of the rents and profits a particular charge:—Held, that this did not exempt the lands from liability to the other debts. Forster v. Thompson, 2 Con. & L. 568; 4 Dr. & War. 303; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 168.

Testator, after directing all his debts to be fully paid, devised his real estates to several different persons, and charged certain of them with specific sums:—Held, that those estates, as well as the others, were charged with the debts. Taylor v. Taylor, 6 Sim. 346.

A testator gave a life estate in his realty to his wife, subject to the payment of his debts, in exoneration of his personal estate, and gave her a life interest in his personalty, subject to the payment of his funeral and testamentary expenses; and he gave her a power of appointing the personalty by will among his sons, as she should think fit; and, in default of appointment, he gave the personalty to his sons in equal shares. He devised the realty, after the death of his wife, as to one part, to his eldest son, subject to the payment of half the debts left unpaid at the death of the wife; as to another part, to his second son, subject to the payment of one-third of the debts left unpaid at the same time; and as to another part, to his third son, subject to the payment of one-sixth of the debts left unpaid at the same time; and as to the remainder, to his fourth son. The widow, during her life, received more than enough from the rents for payment of the debts, but did not pay them all. After her death, on a bill filed, it was held that she took the life estate subject to the payment of the debts, and that her estate was liable to account for the money received by her during her life. Jones v. Jones, 10 Jur. 960.

R. N., by his will, gave all his personal estate to R. N. and J. N., that is to say (he then enumerated several particulars), in trust for the following purposes: that the same be not liable or resorted to for the payment of mortgages or bond debts, and charges thereinafter mentioned should be satisfied; and as soon as that could be effected, the same was to be resorted to in relief of his real estate. The testator then gave several legacies to his wife and children; and bequeathed the residue, after the respective charges thereby made thereon, to his eldest son:—Held, that the residue, as well as the enumerated articles, were subject to the charges in the will mentioned. Nicholas v. Nicholas, Taml. 269.

A. devised his estates to trustees for a term of years, thereout to pay off all incumbrances for the time being secured on his "settled and unsettled estates." At the date of his will, amongst the settled estates was a renewable leasehold, which was settled upon the testator for life, remainder to his eldest son absolutely. The testator subsequently purchased the reversion expectant upon the determination of the lease, and he and his eldest son joined in a mortgage thereof to secure a part of the purchase-money, the equity of redemption being limited to the testator and his eldest son as joint tenants; and the surplus moneys, in case of sale under the power, were directed to be paid to the testator and his son according to their interests therein: —Held, that the estate was to be considered as one of the testator's "settled" estates, and that the mortgage debt was raisable by the trustees under the term of years. Hastings (Lord) v. Ashley, 30 Beav. 260; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 225; 10 W. R. 73.

A testator, by his will, made a general devise of his real estates to his nephews, charged with his debts and legacies. By a codicil, he devised a freehold house to A. B., it being his wish that she should reside therein if she should think fit: —Held, that the house was exempt from the charge of debts and legacies. Wheeler v. Clay-don, 16 Beav. 169.

A testator directed that the lands of C. should, as soon after his death as possible, be sold in the Incumbered Estates Court; and, after the payment of all his just debts, be equally divided between A. and B.; and he left legacies, and appointed B. residuary legatee and devisee of all his real, personal estate, and effects:—Held, that the will was an express dedication of the lands of C. for payment of debts. West v. Lawday, Ir. R. 2 Eq. 517; 16 W. R. 916.

Testator charged his real estate with 1,000*l.*, to be applied as the residue of his personal estate was thereinafter directed. He then gave the residue of his personal estate, after his debts, legacies and funeral expenses were paid, to certain trustees for the benefit of his relations in manner therein mentioned. The personal estate was deficient for payment of his debts. The 1,000*l.* is payable to the trustees for the relations, without being subject to the claims of the creditors. Killet v. Ford, 1 Cox, 442.

A testator devised an estate, H., and other estates, to A., charged with annuities; and an estate, Y., and his residuary real and personal estate to B., subject to the payment of his debts, funeral expenses and legacies; he afterwards revoked so much of the second devise as included Y., and devised it, subject to the same annuities, and in the same manner, as the estate H.:—Held, that the charge of debts, &c., on Y. was revoked. Ravens v. Taylor, 4 Beav. 425.

A testator being seised and possessed of certain freehold and chattel leases, devised as follows: "I give, devise and bequeath my farm of B. to my grandson M., and every kind of stock thereon, together with one-third of every other property that I now possess and am entitled to." He then made similar devises of others of the farms, and the remaining two-thirds of the residue to two other grandsons respectively. He then left 18*l.* a year to his wife, "to be paid to her during her life by my said three grandsons, share and share alike, or by their heirs or executors." He then directed 300*l.* to be invested on a certain event, "the said sum to be deducted equally from and out of the property herein first bequeathed to my said three grandsons, who, or their heirs, on the fall of any lease, are to be equal sufferers pursuant to their respective proportions." The testator, at the date of his will, was seised of the farm of G., but did not devise it by name:—Held, that either there was to be no contribution, but that each was to bear his own loss, or that the lands devised nominatim were those only which were to be contributory, and that, consequently, the farm of G. was not liable. Spunner v. Dwyer, 2 Con. & L. 432; 4 Dr. & War. 477.

Semble, that in the above case the claim was bad for uncertainty. Ib.

—— Particular Estate Charged after General Directions.]—A testator directed all his debts, legacies and funeral expenses to be paid as soon as conveniently might be after his decease. He then gave certain legacies, directing the legacy duty to be paid out of his estate and effects, and he also gave some specific legacies, which he declared should not be subject to the payment of his debts, legacies and funeral expenses. He then devised a particular estate in trust to pay his debts, legacies and funeral expenses, so far as his personal estate should not be sufficient:—Held, that, nevertheless, all his real estates were charged with his debts. Graves v. Graves, 8 Sim. 43; 5 L. J., Ch. 270.

The testator began his will by declaring that all his just debts, funeral and other incidental expenses should be paid with all convenient speed after his decease. By a codicil he devised a particular estate, upon trust in the first place to pay the annuity to his wife, and after certain payments to apply the surplus to the discharge of his simple contract debts:—Held, that the real estate was not charged with the payment of debts. Quære, whether the introductory words, without more, would have charged the real estate. Dance v. Torrington, 2 Myl. & K. 600.

The testator commenced his will with the words, "In the first place I direct my just debts, funeral expenses and the charge of proving this my will, to be duly paid." He then made several devises, and he gave to J. G. a small quantity of plate, together with the rents and profits of his freehold and leasehold premises, due and accruing up to the quarter's day next after his decease; which rents and profits he charged with the payment of his said debts, funeral expenses and the charges of proving his will:—Held, that real estates generally were not charged with payment of debts. Palmer v. Graves, 1 Keen, 546; 1 Jur. 164.

—— Copyholds.]—Where a testator, having both freehold and copyhold estates, charges his real estate with payment of his debts, if he has surrendered the copyhold to the use of his will, the freehold and copyhold shall be applied ratably; but if he has not surrendered the copyhold, it shall not be applied until the freehold is exhausted. Growcock v. Smith, 2 Cox, 397. S. P., Rowley v. Eyton, 2 Mer. 128; 16 R. R. 157. Ronalds v. Feltham, Turn. & R. 418.

Introductory words, referable to all testator's worldly estate, amounting to a charge, copyhold lands are liable as well as freehold. In this case there was a copyhold which had not been surrendered, this was also declared liable. Coombes v. Gibson, 1 Bro. C. C. 273. S. P., Kentish v. Kentish, 3 Bro. C. C. 257.

Devise by general words, viz., messuages, lands, tenement, and hereditaments, for payment of debts, will include copyholds if required; and the want of a surrender will be supplied. Kidney v. Coussmaker, 12 Ves. 136; 2 R. R. 118.

After a general direction that debts, funeral and testamentary charges shall be paid, and a bequest of the personal estate subject to the payment of those charges, the testator, in case his personal estate should not be sufficient to discharge "the same," charged his freehold estate with payment "thereof" and "subject thereto," gave all his freehold and copyhold estates which he had surrendered, or intended to surrender, to the use of his will. The copyhold estates charged. Noel v. Weston, 2 Ves. & B. 269; 13 R. R. 79.

A testator by his will gave to his daughter A., so long as she should continue unmarried, all his copyhold estates situate at P., and also all his live and dead stock, furniture, moneys, and securities for money, after payment of his just debts, funeral expenses, and the costs of proving his will; and declared that, if A. should be married after his death, or die unmarried, the whole of the estates, with the live and dead stock, furniture and goods whatsoever, should be sold, and the proceeds arising therefrom be divided between B., C., and D.:—Held, that the testator had charged his copyhold estates with the payment of his debts. Moores v. Whittle, 22 L. J., Ch. 207.

—— When Restricted to Income.]—A direction in a will to pay debts out of rents and profits of real estate primâ facie charges the debts on the corpus, unless the will contains a context showing that annual rents and profits only are meant. Metcalfe v. Hutchinson, 45 L. J., Ch. 210; 1 Ch. D. 591. S. P., Wragg v. Morley, 14 W. R. 949.

Devise of freeholds of inheritance to trustees for 500 years, and subject to that term to the use of various persons successively for life, with remainder to the first and other sons of such several persons successively in tail male, with remainder to the daughters of such several persons successively in tail general, with remainders over. The trusts of the 500 years' term were declared to be, that the trustees of the term should, out of the rents, &c., of the hereditaments comprised therein, pay the several annuities mentioned in the will, and, subject thereto, should out of the residue of the rents and profits of the premises comprised in the said term, raise such sums, not exceeding 8,000*l.* in the whole, as should be necessary to pay such debts as might be owing by her late husband or by herself, and all which she directed the trustees to pay out of the said rents and profits as they should think fit, and as soon as convenient after her decease; and, subject to the several trusts of the said term, upon trusts to pay the residue of the net rents, &c., of the premises comprised therein unto the persons who for the time being should be next entitled to the reversion or remainder of the premises expectant thereon, under the foregoing limitations:—Held, that the testatrix did not intend the debts to be raised out of the corpus of the estate, but only that they should be discharged out of the annual rents and profits. Per Lord Chief Baron. This is a question of intention only. The cases shew that where the remainderman takes an estate of inheritance, unless there be something demonstrating a contrary intention, the court, in favour of the person entitled to the charge, if it be a gross sum, will raise it by sale or mortgage. The controversy becomes more important and critical where the remainderman is tenant for life only. It is a question materially affecting the interest of the devisee, whether the corpus of the estate is to bear the charge, or the devisee is to lose all benefit of his estate until the charge is satisfied. Heneage v. Andover (Lord), 3 Y. & J. 360.

A testator devised his freehold estates to trustees for 120 years upon trust that they should enter into possession of and manage them, and out of the rents and profits pay such of his debts as the personal estate should be insufficient to pay, and also pay thereout the interest on incumbrances, and 50*l.* a year to each of the acting trustees, and 200*l.* a year to B. for life, and should accumulate the residue of the rents and profits for twenty years after the death of the survivor of five persons named in the will, and apply the fund in discharge of the incumbrances on the estates. Subject to the term of 120 years he devised his said estates to B. for life, with remainder to his sons in tail male, with remainder to the plaintiff for life, with remainder to his sons in tail male, with remainders over. By a codicil the testator revoked the devise of his freehold estates for the 120 years' term, and instead, devised them to his trustees for 200 years, upon trust that they should raise out of the rents and profits such sums as they should in their discretion think necessary to be raised in aid of his personal estate for payment of his debts (other than his mortgage debts) and the legacies bequeathed by his will, and should pay the moneys to be raised accordingly: and should also out of the rents and profits raise 1,000*l.* annually until the death of B., and invest the same and accumulate the interest, and apply the trust fund in payment of incumbrances on the estates. Subject to the term of 200 years he devised his estates to B. for life, and after his death to the trustees for 120 years upon trust that they should enter into possession of and manage the estates, and out of the rents and profits pay the expenses of management, and invest and accumulate the residue of the rents and profits for twenty years after the death of the survivor of the five persons named therein, and apply the last-mentioned trust funds in payment of incumbrances. Subject to these charges the testator confirmed the dispositions made by his will. The personal estate was insufficient to pay the debts. B. survived the testator and died without issue. The plaintiff then became tenant for life in possession:—Held, that, according to the ordinary legal construction of the words in the codicil, the testator intended the deficiency between the personal estate and the amount of the debts to be raised by an assignment of the 200 years' term. Fitzherbert v. Weld, 24 W. R. 43.

The court accordingly declared that the debts other than mortgage debts, so far as the personalty was insufficient, were primarily charged on the corpus of the estate in exoneration of the income, and were raisable out of the corpus. Ib.

—— Liability of Executrix Tenant for Life to recoup Corpus out of Income.]—A testator bequeathed to his wife, subject to the payment of his debts, all the cash in his house at the time of his death, and directed that in case such money should be insufficient for such payment, the deficiency should be paid out of the rents, dividends, and annual proceeds of all his estate. He also specifically bequeathed property to his wife during her life, and appointed her his executrix, and she paid his debts in part out of the corpus of his estate:—Held, that the words, "rents, dividends, and annual proceeds," were, having regard to the context, equivalent to "annual rents, dividends, and proceeds," and that the direction for payment of debts thereout did not create a charge upon the corpus of the estate; but, held, that as the debts had been in fact partially paid out of corpus, and the testator had not provided for such an event, the executrix could not be called upon to recoup the corpus out of the income of her specifically bequeathed property. The principle of Tewart v. Lawson (L. R. 18 Eq. 490) adopted and followed. Green, In re, Baldock v. Green, 58 L. J., Ch. 157; 40 Ch. D. 610; 60 L. T. 225; 37 W. R. 300.

What Debts included.]—The whole will must be looked to for the intention of the testator; and though there is a direction to pay all debts or legacies, yet, if there is an intention shewn to throw a particular debt or legacy upon the real estate, the court is bound to give effect to it. Bateman v. Roden (Earl), 1 Jo. & Lat. 356; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 240.

The expression in a will, "all my just debts," includes all the testator's debts whenever and wherever contracted, and therefore includes a debt contracted by him after the making of the will, and contracted in a country other than that of his domicil, and secured upon property situated in that other country. Maxwell v. Maxwell, 39 L. J., Ch. 698; L. R. 4 H. L. 506; 23 L. T. 325; 19 W. R. 15.

The burden of shewing that the words have a less extensive meaning lies on him who asserts their restricted operation. Ib.

Real estate under a charge by a will duly attested, liable to debts afterwards contracted, and legacies by an unattested instrument, even to the witnesses to the will. Sheddon v. Goodrich, 8 Ves. 481.

—— Debts under Bankruptcy—Unpaid Balance of.]—A. and B. having been bankrupts in 1822, B. the survivor, in 1851, by his will directed his executors and trustees to pay his just debts, including the unpaid in full debts proved under the bankruptcy; and he directed his executors to pay to the official manager of the bankruptcy, or to some authorised person to be appointed by the Court of Chancery, in trust for all the creditors under the commission, so much money as would make the dividend on the estate equal to 20*s.* in the pound on all the debts so proved:—Held, that the direction to pay must be regarded as a bounty, not only in favour of those creditors who survived B., but of the representatives of those who predeceased him, and that the official assignee, and the joint estate, was entitled to receive the amount found due to all the creditors, less the amount of legacy duty. Turner v. Martin, 7 De G. M. & G. 429; 26 L. J., Ch. 216; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 397; 5 W. R. 277.

—— Landlord and Tenant — Covenant for Quiet Enjoyment.]—A lessor covenanted with his lessee for quiet enjoyment of the devised premises, and afterwards devised his real estate, subject to and charged with the payment of his debts. After the death of the lessor, the lessee was evicted, and brought his action of covenant against the executors of the lessor, who pleaded plene administravit, whereupon the lessee took out judgment of assets quando, &c., and procured the damages to be assessed upon a writ of inquiry. He then filed his bill against the devisees of the lessor for satisfaction of the damages and costs out of the real estate of the lessor devised by his will:—Held, that although damages recovered in an action of covenant, brought in respect of breaches of covenant happening after the death of the testator, were not a debt within the Statute of Fraudulent Devises, 3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 14, yet they were a debt payable out of the real estate of the testator under the charge of debts thereon created by his will. Morse v. Tucker, 5 Hare, 79; 15 L. J., Ch. 162; 10 Jur. 173. S. P., Bermingham v. Burke, 2 Jo. & Lat. 699; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 86.

—— Mortgage Debts.]—A father, having agreed to secure a marriage portion for his daughter, mortgaged part of his estates for that purpose, and covenanted to pay the money. By his will, he directed his debts to be paid, first out of the residue of his personal estate, then out of his money in the funds, and lastly out of his residuary real estates:—Held, that the mortgaged estate was not to be exonerated, from the portion, out of the personal estate. Graves v. Hicks, 6 Sim. 398; 4 L. J., Ch. 239.

Estate devised, with direction that the executor should pay the interest of a mortgage upon it out of the rents until the mortgage should be paid off, and that such mortgage should be the first which the executors should discharge: the estate is liable to such interest for one year only from testator's death. Beaulaud v. Hallewell, C. P. Cooper, 344.

—— Adoption of Debt.]—A., who had a life interest in certain estates, gave a bond to a creditor, and a warrant of attorney to confess judgment for its amount. No judgment was entered up. A. died within three years of the date of the bond, leaving no assets real or personal. B., his son, the first tenant in tail of the estates, entered into possession, and expressed, in letters to the creditor, a wish to pay his father's debts, but would not give any security for them. B. made a will, in which reciting his own wish, and a promise in conformity with it, made by him to his father and mother, he said, "And in case I should not be able to fulfil my intentions during my lifetime, and that I should not have a sufficient fund for that purpose arising from my personal estate, I hereby charge all my just debts, and also all the debts of my late father A., which remain unpaid at the time of my decease, upon all my real estates wheresoever," &c. He then directed his trustees to stand seised of all his estates, "subject, in manner aforesaid, to the payment of all my just debts, and to the debts of my father." B. survived his father many years. The obligee of the bond filed a charge thereof against the trustees under the son's will:—Held, that the debts of the father which were not barred by the Statute of Limitations at the death of the father, were charges on the real estates of the son. O'Connor v. Haslam, 5 H. L. Cas. 170.

A testator directed his trustees to raise, by mortgage of all or any part of his hereditaments thereinbefore devised, any sum or sums of money, not exceeding 20,000*l*., and to apply the same in liquidation of the debts or engagements of another, as to them should seem expedient or proper. The trustees refused to raise the money without the sanction of the court:—Held, first, that the trustees had not by their refusal to raise the money without the sanction of the court abandoned their power of selection among the creditors; secondly, that the power of selection was not confined to debts in existence at the death of the testator; thirdly, that creditors whose debts, at the time of the testator's death, were barred by the Statute of Limitations, were excluded from the benefit of the trust. Joel v. Mills, Hervey v. Mills, 30 L. J., Ch. 354; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 389; 3 L. T. 882; 9 W. R. 298.

A rector of a parish died insolvent, leaving the rectory house dilapidated. He was indebted to W., who, with other creditors, received a composition for their debts from the widow and administratrix of the deceased rector, and they executed a general release by signing their names against the amount stated in a schedule. W. succeeded to the rectory, and he made a further claim of 200*l*. against the estate of the insolvent for dilapidations. The insolvent's widow afterwards, by her will, charged her real and personal estate with payment of her husband's debts. In a suit in equity for the administration of her estate:—Held, that the release discharged all the claims of W. against the estate of the insolvent, and that the claim for dilapidations was not payable under the will of the testatrix. Bissett v. Burgess, 23 Beav. 278; 26 L. J., Ch. 697; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1221.

A testator, as surety for his sons A. B. and C. D., mortgaged a particular estate to secure to E. F. the payment of 2,500*l*. due from his sons to E. F., and A. B. and C. D. gave the testator a bond to indemnify him in respect of the mortgage. The testator, by his will, devised this particular estate by name to A. B., and gave the residue of his estate to trustees, on trust to pay his funeral and testamentary expenses and all his debts, and, in particular, all sums which might be charged upon the property devised to A. B.:—Held, that the testator took the debt on himself, and that the 2,500*l*. was payable out of his estate, so as to exonerate the principal debtors, his sons A. B. and C. D. Musket v. Cliffe, 2 De G. & Sm. 243; 17 L. J., Ch. 269; 12 Jur. 739.

Contribution.] — Testator devised an estate to trustees upon trust to raise thereout one moiety of the legacies given by his will, and one moiety of such sums as might be requisite, with his personal property, to pay his debts; and, subject thereto, to convey the same to his eldest son, and his issue in the manner therein mentioned. In like manner he devised three other estates to trustees, upon trust, to raise thereout respectively, one-fifth, one-tenth, and one-tenth of his debts and legacies; and, subject thereto, to convey the same respectively to his second, third, and fourth sons and their issue. He then devised another estate to trustees, upon trust, to raise thereout one-tenth of his legacies; and, subject thereto, to convey same to his fifth son and his issue, as therein mentioned; and he directed that his personal estate, not specifically bequeathed, should be applied in payment of his debts; and that such further sum as might be requisite to pay his debts should be raised out of his landed property in the proportions above mentioned:—Held, that the estate devised to the fifth son was charged with one-tenth of the deficiency of the personal estate to pay the debts. Purcell v. Blennerhassett, 3 Jo. & Lat. 24; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 103.

A testator by an imperfect passage referred to a trust deed for payment of his debts; and his desire that said deed, notwithstanding his death before payment of all his debts, out of the produce of his estates, should contribute ratably to the payment of his debts in proportion to the annual profits now arising from each part respectively, and confirmed the deed, and charged all his estates with the debts then, or which should thereafter be due by him, and, subject to said debts in manner aforesaid, gave the estates to different devisees. He subsequently executed a mortgage for the same purposes as the trust deed, and after that republished his will by a codicil, giving the estates to the same uses, intents, and purposes mentioned in his will:—Held, that the estates should contribute in proportion to the annual profits at the date of the will, and not in proportion to their value at the testator's death. O'Dell v. Harte, Beat. 449.

Testator devised lands to each of his sons, F., J., S., and P., and directed one-half of his debts to be paid by J., S., and P. equally, and the other half by F.; and he charged the lands devised to them with his debts in these proportions. A creditor of the testator filed a bill in 1818 for the administration of his estate. By the report it appeared that J. had overpaid his share of the debts; S. had paid his share, with the exception of a small sum, which was shortly afterwards paid; and large sums were still due by F. and P. By the final decree in 1822, F. and P. were directed to complete the payments to be made by them, or in default, that their lands should be sold. The present supplemental bill was filed in 1839, and in the prosecution of that suit, it appeared that F.'s share of the lands never was sufficient for the payment of his portion of the debts:—Held, that the lands devised to J., S., and P. are liable to contribute ratably to make up the deficiency occasioned by the original insufficiency of F.'s estate to answer the demand on it, and also to the costs of the suit. Newby v. Drew, 1 J. & L. 445; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 49.

Statute of Limitations — Debts barred as against Testator.]—A devise in trust for payment of debts does not revive a debt upon which the Statute of Limitations had taken effect by the expiration of time, before the testator's death. Burke v. Jones, 2 Ves. & B. 275; 13 R. R. 83.

Prior to the statute 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, s. 10, a testamentary charge of debts upon land was equivalent to a trust for payment of such debts. Hargreaves v. Michell, 6 Madd. 326; 23 R. R. 231.

Costs.]—Where a testator devises an estate subject to a charge, he not only gives the money charged, but the costs of raising it. Buckley's Trusts, In re, 22 L. J., Ch. 934; 17 Jur. 478.

On a devise of copyhold to trustees to permit A. to receive the rents, &c., for life, and afterwards to sell and divide the proceeds amongst his children; the testator then disposed of his residuary estate, "charged with debts, costs, and charges of proving and executing the will": —Held, that the payments on the admission of the trustees, were a charge on the copyhold, and not part of the costs, &c., expressed in the will. Cole v. Jealous, 5 Hare, 51.

A. devised his real estate to F., under the burden of his just debts due at his decease, which debts were not to diminish his personal estate. F. was also appointed executor, and as such paid debts of the testator, but incurred costs amounting to a considerable sum in defending the personal estate against unjust demands of creditors:—Held, in D. P. by a majority, that F. could not charge the costs on the real estate, because costs incurred in resisting unfounded claims of debts were not comprehended in the description of just debts of the testator due at his decease. Lovatt (Lord) v. Fraser, L. R. 1 Sc. App. 24; 15 L. T. 77.

Held, by Lord Kingsdown, dissent., that such costs as were properly incurred by the executor in such litigation were chargeable on the real estate, for the debts include the costs of ascertaining their amount. Ib.

A testator devised two estates in different ways, and he charged one only with the payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses. In a creditors' suit, both estates were sold for payment of the debts:—Held, that the charged estate was primarily liable for the costs of suit. Wilson v. Heaton, 11 Beav. 492.

The general personal estate not specifically bequeathed applied first in payment of all the costs, except of inquiries as to a guardian and maintenance for a specific legatee, and then to the general legacies. Barton v. Cooke, 5 Ves. 461.

Mixed Fund.] — Where a testator forms a mixed fund of real and personal estate by a direction that the real estate shall be sold, and that the surplus proceeds shall go with and be considered part of his residuary personal estate, such surplus proceeds are charged with the payment of his debts, and semble with all other payments to which the personal estate is liable. Kidney v. Coussmaker, 1 Ves. J. 436; 2 R. R. 118. Affirmed, 7 Bro. P. C. 573.

Where a testator not only makes a common charge of debts and legacies upon his real and personal estate, but also directs that his real estate shall be sold, and the proceeds be deemed part of his personal estate, the real and personal estate shall, as between the heir-at-law and the next of kin, bear the charges pari passu. Simmons v. Rose, 6 De G. M. & G. 411; 25 L. J., Ch. 615; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 73. Affirming 21 Beav. 37.

Semble, it makes no difference in the above proposition whether the question arises in a case of intestacy as to residue, or in a case of lapse. Ib.

The heir is not entitled to an inquiry as to the relative value of the real and personal estates, with a view to ascertain the amount for which he is liable to contribute, but a sale of such real estate must be made. Ib.

Where a testator creates a mixed and general fund from the real and personal estate, and directs that fund to be applied in payment of debts and legacies, the real and the personal estates must contribute in proportion to their relative amounts to the payment of the debts and legacies; and if some of the legacies fail by lapse or otherwise, that part of the fund which would have been applicable to those purposes, being undisposed of, belongs, as far as it is composed of real estate, to the heir, and as far as it is composed of personal estate, to the next of kin. Roberts v. Walker, 1 Russ. & M. 752. S. P., Att.-Gen. v. Smithgate, 12 Sim. 77; 12 L. J., Ch. 148. Robinson v. London Hospital Governors, 10 Ha. 19; 22 L. J., Ch. 754.

If a testator blends the proceeds of his real and personal estate into one fund, and makes a charge upon the mixed fund, and a devastavit of the personal estate occurs, or the testator, by a codicil, devises the real estate to another person free from the charge, the charge does not fail proportionably, but must be raised out of the remaining estate. Tatlock v. Jenkins, 1 Kay, 654; 23 L. J., Ch. 767; 18 Jur. 891.

Testator gave all his real and personal estate to his executors in trust to pay legacies, and after a particular disposition, gave the residue of his property in trust for his next of kin, directing his executors to pay any debts upon any evidence they think proper, except the claims mentioned in the margin: — Held, a general conversion into a mixed fund, applicable to all the debts, none being mentioned in the margin, on evidence satisfactory to the executors, although not strictly legal. Mildred v. Robinson, 19 Ves. 586.

—— What Words will Create.]—Real and personal estate devised to the executor in trust, to pay debts and legacies, the rest and residue to himself, the only purpose of devising the real appearing to be to insure payment of the debts, without any intention to disinherit the heir: it was held only a charge, and that the heir was entitled to the surplus of the real estate. Halliday v. Hudson, 3 Ves. 210.

Testator being possessed of real and personal estate, directed the latter to be invested in government securities, the interest whereof, with all the rents and profits from freehold, copyhold, or leasehold property, after payment of all his debts, &c., he gave and devised upon certain trusts: — Held, that this did not evidence a sufficient intention to create a mixed fund, so as to exempt the application of the personal estate in the first instance from the discharge of his debts. Tidd v. Lister, 3 De G. M. & G. 857; 23 L. J., Ch. 249; 18 Jur. 543.

A testator gave and devised to his executors his freehold house, and all his other property he might die possessed of, in trust for the purposes of his will:—Held, that he had not created a mixed fund. Ellis v. Bartrum, 25 Beav. 110.

Where a testator creates for purposes of disposition a mixed fund of the proceeds of realty directed to be converted and personalty, the personalty is not exempted from its primary liability to debts, &c., unless these are directed expressly or by necessary implication to be paid out of the mixed fund. The mere fact that the will contains a constructive charge of debts upon real estate will not amount to such a direction. Luckcraft v. Pridham, 48 L. J., Ch. 636.

The costs of an action for executing the trusts of a will which bequeaths realty and personalty together as a mixed fund by a disposition that fails as to part, are borne (according to Eyre v. Marsden, 4 Myl. & C. 231) ratably by the part effectually given and that which lapses, and this notwithstanding that the whole may be vested in trustees. Ib.

—— Payment out of Personal Estate—Contribution by Realty—Interest.]—A testator by his will declared in effect that his debts, legacies, funeral and testamentary expenses, and the costs, charges, and expenses incidental to the execution of the trusts of his will, should be paid ratably out of all his estate, real and personal. In the administration of his estate by the court, the debts, &c., were paid out of the personalty, but without prejudice to the liability of the realty. On the further consideration of the action:—Held, that the real estate must make good to the personal estate its ratable proportion of the amount paid out of the personal estate for debts, &c., with interest. Ashworth v. Munn, 56 L. J., Ch. 451; 34 Ch. D. 391; 56 L. T. 86; 35 W. R. 513.

—— Resulting Trust.]—Where a testator creates a mixed and general fund from the real and personal estate, and directs that fund to be applied in payment of debts and legacies, the real and the personal estates must contribute in proportion to their relative amounts to the payment of the debts and legacies; and if some of the legacies fail by lapse or otherwise, that part of the fund which would have been applicable to those purposes, being undisposed of, belongs, as far as it is composed of real estate, to the heir, and as far as it is composed of personal estate, to the next of kin. Roberts v. Walker, 1 Russ. & M. 752.

A testator devised his real estates to A. and B., in trust to sell and pay off all incumbrances thereon, and stand possessed of the residue "as part of his personal estate." He bequeathed his personal estate to the same persons, in trust to convert, and with the produce thereof, and of the sales of his real estates, to pay his debts, &c., and the legacies, and to pay the residue to whom he should give the same by codicil. He made no gift of the residue:—Held, first, that the incumbrances were payable out of the real estate; secondly, that the debts and legacies were payable pari passu out of the mixed fund composed of the produce of realty and personalty; and, thirdly, that of the surplus, the part arising from realty belonged to the heir, and that from the personalty to the next of kin. Shallcross v. Wright, 12 Beav. 505.

A direction that the proceeds of the real and leasehold estate should be considered as part of the personal estate does not take away the right of the heir: nor does the addition to that direction that the real estate should be taken to be personal estate, "to all intents and purposes," take away that right. Robinson v. London Hospital, 10 Hare, 19; 22 L. J., Ch. 754.

And see further cases under CONVERSION AND RE-CONVERSION, ante.

Other Matters.]—Devise for payment of debts, the trustees convey to A. for the purpose of the trust; A. mortgages to several persons who have notice of the trust; these mortgages are good. Hardwick v. Mynd, 1 Anstr. 109; 3 R. R. 562.

3. Exoneration of Personalty.

(a) Apart from Statute.

Generally.]—Personal estate primarily liable to testator's debts, however strongly the real estate is charged for the purpose, unless a clear intention is manifest to exempt it. Ancaster (Duke) v. Mayer, 1 Bro. C. C. 454. S. P., Noke v. Darby, 1 Bro. P. C. 506. Tait v. Northwick (Lord), 4 Ves. 816; 4 R. R. 358. Hartley v. Hurle, 5 Ves. 540; 5 R. R. 113. Bridges v. Phillips, 6 Ves. 567. Watson v. Brickwood, 9 Ves. 447. Aldridge v. Wallscourt (Lord), 1 Ball & B. 312. Stapleton v. Stapleton, 2 Ball & B. 523. Greene v. Greene, 4 Madd. 148; 20 R. R. 284. Driver v. Ferrand, 1 Russ. & M. 681. Walker v. Hardwick, 1 Myl. & K. 396; 2 L. J., Ch. 104. Henry v. Henry, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 286. Inchiquin (Lord) v. French, Ambl. 33; 1 Cox, 1; Ridgw. P. C. 230. Samwell v. Wake, 1 Bro. C. C. 144; 2 Dick. 597.

In order to exonerate personal estate from the payment of debts, the will must contain express words for that purpose, or a clear manifested intention; a declaration plain, or necessary inference tantamount to express words. It is impossible to define what circumstances will be sufficient to shew this intention, which must arise in every case, from the context of the will. It is not required that the intention should be so manifested as that all persons cannot fail to agree with respect to it, but so as to convince the mind of the judge deciding the particular question. It must be an intention, not only to charge the real estate, but to discharge the personal. Circumstances from which an inference has been ordinarily raised, as that of the same person being constituted trustee of the real estate and executor, the personal estate being given as a residue, or as a personal estate generally, or after an enumeration of particulars, the residuary legatee being also devisee of the real estate, or of part, for life, or otherwise, &c., are circumstances entitled to consideration only in reference to the context of every particular will in which they occur. The amount of the personal estate is not a circumstance to be inquired into, so as to furnish a ground for construction. Bootle v. Blundell, 1 Mer. 193; 19 Ves. 517; 15 R. R. 93.

Personal estate may be exempted from the payment of debts, and without express words to that effect, upon the clear intention of the testator. Dawes v. Scott, 5 Russ. 32.

In order to exonerate personal estate it is not necessary that there should be a gift over. Coventry v. Coventry, 2 Dr. & Sm. 470; 13 L. T. 83; 13 W. R. 985.

The personal estate, being the proper and primary fund for the payment of debts and legacies, can be exempted only by express declaration, or plain and unequivocal manifestation of intention, and neither a charge, nor a direction to sell, nor the creation of a term for payment, will exempt the personal estate. Tower v. Rous (Lord), 18 Ves. 132; 11 R. R. 169.

The circumstance that the residuary legatee is the first taker of the real estate, sometimes held a ground for exempting the personal. Id. 140.

Testator gave to his wife the third part of all his property, that should become due to him after his decease: then, after giving some legacies, he gave all the residue of his estate, in general words, subject to the payment of all his debts, funeral expenses, and legacies, upon trust to collect the same. The wife entitled to a third of the personal estate, subject to the debts, but not to the legacies. Reed v. Addington, 4 Ves. 575, 576.

A., by will, gives all his personal estate to his three sisters, equally to be divided between them, and (being indebted by simple contract, bond, and mortgage) gives his real estate to four sons, chargeable with his just debts; and makes his sisters his executrixes. The personal estate shall be applied in exoneration of the real, especially as one of these funds must be exhausted. Bromhall v. Wilbraham, Cas. t. Talb. 274.

Devise of real estate to testator's wife, her heirs and assigns, in trust, by sale of so much and such part of the premises as should be necessary to advance and raise so much money as would pay off and satisfy all his just debts and funeral expenses, and all the residue to her for life, remainder to testator's heirs on her body begotten. Testator gave to his uncle his tobacco-box, and the residue of his personal estate whatever to his wife for ever, and appointed her executrix:—Held, the personal estate not exonerated from the payment of debts. Stephenson v. Heathcote, 1 Eden, 37.

Testator gave his real and personal estate to persons whom he afterwards appointed his executors, in trust in the first place to sell an advowson, and apply the proceeds in discharge of his debts and legacies, and if they should be insufficient, then to raise the deficiency by sale or mortgage of his real estates, and directed his executors to retain their expenses, but did not expressly declare any trust of his personal estate:—Held, that the personal estate was primarily applicable to the payment of the testator's debts. Rhodes v. Rudge, 1 Sim. 79; 5 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 17.

Testator gave to his wife certain articles of his personal estate, which he mentioned specifically, and also certain portions of his real estates, free from the mortgages thereon, and the benefit of certain contracts which he had entered into for the purchase of other real estates to A. B. in trust to sell, and out of the proceeds to pay, in the first place, his funeral and testamentary expenses, his debts due on the mortgages of the estates devised to his wife, the sums due on the contracts, and all his other debts; and, in the next place, he directed certain sums to be paid out of the proceeds to different persons, and gave the residue to C. D., and appointed his wife sole executrix:—Held, that the personal estate was exonerated from the debts. Blount v. Hipkins, 7 Sim. 43; 4 L. J., Ch. 13.

A testator devised all his real property to trustees, upon trust, in the first place, subject to the payment of his funeral expenses, of any debts, and of the annuities and pecuniary legacies thereinafter bequeathed, for his son for life, &c. And, after giving certain annuities and legacies, and after giving his furniture, wines, and stores to his wife for life, and an annuity of 440*l.* out of his real and personal estate, he bequeathed to his son "all his personal property, after his mother's decease, except" some plate:—Held, that the personal estate was not exonerated from the payment of the debts, &c. Ouseley v. Anstruther, 10 Beav. 453.

Devise to A., B., and C., of real and personal estate, upon trust to pay debts, and then the legacies bequeathed by any codicil, and the residue to A., B., and C., her executors. By a codicil, the testatrix devised her Fradswell estate to her sister for life, and, after her death, to be sold for the payment of legacies; and she then bequeathed legacies to a considerable amount:—Held, that the personal estate was not exonerated so as to make the Fradswell estate primarily applicable to the payment of the legacies. Whieldon v. Spode, 15 Beav. 537; 21 L. J., Ch. 913; 16 Jur. 281.

A testator, by a testamentary paper not admitted to probate, but held effectual as regarded his real estate, directed his trustees, to whom he had devised his real estate, in the first place, out of the rents and profits of his said estate, to pay all his just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and all costs, &c.:—Held, that this not only charged the real, but exonerated the personal estate. Plenty v. West, 16 Beav. 173; 22 L. J., Ch. 185; 17 Jur. 9; 1 W. R. 3.

A testator bequeathed personal property to his wife specifically, and he devised his real and personal property to trustees for sale, and out of the produce, in the first place, to pay his debts, funeral expenses, and legacies; and in the next place, to invest the surplus; and, subject to the trusts aforesaid, to pay the income to his wife for life, with remainder over. By a codicil he gave all his personal estate to his wife:—Held, that the widow was entitled to the personal estate, exonerated from the debts and legacies, and that they were primarily charged on the real estate. Lance v. Aglionby, 27 Beav. 65; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 561.

A testator bequeathed his leasehold and personal property, except plate, to his wife absolutely, and he devised his real estate to sell, and out of the produce to pay his funeral and testamentary expenses and debts, and to invest the residue and pay the income to his wife for life, with remainders over:—Held, that the funeral and testamentary expenses and debts were primarily payable out of the produce of the real estate. Gilbertson v. Gilbertson, 34 Beav. 354; 12 L. T. 816; 13 W. R. 765.

The cost of a special case to determine this question are nevertheless payable out of the personal estate. Ib.

A testatrix gave the residue of her estate and effects, whatsoever and wheresoever, after conversion into money, to the trustees of a charity, and declared that the legacies which might savour of charitable gifts should, if necessary, be paid and discharged out of such parts of her personal estate as might be lawfully applied for the purpose, "in which event my real estate, if any, shall be first charged with and be liable to the payment of my debts and legacies not savouring of charitable gifts." She never had any real estate, but left leasehold property and pure personalty:—Held, that there was a sufficient direction to exonerate the pure personalty from payment of the debts and legacies, but that, testamentary expenses not being mentioned, the cost of administration must be borne ratably by the pure and impure personalty. Fitzgerald, In re, Adolph v. Dolman, 26 W. R. 53.

Subject to the payment of his debts, and certain legacies previously given, a testator devised "all his real estate," and bequeathed "all the residue of his personal estate" to trustees in trust for A. A. died in his lifetime:—Held, that the personal estate was the primary fund for the payment of debts and legacies, the testator not having manifested any intention to discharge it. Wells v. Row, 48 L. J., Ch. 476.

Under a covenant that if the covenantor's wife married him, he, his heirs, executors, or administrators, would pay her a specified annuity for life, and that for better securing it, he or his heirs would grant and secure the same out of a sufficient part of the real estates devised to him by a particular will:—Held, that the real estates were only secondarily liable, and that the personal estate of the covenantor was the primary fund. Field v. Moore, 7 De G. M. & G. 691.

After a devise of a freehold and leasehold interest charged with incumbrances that affected the testator's real estate, he bequeaths to the same devisee all the rest of his real and personal estates, adding, "And I do hereby order and direct my said son to pay off my just debts." This is an obligation on the son to pay all the debts of testator in respect of the property given him, and discharge a chattel interest bequeathed to another. Cary v. Cary, 2 Sch. & Lef. 188.

B. devised her freehold estate to trustees, whom she also appointed executors, in trust immediately after her decease to sell and dispose of the same to the best advantage, the money arising from such sale to be applied in the first place in discharge of her funeral expenses and debts; secondly, she ordered and directed several sums (mentioned in the will) to be paid to several persons named, "who were all creditors of her late husband"; then she gave pecuniary legacies to several relations, and 20*l.* each to her executors, "in compensation of trouble," the said several sums to be paid by her executors and trustees out of the money arising from the sale of her said lands, which she ordered "to be sold with all convenient speed after her decease"; and such of the said purchase-money as should remain after paying the said legacies she disposed of by her will, "the said several legacies to be paid by her executors, as soon as they should sell and dispose of the said land." B. died possessed of some personal property:—Held, that there is not enough on this will to found a presumption that the testatrix intended to exonerate the personal estate. M'Cleland v. Shaw, 2 Sch. & Lef. 538.

The general personal estate of a testator is the primary fund for the payment of arrears of rent due by him at his death; and the devisee of the lands out of which the arrears are due is entitled to have the personal estate so applied, even when he himself is also the legatee of all the rents due by the under-tenants of the same lands. Barry v. Harding, 1 Jo. & Lat. 475; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 313.

D. devised estates to trustees for a term of years, in trust to raise money for payment of all his debts and legacies, and subject to that term he limited the estates in strict settlement, with the ultimate remainder to his own right heirs. By the falling in of the intermediate limitations, A. and B. became entitled to the estates as right heirs of the testator. The testator's debts and legacies remaining unsatisfied, A. and B. executed joint bonds for the amount of them, and then A. died. These bonds are not debts of A., to which his personal estate is primarily liable, but they must be borne in the first instance by the devised estate. Bassett v. Percival, 1 Cox, 268.

Where one devised a rectory for lives, subject to a charge, although the lease be charged by adding new lives, and a bond given by the owners of the lease to the devisee, it continues a charge on the church lease, not on personal estate of the obligor in the bond. Billinghurst v. Walker, 2 Bro. C. C. 604.

A., by several deeds, charges different parts of his real estates with portions for his younger children, and afterwards by will confirms the charges, and then gives the residue of his personal estate, after payment of debts, &c., to trustees, in trust to lay out same in land to be settled, &c. The eldest son brings bill controverting validity of deeds, and insisting that personal estate was liable to charges:—Held, that personal estate was exempt, and that each particular estate should bear the specific charge made upon it. Ferrers (Earl) v. Ferrers (Countess), 6 Bro. P. C. 97.

—— Parol Evidence.]—To exempt the personal estate under a devise for payment of debts, the intention must appear plainly on the will, and the court cannot look to extrinsic circumstances. Brummell v. Prothero, 3 Ves. 111. S. P., Stephenson v. Heathcote, 1 Eden, 37. Aldridge v. Wallscourt (Lord), 1 Ball & B. 312.

—— Heir.]—A person who is master of both funds, charges a debt which was personal by a mortgage of specific real estate; his heir shall not have it onerated by the personal estate. Hamilton v. Worley, 4 Bro. C. C. 199. S. C., 2 Ves. J. 62.

A testator devised his real estate to trustees in trust for sale, and out of the proceeds and out of the rents, till sale, to pay his debts and trustees' costs, charges, and expenses, and then upon trust to pay three legacies of 500*l.* each; and, as to all his personal estate and effects, the testator gave the same to T. R., his executors, administrators, and assigns:—Held, first, that the will did not give to T. R., nor dispose of, the surplus of the beneficial interest in the produce of the testator's real estate, after paying the charges which ought to be considered as imposed thereon; and that such surplus belongs to the heir-at-law:—Held, secondly, that, as between the heir and T. R., the personal estate is the fund first applicable to the payment of the testator's debts. Semble, that the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, ought to have some influence in favour of the exoneration of the personal estate. It was conceded, arguendo, that funeral expenses and costs of probate were not included in the costs, charges, and expenses of a testator's trustees. Callis v. Robins, 1 De G. & Sm. 131; 16 L. J., Ch. 251; 11 Jur. 362.

Charge of Particular Debt.]—Devise in trust to sell and pay off mortgage, and to raise another sum which the testator gave to his daughters. The personal estate, though bequeathed after payment of debts and legacies, is exempted from payment of those two sums, without express words upon the plain intention. Hancox v. Abbey, 11 Ves. 179; 8 R. R. 124.

The general rule requiring express words in a will to exonerate general personal estate from debts has comparatively little application where a testator has directed that a particular debt shall be paid out of a particular part of his estate. The intention to make that part of the estate the primary fund for the particular debt may be established without requiring express words for the exoneration of the general personal estate from such debt. Ib.

Testator devised a part of his real estate to trustees, in trust to sell and pay certain debts mentioned in a schedule, and then devised all his personal estate to his wife, fully and clearly exonerated from all the debts in the schedule, specified; and he settled the residue of his real estate on his wife and child in manner therein mentioned. The trust estate not being sufficient to pay the scheduled debts, the settled estates must be applied in exoneration of the personal estate. Morrow v. Bush, 1 Cox, 185.

By settlement, in consideration of wife's fortune, N., the settlor, conveyed lands in trust upon usual limitations, with terms for raising portions for younger children, with proviso for cesser of terms on satisfying, &c. It then declared that the lands shall be charged with the several sums due for the portions of brothers, &c., of N. (according to his father's settlement), and with judgments and bonds set forth in a schedule to the deed, and amounting to 12,700*l.* The deed contained the usual covenants for title. In covenant against incumbrances were the following exceptions: "other than and except the jointure of 700*l.* for N.'s mother," and "the several sums due by judgments," &c., the 12,700*l.*, "and also, except the 15,000*l.* (above mentioned), of all and every of which the said lands are hereby charged." Some of the debts in the schedule were those of N. and some of his father. N., by will, directed that a judgment on bond to A. B. (mentioned in above schedule) should be satisfied by his executors, the same having been paid. He died in 1828, having paid off part of the 15,000*l.*, and some of his father's debts, and of his own, in ease of his settled estates:—Held, reversing decree below, that debts in schedule, and residue of the 15,000*l.*, were a charge on lands, which were declared to be a primary fund for payment thereof, and that personal estate was exempt. Vandeleur v. Vandeleur, 9 Bli. (N.S.) 157; 3 Cl. & F. 82; Ll. & G. t. Sugd. 241, n.

Upon the construction of a will:—Held, that a particular freehold estate of the testator was the primary fund for the payment of a mortgage debt which had been charged thereon by the testator in his lifetime, in exoneration of the personalty and other estates. Evans v. Cockeram, 1 Coll. C. C. 428; 8 Jur. 903.

Testator directed that his simple contract debts should be immediately paid; in the first instance, out of his personal estate, and if that were not sufficient, out of the produce of the sale of the lands of C. He then gave all his real and personal estate, including C., upon trust to pay out of his personal estate, in six months after the decease, all his debts and legacies, and to raise out of the lands of C. 2,000*l.*, to be invested upon certain trusts for his daughter B. and her issue, and upon failure of the trusts to sink into and become part of the residue of his personal estate. And after reciting that on the marriage of his daughter H. he had perfected two bonds to the trustees of her settlement for the sums of 4,000*l.* and 2,000*l.*, payable the day after his death, and that it was his intention that the 2,000*l.* bequeathed to the use of B. and her issue, and the 6,000*l.* so due to the trustees of H.'s settlement, should be paid out of the lands of C., he directed same to be sold, and the produce to be applied in payment thereof; and if C. should not produce a sum sufficient to pay off "said respective sums of 2,000*l.*, 4,000*l.*, and 2,000*l.*, making in the whole 8,000*l.*," he directed the deficiency to be raised by sale or mortgage of his Cavan estates. And he bequeathed all the residue of his personal estate, after payment of his debts, in trust for B. for life, and then upon the trusts before declared as to the 2,000*l.*:—Held, that the bond debts of 4,000*l.* and 2,000*l.* were charged on C. and the Cavan estates, in exoneration of the personal estate of the testator. Bateman v. Roden (Earl), 1 Jo. & Lat. 356; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 240.

There being a provision in marriage settlement to raise 8,000*l.* for a child at twenty-one, the father by will adds 8,000*l.* more, and charges the whole specifically on residuary real fund, which he had also by the same will made liable to debts and legacies in aid of his personal estate; the charged estate shall not be exonerated by the personal estate, for the charge is considered as a real devise and cannot fall on the personal estate. Dudley and Ward (Lord) v. Ward, 7 Bro. P. C. 566. S. C., nom. Ward v. Dudley, 2 Bro. C. C. 316; 1 Cox, 438.

Payment directed out of Particular Estate or Fund—Primary Liability of Personalty discharged.]—Testator contracts for the purchase of a house, and afterwards, by a codicil to his will, gives to A., his executor, "the house which he had given a memorandum of agreement to purchase, and which was to be paid for out of timber which he had ordered to be cut down." This amounts to a direction that the purchase-money for the house shall be so provided for; and evidence was admitted to show what was the order given by the testator with reference to the cutting of timber. Sandford v. Raikes, 1 Mer. 646.

A testator directed the sum of 2,000*l.* to be raised out of a certain freehold estate, and paid in satisfaction of certain specified debts, and all such other debts as he should owe at his decease; and he gave the rest, &c., of his estate and effects, real and personal, to his wife, her heirs, &c.:—Held, that the 2,000*l.* was the primary fund for the payment of the debts. Clutterbuck v. Clutterbuck, 1 Myl. & K. 15; 2 L. J., Ch. 113.

A testator directed his executors to pay his funeral expenses and debts, except a mortgage thereinafter provided for, out of certain parts of his personal estate; and in a subsequent part of his will he recited, that his T. estate was subject to a mortgage of 6,000*l.*, which he was intending to pay off; and he directed any balance of the debt which should remain unpaid at his death to be paid by sale of timber on other property, and also of part of the timber on the T. estate. The testator also gave certain annuities, which he charged on his N. estate, giving to one annuitant 10*l.* a year, or 5*l.* and his tenement at the lodge on the N. estate. The testator did not pay off any part of the 6,000*l.* mortgage:—Held, that his personal estate was not exonerated from payment of the mortgage debt, but that it was exonerated from payment of the annuities. Lomax v. Lomax, 12 Beav. 285; 19 L. J., Ch. 137; 13 Jur. 1064.

A testatrix gave her real estate in trust for her two daughters, I. M'Carty and M. Streffi, for life, and afterwards each moiety to go to the sons of each of her daughters and their families; and after giving various legacies, she left the residue of her estate to her granddaughters. By a codicil, she directed that certain debts incurred by her for her son-in-law, J. M'Carty, should be exclusively, and in the first instance, borne by and paid out of the M'Carty moiety of her real estate, exempting the Streffi moiety from payment of such debts:—Held, that the codicil amounted to an express exoneration of the personal estate; and that the moiety of her real estate devised to the M'Carty family was primarily liable to the debts. Forrest v. Prescott, L. R. 10 Eq. 545; 18 W. R. 1065.

Testator by will limited his estate in E. to several persons in succession; he then devised his estate in S. to trustees, in trust to sell, and out of the purchase-money to pay all his debts, legacies, and funeral expenses; but in case the

S. estate should be deficient for those purposes, then the deficiency should be made good out of the E. estate. He then gave several specific and pecuniary legacies, and all his personal estate, not before disposed of, to his wife A.; after making this will the testator sold the S. estate and received the purchase-money:—Held, that the debts, legacies, and funeral expenses should be raised out of the E. estate in exoneration of the personal estate. Williams v. Llandaff (Bishop), 1 Cox, 254.

Testator devised all his real and personal property in Ireland to trustees upon trust, after payment of all his just debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, to raise out of the rents, by sale or mortgage, an annuity for his wife for her life, and subject thereto in trust for A. and his heirs; and having directed his executors to pay certain legacies, he devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate in England to such uses as his wife should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of his wife for life, and after her decease to the use of the trustees upon the same trusts as were declared concerning his Irish estates; and declared it to be his will, that, in case his personal estate in Ireland should be insufficient for payment of his debts and legacies, his trustees should raise sufficient to pay same by sale or mortgage of his real estates in Ireland, which he thereby charged with the same, it being his intent to exempt his real and personal estate in England from payment thereof. The testator died in England, and his will was proved in England and Ireland:—Held, that all his funeral and testamentary expenses were exclusively charged on the real and personal estate in Ireland. Coote v. Coote, 3 Jo. & Lat. 175; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 197.

W., by his will, devised his real estate to trustees in trust to sell and to apply the purchase-money, in the first place, in payment of all the charges, and all other his debts and legacies, and as to the residue of the purchase-money, to pay one moiety to his daughter M., and to lay out the other moiety in Government securities, and to pay the dividends for the maintenance of the three sons of his daughter A. until they should attain their respective ages of twenty-four years, and when they should have attained that age he gave that moiety equally to be divided amongst them; but if they all should die under twenty-four, then he directed that such moiety should sink into and be deemed part of the residue of his personal estate, and be applied in such manner as his personal estate was thereinafter given and disposed of. He then gave several specific legacies; and all the residue of his personal estate he gave to his daughter A., and to H., equally, to be divided between them. The debts and legacies are payable in the first instance out of the purchase-money of the real estate. Webb v. Jones, 1 Cox, 245; 2 Bro. C. C. 60; 1 R. R. 29.

Charge on specific bequest of debts and legacies. Browne v. Groombridge, 4 Madd. 495; 20 R. R. 326.

Testatrix, having made several specific bequests of stock, gave the residue of her funded property, after payment of her debts and legacies, to A.; she gave the residue of her real and personal estates to others, and directed one particular legacy to be paid out of the stock:—Held, that the residue of the stock was the primary fund for the payment of the debts and legacies. Choat v. Yeats, 1 Jac. & Walk. 102; 20 R. R. 239.

Testator having bequeathed "all the outstanding debts owing to him for tithe, or otherwise, subject to his debts and legacies," and having appointed general residuary legatees:—Held, that the outstanding debts, and not the residuary fund, should be applied, in the first instance, to the payment of the debts and legacies. Phillips v. Eastwood, Ll. & G. t. Sugd. 270.

A testator directed, that, after payment of his debts, all his money should be divided between his three children. All his other personal property he devised to his eldest son:—Held, that the debts were primarily payable out of the money specifically bequeathed. Vernon v. Manvers (Earl), 31 Beav. 623; 32 L. J., Ch. 246.

Specific bequest of personalty to trustees for certain persons, "subject to the provisions hereinafter made." Then followed a proviso, that these trust funds "should be liable to and applicable," by the trustees, to the payment of the debts, &c. There was a residuary bequest to other persons:—Held, that the specific legacy was primarily liable to the payment of the debts, &c. Webb v. De Beauvoisin, 31 Beav. 573.

A testator bequeathed his personal estate to his wife, "discharged from the payment of his debts." He then devised his real estate at H. in trust to sell and pay "all his just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses," in exoneration of his personal estate; and he devised his real estate at N. without any express trust for payment of his debts. The produce of the estate at H. being insufficient to pay the debts:—Held, that the estate at N. was next liable to pay them in exoneration of the personal estate. Young v. Young, 26 Beav. 522.

—— Deed charging Debts on Real Estate.]—S. conveyed all his lands to trustees for the purpose of paying his debts, legacies and funeral charges; and by his will gave all his personal estate to his wife, and made her executrix:—Held, that the security upon the lands did not discharge the personal estate, but that the same still continued liable, and ought to be taken in aid of the real estate. French v. Chichester, 2 Vern. 568; 3 Bro. P. C. 2nd ed. p. 16.

—— Settlement giving Charge of Debts on Specific Real and Personal Estate.]—The rule that a charge of debts on real estate does not of itself exonerate the personal estate applies to a case where a charge for payment of debts after the grantor's death is created by deed. But no such rule applies to specific personal estate given on similar trusts; in such a case the specific personal estate will be the primary fund for the payment of the debts. Trott v. Buchanan, 54 L. J., Ch. 678; 28 Ch. D. 446; 52 L. T. 248; 33 W. R. 339.

A testator by a deed executed in his lifetime conveyed and assigned real and personal estate to trustees, in trust for himself during his life, and after his death to sell and convert the property, and to stand possessed of the proceeds on trust, after payment of costs, to pay all the debts which should be due from him, and his funeral expenses, and, after such payment as aforesaid, upon trust for his sons and their children. By his will, the testator, after reciting the deed, devised and bequeathed all and every the residue of his real and personal estate not comprised in and subject to the trusts of the deed to his wife for her life, with remainders over, and he appointed his wife and one of the trustees of the deed executors of his will, which was proved by the widow and one of the trustees :—Held, that, as regarded the real estate comprised in the deed, the testator's general personal estate was not exonerated from its primary liability to pay his debts. But held, that the personal estate comprised in the deed was the primary fund for the payment of the debts. French v. Chichester, supra, discussed and explained. Ib.

—— Primary Liability not displaced.]—A specific legacy cannot, in a subsequent part of the will, be charged with payment of debts or legacies. Joy v. Campbell, 1 Sch. & Lef. 339 ; 9 R. R. 39. And see 3 Bli. (N.S.) 111.

A will restrained in point of extent to a partial disposition by a particular enumeration, and a reference to other instruments, notwithstanding the general words "personal estate" ; specific disposition by will subject to annuities and legacies held auxiliary only, the general personal estate to be applied in the first instance. Holford v. Wood, 4 Ves. 76.

Bequest of specific chattels in trust to sell, in the first place to pay the debts and then to divide the residue amongst five persons. There was no residuary gift :—Held, that the debts were primarily payable out of the general residue. Newbegin v. Bell, 23 Beav. 386.

A testator, after mentioning specific portions of his personal estate, bequeathed them to several persons, and the remainder of these effects (all his debts being paid), if any remained, he left to his sister ; there was no general residuary bequest :—Held, that the undisposed-of residuary personal estate was the primary fund for payment of the debts. Corbet v. Corbet, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 407.

A testator bequeaths specific chattels charged with the payment of a pecuniary legacy, and of all the testator's just debts and funeral and testamentary expenses ; and he bequeaths other specific and pecuniary legacies, but makes no residuary bequest :—Held, that, notwithstanding the charge, the general undisposed-of residue was first applicable. Hewett v. Snare, 1 De G. & Sm. 333.

A testator devised an estate (which he had mortgaged) freed and discharged from all his debts and all his annuities, legacies and bequests. He afterwards devised and bequeathed other property, with similar words of exemption, and then devised and bequeathed certain specified property, upon trust to pay, in the first place, the mortgage debt on the estates first devised, and, in the next place, all the testator's other debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, debts, annuities and legacies. In another passage the testator expressed his intention to be that the estate in mortgage should be held free from all charges created by him ; and he bequeathed all his residuary personal estate freed and discharged from all his debts and liabilities, and the legacies thereby bequeathed. On the specified fund proving insufficient to pay the mortgage debt :—Held, that the devisees of the mortgaged estate were entitled to have it exonerated out of the residuary personalty. Brooke (Lord) v. Warwick (Earl), 2 De G. & Sm. 425 ; 1 Hall & Tw. 142 ; 18 L. J., Ch. 137 ; 12 Jur. 912.

Testator gave 1,500*l.* to his illegitimate son, to be paid, with interest, within twelve months next after his decease, and he charged that sum upon his farm called L., which, he added, was then rented for 100*l.* a year, and which he purchased before his marriage, and was not, in settlement or otherwise, incumbered. And he gave other legacies, and directed, as to some of them, that they should be paid by his executors ; and he charged his real estates with the payment of his funeral and testamentary expenses and debts, in aid of his personal estate. By a codicil he confirmed to his illegitimate son all devises and gifts, by his will made to him, and desired, that all his (the testator's) debts, annuities, and legacies (except two annuities thereby given to A. E. and S. D.) should be paid, in the first place, out of any moneys he might die possessed of in the 3 per cent. consols, as far as they would extend, and he charged his farm called R. with the payment of all such debts, annuities, and legacies (except as aforesaid), in aid of his moneys in the 3 per cents. :—Held, that the 1,500*l.* was not charged on the farm called L. exclusively, and in exoneration of the testator's personal estate ; but that the consols were to be applied first, the farm called R. next, the testator's general personal estate next, and the farm called L. last, in payment of it. Evans v. Evans, 17 Sim. 102 ; 14 Jur. 383.

A testator directed estates to be sold, and the produce to be applied in payment of the mortgages due from him, and the residue of the produce to be considered and applied as part of the residue of his personal estate ; and he gave and devised the residue of his real and personal estate upon trust, after payment of his just debts, for the benefit of all his children ; and the testator afterwards, by a codicil, confined the residuary gift of the produce of the estates directed to be sold to his younger children :—Held, 1st, that the devisees of the produce of the real estate directed to be sold were entitled to have the personal estate applied in payment of the mortgages ; 2ndly, that pecuniary legatees were entitled to stand in the place of the mortgagees, against the estates so devised, to the extent to which the mortgages had been paid out of the personal estate ; and, 3rdly, that such pecuniary legatees were not entitled to stand in the place of a vendor to the testator, part of whose purchase-money remained unpaid at the testator's death, to the extent to which the purchase-money had been paid out of the personal estate. Wythe v. Henniker, 2 Myl. & K. 635 ; 3 L. J., Ch. 24.

A testator, by his will, directed that his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses should be paid out of the fund thereinafter provided for the payment thereof. He then devised his real estate to trustees for sale, and directed them out of the proceeds to pay his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and to hold the residue on certain trusts. He then bequeathed his personal estate after and subject to the payment of his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses : —Held, that the personal estate was the primary fund for the payment of debts ; held, also, that the doctrine of marshalling was applicable in favour of legatees and annuitants, and that they might stand in the place of the creditors as against the real estate devised in trust for sale and payment of debts. Paterson v. Scott, 1 De G. M. & G. 531 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 346 ; 16 Jur. 898.

Testator gave his real and personal estate to persons whom he afterwards appointed his executors, in trust, in the first place, to sell an advowson, and apply the proceeds in discharge of his debts and legacies, and if they should be insufficient, then to raise the deficiency by sale or mortgage of his real estates, and directed his executors to retain their expenses, but did not expressly declare any trust of his personal estate:—Held, that the personal estate was primarily applicable to the payment of the testator's debts. Rhodes v. Rudge, 1 Sim. 79; 5 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 17.

Testator, by his will, bequeathed as follows:—"I direct, in the first place, all my debts to be paid; I then give and bequeath to my wife 60,000*l.* 3 per cent. consols, part of a larger sum standing in my name in the Bank of England; also I bequeath to A. 10,000*l.*, other part of the aforesaid 3 per cent. consols; also I give to B. 500*l.* and to C. 100*l.*; also I give to D. and E. all the rest and residue of my ready money, securities for money, and moneys in the funds upon trust to invest, etc., and to pay the dividends to my wife for life, and after her decease to divide the capital amongst F., G., H. and I." The testator then, after devising his real estate to the same trustees upon certain trusts, gave all his residuary personal estate to his wife:—Held, that the testator's debts were payable out of his personal and real estate according to the usual order of administering those estates, the general residuary personal estate being first applicable, but that his pecuniary legacies were primarily, if not solely, payable out of the "ready money securities for money and moneys in the funds." Parker v. Marchant, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 290; 11 L. J., Ch. 223; 6 Jur. 292.

Devise to Trustees who are not Executors.]—Under a devise to trustees, who were not the executors, upon trust to sell and pay debts and funeral expenses, the personal estate was exempted, without express words, on the evident intention that the legatee thereof should take all that was not specifically bequeathed by the will. Burton v. Knowlton, 3 Ves. 107; 3 R. R. 62.

Devise in trust to sell for payment of debts and funeral expenses, with a particular disposition of the surplus money, the personal estate not being otherwise disposed of than by the appointment of an executor, who was not one of the trustees, is first liable to the debts, etc., especially as the produce of the sale was not sufficient for them. Gray v. Minnethorpe, 3 Ves. 103.

Executrix Residuary Legatee.]—Under a will charging lands with all debts and making the executrix residuary legatee, and after payment of legacies bequeathing to her the personal effects as a specific legacy:—The court held, that the personal property was first applicable to discharge the legacies, and then the landed property, if that proved deficient. Gleed v. Gleed, 2 Ken. Ch. 14.

Lapse—Effect on Exoneration of Personalty.]—Bequest of personal estate exempt from debts by mortgage; the benefit of the exemption was confined to that legatee and failed, the bequest having lapsed by the death of the legatee in the life of the testator. Waring v. Ward, 5 Ves. 670; 5 R. R. 130.

Where a real estate is charged with payment of debts, &c., in exoneration of the personal estate, in order to favour the residuary legatee, and such residuary legatee dies in life of testator, so that bequest lapses:—Held, on construction of the whole will, that the real estate becomes re-exonerated, and the personal liable. Noel v. Henley (Lord), 7 Price, 241. S. C., Daniell, 211, 332; 12 Price, 213; 26 R. R. 660.

The testator having two estates in mortgage, orders the debt upon one to be paid out of his personal estate, and charges the other upon the mortgaged premises, and gives the residue of his personal estate to persons by whose death it afterwards lapses; the mortgage debt, upon the mortgaged premises, shall be paid out of the personalty. Hale v. Cox, 3 Bro. C. C. 322.

A direction to exonerate the general personal estate out of a specific fund of personalty held to enure for the benefit of persons who took by lapse. Browne v. Groombridge, 4 Madd. 495; 20 R. R. 326.

A charge of debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, on a particular real estate, assuming it to exonerate personal estate in favour of a particular legatee, does not exonerate the person who, on failure of that legacy by means of the Mortmain Act, takes it. Ducre v. Patrickson, 1 Dr. & Sm. 186; 29 L. J., Ch. 846; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 863; 8 W. R. 597, 647. S. P. Meere, In re, Kilford v. Blaney, 55 L. J., Ch. 185; 31 Ch. D. 56; 54 L. T. 287; 34 W. R. 109—C. A., dissenting from Browne v. Groombridge, supra.

A testator devised his real estates to six devisees, and he declared his freehold estates should be the primary fund, and his leasehold estates the secondary fund, for the payment of his debts, and he bequeathed his personal estate to A. exonerated from his debts. One of the devisees died in the testator's lifetime, whereby his share lapsed:—Held, that as between the heir at law, the next of kin, and the devisees and residuary legatee, the lapsed share of the real and personal estate ought to be applied in the same order as if the devisee had survived. Fisher v. Fisher, 2 Keen, 610; 7 L. J., Ch. 176.

Specific Legacy—From Pledge or Charge.]—Where a specific legacy is pledged or charged by the testator, the specific legatee is entitled to have his legacy redeemed or exonerated by the executor, and, if the executor fail to perform that duty, the specific legatee is entitled to compensation to the amount of his legacy out of the general assets of the testator. Knight v. Davis, 3 Myl. & K. 358; 3 L. J., Ch. 81.

A specific legatee is entitled to have his legacy redeemed from charges created by the testator (as distinguished from charges incidental to the property) at the expense of the testator's general estate, or, if the property is not redeemed, to have compensation out of the general estate to the amount of the legacy. Bothamley v. Sherson, L. R. 20 Eq. 304; 33 L. T. 150; 23 W. R. 848.

Accounts of personal estate not specifically bequeathed had been directed in an administration suit. Ultimately the costs of all parties, as between solicitor and client, were paid out of a specific legacy in the absence of the specific legatee. In a subsequent suit, instituted by the specific legatee for her legacy, liberty was given to her to surcharge and falsify the accounts, and the plaintiff's costs were directed to be allowed as between party and party. Walrond v. Walrond, 29 Beav. 586.

Mortgage Debt.]—Personal estate is always primarily liable to pay mortgage money; land is only a collateral security. Cope v. Cope, 2 Salk. 449.

Every mortgage, though no covenant or bond to pay the money, implies a loan, and every loan implies a debt; therefore an heir of a mortgagor shall compel an application of the personal estate to pay off a mortgage, notwithstanding there was no covenant, &c., from the mortgagor. King v. King, 3 P. W. 358; Mos. 192.

Money due on mortgage is a debt of mortgagor, to payment of which his personal estate is primarily liable, as between heir, devisee and executor; unless exempted by express or implied declaration of mortgagor. Belvidere v. Rochfort, 5 Bro. C. P. 299.

A testator, being the owner of several estates, subject to mortgages, devised one of them to trustees for sale, the proceeds to be applied in exoneration of the personal estate, in payment of certain mortgages, debts and legacies. This estate proved insufficient for the purpose of paying the mortgages. Upon the question whether the respective mortgaged estates, or the personal estate, were primarily liable to the payment of the mortgages:—Held, that though there was a clear intent to exonerate the personal estate, yet, that as there were no words of exemption, the personal estate was primarily liable to pay to the extent that the estate devised for sale was found deficient. Colvile v. Middleton, 3 Beav. 570; 4 Jur. 1197.

Mortgage in fee is made redeemable on payment of 300*l.* and interest, upon any Michaelmas Day, on six months' notice. Mortgagor dies, having devised his personal estate to his wife: personal estate is liable to pay the mortgage. Howell v. Price, 1 P. W. 291; 2 Vern. 701; Pre. Ch. 423, 477.

One mortgages his lands, and by will appoints them to be sold for payment of the mortgage-money; and afterwards, in another part of his will, devises a moiety of the mortgaged premises to A. B. The personal estate shall be applied to pay off the mortgage in favour of devisee. Johnson v. Milksopp, 2 Vern. 112.

Testator, after bequeathing his personal estate, gave his real estate upon trust to raise, in exclusion of his personal estate, sufficient to satisfy his just debts (except debts secured by mortgage) and legacies and expenses of the trust:—Held, that the personal estate was the primary fund to pay the mortgage debts, which exceeded in amount the whole personalty. Briggs v. Davies, 4 W. R. 696.

The personal estate given to the next of kin must be applied in discharge of testator's mortgages, not being expressly exempted, although it will be thereby exhausted. Philips v. Philips, 2 Bro. C. C. 273.

Testator exempts personal estate from payment of mortgages on real estate, which he devises to C., subject to the incumbrances:—Held, that descended estates are liable to mortgages. Barnewell v. Cawdor (Lord), 3 Madd. 453.

A testator had mortgaged his estate S. By his will he directed his debts, other than the mortgage, to be paid out of a specified part of his personal estate; he recited his intention of forthwith paying off a great part of the mortgage debt, and he directed that "the balance" of such mortgage should be paid by sale of timber on the S. estate. He made no bequest of his general personal estate:—Held, that the mortgage was payable, first, out of the general personal estate; secondly, out of the descended real estate; and thirdly, out of the timber money. Lomax v. Lomax, 12 Beav. 285; 19 L. J., Ch. 137; 13 Jur. 1064.

W. directed his trustees to pay simple contract debts, and a mortgage of 10,000*l.* secured on his estates called S. and N., out of the moneys to arise from his personal estate, and the sale of an estate called "The Hennells." He then devised part of the S. estate, including the mansion-house, to his wife for life or during widowhood, freed from any mortgage: and the residue of the estate, and the mansion-house and grounds, after his wife's death or marriage he devised to the use of his eldest son, J., subject to the payment of two mortgages of 5,000*l.* and 2,200*l.* secured thereon, it being his wish that the hereditaments devised in trust for his wife should be exonerated from the payment of those sums so far as they affected the devisees under his will. The testator then devised the estate N. to the use of his son, A., discharged from any principal sums charged thereon by way of mortgage. The fund provided by the testator for the payment of the mortgage of 10,000*l.*, and the simple contract and other debts, was insufficient:—Held, that as between the devisees of the estates, S. and N., the whole of the proceeds of the sale of the former was applicable to the payment of the mortgage of 10,000*l.* in exoneration of estate N. Woodward v. Woodward, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1281.

A testator gave certain portions of his real and personal estate to trustees for payment of his debts; and he specifically gave several portions of his real and personal estate to different parties, "freed from his debts," and also bequeathed his residuary personal estate "freed from his debts." One of the devised estates was subject to a mortgage. The funds primarily applicable being insufficient to discharge all the debts, the property which passed under the residuary clause was held to be the next fund which ought to be resorted to for that purpose; and the devisee of the mortgaged estate was declared to be entitled to have the mortgage paid off out of the residuary estate. Brooke (Lord) v. Warwick (Earl), 2 De G. & Sm. 425, 1 Hall & Tw. 142; 18 L. J., Ch. 137; 13 Jur. 547.

G., by articles, settling in strict settlement real estate, subject to mortgage of 1,500*l.*, which had been borrowed to pay fines of certain leasehold interest, and subject also to other incumbrances, covenanted to exonerate real estate from 1,500*l.*, and to charge it on leasehold. Afterwards G., by will, reciting articles, devised leasehold to his eldest son, "in order to exonerate his said real estates from said sum of 1,500*l.*, and to enable his said son to pay same and other debts and incumbrances affecting the same," and will proceeded, "And I do hereby charge and incumber said leasehold interest so bequeathed with payment of said sum of 1,500*l.*" Testator also, by his will, confirmed articles, with exception of certain directions therein made as to rents and profits of settled lands, which he thereby limited in a manner different from articles:—Held, 1st, that words "in order to exonerate," &c., and "to enable," &c., amounted to direction, and that devisee was trustee, to pay out of leaseholds not only 1,500*l.* but all other debts and incumbrances affecting real. 2ndly, that G., by charging such debts and incumbrances on leasehold, meant to purchase power of disposing of rents and profits of settled estate, as he did by his will differently from provisions in articles. 3rdly, testator's eldest son, who was tenant in tail of settled estates, not having applied leasehold property in exoneration thereof, in pursuance of will, and having died without suffering recovery, held that remainder-man in tail had a right to compel exoneration of settled estate out of leasehold. Cary v. Cary, 2 Sch. & Lef. 173.

R. seised in fee of estates in C., which were mortgaged to a considerable amount, and also of an estate in the Isle of Wight and other property, devised the mortgaged lands to several uses, and inter alia to the plaintiff for life, remainder to her sons in tail, remainder to her daughters as tenants in common; he devised the estate in the Isle of Wight to his executors as trustees for twenty-one years, among other uses, to pay his bond and book debts, if his personal estate should not be sufficient; and by a further clause to pay all his debts: the trust term, after the personal estate, shall exonerate the mortgaged estate. Tweedale v. Coventry, 1 Bro. C. C. 240. And see 3 Term Rep. 83.

I. A. B. by his will directed that his son should repay to his executors by instalments a mortgage debt borrowed for the use of the son upon a leasehold house of the testator. The instalments were to be invested, and to sink into the residuary estate, to a share of which the son would be entitled. The testator by an indenture settled upon his wife this leasehold house subject to the mortgage, and directed that as between himself and the leasehold premises they were to be the "primary security and ultimate fund" for the payment of the debt:—Held, as between the widow and the son, that the leasehold house was only liable to pay the debt in case the son's share in the residuary estate were insufficient. 2. The testator, after giving one moiety of his stock-in-trade to his widow, absolutely gave her the use of the remaining moiety for carrying on his business:—Held, that the widow's estate was not liable to make good any deficiency in the remaining moiety. Quartermaine v. Cuff, 1 W. R. 76.

In a suit for redemption by the heir of a mortgagor against the assignee of the mortgagee, who was also the personal representative of the mortgagor, the court, besides the usual decree for redemption, declared the plaintiff entitled to have the balance which should be found due from him, and paid by him to the defendant as mortgagee, repaid to him out of personal estate of the mortgagor in a due course of administration, and decreed accordingly, the bill being properly framed with a view to such relief. Lloyd v. Wait, 1 Ph. 61; 6 Jur. 456.

A mortgagor, by his will, created a trust for the payment of, amongst others, the mortgage debt. In a suit to foreclose:—Held, that the mortgagee was entitled to have his mortgage paid, in the first instance, out of the general personal estate of the mortgagor, and, in default of payment thereout, to have the mortgaged lands sold, and, in case the fund so produced should prove deficient, that then the mortgagee was entitled to come in as a specialty creditor, and avail himself of the trust in the will of the mortgagor, and the decree was so made. Marshall v. M'Aracey, 3 Dr. & War. 232.

—— Right of Devisee or Heir.]—H. gave bond and mortgage, and afterwards devised mortgaged estates to his wife, whom he appointed executrix; other estates descended to his heirs:—Held, that wife must take with the burden of the mortgage. Galton v. Hancock, 2 Atk. 424; Ridgw. 301.

Afterwards held, that wife was entitled to have the mortgage upon the estate devised to her, exonerated out of the real assets descended upon the heirs, and former decree totally reversed as to this point. S. C., 2 Atk. 430; Ridgw. 301.

Where will sets out with a desire that debts may be paid in the first place, the wife, with respect to creditors, must have taken the estate cum onere devised to her, but it is not sufficient to fix the burden upon legatee, so as to make a variation with regard to the different funds out of which the debts are to be paid, or transpose the order in which they are to be applied for that purpose. Ib.

In equity, to satisfy a specialty debt, personal assets must be first applied, and if deficient the real assets descended. Ib.

In Pitt v. Raymond, Lord Talbot directed, if the personal were not sufficient, an account was to be taken of the descended, and if that were deficient, then of the devised estate. Ib.

A mortgage is a debt by specialty, and the land is only regarded in equity as a pledge; therefore, a mortgagee may take his remedy either against the heir or executor, but his election does not vary his right, or determine which ought properly to be charged. Ib.

Testator devised to A. lands in mortgage, and devised other lands to B. subject to payment of his debts, in case his personal estate should not prove sufficient. The mortgage debt must be paid out of the personal estate, and if deficient, out of the real estate devised to B. Bartholomew v. May, 1 Atk. 487.

A mortgage is looked upon as a general debt, and the land only as a security, and, therefore, personal estate shall be applied in discharge; but if the contest lay between the devisee and creditors of a deceased mortgagor, it would have been otherwise. Ib.

The testator borrowed 2,000*l.* to enable him to pay the purchase-money of estate W., and that sum was found by the master to be a lien on the estate at the testator's death:—Held, that the Wills Act did not alter the course of administering the assets, but that the devisee had a right to have the personal estate of the testator applied towards the discharge of the lien; and that, failing that, he had a right to have descended real estate so applied; but that both these resources failing, the devisee was not entitled to have contribution from estates of the testator, comprised either in a particular or a residuary devise. Emuss v. Smith, 2 De G. & Sm. 722.

One, seised in fee of the manors of A. and B., mortgages A. for 4,000*l.*, and by will charges all his real estate with payment of his debts, and devises A. to C., and B. to D., and dies: the devisee of A. shall compel the devisee of B. to contribute to pay the mortgage on A.; but if the will prove void, then no contribution. Carter v. Barnardiston, 1 P. W. 505.

A testator devised his E. estate, subject to debts, &c., to his wife for life, with remainders over, and he devised his C. estate, subject to his debts, &c., to his wife absolutely. He afterwards mortgaged his E. estate:—Held, on a deficiency of the personal estate, that the estates E. and C. ought to contribute ratably towards payment of the mortgage. Middleton v. Middleton, 15 Beav. 450.

A testator, seised of real estate, subject to mortgage which he had covenanted to pay, by a will, made in 1829, bequeathed pecuniary legacies, and directed that all his chattel property whatever (except as before bequeathed) should be sold; and, in the first place, the produce thereof to be applied to the payment of his just debts and funeral expenses, and, in the next place, in discharge of his legacies. The mortgaged estate descended to the heir-at-law:—Held, that he was entitled to have the mortgage paid out of the personal estate, in preference to the legacies. Burley v. Armstrong, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 270.

A testator, carrying on business in co-partnership, by his will "gave and bequeathed his moiety in the partnership stock, crop, goods and chattels, to be valued at a fair valuation, to his four brothers and sister, to be divided share and share alike, paying all his just debts which he owed." The testator, at the time of his death, besides being possessed of the partnership property mentioned in the will, was also seised of real estates, which were subject to certain mortgages which he had created in his lifetime. Upon bill filed by the heir-at-law:—Held, that he was entitled as against the legatees to have the personal estate of the testator applied in payment of the mortgage debt in exoneration of the real estate descended. Chester v. Powell, 7 Jur. 389.

A testator devised an estate X. to trustees, upon trust to raise (in aid of his personal estate) sufficient to satisfy his debts and the mortgages on his estate Y., which he devised to his daughters; and he declared that the incumbrances on Y. should be payable out of X. in exoneration of Y. On the testator's death, a real estate (Z.) descended to his heir-at-law:—Held, that as between X. and Z., the former was primarily liable to pay the mortgage and other debts. Phillips v. Parry, 22 Beav. 279.

A testator having two estates, L. and F., subject to a mortgage for 1,200*l*., and two other estates, S. and T., devised estate L. to A., subject to the payment of 200*l*., part of the 1,200*l*.; and estates F. and S. subject to the payment of 1,000*l*., being the remainder of the said sum of 1,200*l*. charged thereon, he devised to A. and B.; and he gave all his residuary personal estate to trustees, upon trust to pay his debts, whether on mortgage, bond, or otherwise, &c. Estate T. descended on A. as the heir-at-law of the testator:—Held, affirming the decision of the court below, that the personal estate being insufficient to pay the mortgage debt, the descended estate was liable. Goodwin v. Lee, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 948—L.JJ. Affirming S. C., post, col. 1497.

—— Rights of Legatees.]—One, having mortgaged his fee simple estate, devises his leasehold to A., and his fee simple to B., and dies, leaving no other personal estate. The devisee of the fee simple must take it cum onere, and shall not charge the leasehold estate specifically devised with the mortgage. O'Neal v. Mead, 1 P. W. 693.

A., by his will, bequeathed to S., his partner in trade, certain leasehold premises where the trade was carried on, for the residue of the term and interest of the testator therein. These premises, together with other premises at H., were subject to mortgages for moneys which had been raised and charged upon them by the testator, who had also given his bond for the debt. Upon a bill filed by pecuniary legatees against the executors, to carry the trusts of the will into execution, and a decree for taking the accounts of the estate, it appears that S., who was one of the executors, had paid off the sums due upon the mortgage of the premises at T. and H., out of the personal estate, which was insufficient to satisfy all the debts and pecuniary legacies. This payment was allowed by the master in his report. The report in this respect was confirmed by order upon further directions, and upon appeal the decision was affirmed. Davies v. Bush, 4 Bli. (N.S.) 305.

An estate in mortgage was devised to A., and several legacies given to others; the mortgage shall be first satisfied out of the personal estate, and if that falls short the legatees must abate in proportion. Warner v. Hawes, 3 Bro. P. C. 21.

An estate being considerably mortgaged, was devised to A., and several specific legacies were left to others. The surplus is not sufficient to discharge the debt. All the specific legatees shall contribute towards the discharging the mortgage before the mortgage premises shall be affected; for the covenant to pay the money makes it a personal debt, and the real estate shall never be put in average with the personal. S. C., W. Kel. 3.

A., by will, computing the surplus of his personal estate, after debts and legacies paid, would amount to 5,800*l*., gives the 5,800*l*. to some of his grandchildren in several proportions; and wills, if the surplus fell short they should abate in proportion; if it amounted to more, it should be divided between them in the same proportions. Decreed, that a mortgage on an estate devised to two of her grandchildren should be paid out of the personal estate, although by this means the personal estate would fall short of the 5,800*l*. S. C., nom. Hawes v. Warner, 2 Vern. 477; 3 Ch. Rep. 206.

An express devise shall not be defeated by applying the personal estate to pay off a mortgage in favour of an heir-at-law. Ib.

—— Rights under Marriage Settlement.]—Settlement, on marriage, of estates, leasehold and others, subject to incumbrances not created by settlor, the issue of the marriage not entitled to have them discumbered out of their father's assets in prejudice of his creditors. Clarke v. Samson, 1 Ves. Sen. 100.

—— Charge not created by Testator or Intestate.]—A man purchases an equity of redemption and dies; the mortgage shall not be paid out of the personal estate for the benefit of the heir, it not being the ancestor's debt. Pockley v. Pockley, 1 Vern. 37. See 2 Salk. 449; 2 Ch. Ca. 84.

By the established rules of equity, the personal estate of a testator, whose will does not require such an application of it, is not to be applied in favour of those who claim his real estate for the purpose of exonerating it from debts not originally contracted by him; courts of equity distinguishing between debts of testator, and of his estate. Testator charges his real estate, which was subject to a mortgage contracted by his ancestor, and also all his personal estate, with his debts and legacies; the mortgage shall be borne by the estate originally liable, not paid out of his estates, and the executrix having paid it out of the personal estate shall be repaid the money. Lawson v. Hudson, 1 Bro. C. C. 58. Affirmed, 3 Bro. P. C. 424.

Mortgagor of copyhold devises it to wife, together with personal estate, and appoints her his executrix; she dies without paying off mortgage:—Held, heir is not entitled to have mortgage paid out of personal estate of mortgagor. Scott v. Beecher, 5 Madd. 96.

Notwithstanding a charge upon a term, for payment of debts, a leasehold estate purchased by the testator, subject to a mortgage, shall bear the burden of that mortgage, it not being properly the debt of the testator. Ancaster (Duke) v. Mayer, 1 Bro. C. C. 454.

A. purchased an estate subject to a mortgage; the personal estate shall not exonerate the real for payment of the mortgage debt. Tweddell v. Tweddell, 2 Bro. C. C. 101. Affirmed, 2 Bro. C. C. 152.

P. H. purchased the lands of R., which, at the time, were subject to a mortgage for a term of years. The deed of conveyance, in which the mortgagee (who did not execute it) was named as a party, recited the mortgage, and that P. H. had agreed with the mortgagor to purchase all his estate, interest and equity of redemption in and to the lands of R.; and also all the estate and interest of the several other parties of the deed therein; and, in consideration of a sum of money paid, and an annuity granted to the mortgagor, and of the sum due on foot of the mortgage, therein expressed to be paid to the mortgagee, the mortgagor and mortgagee conveyed the lands to P. H. and his heirs, freed and discharged of the mortgage term. The mortgage-money remained unpaid at the death of P. H.:—Held, that the devisee of the lands was not entitled to have the mortgage paid off out of the general personal estate of P. H. Barry v. Harding, 1 Jo. & Lat. 475; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 313.

Decreed, on the authorities, but against the opinion of the court, that, in administering the estate of the executor and devisee of a mortgagor, whose personal estate was not deficient, the mortgaged estate was primarily liable to the debt. Clarendon (Earl) v. Barham, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 688; 12 L. J., Ch. 215. And see 6 Jur. 962.

Where real estate, subject to a mortgage, descended to a lunatic, and the mortgage was paid off out of his personal estate, the amount so applied was ordered to be raised out of the real estate, and paid to the lunatic's administratrix. Leeming, In re, 3 De G. F. & J. 43; 30 L. J., Ch. 263; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 115; 3 L. T. 686; 9 W. R. 403.

A testator devised his real estate, which was mortgaged, and his personal estate, to A. absolutely. A. died immediately after the testator, and before the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113:—Held, that the heir of A. was not entitled to have the mortgage paid out of the personal estate, but that he took the real estate cum onere. Swainson v. Swainson, 6 De G. M. & G. 648; 26 L. J., Ch. 119; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 145; 5 W. R. 187.

S. devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to his wife E. absolutely. One of the estates was subject to a mortgage debt, for payment of which two policies of insurance had been assigned. S. died on the 19th December, 1854, and E., two days afterwards, intestate, leaving her two sons, the plaintiff and the defendant, her surviving. The defendant, the elder son, obtained grants of letters of administration to both S. and E. He received the proceeds of the policies, and applied them in payment of the mortgage debt, and the chief clerk certified that such application was correct. The plaintiff moved to vary the certificate, on the ground that it had been decided, on the hearing of the cause, that the defendant was not entitled to have the mortgage debt paid out of the personal estate of the mortgagor; but the court held that the application of the proceeds was proper, and the finding of the chief clerk correct, such proceeds being no part of the assets of E. S. C., 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1011.

James E. mortgaged real estate, and died in 1850, intestate, leaving his father Edward E. his heir at law and sole next of kin. Edward E. died intestate, and without having obtained letters of administration of the personal estate of James:—Held, that the personal estate of James was liable, as between the heir and personal representative of Edward and James, to be applied in discharge of the mortgage debt in exoneration of the real estate. Observations upon the conflict of authorities on the subject of exoneration. Bond v. England, 2 K. & J. 44; 24 L. J., Ch. 671; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 918; 3 W. R. 648.

—— Adoption of, by Purchasers.]—Two persons buy estates subject to a mortgage made by the former owners, take upon them different mortgages, and covenant with each other for payment of them; they do not by that means make their personal estate liable. Forrester v. Leigh, Ambl. 173.

Where an estate descends subject to a mortgage, if nobody will take an assignment of the mortgage, without the heir covenant to pay, such covenant only subjects his estate collaterally. Ib.

One agrees to buy an estate which was in mortgage for a gross sum, of which he covenants to pay 86*l.* to the mortgagee, and the rest, being 44*l.*, to the owner of the estate; the purchaser dies; his heir-at-law has a right to have the mortgage-money paid out of his personal estate. Parsons v. Freeman, Ambl. 115.

Mortgaged estate descends: the mortgagee pressing, the security is assigned; a mere covenant by the heir upon that occasion for payment does not make it his personal debt. A mere covenant by the purchaser of a mortgaged estate to indemnify the vendor does not make it his personal debt. Woods v. Huntingford, 3 Ves. 131.

Upon the purchase of an equity of redemption, the agreement of the purchaser with the vendor to pay the mortgage without any communication with the mortgagee, not sufficient to make it the personal debt of the purchaser. Butler v. Butler, 5 Ves. 534.

Heir of purchaser exonerated by ancestor's personal assets from a mortgage, the result of the transaction being a personal contract, and the personal assets, therefore, the primary fund. Waring v. Ward, 7 Ves. 332; 5 R. R. 130.

No exoneration of heir by personal assets of a party who never personally contracted, or not originally, but only as a further security in a subsequent transaction, not intended to disturb the order of charge, as the transfer of mortgage or the purchase of an equity of redemption; even though the interest is raised, the excess follows the subject of the original contract. Id. 336.

Though upon the purchase of an equity of redemption, the incumbrance is not, as between the representatives of the purchaser, his personal debt, even by his covenant to pay, which is considered as only for indemnity of the vendor, it is, if beyond that he enters into a new contract with the mortgagee, as for different times and modes of payment, &c. Oxford (Earl) v. Rodney (Lord), 14 Ves. 417.

Where a feme sole makes a mortgage, or takes an estate subject to a mortgage, and afterwards upon a transfer her husband covenants to pay the money, his personal estate shall not be liable; secus, where the husband has received the money himself. Bagot v. Oughton, 1 P. W. 348; Fortesc. 332; Sel. Ch. Ca. 20.

—— Adoption by Heir or Devisee.]—Where heir inherits a mortgaged estate, if he executes a new covenant and bond, with a new equity of redemption, he makes the debt his own, and his personal estate shall be primarily liable. Donisthorpe v. Porter, 2 Eden. 162; Ambl. 600.

Mortgaged estate descends; the mortgagee pressing, the security is assigned. A mere covenant by the heir upon that occasion for payment, does not make it his personal debt. A mere covenant by the purchaser of a mortgaged estate to indemnify the vendor, does not make it his personal debt. Woods v. Huntingford, 3 Ves. 131.

If an estate descends subject to a mortgage, and the heir creates a new mortgage for securing the old debt, and also one contracted by himself, and fixes a new day of payment, he makes himself liable to both, notwithstanding he exempts in the new security his person and his property, except what is comprised in the new mortgage from liability in respect of the debts. Lushington v. Sewell, 1 Sim. 435.

S. was devisee of an estate which had been mortgaged to A. by the testator, which mortgage carried interest at 5 per cent. S. joined in an assignment of the mortgage from A. to B., discharged from the former proviso of redemption, and subject to redemption on payment of principal and interest at the rate of 4 per cent. only; and S. covenanted for payment of such principal and interest: afterwards S. agreed to raise the interest to 5 per cent., and covenanted to pay interest at that rate. Then S. died, leaving an arrear of interest due on the mortgage: this not being originally the debt of S., his covenants are only collateral, and his personal estate is not primarily liable to discharge any part either of principal or interest due on the mortgage. Shafto v. Shafto, 1 Cox, 207.

Where there was a mortgage on two estates, A. and B., and estate A. was specifically devised by the mortgagor, and estate B. descended upon his heir, to whom the mortgagor devised and bequeathed all other his real, and the whole of his personal estate, subject to the payment of his debts. The heir afterwards covenanted with the devisee that he would exonerate estate A., and, by consent of the mortgagee, estate A. was afterwards exonerated, and the whole debt thrown upon estate B.; and the heir afterwards devised specifically estate B., and gave all other his real and personal estate to his eldest son, "subject to the payment of his debts, and the fulfilment of all his contracts and obligations": —Held, that the covenant did not amount to an adoption by the heir of the debt as his own, and, therefore, estate B. was not exonerated by the second will. Ilchester (Earl) v. Carnarvon (Earl), 1 Beav. 209; 8 L. J., Ch. 245; 3 Jur. 239.

The equity of redemption of an estate in mortgage, subject to the usual proviso for redemption, for securing 3,000*l.*, devolved, by devise and conveyance, on several persons as tenants in common, in unequal shares. The mortgagee having required his money, an indenture was made between the mortgagee of the first part, the tenants in common of the equity of redemption of the second part, and new mortgagees of the third part, whereby, in consideration of 2,000*l.* to the old mortgagee paid by the new mortgagees, at the request of one of the tenants in common, and of 1,000*l.* in like manner paid at the request of two other of the tenants in common, in equal moieties, making 3,000*l.*, the mortgaged hereditaments were conveyed to the new mortgagees, subject to new distinct provisoes for redemption at the end of six months on payment of the 2,000*l.*, for re-conveyance of two-third parts to one tenant in common, and on payment of 1,000*l.* for re-conveyance to the two others, the tenants in common of the one-third part in equal moieties as between themselves; the tenants in common covenanted to pay their respective proportions, with interest, at the end of the six months. They, at the same time, executed a mortgage bond with a condition avoiding the same on payment of the 3,000*l.* and interest, as stipulated for by the proviso for redemption, and according to their covenants:—Held, that neither the form of the new proviso for redemption, nor the new covenant to pay, shewed an intention to change the nature of the mortgage-debt; and that the personal estate of one of the tenants in common was not liable, in exoneration of the mortgaged estate, to pay the proportion of the mortgage debt. Hedges v. Hedges, 5 De G. & Sm. 330; 21 L. J., Ch. 858; 16 Jur. 634.

An estate descended from A. to B., subject to a mortgage: A. died considerably indebted by a simple contract. B. made a further mortgage of the premises for payment of the simple contract debts of A. This is not a debt to which the personal estate of B. is primarily liable, but both the mortgages are charges in the first instance on the land. Tankerville (Earl) v. Fawcett, 1 Cox, 237; 2 Bro. C. C. 57.

Incumbrances of an ancestor are not a primary charge on the son's personal estate; although the latter had covenanted to pay them. Leman v. Newnham, 1 Ves. Sen. 51.

Testator desires all his debts may be discharged by his executors, adding, "I mean those only of my own contracting, not those heavier debts by my family"; gives his personal estate to his mother, whom he makes executrix, desiring her to pay all his just debts exactly. Long after his making the will, the mother buys in mortgages charged on his estate by his ancestors, and the son covenants to pay the money. The personal estate is still exempted from the principal and interest due on those mortgages, which are still a charge on the real. Ib.

D. devised estates to trustees for a term of years in trust to raise money for payment of all his debts and legacies, and subject to that term he limited the estates in strict settlement, with the ultimate remainder to his own right heirs. By the falling in of the intermediate limitations, A. and B. became entitled to the estates as right heirs of the testator. The testator's debts and legacies remaining unsatisfied, A. and B. executed joint bonds for the amount of them, and then A. died. These bonds are not debts of A., to which his personal estate is primarily liable, but they must be borne, in the first instance, by the devised estate. Basset v. Percival, 1 Cox, 268.

A mortgage is made of the manor and lands of S. and other valuable estates, to secure a debt of 80,000*l.* and interest. The mortgagor dies intestate, leaving the debt wholly unpaid; and his heir, being pressed to pay off 30,000*l.*, part of the 80,000*l.*, procures a person to advance the sum required for the purpose, and the original mortgagee thereupon joins with the heir of the mortgagor in a deed conveying the manor and lands of S. to the person making the advance, subject to a proviso for redemption at the end of five years, being an equity of redemption altogether different from the prior equity of redemption, and the interest reserved being 5 per cent. instead of 4½ per cent., which was the rate reserved in the original mortgage. This is, in effect, a new mortgage by the heir, and the 30,000*l.* is thereby constituted his personal debt. Barham v. Thanet (Earl), 3 Myl. & K. 607; 3 L. J., Ch. 228.

The same mortgagor made another mortgage of gavelkind lands, which, upon his death intestate, descended to his two brothers as co-parceners. The elder brother, who was the common-law heir of the mortgagor, purchased of the other brother his moiety of the gavelkind lands, and covenanted with him to pay the whole mortgage-money. He did not thereby make the mortgage-money his personal debt. Ib.

An estate was devised to the eldest son of the testator, in fee, charged with four portions of 5,000*l.* each, for younger children. The eldest son, on his marriage, settled the estate to the use of his intended wife after his decease, for her life, if she should survive him, with remainder to himself in fee, and covenanted within six months to pay off the four sums of 5,000*l.*, and release the estate therefrom. He paid off one sum of 5,000*l.*, and died intestate:—Held, that the husband was not a purchaser under the settlement, and that the covenant in the settlement could not be taken to have been for indemnity only, but that, so far as the wife and younger children were concerned, the husband had adopted the portions as his own debt, and that he had also made them his debt as between his real and personal representatives. Barham v. Clarendon (Earl), 10 Hare, 126; 22 L. J., Ch. 1057; 17 Jur. 336; 1 W. R. 96.

When a man covenants upon his marriage to lay out money in the purchase of land, and to settle the land, when purchased, in favour of his wife and children, with remainder to himself in fee, the money is converted into land, not only in favour of the wife and children, but in favour of the heir also, and the heir may enforce the covenant where any of the uses of the settlement subsist at the death of the covenantor. Ib.

A testator having mortgaged an estate for 1,500*l.*, for payment of which his eldest son was surety to the mortgagee, devised the estate to his eldest son in tail, with remainders over, under which the plaintiff became tenant in tail. The testator devised another estate to trustees, upon trust to sell, and out of the proceeds to pay his mortgage and other debts, and gave the residue to his eldest son, whom he appointed executor and residuary legatee. The trustees did not act, but the son entered into possession of all the testator's estate and property. The mortgage was transferred, the son entering into a new covenant for payment of 1,500*l.*, and the interest at a different rate, with a new proviso for redemption; and he covenanted for payment of the 1,500*l.* and interest accordingly. The son having died:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to have the entailed estate exonerated from the mortgage out of the son's personal estate. Bruce v. Morice, 2 De G. & Sm. 389.

In 1775 A. became owner in fee of estates W. and L. The W. estate was subject to mortgages amounting to 5,344*l.*, and the L. estate to a mortgage amounting to 2,200*l.*, all of which were created by A.'s ancestor. In 1787 A. mortgaged the L. estate for 8,000*l.*, reserving the equity of redemption to himself, and personally covenanting to pay the money out of this sum. He paid off the three mortgages on the W. estate. A. died in 1806:—Held, as between the representatives of A., that the mortgage was primarily payable out of A.'s personal estate. Bagot v. Bagot, 34 Beav. 134; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1169; 13 W. R. 169.

—— Incumbrances under Powers and Settlements.]—There being a borrowing and lending in the case of a mortgage, the real estate is considered only as a pledge, and the personal liable in the first place. Lanoy v. Athol (Duke), 2 Atk. 446.

But this rule has never been carried so far as to extend to a provision in a settlement. Ib.

A feme covert, tenant for life, with power of charging, and with the ultimate limitations to herself in fee, makes a charge, and covenants for payment. She survives her husband, and the intermediate limitations having failed, the estate on her death descends to her heir. He is not entitled to exoneration out of her general personal estate. Digby (Earl), Ex parte, Jac. 235.

In general, if a tenant for life, with power of charging, makes a charge, his personal estate is not liable to exonerate the land. Ib.

A father having agreed to secure a marriage portion for his daughter, mortgaged part of his estates for that purpose, and covenanted to pay the money. By his will he directed his debts to be paid, first, out of the residue of his personal estate, then out of his money in the funds; and, lastly, out of his residuary real estates:—Held, that the mortgaged estate was not to be exonerated from the portion out of the personal estate. Graves v. Hicks, 6 Sim. 398; 4 L. J., Ch. 239.

A testator had, before his marriage, limited lands to trustees for a term, to secure a debt, and subject thereto to other trustees for another term, to secure an annuity of 100*l.* per annum to his intended wife for life, with a proviso for determining the latter term, on his investing a sufficient amount to secure an equal annuity. He died without having made such an investment, having by his will directed payment out of his personal estate of his debts, including what might be charged upon the settled lands; and he bequeathed his residuary estate to his widow. Before his death, he had paid off the debt secured by the first of the above-mentioned terms, which had consequently determined, and the annuity was the only charge upon the estates:—Held, that the tenant of the estates was not entitled to have them exonerated as against the widow out of the residue. Reeve v. Reeve, 3 De G. & Sm. 714; 14 Jur. 264.

A., by ante-nuptial settlement, covenanted that if the marriage should take effect, and his wife survive him, his heirs, executors, or administrators should pay to her an annuity of 200*l.* for her life, and that for better securing the annuity he and his heirs would grant and secure the same out of a sufficient part of the real estates devised to him by the will of his father:—Held, that the real estates were to be exonerated from the annuity out of the personal estate of A. Field v. Moore, 25 L. J., Ch. 66; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 145; 4 W. R. 187.

A., by his marriage settlement, after reciting that he was seised in fee of certain estates, subject to mortgage debts, the amount of which was mentioned, and which he had contracted, settled the estates, subject expressly to the debts, on himself for life, remainder to secure a jointure for his intended wife, remainder to the first and other sons of the marriage in tail male, remainder to himself in fee, and covenanted for the title, excepting the debts; and he reserved to himself power to raise 10,000*l*. by mortgage of the estates, the mortgage to be made redeemable by the person for the time being entitled to the freehold. A. exercised the power, reserving the equity of redemption to himself, his heirs, executors, &c., or the person for the time being entitled as aforesaid, and covenanted for payment of the mortgage-money. He then died without issue, having by his will charged his real and personal estate with his debts, and bequeathed the residue of his personal estate after payment of his debts to B., and having devised his remainder in fee expectant on the failure of his issue male to his brother and his brother's sons:—Held, that they were not entitled to have his personal estate applied to exonerate the devised estates from any mortgage debts. Ibbetson v. Ibbetson, 12 Sim. 206.

A testator in his lifetime mortgaged certain estates to secure a sum borrowed for the purpose of paying portions charged upon the same estates by the marriage settlement of his father, under whose will the testator claimed:—Held, this was not the personal debt of the testator, and therefore where the testator had devised other estates to be sold, and the produce applied inter alia, to discharge the mortgage debt in exoneration of the mortgaged property, and gave the residue to the respondents, and bequeathed his personal estate to his wife, who died in his lifetime, it was held that the mortgage debt was, notwithstanding the failure of the bequest to the wife, to be paid out of the produce of the real estate directed to be sold. One of the sums directed to be paid out of the produce of the estate directed to be sold was a sum of 5,000*l*., in satisfaction of a similar sum settled upon the wife in the event of her surviving her husband; and it was held that this sum sunk for the benefit of the persons entitled to the residue of money arising from the sale, and was not a resulting trust for the heir. Noel v. Henley (Lord), Daniell, 211, 332; 7 Price, 241: 12 Price, 213; 26 R. R. 660.

The owner in fee simple of certain hereditaments settled them by a voluntary deed to such uses as he should appoint, and subject thereto, to himself for life, with remainders over. Subsequently he exercised his power of appointment by a deed mortgaging the estate for 15,000*l*., and he covenanted in that deed for payment of the mortgage debt and interest. He then died, having made his will, reciting the settlement so as to shew the power of appointment, and exercising it by making some further charges upon the estate; expressly confirming the settlement and subjecting his residuary personal estate to the payment of his debts:—Held, that the settled estate, as between the persons entitled thereto, and the personal representatives of the settlor, was the primary fund for payment of the mortgage. Jenkinson v. Harcourt, 1 Kay, 688; 23 L. J., Ch. 785; 2 W. R. 688.

A testator had, after mortgaging an estate, settled it, subject to the mortgage, upon trusts for himself for life, with remainders over, leaving in himself the ultimate reversion in fee, which he devised by his will (before the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113):—Held, that the estate was by this settlement made the primary fund for payment of the mortgage debt; and that, after the determination of the particular estates which took place after A.'s death, the estate was liable, in the hands of his devisees, to exonerate his personal estate from that debt. Langdale (Lady) v. Briggs, 8 De G. M. & G. 391; 26 L. J., Ch. 27; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 982; 4 W. R. 703.

By a deed of compromise between U. and L., the former conveyed a certain fee simple estate to a trustee, "charged and chargeable with all leases, mortgages, gifts, conveyances, judgments, and incumbrances, theretofore made by him, of all or any part of the said estate," upon trust to permit him, U., during his life, to receive the rents, and after his decease to convey the said estate to L. and his heirs. Previous to the execution of this deed, U. had confessed several judgments, and mortgaged the whole estate. U. afterwards died, leaving considerable personal property:—Held, that the real estate, so conveyed by him, was the primary fund for the payment of those incumbrances. Alen v. Hogan, Ll. & G. t. Sugd. 231.

By a settlement dated in 1821 copyhold lands, which had been conditionally surrendered for securing certain mortgages, were settled by the testator, subject to the mortgages, he at the same time covenanting to pay off the same; and there was a proviso, that as between the testator, his heirs, executors and administrators, and the persons entitled under the settlement, the lands were to be the primary fund for payment of the same mortgage debts. In 1826 the testator paid off the debts out of his own moneys, and satisfaction was duly entered on the court rolls of the conditional surrender. In 1831 the lands were, under a power in the first settlement, re-settled by the testator and his wife, but no notice was taken of the fact of repayment of the mortgages. By his will the testator directed all his debts, &c., to be paid out of the personalty only:—Held, that a charge to the amount of the mortgage debts was to be considered as kept on foot as part of the testator's personal estate. Pears v. Weightman, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 586.

—— Devise cum onere.]—Where a testator gives to three different persons three leasehold estates, one of which is mortgaged, and directs that the mortgage shall be paid out of his residuary personal estate, which proves insufficient for that purpose, the legatee of the mortgaged leasehold takes it cum onere, and the legatees of the two other leaseholds shall not contribute towards the payment of the mortgage debt. Halliwell v. Tanner, 1 Russ. & M. 633.

Upon the construction of a will:—Held, that a particular freehold estate of the testator was the primary fund for the payment of a mortgage debt which had been charged thereon by the testator in his lifetime, in exoneration of the personalty and other estates. Evans v. Cockeram, 1 Coll. C. C. 428; 8 Jur. 903.

Devise of estate cum onere, out of what fund mortgage debt payable. Sargent v. Roberts, 17 L. J., Ch. 117; 12 Jur. 429.

In what case the devisee of land in mortgage shall pay the incumbrance on it. Freeman v. Freeman, Romilly's Notes of Cases, 157.

M. C., by his will, gave two leasehold estates (each of which was subject to a distinct mortgage), and all the residue of his estate, subject to the payment of his debts, to trustees, for his wife E. C., for life, with remainder as she should appoint. E. C. paid off both mortgages, and took an assignment of each to a trustee, "to the end and intent that the same might be kept on foot for her benefit." She afterwards executed her power of appointment over both estates; over the one by a deed poll, by which she annexed to the gift a condition that her appointees should release a certain claim which might have been enforced against the estate; and over the other by her will, by which, after reciting her power of appointment over the premises (describing them), she appointed the same to trustees, upon trust to pay the rents, &c., to certain of her children:—Held, that it was E. C.'s intention to keep these charges on foot, and therefore, that her appointees took subject to them. Cole v. Stutely, 6 Jur. 314.

M. C.'s general assets being insufficient to pay off the mortgage debts:—Held, that the leasehold premises passed to his wife's appointees cum onere. Ib.

By an ante-nuptial settlement, a sum of 7,356*l.*, the property of the wife, was vested in trustees, upon trust that, in case the husband should within six months, by covenant and by a mortgage of certain hereditaments belonging to him, secure payment to them of 4,000*l.*, they should pay 4,356*l.* to him out of the trust money; as to the mortgage debt of 4,000*l.*, it was declared that the trustees should stand possessed thereof, and of the securities for the same, upon trust to pay the interest to the husband for life, and after his decease to the wife for life, and after the decease of the survivor, upon the same trusts, as to the principal of the mortgage debt, as were declared of the residue of the trust money, for the benefit of the children of the marriage, and, if no children, upon trust for the husband, absolutely. Shortly after the marriage, the husband executed a mortgage of Whiteacre for the sum of 4,000*l.* to the trustees, who thereupon paid over to him the sum of 4,356*l.* By his will the husband gave to certain other trustees all his property, real and personal, upon trust, to hold the lands of Whiteacre and Blackacre, first, to fulfil the trusts of his settlement. The testator having died without issue:—Held, that by the devise of Whiteacre and Blackacre, upon trust, to fulfil the trusts of the settlement, the testator onerated both those estates with the mortgage debt, but that he did not devise them upon the same limitations as were contained in regard to the mortgage debt in the settlement; and, accordingly, that neither the wife of the testator took, nor would the children of the marriage, if there had been any, have taken any estate or interest in those lands under that devise, save as securities for the mortgage debt, but were excluded in favour of devisees. O'Reilly v. Smith, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 349.

W. devised the whole of his real estate (some parts of which were subject to mortgages) specifically to his nine sons and daughters and granddaughter. The personal estate was found to be insufficient to pay his debts. The representatives of one of the sons filed a bill praying for the administration of the real and personal estate; and they submitted that one of the devises had lapsed; that the whole of the real estate was charged with payment of the debts, and that the three daughters took only life estates. They failed in all points, the court holding that there was no descended estate, that the real estates devised to the sons were alone charged with debts, in exoneration of the daughters' estate, and that the daughters took an estate in fee. The court declared that the houses devised to the sons were primarily liable to pay and discharge the mortgage debts ratably, and in proportion to the respective values of the houses. Minutes of a decree were drawn up whereby (the houses having been sold) the proceeds were ordered to be carried to a single account to the credit of the cause, and, after payment of a simple contract debt, the residue was directed to be apportioned amongst the sons ratably, according to the amount of their devises (5 Jur. (N.S.) 86). On motion to vary the minutes by the insertion of a direction that the residue should be first apportioned in two parts, in proportion to the values of the two sets of houses, and each part apportioned to the devisees of such parts ratably, according to their respective devises:—Held, that as there were no words of exoneration, and no words which amounted to making the gross proceeds of the mortgaged estates a common fund to pay the gross amount of the mortgages ratably, the latter construction must prevail; and the motion was allowed, the costs to be costs in the cause. Wisden v. Wisden, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 455.

A testator who died in 1874, bequeathed three leaseholds, A., B. and C., to his wife, and directed that "should there be at the time of my death any incumbrances on C., I desire the said incumbrances to be paid off." A. and B. were subject to mortgages at the time of his death, but C. was unincumbered:—Held, that the above direction did not raise an implication that A. and B. were not to be exonerated out of the general estate of the testator. Bull, In re, Catty v. Bull, 49 L. T. 592; 31 W. R. 854.

—— "Subject to Mortgage."]—Distinction between testamentary dispositions of mortgages and of leaseholds, in reference to the use of words "subject, &c.," as connected with the question of the legatee taking the property bequeathed cum onere. Hickling v. Boyer, 3 Mac. & G. 635; 21 L. J., Ch. 388; 16 Jur. 137.

One devises his lands in D. to A. (his cousin), an infant, at her age of twenty-one, subject to the incumbrances thereupon and the rents during the infancy to be paid to her father, and devises all his other lands to trustees to pay his debts, the lands in D. being mortgaged, the mortgagee shall be discharged by moneys arising from the sale of other lands. Serle v. St. Eloy, 2 P. W. 386.

Devise of a copyhold subject to a mortgage not sufficient to exonerate the personal estate from the payment of the mortgage-money. Astley v. Tankerville (Earl), 1 Cox, 82; 3 Bro. C. C. 545.

Husband and wife levy a fine of the wife's estate, and settle the same, with a power to them to revoke and declare new uses. They afterwards join in a mortgage term to secure a sum redeemable on payment by the husband or the persons to whom the freehold should belong. The mortgage was paid off, and the term assigned to a trustee to such uses as the husband should appoint. He afterwards (without the wife) borrows a further sum, and makes the term a security, and the trustee joins in the assignment. The husband, by will, orders his personal estate to be applied in payment of debts, except those secured upon mortgaged estates. This is the husband's debt, and shall be paid by his personal estate, not by the mortgage term. Ib.

Devise of lands, subject to 1,000*l.* to be raised for the testator's daughters, to an annuity of 37*l.* 10*s.* to his widow, and to all such incumbrances as might happen to be thereon, does not exempt the personal estate from the payment of a mortgage thereon. Phillips v. Parker, Taml. 136.

A testator devised his three houses in N., part of his real estate, together with several other houses, "the whole subject to the payment of the mortgage debt of 2,900*l.* borrowed on mortgage of the houses in N.," to C. and H. in fee. He then devised and bequeathed the residue of his real estates, and all his personal estate and effects whatsoever, subject, nevertheless, as to his personal estate, to the payment of his debts, except such debts as were therein excepted therefrom, to trustees, in trust, as to the particular estates therein specified, and, among others, as to his four messuages therein described, subject to the mortgages made on the same, and from the payment of which he thereby exempted his personal estate, and as to all the residue and remainder of his said real and personal estates, in trust for the persons therein mentioned:—Held, that the testator's personal estate was the primary fund for the payment of the mortgage debt of 2,900*l.* Bickham v. Cruttwell, 3 Myl. & C. 763; 7 L. J., Ch. 198; 2 Jur. 342.

An estate was subject to mortgages of 7,000*l.* created by a testator, and of 13,000*l.* created by his ancestor; but the testator had consolidated them into one mortgage for 20,000*l.*, which he had covenanted to pay. The testator directed his debts to be paid out of his personal estate, but if insufficient he charged them on his real estate. He devised his real estate "subject nevertheless to the mortgages affecting the same"; and he died in 1840:—Held, that the devisee of the estate did not take cum onere, but was entitled to have the whole mortgage debt paid out of the personal estate. Townshend v. Mostyn, 26 Beav. 72.

A devise to A. of land at L., subject to the payment of 200*l.*, part of 1,200*l.* charged thereon (together with the testator's estate at F.), and a devise to B., subject to the payment of 1,000*l.*, being the remainder of the 1,200*l.* charged thereon (together with the estate at L.), of land at F., and also of the testator's estate at S.:—Held, not to exonerate the testator's descended real estate from its primary liability to payment of the mortgage debt; held, also, that the terms of the devise did not create any charge upon the estate at S., although the value of the land at L. was not more than 560*l.* Goodwin v. Lee, 1 Kay & J. 377; 24 L. J., Ch. 306; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 226; 3 W. R. 336. Affirmed 1 Jur. (N.S.) 948—L.JJ.

A., the owner of a freehold estate, subject to a mortgage in fee to secure 1,300*l.*, devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate to B., the mortgagee. B., in his residuary account, stated that he had retained 467*l.* out of the personal estate towards payment of his mortgage debt. Afterwards B. devised the property to three relatives of A., "provided they undertake to receive the same with all the liabilities attaching thereunto":—Held, first, under the circumstances, that the mortgage had not merged in the fee; and, secondly, that the three took the estate subject to the payment of the balance of the mortgage debt. Hatch v. Skelton, 20 Beav. 453.

—— "He paying the Mortgage."]—A testator, having an estate subject to a mortgage of 4,460*l.* created by himself, devised it to A. B. in fee, "he paying the mortgage thereon"; and he devised his residuary real and personal estates to trustees for the payment of his debts, and he gave to the mortgagee, through the medium of his executors, 2,000*l.* to exonerate the estate:—Held, that although, if the devise had been simply "of the estate" or "of the estate subject to the mortgage thereon," the mortgage would have been payable out of the testator's general estate, yet that the words "he paying the mortgage thereon" imposed a duty on the devisee, and amounted to a direction or condition that he should pay the mortgage, or take the estate subject to the burden upon it, so far as the same exceeded the 2,000*l.* Lockhart v. Hardy, 9 Beav. 379; 10 Jur. 728.

—— Lapse of Time — What bars Right.]—Devisee in tail of real estate claiming to be exonerated out of the descended moiety from a mortgage, filed his bill against the heir more than thirty years after testator's death, and more than twenty years after the heir's title accrued, but within two years after the deficiency of the personal estate had been ascertained, under a decree of the court:—Held, that the devisee was entitled to a decree for exoneration against the heir with costs. Newhouse v. Smith, 2 Sm. & G. 344.

A. became bankrupt, and of his estate sufficient to pay all his creditors was possessed by the assignees. Some of the creditors never claimed their dividends, which remained in the hands of one of the assignees. A. died in 1819, leaving real estate, which was subject to mortgages created by himself. In 1849, the person entitled to A.'s residuary personal estate by proceedings in bankruptcy obtained the payment of the surplus moneys, then in the hands of the assignee, to the executor of A. In 1852 the suit of Smith v. Bridger was instituted by a person claiming to be entitled to the equity of redemption of A.'s mortgaged estates, praying that the recovered fund might be applied in paying off the mortgages. Mellersh v. Bridger was a suit by the person entitled to A.'s residuary personalty for payment of the fund to him:—Held, that the right to exoneration was not barred by lapse of time. Mellersh v. Bridger, 17 Jur. 908.

—— Contribution.]—A testator devised his E. estate, subject to debts, etc., to his wife for life, with remainders over, and he devised his C. estate, subject to his debts, etc., to his wife absolutely. He afterwards mortgaged his E. estate:—Held, on a deficiency of the personal estate, that the estates E. and C. ought to contribute ratably towards payment of the mortgage. Middleton v. Middleton, 15 Beav. 450.

A testator before 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, having two estates subject to the same mortgage, made a specific devise of one and a residuary devise of the other:—Held, that the residuary devise being specific, both estates must bear the mortgage debt ratably. Gibbins v. Eyden, 38 L. J., Ch. 377; L. R. 7 Eq. 371; 20 L. T. 516; 17 W. R. 481. Contra, Brownson v. Lawrance, 37 L. J., Ch. 351; L. R. 6 Eq. 1; 18 L. T. 143; 16 W. R. 926.

A. mortgaged freeholds and leaseholds together and died intestate in 1857:—Held (as between the heir and administrator), that the freeholds must bear the burden ratably. Evans v. Wyatt, 31 Beav. 217.

J. B., being entitled to the lands of P. and K., mortgaged the same, and, by his will having given to his son H. B. all his interest in the lands of P., he devised thus: "I give, devise, and bequeath unto my son A. B., but in trust to and for the sole use and behoof of my daughter H., without the control of her husband, all my interest in and to my lands of K., to her sole use and behoof, over and above any provision made for her by her marriage settlement, with full power for said A. B., by consent of H., to let, sell, or dispose thereof, in any manner he or she may think proper, and also all my household furniture, etc., and all other my real, freehold, and personal property, of what nature or kind soever, not otherwise disposed of by me, but subject to and chargeable with all my debts, legacies, and funeral expenses." After his father's death, H. B. took an assignment of the mortgage, and went into possession of all the mortgaged premises. On a bill filed by H. and her husband against H. B. and A. B., praying a redemption, and charging that the mortgage was then paid off by the perception of the rents and profits:—Held, that the lands of K. were not bound to exonerate the lands of P., but that both should contribute ratably to the payment of the mortgage; but the bill having been filed before the mortgage was paid off, the costs of the mortgagee should be borne by the lands of K. exclusively. Clarke v. Brereton, 1 Jones, 165.

O'S. being seised in fee of W., and possessed of a charge of 2,000*l.* affecting K., mortgaged them, in 1817, to B. At the same time, certain old judgments affecting W. were assigned to a trustee for B., as collateral securities. In 1824 O'S. mortgaged the equity of redemption of W. to L., and other old judgments affecting the lands, subsequent to those assigned in trust for B., were assigned to a trustee for L. as collateral securities. Prior to the mortgage of 1817, O'S. confessed a judgment to X., which was puisne to the judgments assigned in trust for L. In 1825 he confessed another judgment to Y., and died in 1827. In a suit for the administration of his assets, W. was sold, and the produce thereof applied in payment of the sum due to B., and in part payment of the sum due to L. Those payments were made, not on foot of the mortgages of 1817 and 1824, but on foot of the collateral securities. The charge of 2,000*l.* was afterwards paid into court:—Held, that the charge of 2,000*l.* was the primary fund for payment of B.'s mortgage; and that, not having been so applied, the money in court was to be considered as part of the real estate, and ought to be applied accordingly. Kirby v. O'Shee, 4 Ir. Eq. R. 307.

A person having devised estates A. and B., deposited the title-deeds of A. with his bankers to secure any balance that might be due from him, and being largely indebted and unable to satisfy the debt, and requiring further small advances, deposited with the bank the title-deeds of B. The debt remaining due at his death:—Held, that the amount due up to the time of the second deposit was payable out of A., and the amount accrued subsequently out of A. and B. ratably, the value of A. to be computed after payment of the previous mortgage. De Rochefort v. Dawes, 40 L. J., Ch. 625; L. R. 12 Eq. 540; 25 L. T. 456.

A testator had borrowed money from his bankers from time to time, depositing securities with them upon the occasion of each advance, and on one occasion by memorandum charged a specific freehold property with the payment of a specific advance and money due, depositing the title-deeds. Some of the stocks and shares were sold by the bankers in the testator's lifetime, and the proceeds applied in reduction of the debt, which at his death stood at 28,625*l.* It appeared from a memorandum book kept by the testator and from his ledger, that the successive deposits were treated by him as forming one running account. By his will he devised his Caterham property to certain persons, and devised and bequeathed his residuary real and personal estate in trust for sale, and to divide the proceeds, after payment thereout of his debts, among certain other persons:—Held, that the debt due at the testator's death, and the interest thereon from that date, must be borne by the various properties then held by the bankers, ratably, according to their respective values at the death. Leonino v. Leonino, 48 L. J., Ch. 217; 10 Ch. D. 460; 40 L. T. 359; 27 W. R. 388.

A testator held shares in a banking company by whose deed of settlement it was provided that if any shareholder did not on demand pay all moneys due from him to the company, the directors might declare his shares forfeited, and that nevertheless he should still be liable to pay the debt, and it was also provided that a shareholder must have paid all moneys due from him to the company before he could transfer his shares. The testator borrowed money from the company, and deposited the deeds of certain real estate with them as security. By his will he gave the above estate to his son A., and his residuary property to his other sons. A. claimed that the testator's shares in the bank should contribute ratably to the payment of the debt:—Held, that the provisions of the deed of settlement did not create a charge or lien on the shares for a debt due from the holder, and that no case for contribution arose. Dunlop, In re, Dunlop v. Dunlop, 21 Ch. D. 583; 48 L. T. 89; 31 W. R. 211.

Held, also, that if the deed of settlement had charged the shares with all debts due from the shareholder to the company, a debt for which real estate had been specifically mortgaged would still have been payable out of the mortgaged estate before resorting to the shares, which were only subject to a general lien. Ib.

—— Collateral Security.]—A testator raised money on a legal mortgage of one estate, with an equitable mortgage of another estate as collateral security for part of the debt. He made his will in 1855, and died shortly afterwards:—Held, on administration, that the testator showed an intention to make the estate, subject to the legal mortgage, primarily liable to the whole debt, and that the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113 did not apply. Stringer v. Harper, 26 Beav. 38; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1009; 6 W. R. 763.

L. mortgaged real estate for 1,500*l.* By a subsequent deed, reciting the transfer of the previous mortgage, L. charged the premises subject thereto, together with other real and personal estate, with the payment of the original debt, and a further sum of 950*l.* in which he was indebted to the transferee, all the mortgaged property being subject to one proviso for redemption upon payment of the whole debt. Upon the death of L., intestate:—Held (as between the heir at law and administrator), that the 950*l.* must be apportioned ratably between the real and personal estate comprised in the second deed; but that there was no merger of the first mortgage, the real estate comprised therein remaining primarily liable for the 1,500*l.* Lipscomb v. Lipscomb, 38 L. J., Ch. 90; L. R. 7 Eq. 501; 17 W. R. 252.

The purchaser of an estate, A., in order to secure the payment of the purchase-money, executed a deed, by the first part of which another estate, B., was mortgaged for the whole sum, and by the latter part of which the estate A. was also mortgaged, as a further and collateral security. Afterwards the two estates became the property of two different persons, who respectively derived title from the purchaser:—Held, upon the words of the deed and the circumstances of the transaction, that the estate B. was the primary security, and that, as between the owners of the two properties, the estate A. was not to be resorted to for payment of any part of the mortgage debt till the estate B. was exhausted. Bute (Marquis) v. Cunynghame, 2 Russ. 275.

Mortgage of freehold estate, with a covenant for better securing the payment, to procure admission, and to surrender a copyhold estate, and in the meantime to stand seised in trust for the mortgagee, a primary mortgage of both estates, and the freehold not first applicable. Aldrich v. Cooper, 8 Ves. 382; 7 R. R. 86.

A mortgagor conveyed freeholds by way of mortgage by an indenture which recited an agreement by the mortgagees to advance him the principal moneys upon having the repayment thereof with interest secured "as hereinafter mentioned, and by a collateral security or indenture intended to bear even date with" those presents. On the same day the mortgagor demised leaseholds by way of mortgage to the same mortgagees to secure the same advance by an indenture which recited the mortgage of the freeholds, and that on the treaty for the advance "it was agreed that the same principal and interest should be further secured by these presents." Each of the two indentures contained a covenant for the payment of the mortgage debt and interest. In an action to administer the estate of the mortgagor:—Held, both on the frame of the deeds themselves and upon the evidence as to the circumstances attending the advance, that the leasehold security was not "collateral" in the sense of "secondary"; and accordingly that, as between the real and personal representatives of the mortgagor, the mortgage debt was payable ratably out of the freeholds and leaseholds comprised in the two securities, and not primarily out of the freeholds. Observations upon Bute (Marquis) v. Cunynghame (2 Russ. 275) and upon the meaning of the words "collateral security." Athill, In re, Athill v. Athill, 50 L. J., Ch. 123; 16 Ch. D. 211; 43 L. T. 581; 29 W. R. 309—C. A. S. P. Early v. Early, 49 L. J., Ch. 826; 16 Ch. D. 214, n.

Lien for Unpaid Purchase-money — Before Real Estate Charges Acts.]—Where one articles to purchase an estate, and dies before the purchase completed, the heir is entitled to have the purchase-money paid out of the personal estate. Forrester v. Leigh, Ambl. 116, 171. S. P. Parsons v. Freeman, Ambl. 116.

A. having agreed to purchase a real estate, the purchase-money for which exceeded the amount of his personal estate, by his will, made a few days afterwards, attested by three witnesses, as to "all the worldly goods that it had pleased God to bless him with," gave and bequeathed to his wife and two sons all his goods, cattle, chattels, personal estate, and effects whatsoever; and in case they died without issue, &c., gave the children's share of the personal estate and effects over; testator dying before the purchase could be completed:—Held, that the agreement ought to be specifically performed, and that, the words of the will being insufficient to comprehend real estate, the estate ought to be conveyed to the eldest son and his heirs, &c. Cave v. Cave, 2 Eden, 139.

—— Where Title Defective.]—When after making a will a person agrees for the purchase of land, if a good title cannot be made, as the heir cannot have the land, he shall not have the money to be laid out. Green v. Smith, 1 Atk. 572.

Devisee claiming benefit of contract for purchase of estate directed to go to uses of will, the title proving defective, has no claim upon personal estate, either to have purchase-money, or another estate purchased, or the purchase completed, notwithstanding defects. Broome v. Monck, 10 Ves. 597; 8 R. R. 48.

—— Where no Binding Contract.]—To entitle heir to performance of agreement for purchase out of personal estate, the agreement must have been binding upon the parties contracting, so that the property was converted in equity before the death. Buckmaster v. Harrop, 7 Ves. 341. S.C., on appeal, 13 Ves. 456; 6 R. R. 132.

A trustee for sale bought the trust estate at an auction, and died:—Held, that his heir at law had no right, as against his next of kin, to have the contract completed for his benefit. Ingle v. Richards, 28 Beav. 361; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1178; 8 W. R. 697.

Where an heir at law seeks to have a contract, entered into by his ancestor, carried into effect for his benefit, he must show that there was a binding contract at the death of the ancestor, and one which could be enforced against an unwilling purchaser. Garnett v. Acton, 28 Beav. 333.

A. agreed to purchase some real estate, but he died intestate before the completion of the purchase. It turned out that part of the property had been held for twenty-seven years under a parol exchange entered into by a mere tenant for life; but after A.'s death the exchange was confirmed by the trustees:—Held, that the contract could have been enforced against A. in his lifetime, and that his heir at law was entitled to have it completed for his own benefit, at the expense of A.'s personal estate. Ib.

Where contract for the purchase of an estate is not complete in the lifetime of the ancestor, the terms of it not being ascertained, heir is not entitled to have the personal estate applied to payment of the purchase-money. A reference or issue will not be granted to ascertain the terms of the contract. The application of the personal estate by the heir in completing the contract for purchase by the ancestor, but not binding on him, raises no trust in the lands for the next of kin. The money so laid out is a charge on the purchased lands. Savage v. Carroll, 1 Ball & B. 265; see 12 R. R. 32.

To entitle the heir to an application of the personal estate in completing a contract for a purchase of lands by the ancestor, it must be such as he could have been compelled to perform. Ib. 281.

A person contracted to purchase real estate, subject to a condition that if he made any requisition which the vendor was unable or unwilling to comply with, the vendor should be at liberty to rescind the contract. He made several requisitions and died intestate without completing the contract, and after his death the vendor rescinded it on account of his alleged inability to comply with one of the requisitions, which if not complied with might have given the purchaser a right to compensation, but would not have entitled him to annul the contract:—Held, that the heir at law of the purchaser was entitled to have the amount of the purchase-money paid to him out of the intestate's personal estate. Hudson v. Cooke or Cook, 41 L. J., Ch. 306; L. R. 13 Eq. 417; 26 L. T. 180; 20 W. R. 407.

Testator contracts for a particular estate, but dies before the purchase is completed; afterwards, from the state of his affairs, the contract is dissolved, yet the purchase-money shall not be sunk into his personal estate, but shall be laid out in other lands to the same uses as he had devised the land contracted for. Whitaker v. Whitaker, 4 Bro. C. C. 31.

A testator having instructed C. to purchase a site on which it was his intention to build schools, C. entered into negotiations for the purchase of a piece of land, and after the testator's death paid the purchase-money, and took a conveyance, in which he (C.) covenanted that schools, and no other buildings, should be erected on the land:—Held, that, as the evidence failed to shew a valid contract for purchase during the testator's lifetime, there was nothing to bind his assets, and the claim of C. against the estate in respect of the purchase-money was disallowed. Woodward v. Humpage, 5 L. T. 382.

An executor by his testator's direction, having negotiated for the purchase of a site for schools in common with a new church, to which the testator had largely contributed, but there being no binding contract at the death, subsequently completed, and took a conveyance to himself:—Held, not entitled to charge the purchase-money against the estate. Inskip, In re, 3 Giff. 359; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 256.

—— Express Provision.]—Testator contracts for the purchase of a house, and afterwards, by a codicil to his will, gives to A., his executor, the house which he had given a memorandum of agreement to purchase, and which was to be paid for out of timber which he had ordered to be cut down. This amounts to a direction that the purchase-money for the house shall be so provided for, and evidence was admitted to shew what was the order given by the testator with reference to the cutting of timber. Sandford v. Raikes, 1 Mer. 646.

The purchaser of an estate, subject to incumbrances, retained part of the purchase-money till they were discharged, and gave a bond for it; he deposited in a bank, in his own name, the amount of such bond, informing the obligees that he had so done; they, on the release of some of the incumbrances, received part of the money:—Held, on his death, that, under the circumstances, the balance of the money in the bank had been sufficiently appropriated for the payment of the residue of the purchase-money in ease of the parties taking the estate. Yates v. Thomson, 3 Cl. & F. 544.

—— Purchase in Names of Husband and Wife.]—An agreement for the purchase of land was entered into in the names of husband and wife, and the husband died before the whole of the purchase-money had been paid. Upon an inquiry in an administration suit as to the real property of the husband:—Held, that it did not include the purchased estate, that the purchase enured for the benefit of the widow, and that the unpaid purchase-money was payable out of the husband's personal estate. Drew v. Martin, 2 Hem. & M. 130; 33 L. J., Ch. 367; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 356; 10 L. T. 291; 12 W. R. 547; 3 N. R. 637.

—— Heir, Rights of Purchaser's.]—Where confirmed purchaser of estate under decree died before conveyance made, having in meantime devised his interest therein to trustees, court ordered conveyance to trustees without consent of heir at law, who was an infant. King v. Gregory, 4 Price, 380.

A. purchased for B., but without authority, an estate sold under a decree; B. died without adopting the purchase; the order nisi was nevertheless obtained. The court refused to order B.'s executor to pay the purchase-money, and, on the heir declining to purchase, discharged the order nisi and directed a resale. Lord v. Lord, 1 Sim. 503.

If the executors of a purchaser under a decree refuse to pay the purchase-money, they cannot be compelled to pay it unless a suit be instituted by the heir. Ib.

—— Sale set aside at Suit of Vendor's Heir.]—The vendor's heir at law, who has obtained a decree setting aside the sale on repayment of the purchase-money to the purchaser, has no equity to resort to the personal estate to recoup him, not even to a portion of it identified as part of the purchase-money. Ryder v. Ryder, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 86.

—— Not within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113.]—Upon a contract for purchase of real estate, a deposit was made, and the balance of the purchase-money made payable at a future day, before the arrival of which the purchaser died intestate:—Held, that the lien for such balance upon the estate was not a charge thereon within the meaning of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, and that, consequently, the heir at law was entitled to have such balance paid out of the personal estate of the deceased purchaser. Hood v. Hood, 26 L. J., Ch. 616; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 684; 5 W. R. 747.

—— Other Matters.]—A. purchases land of B., and mortgages back those lands for part of the purchase-money, and gives a note to B. for 200*l.*, the other part thereof; A. devises those lands to be sold for payment of his debts. This 200*l.* note, though for part of the purchase-money, shall not be preferred to other debts, nor be a charge on the land in equity. Bond v. Kent, 2 Vern. 281.

Where the date of a deed was subsequent, by a few days, to that of a will, and the testator's heiress had treated the property as having passed by the will, but was not shewn to have been aware of her rights, and forty years had elapsed, but without any adverse possession:—Held, that the court would not presume a binding contract for purchase to have been entered into by the testator before the date of the will. Cathrow v. Eade, 4 De G. & Sm. 527.

Where the court had declared that certain devised estates were devised subject to incumbrances charged thereon, and a vendor had a lien for unpaid purchase-money on one of such estates:—Held, that the vendor's lien stood precisely in the same position as any other incumbrance, and that it must be paid out of the particular estate on which it attached. Barnewall v. Iremonger, 1 Dr. & Sm. 255; 3 L. T. 462; 9 W. R. 88.

Judgment—Lands delivered in Execution under Elegit.]—Lands to which a testator was believed to be entitled in fee simple, but of which he was in fact tenant in tail under a settlement, were in his lifetime delivered in execution, under a writ of elegit, to judgment creditors. The testator devised these lands to W. H. A., who survived the testator and died intestate, leaving H. W. A. his heir-at-law. H. W. A. was tenant in tail in possession of these lands under the limitations of the settlement:—Held, that the charge created by the judgment, though enforceable against the estate tail of H. W. A., was not so enforceable in exoneration of the testator's personal estate. Anthony, In re, Anthony v. Anthony, 62 L. J., Ch. 1004; [1893] 3 Ch. 498; 3 R. 671; 69 L. T. 300; 41 W. R. 667.

Liability under Building Contract.]—A., having a leasehold estate on which he had covenanted to erect buildings within a certain time, bequeathed it and also his personal estate, subject as to the latter to the payment of his debts, to trustees, for B. for life, with several limitations over. A. died before the time expired, leaving the covenant unperformed in part:—Held, that his general personal estate was liable to the performance of the covenant. Marshall v. Holloway, 5 Sim. 196.

A person contracted with a builder to erect a house on a piece of freehold land belonging to him, and died intestate before the house was finished:—Held, that the heir-at-law was entitled to have the house finished at the expense of the personal estate of the intestate. Cooper v. Jarman, 36 L. J., Ch. 85; L. R. 3 Eq. 98; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 956; 15 W. R. 142.

17 & 18 Vict. c. 113—To what Documents Applicable.]—A will executed before the time fixed for the commencement of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, but not coming into operation until after that date, is, as between claimants under it, "a will already made" within the meaning of the proviso in the act, which reserves the rights of claimants under or by virtue of such a will. Rolfe v. Perry, 3 De G. J. & S. 481; 32 L. J., Ch. 471; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 853; 8 L. T. 441; 11 W. R. 674.

The re-publication of such a will at a time subsequent to the time fixed for the commencement of the act does not, as between the same persons, deprive it of its character of being "a will already made" within the meaning of the proviso. Ib.

The proviso that nothing in the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, contained shall affect the rights of any person claiming under or by virtue of any will, deed, or document already made, or to be made, before the 1st January, 1855, held not to apply to the case of the heir of an intestate where the intestate, before the 1st January, 1855, executed a mortgage, reserving the equity of redemption to himself and his heirs. Piper v. Piper, 1 John. & H. 91; 29 L. J., Ch. 719; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1026; 8 W. R. 543.

—— Heir.]—The proviso at the end of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, that it shall not affect the rights of any person claiming under any deed or document made before the 1st January, 1855, does not save a right to the heir to be exonerated from a mortgage debt out of the personal estate bequeathed to a legatee by a will made before that date. Power v. Power, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 340.

In 1834 A. made his will, by which he devised to B. all his right, title, and interest to real estate, and he also devised and bequeathed to B. all his personal property, together with all other real, freehold, and chattel property of every nature and kind whatsoever, of which he might be seised or possessed at the time of his death; and he appointed C. his executor. After his will, A. granted mortgages, for the purpose of securing which he executed a disentailing deed, which was held to be a revocation of the will as to the real estate. A. died in 1856:—Held, that the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, applied, and that the heir was not entitled, as against the legatee of the personal estate, to be exonerated from the mortgage. Ib.

An heir-at-law and customary heir of a testator, taking by descent an estate which has been the subject of a lapsed devise in the will, is not a person claiming "under or by virtue of a will" within the meaning of the proviso contained in 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, s. 1. Nelson v. Page, 38 L. J., Ch. 138; L. R. 7 Eq. 25; 19 L. T. 447; 17 W. R. 27.

—— Copyholds.]—The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, applies to copyholds. Piper v. Piper, 1 John. & H. 91; 29 L. J., Ch. 719; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1026; 8 W. R. 543.

—— Leaseholds.]—Leaseholds are not within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113. Wormsley, In re, Hill v. Wormsley, 46 L. J., Ch. 102; 4 Ch. D. 665; 25 W. R. 141. S. P., Solomon v. Solomon, 33 L. J., Ch. 473; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 331; 10 L. T. 54; 12 W. R. 540. Gall v. Fenwick, 43 L. J., Ch. 178; 29 L. T. 822; 22 W. R. 211.

—— Share of Proceeds of Sale.]—An estate was by deed settled in favour of A. and his wife for their respective lives, and after the death of the survivor, in trust, after the expiration of three months from such death, for sale and investment of the proceeds, the fund to be held in trust for the children of the wife as to sons on attaining twenty-one, or dying under that age leaving issue, and as to daughters on attaining twenty-one or marrying. The wife died leaving three children, who attained twenty-one. One of them, a daughter, died leaving her father her heir-at-law and next of kin. Her father devised the one-third of the settled estate to which he became entitled on his daughter's death to trustees, for sale and investment, and to hold the same for one of his sons. And he devised and bequeathed all his residuary estate to his trustees, after payment of his debts, for another of his sons. Shortly after the date of his will he mortgaged his life interest in the settled estate, and also his reversionary one-third of such estate:—Held, that the one-third was not an "interest in land," within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, Locke King's

Act, and that the mortgage debt was not payable thereout, but out of the testator's residuary personal estate. Lewis v. Lewis, 41 L. J., Ch. 195 ; L. R. 13 Eq. 218 ; 25 L. T. 555 ; 20 W. R. 141.

—— Mortgages.]—Locke King's Act applies to a mortgaged estate, different portions of which are devised to different persons ; and the devisees must contribute according to the value of their respective portions. Newmarch, In re, Newmarch v. Storr, 48 L. J., Ch. 28 ; 9 Ch. D. 12 ; 39 L. T. 146 ; 27 W. R. 104—C. A.

Where an estate is conveyed to A. in consideration of his covenanting to pay off a mortgage on another estate, the liability must primarily be satisfied by A.'s personal representative and not by A.'s heir. Day v. Day, 13 L. T. 625 ; 14 W. R. 261.

—— Mortgage by Deposit.] — An equitable mortgage by deposit and memorandum is within the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113. Pembrooke v. Friend, 1 John. & H. 132 ; 2 L. T. 742.

An equitable mortgage by deposit is not taken out of the operation of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, because it is unaccompanied by a memorandum. Davis v. Davis, 24 W. R. 962.

A sum of 400*l.* borrowed by an intestate on his promissory note, but secured also by a memorandum and deposit of even date of title-deeds of real estate in terms as collateral security, is within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113. Coleby v. Coleby, L. R. 2 Eq. 803 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 498 ; 14 L. T. 697.

The heir-at-law, who paid the debts and funeral expenses out of his own moneys as a matter of bounty, but afterwards claimed to be allowed such payment out of the personal estate, is not entitled to be repaid. Ib.

—— Other Charges.]—The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, only applies where there is a defined and specified charge on a specified estate ; and a general charge on real estate by a testator in aid of his personal estate does not come within the definition of a mortgage on the real estate in the hands of the devisee, unless and until the amount has been accurately defined, and the devisee has expressly taken the estate subject to such ascertained charge. Hepworth v. Hill, 30 Beav. 476.

A testator bequeathed a legacy of 4,000*l.*, payable by his trustees out of his personal estate, and, if that should be deficient, out of his real estate. The trustees, having provided for all claims except this legacy, put H. (who was entitled to the residue) into possession of the real and personal estate. He died many years after, having continued to pay interest on the legacy, and questions then arose, between persons claiming under him, as to the fund out of which the legacy ought to be paid :—Held, on the assumption that the first testator left sufficient personal estate, that his personal estate remaining in specie was first liable, and that the deficiency must be provided out of H.'s assets ; and secondly, on the assumption that the first testator's personal estate was deficient, then that his personal estate in specie was first applicable, and that his real estates not alienated for value were liable ratably for the deficiency. Ib.

By a deed between the trustees and H. (the residuary legatee and devisee), a particular estate was reserved by the former as a security for a legacy which had not been provided for when the personal estate was handed over to H. :—Held, that the operation and effect of the deed was confined to the parties to the instrument. Ib.

A charge of debts, funeral and testamentary expenses on a particular real estate, assuming it to exonerate personal estate in favour of a particular legatee, does not exonerate the person who, on failure of that legacy by means of the Mortmain Act, takes it. Where there was also a charge of a mortgage debt on the particular real estate devised :—Held, that under the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, the devisee was not entitled to have the debt paid out of the personal estate which passed, by failure of the legacy, to the crown. Dacre v. Patrickson, 1 Dr. & Sm. 186 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 846; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 863; 2 L. T. 761; 8 W. R. 647.

—— Contribution.]—A. mortgaged freeholds and leaseholds together, and died intestate in 1857 :—Held (as between the heir and administrator), that the freeholds must bear the burden ratably. Evans v. Wyatt, 31 Beav. 217 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 499 ; 10 W. R. 813.

When real and personal estate belonging to a testator are comprised in the same mortgage, Locke King's Act has not the effect of throwing the whole mortgage debt upon the real estate, but such mortgage debt must, as between the devisees of the testator's real estate and the legatees of his personal estate, be borne ratably by the mortgaged realty and the mortgaged personalty. Trestrail v. Mason, 47 L. J., Ch. 249 ; 7 Ch. D. 655 ; 26 W. R. 260.

—— "Contrary Intention."—A trust for payment of all the testator's debts out of personal estate was a sufficient indication of a contrary intention within the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, and entitled the devisee of an estate to have the property exonerated from a mortgage debt out of the personal estate. Moore v. Moore, 1 De G. J. & S. 602 ; 32 L. J., Ch. 605 ; 8 L. T. 562 ; 11 W. R. 790.

But see now 30 & 31 Vict. c. 69, and cases thereon, col. 1514, post.

A direction in a will that all the testator's just debts, funeral and testamentary charges and expenses, should be paid and discharged by his executors as soon as convenient after his decease out of his estate, followed by a gift of all the testator's real and leasehold estates (which were subject to a mortgage) to trustees who, with his wife, were named also executors of his will :—Held, not to be such an expression of contrary intention as to bring the case within the saving of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, and consequently that the cestui que trust under the will of the real estate and leaseholds took them cum onere. Woolstencroft v. Woolstencroft, 2 De G. F. & J. 347 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 22 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1170 ; 3 L. T. 388 ; 9 W. R. 42. S. P., Pembrooke v. Friend, 1 John. & H. 132 ; 2 L. T. 742 ; Brownson v. Lawrance, 37 L. J., Ch. 351 ; L. R. 6 Eq. 1 ; 18 L. T. 143 ; 16 W. R. 926.

In collecting a testator's "contrary or other" intention under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, which, in the absence of such intention, renders a mortgaged estate primarily liable to the payment of the mortgage debt, the court must do so from the document from which the intention is to be collected according to the ordinary mode of construing instruments. Eno v. Tatham, 3 De G. J. & S. 443 ; 32 L. J., Ch. 311 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 481 ; 8 L. T. 127 ; 11 W. R. 475.

A testator, by his will dated in 1857, appointed his wife to be his executrix, and gave her all his personal estate, subject to the payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses ; and he devised his real estate to trustees, who were to let the estate and pay the rents, after deducting repairs and insurances, to his wife for life. On her death they were to sell and apply the proceeds, after deducting their costs and expenses, for the benefit of the testator's brothers and sisters, and nephew and nieces. By a codicil the trustees were directed to hold the estate for the testator's children, and apply the income for their maintenance; but the trusts of the will were left in force, in the event of all the children dying under twenty-one. The real estate was subject to a mortgage created by the testator before the date of his will:—Held, that his intention was plain, that his mortgage debt was to be paid as a debt out of his personal estate, and that the mortgaged estate was not primarily liable to the payment of it under the provisions of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113. Ib.

A testator devised a messuage or dwelling-house and premises to his daughter E. in fee, and he bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to three trustees (of whom E. was one), all of whom he appointed executors, and declared that they should, out of the moneys to arise from the sale and conversion of his personal estate, pay his funeral and testamentary expenses and debts, and the legacies. The property was subject to a mortgage debt and interest:—Held, that the property was by the operation of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, exonerated, the testator having expressed "a contrary or other intention." Smith v. Smith, 3 Giff. 263; 31 L. J., Ch. 91; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1140; 5 L. T. 302.

A testator gave one-third of the rents of his real estate to his widow for life, and he devised an estate at B., in thirtieth parts, to his children as tenants in common. The residue of his real and personal estate, "after paying his mortgage and other debts, he left to be divided into thirtieth parts, and to be taken by the same and in the same proportions as the estate at B.":—Held, that the widow took no interest in the personalty, and that the mortgages were payable primarily out of the residue, and not out of the mortgaged estate, under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113. Greated v. Greated, 26 Beav. 621.

Under a direction in a will to pay debts, mortgage debts are included. Stone v. Parker, 1 Dr. & Sm. 212; 8 W. R. 722.

Therefore where a testator directed his trustees to stand possessed of his residuary estate, "subject in the first place to the payment of my just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses," and in a subsequent part of his will empowered his trustees "to satisfy any debts owing or claimed to be owing by me or from my estate, and any liabilities to which I or my estate may be liable":—Held, that this was a sufficient indication of an intention to exonerate a mortgaged estate, and that the mortgage debt charged thereon must be paid out of the residuary estate, under the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113. Ib.

A testatrix devised two farms to trustees. These farms were subject to a mortgage of 1,600*l.* She gave the residue of her real estate (including, by name, another farm, which was subject to a mortgage of 4,000*l.* not created by her) and the residue of her personal estate to her two sons, and directed that the mortgages or other incumbrances which might be charged upon or specifically affect any part or parts of her residuary real or personal estate should be exclusively borne by the premises charged therewith; and, subject thereto, she directed that all her debts, and funeral and testamentary expenses, should be paid out of her residuary real and personal estate, and she charged the same therewith accordingly. Upon a bill by the persons interested in the proceeds of the two farms:—Held, that the word "debts" included "mortgage debts," and that there was a sufficient declaration of intention that the two farms should not bear the burden of the mortgage upon them, to satisfy the requisitions of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113. Allen v. Allen, 30 Beav. 345; 31 L. J., Ch. 442; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 758; 5 L. T. 737; 10 W. R. 261.

A direction in a will for the payment of debts out of the personal estate is not such an expression of a "contrary or other intention" within the meaning of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, as to relieve a mortgaged estate from the burden of the mortgage debt. Rawson or Rowson v. Harrison, 31 Beav. 207; 31 L. J., Ch. 818; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 875; 10 W. R. 705.

A bequest of personalty, "subject to the payment thereout of all the testator's just debts," is a sufficient indication of intention, within the words of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, to make the personal estate the primary fund for the payment of mortgage debts. Mellish v. Vallins, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 864; 6 L. T. 215; 10 W. R. 421.

Devisees of a real estate which had been mortgaged by the testator, held entitled to have the mortgage paid out of the other real and the personal estate devised for payment of debts, notwithstanding the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113. Newman v. Wilson, 31 Beav. 33.

A testator gave his residuary personal estate upon trust to pay thereout all his funeral expenses, legacies, and debts, including specialty debts, which he enumerated. One of the real estates devised was subject to a mortgage debt, which was not mentioned among the specialty debts:—Held, that there was sufficient intention to take the case out of the operation of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, notwithstanding the omission of the mortgage debt by the testator in the enumeration of his specialty debts. Porcher v. Wilson, 10 L. T. 714; 12 W. R. 1001.

A testator devised his personalty and an estate, K., and other real estates, upon trusts for payment of debts, and subject thereto to certain devisees, and afterwards purchased the H. estate, as to which he died intestate. The testator deposited the deed of the H. estate to secure 1,000*l.*, and was subsequently found lunatic. Under an order in lunacy a mortgage was made of the H. & K. estates, to raise a sum of money to pay off the 1,000*l.*, and other debts of the lunatic; and a proviso was inserted, that as between the lunatic, his heirs and devisees, the H. estate should be considered as the primary security for the mortgage debt. The lunatic having died:—Held, that the proviso did not have the effect of exonerating the devised estates at the expense of the H. estate, and the devised estates were ordered to be first applied in payment of the mortgage debt. Freeman v. Ellis, 1 Hem. & M. 758; 3 N. R. 248.

A testator made a specific devise of real estate, which was subject to a mortgage debt, and he declared that his personal estate should be liable for debts. He then made a general devise of residuary real estate. The personal estate of the testator was not sufficient to cover the debts:—Held, that having regard to the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, the mortgaged estate was only exonerated to the extent of the express intention of the testator, but the residuary real estate was not liable for the mortgage debt. Rodhouse v. Mold, 35 L. J., Ch. 67; 12 L. T. 629; 13 W. R. 854.

L. being seised in fee of real estate, mortgaged it for 2,000*l.*, and subsequently settled it on himself for life, with limitations to his children. He then, by his will, gave all his personalty to his son J., subject to the payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses (except such as were charged on any real estate by way of mortgage or otherwise). L. had insured his life for 5,000*l.*, and deposited the policy with his bankers to secure a loan from them; and soon after his death, J. received the 5,000*l.* on the policy, and paid off both mortgages, and claimed to be entitled to have the mortgage for 2,000*l.* paid out of the real estate:—Held, that he was entitled. Lawson v. Meynell, 18 L. T. 174.

A testator, after directing his debts to be paid, devised his real estate in strict settlement. During minorities the trustees were out of the rents and profits to keep down the interest on any mortgage debts. He bequeathed his residuary personal property to his next of kin:—Held, that the real estates were not to be exonerated from the mortgages on them at his death at the expense of the personalty. Coote v. Lowndes, 39 L. J., Ch. 887; L. R. 10 Eq. 376; 23 L. T. 42; 18 W. R. 1019.

A testator having two estates mortgaged, with judgments collateral to the mortgages, by a will made after 1854, devised them in strict settlement to two of his sons; and he bequeathed several pecuniary and specific legacies, and directed that his debts and legacies should be paid out of the residue of his personal estate and property, which he bequeathed to his sons:—Held, that the mortgage debts should be paid out of the personal estate, in preference to the pecuniary legacies. Smith v. Smith, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 89.

A charge of debts on a part of a testator's real estates in exoneration of the rest without specially referring to his mortgage debts, is not a sufficient expression of an intention contrary to the rule established by Locke King's Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 113) to exonerate the mortgaged estate. Newmarch, In re, Newmarch v. Storr, 48 L. J., Ch. 28; 9 Ch. D. 12; 39 L. T. 146; 27 W. R. 104—C. A.

Locke King's Act applies to a mortgaged estate, different portions of which are devised to different persons; and the devisees must contribute according to the value of their respective portions. Ib.

A father, nearly the whole of whose real estate was subject to a mortgage debt, devised a part of his real estate to his sons, "charged nevertheless in aid of his personal estate and in exoneration of his other real estate with the payment of all his just debts," and he devised another part of his real estate to his daughter:—Held, that there was no sufficient declaration of a contrary intention under Locke King's Act, and that both the devisees must contribute ratably to payment of the mortgage debt. Ib.

A husband, who was entitled to an estate subject to a mortgage, devised part of it for the benefit of his widow for life, and the remainder to his residuary devisee, and bequeathed his personal estate subject to debts, and directed that the deficiency should be charged on his residuary real estate:—Held, that no contrary or other intention was shown within the meaning of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, so as to exonerate the widow's life interest from keeping down a proportionate part of the interest on the mortgage. Sackville v. Smyth, 43 L. J., Ch. 494; L. R. 17 Eq. 153; 22 W. R. 179.

A testator, by will made in 1866, after specifically disposing of certain parts of his property, and giving certain real estate to his wife during widowhood, gave the rest and residue of his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to convert the same into money and thereout pay his debts, including debts due on mortgage of the property given to his wife during widowhood, and his funeral and testamentary expenses, and the costs of proving and executing his will. He directed his trustees to pay the income of the fund to his wife during widowhood, and after her death or second marriage he gave so much of the fund as consisted of pure personalty to charitable purposes, and bequeathed the rest of it to his wife. In a subsequent part of his will he appointed executors, and gave a legacy to each of them who accepted the trusts. At his death part of the residuary real estate was subject to mortgages:—Held, that the will did not indicate any such "contrary intention" as to exclude the mortgages on the residuary real estate from the operation of Locke King's Act, and that they must be paid out of the proceeds of the mortgaged estate. Elliott v. Dearsley, 16 Ch. D. 322; 44 L. T. 198; 29 W. R. 494—C. A.

Held, by Fry, J., that the executor's legacies were charged on the real estate, and that as there was a mixed fund they must be paid pro ratâ out of the different parts of it. But held, by the court of appeal, that the legacies were charged on the real estate, but only in aid of the personalty, the principle of pro ratâ payment only applying to payments which the testator had expressly directed to be made out of the mixed fund. Ib.

The testator directed that, after payment of an annuity of 50*l.* a year to his nephew, the rents of his Dublin property (which, upon the construction of the will, was held to mean the testator's chattels real in Dublin) should be applied in providing a fund for the payment of all charges affecting his Dublin property at his decease, and that if the fund so provided should be insufficient for the purpose, his said Dublin property should be charged with the payment of the balance of such charges. Two mortgages had been granted by the testator, one of which included fee simple property and chattels real of the testator at Dublin, and personal estate, part of which was specifically bequeathed; the second affected the same property, except premises at Wood Quay, being part of the Dublin fee simple property:—Held, that the Dublin chattel property was constituted by the will a primary fund for the payment of the mortgages, to that extent excluding the operation of Locke King's Act, but that after its exhaustion the deficiency should be apportioned among the remaining subjects of the mortgages. Corballis v. Corballis, 9 L. R. Ir. 309.

A domiciled Englishman executed a trust disposition and settlement, in the Scotch form, of an estate in Scotland. He then made an English will, declaring that it should not affect the previous settlement of his Scotch estate, and charged his residuary real and personal estate with payment of his debts. He subsequently charged the Scotch estate with 14,000*l.*, by means of a Scotch heritable bond:—Held, that the residuary estate was liable to payment of the 14,000*l.*, in exoneration of the Scotch estate. Maxwell v. Hyslop, L. R. 4 Eq. 407 ; 16 L. T. 660.

M. granted a Scotch estate to his son, under the burden of the payment of a mortgage debt secured upon another estate belonging to M. in England. The grantor died domiciled in England. By his will he appointed executors ; directed payment of his just debts, as soon as conveniently might be after his death ; and devised the mortgaged estate to the grantee of the Scotch estate :—Held, that the grantee must bear the burden of the mortgage debt in question ; and that the testator's general personalty was exonerated therefrom. Smith v. Moreton, 37 L. J., Ch. 6.

A testator who had mortgaged his realty in order to secure consols which had been transferred to him by the trustees of a settlement :—Held, to have shewn an intention in his will and subsequent deeds that his realty should be exonerated from payment of the mortgage debt. Campbell v. Campbell, Campbell, In re, 62 L. J., Ch. 594 ; [1893] 2 Ch. 206 ; 3 R. 331 ; 68 L. T. 851.

A testator directed his private debts to be paid out of the proceeds of certain life policies ; he bequeathed his residue, subject to the payment of his trade debts ; after the date of his will he deposited the title-deeds of real estate with his bankers to secure an overdrawn trade account : —Held, that this amounted to a declaration of intention contrary to Locke King's Act, and that the devisee of the real estate was entitled to have it exonerated from the banker's lien. Fleck, In re, Colston v. Roberts, 57 L. J., Ch. 943 ; 37 Ch. D. 677 ; 58 L. T. 624 ; 36 W. R. 663.

A testator, after directing the payment of his debts, devised a freehold house to his wife "absolutely, to do with as she thinks proper" ; and he requested his executors to sell and convert into money whatever freehold or other property he possessed, and to collect all debts due to him, and to apply the proceeds in the payment of certain legacies. The testator's real estate was all subject to one mortgage :—Held, that the will did not shew any "contrary or other intention" within the meaning of Locke King's Act, and that consequently the widow took the house subject to its ratable proportion of the mortgage debt. Brownson v. Lawrance (L. R. 6 Eq. 1) dissented from. Sackville v. Smyth (L. R. 17 Eq. 153) and Gibbins v. Eyden (L. R. 7 Eq. 371), followed. Smith, In re, Hannington v. True, 55 L. J., Ch. 914 ; 33 Ch. D. 195 ; 55 L. T. 549 ; 35 W. R. 103.

—— Marshalling.]—A testator, seised and possessed of real and personal estate, after bequeathing some pecuniary legacies (amongst others 250*l.* to his son C. E.), directed by his will that his trustees should, in the first place, pay out of his personal estate all debts of every kind, including specialty debts, in full exoneration of his real estate. He devised to his wife an annuity for life, and to his daughter and his five sons respectively perpetual annuities, which he directed to be first, second, third and fourth charges on his real estate, and two small annuities to others. He appointed his son C. E. and another trustees and executors of his will. The testator's real estate produced 660*l.* a year. It was subject to two mortgages of 6,000*l.* and 1,500*l.*, and was sufficient to pay the annuities charged thereon by the will if the mortgages were paid out of the personal estate (8,000*l.*), which was more than sufficient to pay the mortgages and other debts. But if the mortgages were primarily payable out of the real estate, and the personal estate applied in exonerating the real estate therefrom, it might not reach the legacy of 250*l.* to C. E. :—Held, on the construction of the will, that the mortgages were primarily payable out of the lands mortgaged ; that the annuities were charged by the will on the real estate alone ; and also, that the application of Locke King's Act and the acts amending it did not preclude the annuitants from their equity to marshal the assets. Buckley v. Buckley, 19 L. R. Ir. 544.

—— Lien for Unpaid Purchase-Money.]—Upon a contract for the purchase of real estate, a deposit was paid, and the balance of the purchase-money made payable at a future day, before the arrival of which the purchaser died :—Held, that the lien for the balance upon the purchased estate was not a charge thereon within the meaning of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113. Hood v. Hood, 26 L. J., Ch. 616 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 684 ; 5 W. R. 747.

30 & 31 Vict. c. 69—Lien for Unpaid Purchase-Money.]—A lien for unpaid purchase-money is not a charge by way of mortgage, under 30 & 31 Vict. c. 69, where the purchaser dies intestate. Harding v. Harding, 41 L. J., Ch. 523 ; L. R. 13 Eq. 493 ; 26 L. T. 656. And see Hudson v. Cook, 41 L. J., Ch. 306 ; L. R. 13 Eq. 417 ; 26 L. T. 180 ; 20 W. R. 407.

The word "testator" in s. 2 of the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 69, applies to any deceased person who has made a will ; even where such will has not disposed of the testator's beneficial interest in the lands upon which the lien for unpaid purchase-money exists. Dowdall v. McCartan, 5 L. R. Ir. 313.

A testator devised his real estate to his trustees and executors, but made no disposition of the beneficial interest therein. Previous to his death he entered into a contract for the purchase of a freehold estate, and paid part of the purchase-money, but died before the purchase was completed, and his executors and trustees had, out of the personal estate, paid the balance of the purchase-money, and obtained a conveyance of the estate to themselves. The testator's death occurred before the 31st December, 1877, the date of the coming into operation of the 40 & 41 Vict. c. 34. The testator's heir-at-law claiming to be entitled to have the estate so purchased conveyed to him free of incumbrances : —Held, that the case was within s. 2 of the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 69, and that therefore the personal estate was entitled to be recouped out of the lands the sums paid thereout for the balance of the purchase-money. Ib.

—— Conversion—Mortgage.]—The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, and 30 & 31 Vict. c. 69, only apply to an interest in land taken as land, and property converted in equity does not come within these acts. Lewis v. Lewis, 41 L. J., Ch. 195 ; L. R. 13 Eq. 218 ; 25 L. T. 555 ; 20 W. R. 141.

—— Contrary Intention.]—The 30 & 31 Vict. c. 69, amounts to a legislative declaration that the court of chancery had put a wrong interpretation on the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113 (Locke King's Act), and though it only expressly enacts that a direction for payment of debts out of personalty shall not be held to indicate a contrary intention to the rule that a mortgage is to be paid primarily out of the estate subject to it, it really overthrows the whole reasoning on which the former cases had proceeded. Gall v. Fenwick, 43 L. J., Ch. 178; 29 L. T. 822; 22 W. R. 211.

A testator, seised of an estate partly leasehold and partly freehold subject to a mortgage, devised it specifically, and also created a mixed fund consisting of personalty, the proceeds of sale of some realty and annuities to be raised out of the mortgaged estate and other estates, and directed his debts to be paid out of this mixed fund:—Held, that he did not manifest a contrary intention to the rule laid down by Locke King's Act, but as leaseholds were not within that act the mortgage ought to be apportioned between the freeholds and leaseholds according to their values at the testator's death and the part apportioned in respect of the leaseholds paid out of the mixed fund. Ib.

The 30 & 31 Vict. c. 69, has in effect enacted that the word "debts" shall not include mortgage debts unless there are words shewing an intention that it should do so. Newmarch, In re, Newmarch v. Storr, 48 L. J., Ch. 28; 9 Ch. D. 12; 39 L. T. 146; 27 W. R. 104—C. A.

A testator, by his will dated in 1877, directed his executors "to pay all my just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, out of my personal estate in exoneration of my real estate":—Held, that a debt due from the testator at the time of his death on a mortgage of part of his real estate must be borne primarily by the mortgaged estate. Rossiter, In re, Rossiter v. Rossiter, 49 L. J., Ch. 36; 13 Ch. D. 355; 42 L. T. 353; 28 W. R. 238.

40 & 41 Vict. c. 34—Lien for Unpaid Purchase-Money.]—A testator who had contracted to purchase real estate, and paid the deposit money, by will made in 1881, specifically devised such real estate to his daughter for life, with remainder to her children, without shewing any intention that the purchase-money should be paid out of his personal estate; and he died without having disposed of his personal estate, which was rather less in amount than the unpaid purchase-money, and without having completed the purchase or paid any further part of the purchase-money. After his death an action by the vendor against the executor and trustee of the will for specific performance of the contract was compromised by the defendant thereto, and the contract was put an end to upon the terms that the vendor should retain the deposit money and have his costs; and this compromise was confirmed by the court by an order made by consent in an administration action in the presence of the tenant for life of the real estate and the trustee, all the remainder being infants. Upon the further consideration of the administration action, the devisees contended that they were entitled to so much of the personal estate as was equivalent to the unpaid purchase-money, upon the ground that the purchase was a conversion by the testator of his personal estate to that extent, and that Locke King's Acts had not altered the law in that respect:—Held, that there was a vendor's lien, and that Locke King's Acts Amendment Act (1877) applied; that, accordingly, all the devisees were entitled to was the real estate charged with the unpaid purchase-money, and therefore on the facts to nothing; but held, moreover, that the order of compromise would be fatal to their claim, if otherwise good. Cockcroft, In re, Broadbent v. Groves, 52 L. J., Ch. 811; 24 Ch. D. 94; 49 L. T. 497; 32 W. R. 223.

A building agreement provided for leases with ground rents up to 180*l.* a year; and, at the option of the lessor, for further leases on payment by her of twenty-two years' purchase of the further ground-rents. She executed the option, and died before completion:—Held, that her devisees took the land included in the agreement subject to discharging the amount payable in respect of the further leases. Kidd, In re, Brooman v. Withall, 63 L. J., Ch. 855; [1894] 3 Ch. 558; 71 L. T. 481; 43 W. R. 51.

—— Leaseholds.]—Locke King's Acts Amendment Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 34), s. 1, applies to leaseholds. A testator by his will, made in 1884, bequeathed to his wife the leasehold house "in which I now reside." At the date of the will he was residing in a leasehold house. In 1887 he entered into a contract with his lessor to purchase the reversionary ground lease, but died before the purchase was completed. His widow accepted the bequest:—Held, that all the testator's interest in the house passed to the widow, subject to her liability to pay the purchase-money. Kershaw, In re, Drake v. Kershaw, 57 L. J., Ch. 599; 37 Ch. D. 674; 58 L. T. 512; 36 W. R. 413.

—— Judgment.]—Land upon which a judgment has become a charge by virtue of the Judgment Acts is land charged with the payment of a sum of money "by way of mortgage or other equitable charge" within the meaning of Locke King's Amendment Act; and therefore a devisee of land so charged is not, in the absence of a contrary intention signified by the testator, entitled to have the judgment satisfied out of the personal estate of the testator. Anthony, In re, Anthony v. Anthony, 61 L. J., Ch. 434; [1892] 1 Ch. 450; 66 L. T. 181; 40 W. R. 316.

—— Contrary Intention.]—Testator, a trader, by will in 1885 gave his trade property (which included real and leasehold estate) and business to his son, subject to and charged with, in exoneration of the rest of his estate, the payment of all debts and liabilities owing at the time of testator's death in connection with his trade. Testator included in this property freehold premises situated at Acton, which he had purchased and intended for his business, subject as to such estate to the purchase or other moneys payable in respect thereof at testator's death. The residue of testator's real and personal estate was given on trust to convert and pay thereout debts other than those thereinbefore provided for. Testator at his death owed trade debts not secured by mortgage, and private debts which were secured by mortgage of the real and leasehold estates used in his business, and also of real and leasehold estates not so used:—Held, that the testator had, as to his trade debts, clearly indicated a contrary intention within the meaning of Locke King's Act and the Amendment Acts, and that it must be implied he had the same intention in dealing with his private debts, and that the mortgage debts, therefore, were primarily payable out of the proceeds of sale of the residuary real and personal estate. Nevill, In re, Robinson v. Nevill, 59 L. J., Ch. 511; 32 L. T. 864.

c. Debts, Liabilities and Priorities.

1. Rights of Creditors.

Generally.]—Debtor cannot by will or other act prefer one creditor out of the general assets. Townsend v. Windham, 2 Ves. 6.

After creditors have joined in a bill, and obtained a decree for payment of their debts out of legal and equitable assets, none of them shall be permitted to obtain a preference of the others, by obtaining judgment against the executors. Sheppard v. Kent, 2 Vern. 435; Pre. Ch. 190.

Though executors have a year to pay legacies, yet that does not extend to debts, but they are liable to be sued from the moment after the testator's death. Nicholls v. Judson, 3 Atk. 301.

When there is a clear debt the court will not consider the interest of the debtor's estate in considering what steps should be taken for enforcing it, at least if there be any conflict of interest between the debtor and creditor. Woods v. Sowerby, 14 W. R. 454.

Payment to a creditor who has proved his debt ought not to be suspended for the purpose of adjusting the equities between the parties jointly liable to him. Micklethwait v. Winstanley, 34 L. J., Ch. 281; 11 L. T. 582; 13 W. R. 210.

Payment to legatees is no answer to the claims of creditors, though no debt had arisen at the time of such payment. Newcastle Banking Co. v. Hymers, 22 Beav. 367.

The testator's heir-at-law who opposed the will, as to part of the lands devised thereby to pay debts, yet being a creditor, was let into the residue of the fund raised by the will for the payment of debts. Deg v. Deg, 2 P. W. 418.

A plaintiff in a creditors' suit held not entitled to set up at the hearing a vendor's lien in respect of his debt, without having adapted the frame of his bill to such a case. Olliver v. King, 8 De G. M. & G. 110; 25 L. J., Ch. 427; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 312; 4 W. R. 382.

A person who has received money belonging to an estate, against whom he seeks to prove as a creditor, must, if his claim is disputed, pay into court what he admits having received before his claim can be heard. Stevenson v. Marriott, 39 L. J., Ch. 568.

—— As against Purchaser from Beneficiary or Executors.] — The purchaser of a reversionary interest in a fund in court in an administration suit takes, subject to the claim of any creditor who may prove his debt at any time before the fund is paid out, the fund being available for creditors so long as it remains in court. Hooper v. Smart, 45 L. J., Ch. 99; 1 Ch. D. 90; 33 L. T. 499; 24 W. R. 152.

On a sale by the executors of the book debts of their testator, the debtors to the estate being also creditors, both on trade and also private debts, but claiming no right of set-off:—Held, the purchaser entitled only to the balance remaining due after deducting both trade and private debts due from the testator's estate. Chick v. Blackmore, 2 Sm. & G. 274; 23 L. J., Ch. 622; 2 W. R. 488.

2. Debts Generally.

a. Accrued before Death.

Promise by Executor—Personal Liability of Executor.]—A promise by an administrator to pay the debts of the intestate is nudum pactum if there are no assets. Pearson v. Henry, 5 Term Rep. 6; 2 R. R. 523.

A parol promise to pay a debt is sufficient to ground a judgment against the assets of the testator; but where by such promise it is attempted to charge the executor personally, it must be shown to be in writing, otherwise it is void. Rann v. Hughes, 4 Bro. P. C. 27; 7 Term Rep. 350, n.

And even under a written agreement, he is not personally liable, unless a sufficient consideration is shown. Ib.

Mortgagees having offered to give the executor of the mortgagor time for payment of the mortgage money, provided 1,500*l.* should be made up on a day fixed, the executor, on the 18th of December, wrote them a letter stating his present inability to pay, and asking for a year's time, but saying he had 100*l.* which he would pay over, and that he would engage by the beginning of April he would have another 100*l.* ready, and other sums afterwards. The letter contained other statements, and a further request for time. On the 3rd of January, the mortgagees sent the executor an answer saying that they considered that 200*l.* would be paid by the 1st of April, but could not promise further time unless the amount was made up to 1,500*l.* The 200*l.* not having been paid by the 1st of April, an action was brought by the mortgagees against the executor, seeking to charge him personally on a promise to pay that sum, made in consideration of forbearance to the 1st of April:—Held, by Jervis, C.J., Williams, J., and Talfourd, J., that there was no sufficient promise in writing to bind him personally under the Statute of Frauds, the correspondence not showing any unqualified promise by him. Hamilton v. Terry, 11 C. B. 954; 21 L. J., C. P. 132.

Held, by Maule, J., dissentiente, that the letter of the 18th December was separable into two parts; the first of which contained an unqualified offer as to the 200*l.* in consideration of forbearance till the 1st of April, which was accepted in the letter of the 3rd of January, and that, therefore, the Statute of Frauds was satisfied. Ib.

A., at his death, left among his papers two letters sealed, and directed to the plaintiff (who had been his housekeeper for some years, but had left his service after giving birth to a child of which he was the father), containing two promissory notes for 400*l.* and 200*l.* In one letter the note was said to be "in consideration of the long and faithful services of the plaintiff." In the other he had written, "In addition to any sum I owe you, I inclose 200*l.* as a mark of my respect." His executors paid 200*l.* after his death, on account of these notes, to the plaintiff, and promised, in writing, to pay the residue, but subsequently declined to do so, and the plaintiff brought an action against them, in which were counts upon the notes, and a count upon an account stated with them as executors:—Held, that the testator's estate was not liable in respect of the notes, as they had not been delivered by him to the plaintiff, and could not operate as testamentary dispositions because not in conformity with the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26. Gough v. Tindon, 7 Ex. 48; 21 L. J., Ex. 58.

Held, also, that the executors were not liable upon the account for an account stated, because the payments and promise had been made under a mistake as to the liability of the testator's estate, and without consideration. Ib.

A. declared against B. and his wife, administratrix of C. deceased; for that C. died intestate, possessed of South Sea stock, which she held in trust for A., and upon which certain dividends were due, and that in consideration that A., at his own expense, would procure administration to be granted to the wife of B., as next of kin to C., and would furnish evidence to enable B. and his wife to receive the dividends, B. and his wife, as such administratrix, promised to pay over to A. the amount of the dividends when received :—Held, that the consideration stated was insufficient to support the promise. Parker v. Baylis, 2 Bos. & P. 73.

An attorney having delivered up deeds to an executor, which he was not obliged to do till his bill was paid, and these deeds being of great use to the executor in several suits which he was then carrying on, is a sufficient consideration to make the executor liable to the attorney's whole demand, whether there are assets or not. Hamilton (Duchess) v. Incledon, 4 Bro. P. C. 4.

A parol agreement was entered into between the executors of L. & T., that various old accounts between the testators should be settled without reference to the time that they had been running, and that a balance should be struck. The accounts were accordingly settled, and the executors of L. were allowed the value of a promissory note, which, but for the agreement, would have been barred by the Statute of Limitations. The executors of T. afterwards discovered a note from L. to T., which, but for the same reason, would have been barred by the statute :—Held, that the agreement was one for valuable consideration, on both sides, to waive the benefit of the statute, and ought to be enforced. Lade v. Trill, 6 Jur. 272.

B. having died indebted to G. for work and labour done, his executors signed the following memorandum on the back of G.'s account : "Mr. G. being contented to wait for the payment of the within account, we, as the executors of B., engage to pay Mr. G. interest for the same at 5*l.* per cent., until the same is settled" :—Held, that the executors were personally liable to pay the debt and interest. Bradley v. Heath, 3 Sim. 543 ; 30 R. R. 217.

Promise of Testator.]—Distinction between a mere voluntary promise (nudum pactum) that will not maintain an action ; and a promise upon the faith of which another does some act, as entering into engagements, or paying money ; forming a consideration that will support an action, and, therefore, establish a debt against assets. Crossbie v. M'Donal, 13 Ves. 148 ; 9 R. R. 161.

A feme covert, having an estate settled to her separate use, gave a bond for repayment by her executors of money advanced at her request on security of that bond to her son-in-law. After her husband's decease, she wrote, promising that her executors should settle the bond :—Held, that assumpsit would lie against the executors on this promise of the testatrix. Lee v. Muggeridge, 5 Taunt. 36.

A promise made upon good consideration by a testator, that his executor shall pay, is a sufficient consideration for an action in assumpsit against the executor ; and in such action it is neither necessary to aver assets, nor a promise by the executor. Powell v. Graham, 7 Taunt. 580 ; 1 Moore, 305 ; 18 R. R. 593.

A physician attended the testator for many years without having obtained any remuneration. He stated "that the testator had promised to pay him for his services, or leave him an equivalent." He did neither :—Held, that the physician had no claim against the estate, and a payment made to him by the executor was disallowed. Shallcross v. Wright, 12 Beav. 558 ; 19 L. J., Ch. 443 ; 14 Jur. 1037. S. P., Packman v. Vivian, 24 Beav. 290. And see Maddison v. Alderson, 52 L. J., Q. B. 737 ; 8 App. Cas. 467 ; 49 L. T. 303 ; 31 W. R. 820 ; 47 J. P. 821—H. L. (E.)

—— Implied.]—An infant, who was entitled to personal property, on her coming of age, as a residuary legatee, joined her father in a bond to secure to the plaintiff a sum due to him for the rent of apartments occupied by her and her father, and after she became of age employed the defendant to take out administration de bonis non of the assets of the testator (the executor being dead), which the defendant accordingly did, and became possessed of the property. She afterwards gave the plaintiff an order on the defendant to pay the amount of her father's bill, due to the former, and on its being presented to the defendant, he acknowledged that he possessed adequate funds, and that a person would be safe in advancing money on the security of the bond, but, before the order was executed or the sum paid under it by the defendant, the daughter countermanded it :—Held, that as he had consented to appropriate a sum sufficient the pay the plaintiff's demand, he was liable to an action for money had and received, in which the plaintiff might not only recover the amount of the bond, but an acceptance given by the father of the infant before she became of age, and which she afterwards requested the defendant to pay. Robertson v. Fauntleroy, 8 Moore, 10 ; 1 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 55.

Contingent on Survivorship.]—A settlement made by H., on the marriage of his son, T., provided 500*l.* per annum for T. for the life of H. ; the rest of the property to belong to H. for life, and after his death to T. ; 200*l.* for T.'s wife, if she should survive T. ; and 500*l.* among the issue of the marriage after T.'s death ; and the settlor covenanted "that the yearly profits of the premises, and other the property to which the said T. will be entitled after the death of H., exceed 1,000*l.* per annum, and shall continue to be of that value during the life of the survivor of T. and wife" :—Held, that this was a continuing covenant only during the life of T. and wife, if they survived H. ; and that H. having survived them no right of suit accrued to T.'s representative to have satisfaction out of H.'s personal estate, although the properties did not amount to the 1,000*l.* Wood v. Jamieson, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 420 ; 1 Jo. & Lat. 3.

On Promissory Note.]—In a legatee's suit a promissory note by the testator in renewal of a previous note for which there was no consideration, to secure a sum of money to a godchild, the testator having paid interest on the note, and the executor having also paid interest on the note, constitutes a debt against the testator's assets in priority to legatees, but not to the prejudice of the creditors. Dawson v. Kearton, 3 Sm. & G. 186 ; 25 L. J., Ch. 166 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 119 ; 4 W. R. 222.

Where two makers of a promissory note gave it to a creditor of their testator, whereby, "as executors, they severally and jointly promised to pay on demand with interest ;" and, in an action upon the note, they pleaded that they were executors, and made the note as such, and plene administraverunt præter ; and the plaintiff demurred specially, assigning for causes that they had thereby made themselves personally liable, and admitted that they had assets for the payment of the note, and that it might have been given for their own debt; and that, having promised to pay with interest, they could not become liable for it in their representative character:—Held, that they were personally liable; and that the plea was bad, and afforded no answer to the action. Childs v. Monins, 5 Moore, 282; 2 Br. & B. 460; 23 R. R. 513. And see Ashby v. Ashby, 7 B. & C. 444; 1 Man. & Ry. 180; 6 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 41; 31 R. R. 242.

A having lent B. 1,000*l.* without taking any security for it, states to C. and his family that the money had been held by him (A.) in trust for C. Afterwards B. becoming embarrassed in his circumstances, and unlikely to repay the money, A. at the urgent solicitations of C., gives the latter his promissory note for the amount. Subsequently B. dies insolvent, and without having repaid the money. Then A. dies. In a suit for the administration of A.'s assets (there being no evidence to rebut the trust):—Held, that C. may prove the note against A.'s estate as a valuable security. Burkett v. Ransom, 2 Coll. C. C. 395; 15 L. J., Ch. 174; 10 Jur. 193.

A testator gave a voluntary promissory note, and referred to it in her will. Quære, whether this constituted a good debt, or whether it was a legacy. Longstaff v. Rennison, 1 Drew. 28; 21 L. J., Ch. 622; 16 Jur. 559.

No difference between indorsement of a note by the party, and one by his personal representative. Watkins v. Maule, 2 J. & W. 243.

Executor in trust for infants, having paid under a written obligation executed abroad, though in possession of a counter obligation to repay part with interest at the death of the party, acknowledging that to be so much more than the debt, and neither instrument having been transferred, was charged as having paid incautiously, though innocently, and therefore he was permitted to try the question at law. Vez v. Emery, 5 Ves. 141.

On Bill of Exchange.]—In a suit for the administration of the estate of a deceased person, a claim was made by the holder of a bill of exchange to be admitted as a creditor; but it being proved that the holder, who was indorsee of the bill, was aware of the fact of the acceptance being in blank, he must be taken to have had as full knowledge of the circumstances of the origin of the bill as he might have acquired if he had made proper inquiry, and therefore affirming the certificate and the decision of the vice-chancellor refusing to disturb the same, the claim was disallowed, no value having been given for the acceptance. Hatch v. Searles, 24 L. J., Ch. 22; 3 W. R. 49—L.JJ. Affirming, 2 Sm. & G. 147.

In respect of Suretyship.]—A covenant by a surety for payment of a debt at a future day is not a contingent, but an actually existing debt, and must be provided for before simple contract creditors are paid. Observations on Norman v. Baldry (6 Sim. 621). Atkinson v. Grey, 1 Sm. & G. 577; 18 Jur. 282.

L. P. L. as principal, and G. D. as surety, covenanted with W. R. M. and T. B. to pay them or the survivor the sum of 2,000*l.* in two instalments, 1,000*l.* in May, 1853, and 1,000*l.* in 1858, with interest. G. D. died insolvent, and his estate was administered by the court. W. R. M. having also died, T. B., as survivor claimed to have a fund set aside by the executors of G. D. for the purpose of providing for the debt which would become due in 1858:—Held, that the executors of G. D. ought to provide a fund for the payment of the 1,000*l.* payable at a future time. Ib.

B. became surety for S. by bond and several judgment of 1807; and S. afterwards became surety for B. to nearly the same amount by bond of 1814. A suit for the administration of B.'s assets having been instituted by a judgment creditor of 1816, decrees to account, and for a sale, were pronounced in 1822. S., having in 1821 been obliged to pay the debt for which he was B.'s surety, procured the creditors of 1807 to prove their debt under the decree:—Held, that they were entitled to be paid the sum reported due to them, but that they should assign their judgment against S. to a trustee for B.'s creditors. Peoples v. Stewart, Hayes, 90. And see Scott v. Lowry, id. 95, n.

Poor Rate.]—An administrator is not liable to pay the poor-rate for his intestate; nor can he be distrained upon for it without a summons. Stevens v. Evans, 2 Burr. 1152; 1 W. Bl. 284.

And see Heywood, In re, Parkington v. Heywood, 67 L. J., Ch. 25; [1897] 2 Ch. 593; 77 L. T., 423; 46 W. R. 72.

For Dilapidations and Waste.]—Equitable waste by tenant for life is a breach of trust, and his assets after his death are answerable for the same. Ormonde (Marquis) v. Kynnersley, 5 Madd. 369; 21 R. R. 313.

Account against the representatives of tenant for life, without impeachment of waste of dilapidations, permitted by him in and about the mansion house, refused. Lansdowne v. Lansdowne, 1 J. & W. 522; 1 Madd. 116; 21 R. R. 227.

—— Claim whether in time.]—Where a testator gives successive interests, and adds to them a direction that the person who takes shall do a particular thing, and the devisee accepts the estate, there is a personal liability, capable of being enforced in equity, to perform the directions imposed by the testator. A testator gave his real estate to trustees upon trust for his widow for life, with remainder over, in events which happened, to A. for life, and, in events which happened, to B. for life, with remainder to his children, if any, in tail, with remainders over. The will contained a direction that each tenant for life or in tail of any of the hereditaments should, during her or his estate, keep the buildings thereon in substantial repair; and if any such person should neglect to effect such repairs within six months after being thereunto requested by the trustees, the trustees should be at liberty to effect such repairs. The widow of the testator was in possession of the hereditaments until her death in June, 1883. Her will was proved in February, 1884. She had omitted to repair the buildings. More than six months after her death, but within six months after probate of her will, a claim was carried in against her estate, in an administration action in respect of the omission to repair, the claimants being the trustees of the will and the then equitable tenant for life:—Held, that the estate of the deceased tenant for life was liable for such omission to repair. Held, also, that the claim was properly made by the trustees of the will, and that the remedy being in equity, the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 2 did not apply. Williames, In re, Andrew v. Williames, 54 L. T. 105—C. A.

—— Of deceased Incumbent—Before 34 & 35 Vict. c. 43.]—The claim of an incumbent against the representatives of his predecessor, for dilapidations, will be paid out of equitable assets, pari passu with other creditors, though at law it would be postponed to simple contract creditors. Bissett v. Burgess, 23 Beav. 278; 26 L. J., Ch. 697; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1221.

The executor of a deceased incumbent is bound to pay all his testator's simple contract debts before he pays for the dilapidations in the time of his testator. Bryan v. Clay, 1 El. & Bl. 38; 22 L. J., Q. B. 23; 17 Jur. 276; 1 W. R. 20.

Therefore, to an action founded upon the custom of England in that respect, against the executor of an incumbent, by the successor, for dilapidations, it is a good plea to say that the defendant, since the action, has paid simple contract debts, so as to leave no assets to meet the claim for dilapidations. Ib.

—— Since 34 & 35 Vict. c. 43.]—Where the bishop has, under s. 34 of the Ecclesiastical Dilapidations Act, 1871, made an order stating the cost of the repairs for which the executors of a late incumbent are liable, the sum so stated is under s. 36 a debt payable to the new incumbent out of the assets of the late incumbent pari passu with the debts of his other creditors. Monk, In re, Wayman v. Monk, 56 L. J., Ch. 809; 35 Ch. D. 583; 56 L. T. 856; 35 W. R. 691; 52 J. P. 198.

And see further cases under ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.

Gaming and Wagering.]—Moneys which had been deposited with a testator to abide the result of bets between himself and the depositors, were, after his death, returned to the depositors by his administratrix who, at the same time, paid the amount of such of the bets as were not pending at his death, but had been decided against him in his lifetime:—Held, that in respect of the deposits so returned upon bets not decided in his lifetime, the administratrix was entitled to credit in her accounts against the general estate; but not so in respect of the sums paid for bets decided before his death, and for the deposits upon such bets. Manning v. Purcell, 7 De G. M. & G. 55; 24 L. J., Ch. 522; 3 W. R. 273; 3 Eq. R. 387.

The amount of a bet lost at a horse race was paid by the loser into the hands of a third party, upon the faith of the promise of the latter to pay it to the winner. The person who received the money died before he had paid it to the winner. A claim filed in equity by the winner to be paid the amount out of the assets of the deceased was disallowed. Beyer v. Adams, 26 L. J., Ch. 841; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 709; 5 W. R. 795.

On illegal Consideration.]—Where, in consideration of the wife proceeding no further in the prosecution of an indictment for an assault, the husband agreed to secure her an annuity:—Held, an illegal contract, though approved of by the court in which the indictment was preferred, and that, in a creditor's suit, she was not entitled to come in as a creditor. Garth v. Earnshaw, 3 Y. & C. 584.

A lessee of a house which, to his knowledge, had for many years been used as a brothel, assigned the lease absolutely, knowing that the assignee intended to use the house for the same purpose. The original lease contained covenants to deliver up at the end of the term, in good repair, and not to use the house as a brothel; and the assignment contained a covenant to indemnify the lessee from the covenants in the lease. The lessee, having been compelled to pay for dilapidations at the end of the lease, sought to recover the amount from the estate of the assignee, which was being administered in equity:—Held, that the assignment, and everything arising out of it, were so tainted with the immoral purpose, that the lessee could not recover. Smith v. White, 35 L. J., Ch. 454; L. R. 1 Eq. 626; 14 L. T. 350; 14 W. R. 510.

Other Debts and Liabilities.]—A. B., an heir, elected to take against the will, and required the executors to complete a contract entered into by the testator for the purchase of a freehold estate, and it was conveyed to him. He nevertheless received great benefits under the will:—Held, that the parties disappointed by the election had no lien on the estate for the amount received; but that they were entitled to prove against the estate of A. B. for the whole amount received by him under the will. Greenwood v. Penny, 12 Beav. 403.

The name of a plaintiff having been inserted on the record without his knowledge, consent, or authority, on motion by the defendants to dismiss for want of prosecution, and on motion by the plaintiff to have his name struck out from the record:—Held, that the solicitors to the record who had purported to act for the said plaintiff were liable to pay his costs of the motion as between solicitor and client, and also to pay the costs of the defendants of the action and all the motions therein. Nurse v. Durnford, 49 L. J., Ch. 229; 13 Ch. D. 764; 41 L. T. 611; 28 W. R. 145.

It appearing that the solicitors had inserted the plaintiff's name through the fault of a deceased co-plaintiff:—Semble, they would have a right of proof for the costs they were ordered to pay against his estate. Ib.

Notices to sewer and pave roads having been, in 1872, served by a board of health on an owner, he took no notice during his lifetime, and the works having been executed by the board, notices to pay apportionments were on the 30th July, 1875, served on the tenant for life under the will of the owner, and on the owner, and on the executors, who within the statutory three months served counter-notices on the board, disputing the amount of the apportionments, and alleging that the roads were public roads. The board then commenced proceedings by arbitration, which the owners refused to attend, and in their absence an award was made in favour of the board on the 9th August, 1877. On the 19th January, 1878, the award was made a rule of the queen's bench division. On the 12th February notices of demands were served by the board on the owners, and on the 9th July, 1878, proceedings in the queen's bench division to enforce the award were commenced and subsequently abandoned. On the 1st August, 1878, proceedings were taken in the queen's bench with reference to the costs of the award, and these, on the 23rd January, 1879, were transferred to the chancery division, in which an administration action was pending:—Held, that a summons by the board for leave to prove in the administration action for the amount awarded must be refused, on the ground that the remedy of the board was by a summary proceeding before justices, and had become barred. West v. Downman, 14 Ch. D. 111; 42 L. T. 340; 29 W. R. 6.

A testator, by will, settled estates, and declared that the same should be forfeited and go over in the event of the party entitled for the time being to possession not repairing a column which he was building, but which he left in an incomplete state at his death. Upon a bill for the administration of the estate:—Held, that the party entitled to possession of the estates was not liable to complete the column, and that no contract could be implied to make the residuary estate liable to the expenses of completing it; and though all questions, except those relating to the column and the payment of costs, had been settled by agreement between parties, that the suit remained an administration suit, and that the costs must be paid out of the residuary estate. Joliffe v. Twyford, 28 L. J., Ch. 93; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1165.

Waiver.]—A letter from an attorney of a creditor of a testator, to the attorneys of his executrix W., stating that his clients do not claim from W. payment of the debt as executrix of B. W. (the testator), but claimed from her individually, she having become liable, by payment of interest from time to time, to the debt:—Held, that this was no waiver of the creditor's right to sue W. as executrix, nor did it justify her executor in discharging a specific legacy before the debt. Richards v. Brown, 4 Scott, 262; 3 Bing. (N.C.) 493; 3 Hodges, 27; 6 L. J., C. P. 95.

b. Accrued since Death.

Personal Liability.] — An executor cannot be charged as such, either for money had and received by him, money lent to him, or on an account stated of money due from him as such, as those charges make him personally liable. Rose v. Bowler, 1 H. Bl. 109. And see Ellis v. Bowen, Forrest, 98.

And in an action against an executor, on an account stated of moneys due from him as such, he is personally liable; but if the account is stated with him, as executor, of money due from the testator, he is liable in his representative character only. Powell v. Graham, 1 Moore, 305; 7 Taunt. 580; 18 R. R. 593.

In an action against an administrator, on promises of the intestate, an account stated with the administrator as such, of money due from the intestate does not make him personally liable. Segar v. Atkinson, 1 H. Bl. 102.

Semble, an executor may be charged as such for money paid to his use. Ashby v. Ashby, 7 B. & C. 441; 1 Man. & Ry. 180; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 41; 31 R. R. 242.

And a count on an account stated with him, as executor, for moneys due by him, as executor, charges him in his representative character. Ib.

Duties on Wines in Port—Entry after Testator's Death.]—A legatee, under a bequest of wines, which arrived in the port of London in a ship before the death of a testator, the report of the arrival of the ship being made before, but the entry of the wines not being made until after the death of the testator, is not subject to the payment of the duties; the executor being bound to pay them out of the assets. Sewart v. Denton, 2 Chit. 456; 4 Doug. 219.

Money Lent.]—A testator devised 400*l.* to his daughter Mary, and, in the event of her dying without issue, the same to be divided amongst such of his other children as should be then living. Mary died without issue, the testator's other children having died in her lifetime. Edward, the son and executor of the testator, covenanted with the defendant, another son, that the latter should apply the share of Mary, viz. 400*l.*, towards the purchase of an estate, which Edward, the executor, had sold to him; that that sum should continue in his, the defendant's, hands, and be payable, with interest, to Edward, the executor, or to Mary, and that the defendant should be chargeable with such principal money as ought to become payable agreeably to the will of the testator. The deed then witnessed, that in consideration of 400*l.* trust money, by these presents lent to the defendant, the latter covenanted with the executor for payment to him, for the use of Mary, of so much of the principal money as might become payable agreeably to the will. The plaintiff was the administrator of Edward, the executor:—Held, that this was money lent, and that the defendant was bound to repay it to the plaintiff, and was not entitled to delay payment for the purpose of paying it to the administrator de bonis non of the original testator as soon as he should be appointed. Dodd v. Dodd, 24 L. J., Ex. 162; 10 Ex. 878.

—— To Executor—Right of Proof against Estate.]—An executrix kept an executorship account with a bank, and having a power, under the will, to mortgage the real estate in aid of the personalty, she deposited with the bank the title deeds of part of the testator's real estate as security for the balance. The account was considerably overdrawn by the executrix, and the moneys to a great extent misapplied, but without the bank having notice of the misapplication. The security having proved insufficient to pay the balance, the bank applied to prove as creditors against the testator's estate for the difference:—Held, that they were not entitled to prove; for that a person cannot, by contract with an executor, acquire a right to prove as a creditor against the estate, though the executor has power to give him a lien on specific assets. Farhall v. Farhall, L. R. 7 Ch. 123; 25 L. T. 685; L. R. 12 Eq. 98.

Debitum in præsenti solvendum in futuro.]—E. covenanted that he in his lifetime or his heirs, executors, or administrators, within three months after his death, would pay 3,000*l.*, and died without having paid in 1823:—Held, that the money was a debt within the meaning of the Statute against Fraudulent Devises (3 & 4 W. & M. c. 14). Coope v. Cresswell, 36 L. J., Ch. 114; L. R. 2 Ch. 112; 15 L. T. 427; 15 W. R. 242.

To Executor for Advances — Priority.]—Where on taking an account a balance was found due to an executor for moneys advanced, the estate being insolvent:—Held, that the executor was entitled to be paid in full in priority to the creditors. Spackman v. Holbrook, 2 Giff. 198 ; 2 L. T. 367.

A testator authorised his executor to advance any part, "not exceeding one-half, of the presumptive share" of his children, towards their maintenance and advancement. The estate being very small, the executor advanced more than the whole. The estate being insufficient to repay the amount to the executor, the court, in a suit by a child for administration, gave priority to the costs of suit, but gave the surplus to the executor in part payment of his advances. Robison v. Killey, 30 Beav. 520.

—— Interest.]—By the will of a trader, the residue of his real and personal estate, including his stock-in-trade and effects used therein and the goodwill of the business, was bequeathed to a trustee and executor, upon ordinary trusts for sale and conversion. The executor had from time to time out of his own moneys advanced various sums in excess of the balance in his hands. The court allowed the executor 4*l.* per cent. on the balances appearing due to him at the end of each year, without including any interest in the computation of such balances. Finch v. Prescott, 43 L. J., Ch. 728 ; L. R. 17 Eq. 554 ; 30 L. T. 156 ; 22 W. R. 437.

Other Matters.]—The executor of a deceased shareholder in a banking company held not liable to make good, out of his testator's assets, debts contracted by the company subsequently to the testator's death, though the shares were registered in the executor's name, and he received the dividends in his character of executor, the debts due at his testator's death having been subsequently discharged by the company. Labouchere v. Tupper, 11 Moore, P. C. 198 ; 5 W. R. 797.

A statute which incorporated a company, provided that every judgment obtained against the company might be enforced by execution against the person, property, and effects of any former shareholder, in his natural or individual capacity, provided such former shareholder was a shareholder at the time of the making of or entering into the contract in respect of which such judgment has been obtained:—Held, that an executrix of a shareholder, who was such at the time a debt was incurred, but died before judgment obtained against the company, was not liable on a scire facias against the goods of the deceased. Poole v. Knott, 28 L. J., Q. B. 322 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1393 ; 7 W. R. 527.

3. Joint and Several Debts.

The several liability of the estate of a deceased partner for his firm's debts, subject to prior payment of his separate debts, is provided for by s. 9 of the Partnership Act, 1890.

Liability Joint and Several.]—Every joint loan, whether contracted in relation to mercantile transactions or not, is in equity to be deemed joint and several ; therefore, where four persons had opened a joint account with certain bankers who had advanced to them money on such joint account:—Held, that upon the decease of one of the joint contractors, the bankers had a right in equity to immediate relief out of his assets without claiming any relief against the surviving joint contractors, or showing that the latter were unable to pay by reason of their insolvency. Thorpe v. Jackson, 2 Y. & C. 553.

Joint bond held several against creditors in the administration of assets. Burn v. Burn, 3 Ves. 573.

Bond by three obligors, whereby they bound themselves "jointly," and their heirs, &c. "respectively," to pay, which was conditioned to be void, if they or either of them, their or either of their heirs, paid :—Held, that it was a joint and several obligation, and one having died, that his assets were liable. Tippins v. Coates, 18 Beav. 401.

Liability Joint but not Several.]—A. and B. were obligors in a joint bond ; A., who was alleged to be the principal debtor, died :—Held, that his assets were not in equity liable upon the bond, but that the liability survived to B. Richardson v. Horton, 6 Beav. 185 ; 12 L. J., Ch. 333.

A. and B. desiring to borrow money of a bank, the bank refuses unless C. would join to secure them ; C. agreed to join, and A., B. and C. drew a cheque, and the money was paid to them :—Held, that this was a joint and not a joint and several liability ; that C. was in the nature of a surety only, and a bill against his estate, after his death, could not be supported. Other v. Iveson, 3 Drew. 177 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 654 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 568 ; 3 W. R. 332 ; 3 Eq. R. 562.

Joint Judgment—Right of Proof in Administration Suits.]—A joint judgment against two cannot be proved under a decree to account in a suit instituted to administer the real assets of the conusor who died first, the surviving conusor not being a party to the suit as such. The case does not fall within the twenty-eighth general rule of March, 1843. Hatchell v. Sutton, 2 Jo. & Lat. 21.

Joint Creditors—Remedy against separate Estate of deceased Debtor.]—In a creditors' suit for administering the assets of B., a joint creditor of A. and B. was permitted to prove, A. having become bankrupt, and it appearing that there were no joint assets of A. and B. Cowell v. Sikes, 2 Russ. 191 ; 26 R. R. 46.

Under decree obtained by separate creditor, for satisfaction out of assets, the surviving partner a bankrupt, and the joint estate insolvent, the joint creditors not entitled pari passu with the separate creditors to the separate estate, but can only claim the surplus after satisfaction of the separate debts. Gray v. Chiswell, 9 Ves. 118 ; 7 R. R. 151.

Where an intestate and another had mortgaged a leasehold estate, of which they were tenants in common, to secure payments in respect of shares held by them in a benefit building society, and had entered into a joint covenant to make the payments, but were not partners, and had no joint estate, and the intestate's co-debtor was sworn to be in insolvent circumstances :—Held, that the covenantee was not entitled to prove as a specialty creditor under a decree for the administration of the intestate's estate. Crossley v. Dobson, 2 De G. & Sm. 486.

The estate of the survivor of two partners had been administered in bankruptcy. Joint creditors, who had received a dividend under the bankruptcy, claimed to be paid the balance due to them out of the estate of the deceased partner, pari passu with his separate creditors :—Held, that they might prove, but could not be paid until the separate creditors had been satisfied. Lodge v. Pritchard, 4 Giff. 294 ; 11 W. R. 532.

—— Release of separate Estate of deceased Debtor.]—A banking firm, consisting of A., B. and C., were indebted to the plaintiff. A. died:—Held, that the estate of A. was not released from the plaintiff's demand, by his receipt of interest from the surviving and a new partner. Harris v. Farwell, 13 Beav. 403; 15 L. J., Ch. 185.

A. was co-partner with B., C. and D. as banker, and was partner in another banking firm with B. and C. A. died, and E. was admitted a partner in the first bank alone. The two firms became bankrupt, and under an order of the court the estates of the two firms were consolidated. The plaintiff (a creditor of the first bank in A.'s life) received a dividend out of the consolidated estate:—Held, that A.'s estate was not thereby released. Ib.

Indulgence as to time of payment granted by the obligee of a bond to the surviving obligor without the consent or concurrence of the executors of the deceased obligor, was held to have discharged them. Oakeley v. Pasheller, 4 Cl. & F. 207; 10 Bli. (N.S.) 548. But see Rouse v. Bradford Banking Co., 63 L. J., Ch. 890; [1894] A. C. 586; 6 R. 349; 71 L. T. 522; 43 W. R. 78—H. L. (E.)

—— Where Account continued by Survivors of Joint Debtors—Further Debts—Liability of Estate of Deceased Debtors.]—A., B. and C. jointly incurred a debt. After the death of A. the account was continued by B. and C., and further debts incurred. Leave had been given to prove the whole debt against the estate of A., and dividends were received from all three estates to an amount exceeding in the aggregate the debt proved against A.'s estate. No special appropriation was made on the receipt of these dividends:—Held, that A.'s estate had no right to have the dividends from the estates of B. and C. wholly or ratably appropriated to the earlier debt, and that the creditors were at liberty to avail themselves of the proof against A.'s estate until either the whole debt was paid, or A.'s estate had contributed the full amount of the proof against it. Denison v. Avison, 2 Hem. & M. 647; 12 L. T. 340.

Creditor against two Estates for same Debt.]—A creditor against two estates, for the same debt, is entitled to receive dividends on the full amount from both estates, until he has been satisfied of his debt. Bonser v. Cox, 6 Beav. 84.

4. Specialty Debts.

What are—Administration Bond.]—Where no proceedings have been taken to put an administration bond in suit, a sum due from the administrator at his death to the estate of the intestate is not a specialty debt. Parker v. Young, 6 Beav. 261; 12 L. J., Ch. 335.

—— Covenant of Indemnity.]—Under covenant to retiring partner to pay debts, and indemnify against them, broken by death, leaving debts unpaid; they, being paid by covenantee, become a specialty debt against the administrator. Musson v. May, 3 Ves. & B. 194.

—— Covenant to pay Rent.]—Where a lease containing a personal covenant for the payment of rent is surrendered, the personal covenant is independent of the estate in the property, and, as to rent previously due, is not affected by the surrender, but the lessor remains a specialty creditor for the rent which accrued due before the surrender. Att.-Gen. v. Cox, 3 H. L. Cas. 240.

—— Annuity.]—A grant of an annuity to the grantor's sister though expressed to be made for natural love and affection, may be proved to have been made in consideration of her marriage, and will entitle her to rank as a specialty creditor of the grantor. Tanner v. Byne, 1 Sim. 160; 5 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 125.

Where a testator has entered into a voluntary covenant to pay an annuity, the annuitant is a specialty creditor on his real estates, although the annuity did not become in arrear till after the testator's death. Jenkins v. Briant, 6 Sim. 603; 3 L. J., Ch. 169.

When an annuity is secured by a covenant and warrant of attorney, and all the arrears have been paid, the court will not restrain the executors of the grantor from paying his simple contract debts until they have set apart a fund to answer the future payments, unless a case of past or probable misapplication of assets is made out. Read v. Blunt, 5 Sim. 567.

—— Annuity, Liability for—Tenant for Life—Remainderman.]—A testator purchased hereditaments in consideration of the payment by him of an annuity secured by his covenant, and a charge upon the hereditaments purchased. Upon the death of the testator certain persons became under his will entitled to his real and personal estate for life, with remainders over to other persons:—Held, that the annuity ought to be capitalised and paid out of the corpus of the testator's estate, and that past and future payments of the annuity ought to be adjusted on that footing as between the tenants for life and the remaindermen. Muffett, In re, Jones v. Mason, 57 L. J., Ch. 1017; 39 Ch. D. 534; 59 L. T. 499; 37 W. R. 9. And see Harrison, In re, Townson v. Harrison, 59 L. J., Ch. 169; 43 Ch. D. 55.

—— Voluntary Settlement.]—Creditors by specialty, who are mere volunteers, are not entitled to compete with creditors on simple contract for valuable consideration, but as against the devisees of the debtor have a right to stand in the place of mortgagees who have exhausted the fund provided by the testator for the payment of debts. Lomas v. Wright, 2 Myl. & K. 769; 3 L. J., Ch. 68.

Where, upon agreement for separation, the husband covenanted to pay the wife an annuity, but there were no trustees to indemnify him against her debts, and the annuity becoming in arrear after his death:—Held, that there being no obligation on the face of the deed, the covenant might be enforced against his executors, but, as a voluntary one, not against his creditors. Clough v. Lambert, 10 Sim. 174; 3 Jur. 672.

The court, in the administration of assets, enforced against the estate voluntary assignments made by the testator of annuities, mortgage debts, and policies of assurance, of which assignments no notice had been given in his lifetime to the mortgagors or grantors, such assignments containing covenants for further assurance by the testator, his executors, and administrators. Cox v. Barnard, 8 Hare, 310.

Where the covenantee in a voluntary settlement for further assurance, which the executor of the covenantor refused to perform, sought to prove under a decree in a creditor's suit for administration, the petition refused, with leave to bring such action as the petitioner might be advised. Hervey v. Audland, 14 Sim. 531; 9 Jur. 419.

In 1832 Sir R. R. transferred 2,197*l.* stock into the names of trustees, and executed a voluntary deed, declaring the trusts in favour of his daughter and her children. In 1840 he executed a second deed, which, without noticing the first deed, recited that he had transferred a sum of 2,197*l.* stock into the names of these trustees, and proceeded to declare trusts somewhat different, and gave a life interest to his wife:—Held, first, that the stock intended to be settled by the two deeds was the same; secondly, that the trusts of the first deed could not be altered by the second; and, thirdly, that the second deed, failing to operate, gave no right against the assets of the settlor. Newton v. Askew, 11 Beav. 145.

—— Voluntary Bond.]—Voluntary bond given by a person to a common woman, after he had kept her two years, not relieved against upon a bill by the executor of the obligor. Hill v. Spencer, Ambl. 641.

In the administration of assets a voluntary bond is to be preferred to interest upon debts not by law carrying interest, payable under the 46th order of August, 1841. Garrard v. Dinorben (Lord), 5 Hare, 213; 15 L. J., Ch. 439; 10 Jur. 772.

—— Assignee for Value.]—An assignee for value of an equitable interest in money payable under a voluntary bond, is entitled to rank as a specialty creditor for value against the assets of the obligor. Payne v. Mortimer, 4 De G. & J. 447; 28 L. J., Ch. 716; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 749; 7 W. R. 646.

—— Bond to Wife before Marriage.]—Bond given to wife before marriage to leave her son 100*l.*, though extinguished in law, yet good in equity, and shall bind the real assets: and decreed, the wife after the husband's death to redeem a mortgage, and to hold over, though copyhold as well as freehold included in the security. Acton v. Pearce, 2 Vern. 480.

—— Bond by Married Woman.] — In the distribution of separate property of a married woman as assets after her death, a bond not entitled to priority. Anon., 18 Ves. 258; 11 R. R. 194.

—— Marriage Settlements.]—Covenant by a father in his son's marriage settlement, by will or otherwise, in his lifetime to settle 3,000*l.* to be charged upon all real and personal property of which he should at or immediately before his death be seised or possessed, so as immediately after the decease of the survivor of himself and wife, to become well and effectually vested in the trustees of the settlement, upon trust for the son's widow and the issue of the marriage:—Held, to create a specialty debt, to be proved accordingly in the administration of his father's estate. Lyre v. Monro, 3 Kay & J. 305; 26 L. J., Ch. 757; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 584; 5 W. R. 870.

A. assigned to the trustees of his marriage settlement an equitable interest in copyholds, and covenanted for further assurance. A. afterwards got himself admitted, and sold the copyholds, and received the purchase moneys, and applied the same to his own use:—Held, that the trustees were entitled under the covenant to prove against A.'s estate as for a specialty debt. Dickson, In re, Blackburn v. Dickson, 40 L. J., Ch. 707; L. R. 12 Eq. 154; 25 L. T. 118.

By a settlement made on his marriage, the settlor covenanted with the trustees to settle estate A. upon his wife, but did not. He subsequently exchanged estate A. for estate B. and 1,050*l.* and died insolvent. In a suit by a creditor to administer his estate, the court declared that estate B. and the 1,050*l.* ought to be taken in substitution for estate A.:—Held, that the 1,050*l.* was a debt by specialty under the covenant. Powdrell v. Jones, 2 Sm. & G. 335; 23 L. J., Ch. 606; 18 Jur. 1048; 2 W. R. 361; 2 Eq. R. 624.

J. A. and R. A. being joint tenants of a freehold estate, subject to a mortgage to T. L. for 1,200*l.*, R. A., by articles made on his marriage, covenanted to settle his moiety of the estate on himself for life, remainder to his intended wife for life, remainder to the children of the marriage; and, afterwards, he bought J. A.'s moiety of the estate, and then mortgaged the entirety to J. A., without notice of the articles, for 1,000*l.* J. A. died, having by will given his residuary, real, and personal estate to R. A. absolutely, subject to a life interest therein to his wife. The executors of J. A., without notice of the articles, lent R. A. 3,200*l.*, being the residue of J. A.'s personal estate, to pay off the mortgage of T. L., and also for his other occasions, on mortgage of the entirety of the estate; and afterwards R. A. died, leaving his wife and children surviving, and the executors of J. A. took possession of the estate, and applied the rents in payment of the interest of the mortgages; and some years afterwards the widow of J. A. died:—Held, that the widow of R. A. had no right to be paid out of the assets of R. A., in priority to his other creditors, the amount of the rents of the settled moiety of the estate, received by the executors of J. A., and by them applied, after they had entered into possession, in paying the interest of the mortgages during the life of J. A.'s widow; and that she had no lien against any portion of J. A.'s assets coming to the estate of R. A. for the discharge of such arrears, but that she could only claim as a specialty creditor against R. A.'s estate. Allen v. Aldridge, 6 Jur. 183.

—— Debitum in præsenti solvendum in futuro.]—E. covenanted that he in his lifetime or his heirs, executors, or administrators, within three months after his death, would pay 3,000*l.*, and died without having paid in 1823:—Held, that the money was a debt within the meaning of the Statute against Fraudulent Devises (3 & 4 W. & M. c. 14). Coope v. Cresswell, 36 L. J., Ch. 114; L. R. 2 Ch. 112; 15 L. T. 427; 15 W. R. 242.

—— Principal and Surety.] — A. and B. executed a joint and several bond to secure a sum of money with interest to W. Subsequently to the deaths of A. and W., the executors of W. obtained from B., as principal, and C. as surety, another bond to secure a part of the money then due on the original bond with interest. No payments were ever made in respect of the first bond, but after C.'s death, the second bond was paid off out of C.'s estate, and his representatives thereupon procured the original bond to be assigned to them:—Held, on a suit to administer the estate of A., that C.'s representatives were entitled by virtue of the assignment, to rank as specialty creditors of A.'s estate in respect of the payments made by C., or his estate on the second bond to the extent of the penalty in the assigned bond. Hodgson v. Shaw, 3 Myl. & K. 183; 3 L. J., Ch. 190.

The plaintiff joined the testator as surety in a bond, which he paid after the death of the testator, taking an assignment of the bond; he is only a simple contract creditor of the testator. Jones v. Davids, 4 Russ. 277.

Where two persons execute a bond, the one as principal, the other as surety, and no other assurance is executed at the time, the surety paying the bond debt is a simple contract creditor only of the principal. Copis v. Middleton, Turn. & R. 224; 2 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 82. S. P., Simpkins v. Poulet, 2 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 81. But see Robinson v. Wilson, 2 Madd. 434.

—— Covenant in Mortgage Deeds.]—A lessee mortgaged the demised premises, and covenanted for himself and his heirs with the mortgagee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, to repay the mortgage money. Afterwards the mortgagee joined with the mortgagor in surrendering the lease for the purpose of having a new lease granted to the latter, which they agreed should be assigned to the mortgagee by way of security for his principal and interest, and that that arrangement should not prejudice any other security that the mortgagee might have for his debt. A new lease was granted to the mortgagor, but he did not make any assignment of it in pursuance of the agreement. After his death the mortgagee assigned to A. the principal and interest due to him, and his security for them under the deed of surrender:—Held, that the covenant in the mortgage of the original lease was not extinguished by the surrender, and that the assignee was a specialty creditor of the mortgagor in respect of it. Greenwood v. Taylor, 14 Sim. 505; 9 Jur. 480.

Although a debt is acknowledged under seal and a security given, yet, if there is no covenant for repayment, the acknowledgment does not necessarily create a general specialty debt. Jackson v. North Eastern Ry., 47 L. J., Ch. 303; 7 Ch. D., 573; 37 L. T. 664; 26 W. R. 513.

A. borrowed money on mortgage of a ship, and covenanted to pay the insurance, but not the principal money. A. paid the insurance, and afterwards the ship was lost on a subsequent voyage:—The mortgagee shall come in on the estate of A. for the principal money as a simple contract creditor. Thomas v. Terry, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 110.

A husband made a post-nuptial settlement of 4,000*l.* in favour of his wife and children, and then, in consideration of the 4,000*l.* expressed to have been lent to him by the trustees of the settlement, made a mortgage to them of a real estate to secure that sum, and covenanted to repay it. The husband never, in fact, paid the 4,000*l.* to the trustees:—Held, nevertheless, that they were specialty creditors of the deceased husband. Tanner v. Byne, 1 Sim. 160; 5 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 125.

—— Covenant to pay Bills.]—Where in an agreement under seal there was a covenant by testator "to pay by bills of exchange," a debt created by the instrument in which the covenant was, and the bills accepted by testator in pursuance of such covenant were dishonoured, it was held, in an administration suit, to be a specialty debt. Copland v. Martin, 9 Sim. 433.

—— Simple Contract Debt—Creditors' Deed.]—A. being indebted to B., made and executed an indenture between himself and C., to which B. was no party; and thereby, after reciting that A. stated that he was indebted to B. in a certain specified sum, A. conveyed and assigned all his real and personal property to C., upon trust to sell, and out of the proceeds to pay the debt, and to pay the surplus to A. And the deed contained a covenant for further assurance:—Held, that the debt to B. was not converted into a specialty. Stone v. Vanheythuysen, 1 Kay, 721.

Quære, whether that would have been the effect if B. had been a party to the deed, or if C. had executed it as B.'s agent. Ib.

By an indenture executed by a debtor of the one part, and certain scheduled creditors of the other part, the debtor covenanted that he would pay the respective debts with interest on a given day; and, in the event of non-payment by that time, he engaged to sell so much of his estates as should be found necessary for that purpose:—Held, that this was a mere personal undertaking, and that even if it were not, it would give the creditors no specific lien on his lands, so as to enable them to receive payment pari passu with the judgment creditors. Berrington v. Evans, 3 Y. & C. 384.

—— Partnership Articles.] — Articles of partnership under seal contained the usual covenant by the partners to be true and just to each other in all their dealings; and each bound himself his executors, &c. unto the other his executor &c. in the penal sum of 5000*l.* for the due performance of the partnership articles. On the death of one partner, he was found indebted to the partnership in 11,064*l.*:—Held, that the debt was by specialty for 5,000*l.* only, there being no covenant or obligation in the deed for payment of the general balance on the settlement of the partnership accounts, but only for 5,000*l.* the express contract for a definite sum excluding any implication for a larger sum as a specialty debt. Powdrell v. Jones, 2 Sm. & G. 305; 23 L. J., Ch. 606; 18 Jur. 1048; 2 W. R. 513; 2 Eq. R. 624.

—— Award under Seal.]—A lessor agreed in writing to demise minerals to a lessee at a certain rent. Disputes having arisen, and no rent having been paid, an action was brought for the rent, and a bill was filed to cancel the agreement. The matter was then referred to arbitration by submission under seal, and by an award under seal the arbitrator decided that the lease should be cancelled, and awarded a lump sum to the lessor as damages. The lessee then died, and a bill having been filed to administer his estate, the lessor claimed to rank as a specialty creditor in respect of the sum awarded:—Held, that the sum awarded was not a specialty debt. Talbot v. Shrewsbury (Earl), 42 L. J., Ch. 877; L. R. 16 Eq. 26; 21 W. R. 473.

—— Declaration of Trust.]—The words "covenant or agree" are not necessary in a trust deed to constitute a specialty contract. A declaration by the trustee that he will stand possessed on certain trusts, &c. is sufficient. Richardson v. Jenkins, 1 Drew. 477; 22 L. J., Ch. 874; 17 Jur. 446.

Testator bequeathed his personal estate to A., B. and C., his executors, in trust to invest two sums of 600*l.* in their names for his daughters for life, and after their deaths for their children. A. and B. alone acted; A. paid the interest of the two sums to his daughter, but did not invest the principal. B. executed a mortgage to A. and C. for securing 1,300*l.*, part of the testator's estate possessed by him, and died; his executors paid off the 1,300*l.*, and A. and C. joined in assigning the mortgage to them, and in signing a receipt for the money. A. died, having executed a deed poll reciting that the testator gave all his personal estate to A., B. and C., upon certain trusts mentioned in his will, and acknowledging that A. had received the whole 1,300*l.*, and that C. joined in the assignment and receipt for conformity only:—Held, that, under the deed poll, the cestuis que trustent for the two sums of 600*l.* were specialty creditors of A. Turner v. Wardle, 7 Sim. 80.

A deed of release is executed to the executors of a will, reciting that a certain sum has been paid to S. P. for the purposes and upon the trusts declared in the will, and witnessing that in consideration of this payment, which is thereby acknowledged by S. P., he S. P. holds this sum upon the trusts of the will:—Held, that this acknowledgment by S. P. under seal did not constitute a debt by specialty against his assets in favour of the cestui que trust under the will. Brewe v. Cox, 3 W. R. 276.

A mortgagor, by his will, created a trust for the payment of, amongst others, the mortgage debt. In a suit to foreclose:—Held, that the mortgagee was entitled to have his mortgage paid, in the first instance, out of the general personal estate of the mortgagor, and, in default of payment thereout, to have the mortgaged lands sold, and in case the fund so produced should prove deficient, that then the mortgagee was entitled to come in as a specialty creditor, and avail himself of the trust in the will of the mortgagor, and the decree was so made. Marshall v. M'Aravey, 3 Dr. & War. 232.

A creditor coming in under a decree cannot rely upon a will as creating a trust in his favour, unless it has been put sufficiently in issue for that purpose, either by the pleadings in the cause, or by the charge or discharge in the office. O'Kelly v. Bodkin, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 361.

—— Under Deed not Executed by Trustee.]—A trustee under a deed, the terms of which would amount to the creation of a contract, is not a specialty debtor if he has not executed the deed, although he has acted under it. Richardson v. Jenkins, 1 Drew. 477; 22 L. J., Ch. 874; 17 Jur. 446.

—— Foreign Specialty—Equitable Assets in England.]—When a debt is contracted by an Englishman in a foreign country the provisions of the lex loci contractus do not avail to entitle the creditor to payment of his debt out of equitable assets administered in this country in priority to other creditors. Pardo v. Bingham, L. R. 6 Eq. 485.

When, therefore, an Englishman residing in Venezuela executed an instrument to secure repayment to G. of 1,600*l.*, and G. afterwards registered the instrument in the form prescribed by the law of Venezuela, and by virtue of such registration became entitled, according to that law, to be paid his debt out of the general assets of the debtor in priority to other creditors:—Held, nevertheless, that a fund in this country constituting equitable assets of the debtor must be divided among the creditors without regard to any such priority. Ib.

—— Adoption of Debt—Heir.]—T., the heir-at-law and executor of a bond debtor, entered into possession of his real estates and admitted assets, and died before 1833, having devised his real estates to A., whom he appointed executrix. A. paid interest on the bond up to her death in 1834, and interest was afterwards paid by her executors. Upon a bill filed twenty years after the death of A., seeking payment of the bond out of the real estates of T. and A.:—Held, first, that the debt was the personal debt, but not the specialty debt of T., and the creditors were not entitled to have it paid out of his real estates. Thorne v. Kerr, 2 Kay & J. 54; 25 L. J., Ch. 57; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 322; 4 W. R. 131.

Held, secondly, that the debt was not the debt of A., unless by reason of her devastavit, the remedy for which was barred by the Statute of Limitations. Ib.

Priorities of.]—Where in a suit by an equitable mortgagee against the executor and devisee, the general assets proved insufficient to pay the debts and costs, and the parties beneficially interested under the will disclaimed:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged premises, and the executors to retain their own debts in full out of the general assets, and the residue to be applied, first, in satisfaction of the costs of the executor; secondly, of the plaintiff and the purchaser; thirdly, of the devisee, the defendant beneficially entitled under the devise; and lastly, of the debts remaining due of the plaintiff and the other creditors. Tipping v. Power, 1 Hare, 405; 11 L. J., Ch. 257; 6 Jur. 434.

Where A. with others, committee of a joint stock company, mortgaged premises of the company, and covenanted personally for payment of the money, and afterwards executed a bond for another debt; on the death of A., who held shares in trust for the company, which were decreed to be sold and applied in payment of the debts for which A. was liable:—Held, that his representatives were entitled to have the proceeds applied in payment of the bond debt in priority of the mortgage. Lawrence v. Kempson, 7 Beav. 574.

A. owes money by real judgments and bonds, and dies intestate; his administrator pays the judgments and some of the bonds, and pays more than the personal estate amounts to. What the administrator paid on the judgments must be allowed him, but as to what he paid on the bonds he must come in pro ratâ with the other bond creditors. Robinson v. Tonge, 3 P. W. 400.

Where a bill prays for the payment of debts in a due course of administration, a bond creditor cannot claim payment pari passu with a judgment creditor on the ground that the bill is filed on behalf of all the specialty creditors, even though the assets may have been partially distributed pari passu in the belief that there would be no deficiency. Berrington v. Evans, 3 Y. & C. 384.

A creditor by bond, in which the heirs are named, takes priority over a specialty creditor under a security in which the heirs are not expressly named. Jenkins v. Robertson, 1 Drew. 477; 22 L. J., Ch. 874; 17 Jur. 446; 1 Eq. Rep. 123; 1 W. R. 298.

An agreement, not under seal, was entered into to refer a dispute as to an agreement for a lease to arbitration, and the submission to arbitration was made a rule of court: the award, which was under seal, declared the agreement for a lease to be valid, but ordered it to be cancelled, and awarded a sum of money:—Held, that such sum of money was in the nature of damages, and not of arrears of rent, and had no priority over simple contract debts. Talbot v. Shrewsbury (Earl), 42 L. J., Ch. 877; L. R. 16 Eq. 26; 21 W. R. 473.

—— Doweress, Claims by.]—By the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, freeholds and copyholds of a deceased are assets for the payment of his debts; and by the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 105, s. 5, all debts to which the land of a deceased are subject, are "valid and effectual as against the right of his widow to dower":—Held, nevertheless, that the widow's right to dower or freebench has still priority over mere creditors of a deceased. Spyer v. Hyatt, 20 Beav. 621; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 315; 3 W. R. 294.

A widow, dowable out of her husband's lands, having elected to take an annuity given by the will in lieu of her dower, the testator's estate being insufficient to pay the legacies in full:—Held, entitled to priority over the other legatees. Stahlschmidt v. Lett, 1 Sm. & G. 421.

Lien.]—A. borrowed 300*l.*, and by his note of hand promised to pay the same on demand, and to give a security by mortgage of lands for the same when required. A. died in the month following. At the time of giving this note, and at the time of his death, he had a small real estate; the debt is not a charge on the land. Williams v. Lucas, 2 Cox, 160.

What circumstances will give the creditor of a testator a specific lien on assets, standing as part of the testator's estate at his death. Tyler v. Manson, 5 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 34.

—— Waiver.]—A., and B. a solicitor, were executors. B. deposited some of his deeds in the trust box, to secure some money due to the testator's estate. The box remained in B.'s possession, and on his death the deeds were found to have been abstracted from it, and they could not be identified. The legal personal representative of B. then deposited certain specific deeds, selected by A., as a security for the debt:—Held, assuming that A. had, in consequence of B.'s wrongful act, obtained a general lien on all B.'s deeds for the money, still that he had waived it by taking the particular security from the legal personal representative. Mason v. Morley, 34 Beav. 471.

Held, also, that the creditors of B. were bound by the arrangement between his legal personal representative and A. Ib.

5. Debts and Liabilities in respect of Leaseholds.

Rent.]—A declaration for use and occupation against executors, charging them in respect of premises held by them as executors under a demise to their testator, but not alleging any occupation by them, is good, under 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, as sufficiently charging them de bonis testatoris. Atkins v. Humphrey, 2 C. B. 654; 3 D. & L. 612; 15 L. J., C. P. 120.

An executor, in whom a term of years has vested, the value of which is less than the rent reserved by the lease, is liable, notwithstanding, as assignee, for rent to the extent for which he might have let the premises. Hopwood v. Whaley, 6 C. B. 744; 6 D. & L. 342; 18 L. J., C. P. 43; 12 Jur. 1088.

Where the residue of a term of years becomes vested in executors, and the yearly value is less than the reserved rent, the executors are still liable, as assignees, for so much of the rent as the premises are worth. Rubery v. Stevens, 4 B. & Ad. 241; 1 N. & M. 183; 2 L. J., K. B. 46.

The plaintiff having declared in an action on a covenant for rent at 26*l.* a year, the defendants pleaded that they were only chargeable as executors; that the term came to them as such; that the premises were of less yearly value than the rent of 26*l.*, viz., of no value, and that they had fully administered. Replication, that the premises were of the yearly value of 26*l.* At the trial, the yearly value was found by the jury to be 20*l.*:—Held, that the replication was, in substance, that the premises were of some value; that the issue was merely informal, and cured by verdict, and that the plaintiff might recover the arrears of rent at the rate fixed by the jury. Ib.

A party having died possessed of a residue of a term of eight years, her executors let the premises to an under-tenant, to hold from year to year, subject to the determination of their own interest; who, at the expiration of the term, refused to give up possession. His goods were afterwards distrained on by the executors, who, having got the under-tenant out of possession, tendered the same to the lessor, who refused it, claiming one quarter's rent:—Held, that the lessor was entitled to recover against the executors for the use and occupation of the premises from the expiration of the term until the day when possession was offered to him. Ibbs v. Richardson, 1 P. & D. 618; 9 A. & E. 849; 8 L. J., Q. B. 126; 3 Jur. 102.

An executor who takes possession of a leasehold of his testator is liable personally as assign of the lease for subsequent rent, up to the letting value of the holding. Bowes, In re, Strathmore (Earl) v. Vane, 57 L. J., Ch. 455; 37 Ch. D. 128; 58 L. T. 309; 36 W. R. 393.

When executors received a premium upon the assignment of a lease, and paid the amount into their testator's estate:—Held, that they were not personally liable for rent accrued due after the assignment, in respect of the premium so paid in. Goodland v. Ewing, 1 Cab. & E. 43.

—— Executor de son tort.]—An executor de son tort in possession of lands, held by the deceased owner for an unexpired term of years, is suable by the landlord for rent. Fielding v. Cronin, 16 L. R., Ir. 379—C. A.

—— No Entry into Possession by Executors.]—The executor of a lessee cannot be made liable as assignee of a term without an entry and an actual taking possession by him of the demised premises; but if he enter and take possession he may be made liable as assignee, though, by proper pleading, he may limit such liability for rent to the yearly value which the premises might have yielded. But, semble, he cannot, after entering, limit his liability under the testator's covenant to repair. Rendall v. Andreae, 61 L. J., Q. B. 630.

—— Defence—That Premises produced "no Profits."]—To an action for rent against an assignee of a term, he pleaded that he was administrator; that the premises were of less value, and had yielded less profit than the arrears of rent; that he had paid over to the plaintiff all the profits received from them, and had offered to surrender before any rent became due, and had fully administered:—Held, that the averment in the plea, as to the value of the premises, was not supported by showing that the intestate had underlet them, and that the defendant had been unable to get the rent from the under-tenant, or by proof that they were out of repair, as the lease to the intestate contained a covenant to repair, and it was therefore the defendant's duty to repair them. Hornidge v. Wilson, 3 P. & D. 641; 11 A. & E. 645; 9 L. J., Q. B. 72.

Although, in respect of rent, the personal liability of an executor of a lessee for years does not exceed the value of the demised premises, this qualification does not extend to a covenant for repairs. Sleap v. Newman, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 116; 6 L. T. 386.

A plea by an executor, that the premises yielded no profit beyond what he had paid over to the lessor; that the premises came to him only as executor; and that he offered to surrender them before the breaches occurred, is a bad plea. Ib.

When an executor is sued for use and occupation in his own right, he must show that his occupation is as executor, and that he entered in that character; that he has no assets; and that the value of the land is not equal to the rent. Where the land yields some profit, but less than the rent, he may tender the amount of profit, and plead a tender, or he may pay it into court. Patten v. Reid, 6 L. T. 281.

—— Other Pleas.]—To a declaration against the defendant, as assignee of a lease of premises, alleging the nonpayment of rent, he pleaded: first, that administration de bonis non of the lessee of the premises was granted to A., whom he afterwards married, and that neither he nor his wife ever entered into or took possession of the premises, nor did they vest in the defendant otherwise than as in, and by, the plea appears. Secondly (after repeating the grant of administration, and that the defendant married the administratrix), that the plaintiff sued the defendant and his wife as administratrix for the recovery of the same rent, and they pleaded plene administravit præter; that the plaintiff recovered judgment against them for the amount claimed, part to be levied de bonis testatoris, and the residue to be levied of assets quando acciderint. Thirdly (after repeating the matters alleged in the preceding plea), plene administraverunt præter goods not sufficient to satisfy the judgment debt:—Held, that the plea afforded a good answer as an argumentative traverse that the defendant was assignee. Kearsley v. Oxley, 2 H. & C. 896.

The second plea was also good as a plea in the nature of a judgment recovered—Per Pollock, C.B., Channell, B., and Pigott, B. Martin, B., dubitante.

The third plea would have been bad if it had not amounted to an argumentative traverse that the defendant was assignee—Per Martin, B., and Channell, B. Ib.

An account of rent decreed, under the circumstances, against the personal representatives of a lessee who had assigned his interest. Trat v. Burn, Ll. & G. t. Sugd. 78.

Equity will oblige an executor to pay arrears of rent, though the person of the testator was not liable. Eton College v. Beauchamp, 1 Ch. Ca. 121.

A testator to whom the interest in a lease was assigned entered into an express covenant with his assignors, the commissioners of public works, to pay the rent reserved by the lease to the commissioners, and further to indemnify them from the payment thereof:—Held, that the commissioners had a right, under the covenant, to require the testator's executor to pay the rent, although they might never be sued; and that the commissioners were not bound, if sued, to set up technical objections, which might or might not be sustainable, to defeat a fair claim, in order to exonerate the testator's executors from the covenant. Trevor v. Thomas, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 222.

Breaches of Covenant.]—Held, that under a devise for payment of debts, lands were liable, in default of the personal estate, to make good damages recovered against the executor for breaches of covenants in a lease, committed both before and after the death of the testator; but that, not having been a party to the action, the devisee was entitled to an inquiry as to the amount of costs, damages and expenses incurred by the executor in the action. Wilson v. Leonard, 3 Beav. 373.

Assets of a testator, consisting of personalty which could be identified, were settled bonâ fide upon the marriage of his daughter and residuary legatee:—Held, that they thereupon ceased to be liable to subsequent accruing claims in respect of breaches of covenants which had been entered into by the testator, but of which the parties to the settlement had no notice when they executed it. Dilkes v. Broadmead, 2 De G. F. & J. 566; 30 L. J., Ch. 268; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 56; 3 L. T. 605; 9 W. R. 238.

An under-lessee of a dwelling-house bequeathed all his residuary personal estate in trust for his daughter on her marriage absolutely. By a settlement prior to marriage the whole fund was settled, part of it for the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, and the rest for the separate use of the wife for life, with remainder in case she should survive her husband for herself absolutely. Some years after the settlement a breach of the covenants in the lease was committed, and a claim in respect of it was made by the representative of the original lessor against the under-lessor. He filed a bill for the purpose of having the damages in respect of the breach made good by the husband, or by the fund settled to the separate use of the wife:—Held, that the consideration of marriage protected the whole fund from the claim. Ib.

Dilapidations.]—A testator directed his executors to get in and convert all his real and personal estate, invest the same from time to time, and pay and divide the interest and dividends to two tenants for life, with benefit for life, with benefit of survivorship. At the death of survivor to convert the whole, and to pay and divide the same amongst his nephews and nieces, naming them. Part of his personal estate consisted of leaseholds for lives, renewable on the death of the last nominee, under different terms of renewal, some arbitrary, some not. Some of the premises contained in the leases had come under the control of the charity commissioners, and alterations as to the terms of renewal had been made by other lessors. Considerable repairs had become necessary to certain of the houses, and dilapidations had taken place in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that the executors were bound to repair and make good the dilapidations, the amounts to be paid out of general estate. Alden v. Kennerly, 7 L. T. 312.

A husband made his will in 1851, and thereby gave renewable leaseholds to his wife for life and then over, and gave his personal estate to trustees upon trust to repair and insure and renew his leaseholds at the accustomed times, and then to pay the annual proceeds to his wife for life, and after her death to pay the corpus to charities. The testator died in 1873. The time for renewing the leaseholds had expired at the time of his death, and renewal had become impossible:—Held, that dilapidations on the leaseholds at the death of the testator must be provided for out of the corpus of the personal estate. Pinfold v. Shillingford, 46 L. J., Ch. 491; 25 W. R. 425.

Fines and Expenses on Renewal.]—Where testator, tenant for life, ought to have renewed lease, and it was renewed after testator's death, by remainderman, reference directed to ascertain portion to be paid by executors. Colegrave v. Manby, 2 Russ. 238. Affirming S. C., 6 Madd. 72; 22 R. R. 245.

The lessee for years of tenements, part of a manor held under a lease from tenants of the manor, who were trustees of a charity, by which the lessee had covenanted to pay the fines and expenses which should be incurred from time to time during the term, in filling up the number of trustees when reduced to five, with a proviso for re-entry by the lessors in case the fines should not be paid by the lessee. The lessee devised the leasehold estate and other leasehold property, and shares, stocks, funds and securities, and all other her personal estate, to trustees for her two nieces, for their lives, with remainder to their respective children, and remainders over. The number of trustees became reduced to five shortly before the death of the lessee, and became again reduced to five some years afterwards. Litigation with the lord of the manor commenced in the life of the lessee, and was continued after her decease as to the amount of the fines; the dispute was ultimately compromised by the payment of a sum by the devisee of the leasehold estate, in respect of each renewal and of certain costs:—Held, that the fine payable in respect of the admission of the trustees, which became necessary in the life of the testatrix to fill up the number, and the costs of the litigation in respect of such fine, were payable out of the general personal estate of the testatrix, exclusive of the leaseholds; and that the fines which became payable for filling up the number of trustees when it became necessary to do so, after the death of the testatrix, were payable by the devisees of the particular leasehold estate, and not by the general personal estate. Fitzwilliams v. Kelly, 10 Hare, 266; 22 L. J., Ch. 1016; 17 Jur. 249.

When a testator, possessed of leaseholds which he was bound by a covenant in the lease to renew, gave his estate to one for life, and afterwards upon trust to sell and pay certain legacies, and pay the residue to a charity:—Held, that the costs of a renewal obtained during the life tenancy were payable out of the testator's general assets, and not out of the impure personalty alone. Trail v. Jackson, 46 L. J., Ch. 684; 25 W. R. 802.

Tenant for Life and Remainderman.]—A testator possessed of several leaseholds sold one, taking a bond of indemnity from the purchasers; he then, by his will, gave his residuary estate to a tenant for life and remainderman. The purchasers became bankrupt, and the executors of the testator, having become liable on the covenants in the lease, took a reassignment from the purchasers:—Held, that the rent and liabilities under the lease must be paid out of the corpus, and not out of the income of the testator's estate. Allen v. Embleton, 4 Drew. 226; 27 L. J., Ch. 297; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 79; 6 W. R. 272.

A. having a leasehold estate, on which he had covenanted to erect buildings within a certain time, bequeathed it and also his personal estate, subject, as to the latter, to the payment of his debts, to trustees, for B. for life, with several limitations over. A. died before the time expired, leaving the covenant unperformed in part:—Held, that his general personal estate was liable to the performance of the covenant. Marshall v. Holloway, 5 Sim. 196.

As between Executors and Legatees.]—There being a gift of leasehold property, with growing crops, &c., charged with 1,000*l.* to C. P. J., the executor pays the apportioned rent due at the testator's death out of the estate, and that sum is disallowed by the chief clerk in chambers. Upon application to vary the chief clerk's certificate:—Held, that the payment must be allowed, but the question as between the executor and legatees not decided. Tomson v. Judge, 5 W. R. 396.

By a deed of even date with a lease, the lessor covenanted that the lessee should retain part of each year's rent until satisfaction of a debt due from the lessor to the lessee:—Held, that though the covenant might be pleaded at law as a release pro tanto of the rent, this was only to avoid circuity of action, and the covenant was not for all purposes a release. Ledger v. Stanton, 2 John. & H. 687; 4 L. T. 795; 9 W. R. 848.

Therefore, the lessee having specially bequeathed the premises subject to the rent:—Held, as between the executors and the specific legatees, that specific legatees took subject to the whole rent, and that the benefit of the covenant for reduction of rent went to the executors. Ib.

A testator specially bequeathed certain personal estate upon trusts for H. and her children after payment thereout of a legacy and of his debts and funeral expenses, and bequeathed his residuary estate to the plaintiff, whom he appointed his executor. Part of the residuary estate consisted of a leasehold house, held for a term at a rack rent, and considerably out of repair. This leasehold being worthless, the plaintiff, five months after the testator's death, surrendered it to the landlord, who would only accept a surrender on payment of rent for two and a half quarters from the testator's death and a sum for dilapidations. The residuary estate as a whole was valuable:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to have the sums which he had paid to the landlord for dilapidations and for rent subsequent to the testator's death paid out of the specially-bequeathed property as being debts of the testator. Hawkins v. Hawkins, 13 Ch. D. 470; 42 L. T. 306; 28 W. R. 526.

A leasehold farm, subject to a non-alienation clause, was assigned to the testator in consideration of paying arrears of rent due; the landlord refused to accept the testator as tenant, and he never was in possession. He died leaving the arrears due, and purported to devise the farm to the plaintiff, who was in possession, it did not appear how:—Held, that the devisee was not entitled to claim the arrears against the testator's assets, the sale to the testator being a nullity, and the arrears therefore never his debt; but semble if the landlord had accepted him, the devisee would have been entitled. Morres v. Morres, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 325.

Rent—Priority of in Administration.]—Rent in arrear for land demised, whether by deed or parol, is of equal degree with specialty debts. Thompson v. Thompson, 9 Price, 464.

An administrator may retain the current half year's rent which accrued due since the death of the intestate, but which commenced before he died, for premises occupied by him as tenant at will. Ib.

In the administration of assets in a court of equity, a debt for arrears of rent has priority over simple contract debts; but an executor or administrator will not be personally responsible for payment of simple contract debts in priority to a debt of arrears of rent, of which he has no notice. Clough v. French, 2 Coll. C. C. 277; 15 L. J., Ch. 24; 9 Jur. 1029.

By agreement in writing, A. B. agreed to grant, and C. D. agreed to accept, a lease of lands in Jamaica for twenty-one years at a certain rent; C. D. entered into possession, and died without having paid any rent:—Held, that A. B. was not entitled to rank as a specialty creditor against the estate of C. D. in respect of the rent due. Vincent v. Godson, 4 De G. M. & G. 546; 24 L. J., Ch. 121; 2 W. R. 408. Affirming 17 Jur. 295.

Held, also, that the agreement and entry under it did not, in the absence of any admission of rent being due, create the relation of landlord and tenant between the parties, and that the creation of that relation was necessary in order to enable A. B. to sustain his claim, even if the lands had been in England. Ib.

Held, also, that the right to treat rent as a specialty debt is incident to privity of debt, and not to privity of contract, and would not, therefore, apply to the case of lands out of England. Ib.

A lessor agreed in writing to demise minerals to a lessee at a certain rent. Disputes having arisen, and no rent having been paid, an action was brought for the rent, and a bill was filed to cancel the agreement. The matter was then referred to arbitration by submission under seal, and by an award under seal the arbitrator decided that the lease should be cancelled, and awarded a lump sum to the lessor as damages. The lessee then died, and a bill having been filed to administer his estate, the lessor claimed to rank as a specialty creditor in respect of the sum awarded:—Held, that the sum awarded was not a specialty debt. Talbot v. Shrewsbury (Earl), 42 L. J., Ch. 877; L. R. 16 Eq. 26; 21 W. R. 473.

By an agreement under seal, E. covenanted with B., his executors and administrators, that he would at any time thereafter, at the request of B., his executors, administrators or assigns, execute a demise of certain freeholds for the term of twenty-one years, at the yearly rent of 180*l.*, which lease should contain a covenant to keep the premises in good and substantial repair, and all other usual covenants; and B. for himself, his executors or administrators, covenanted with E., whenever thereto requested by E., to accept such lease, and execute a counterpart. Under this agreement B. entered and paid rent until his death (which took place before the 1st January, 1870), and after his death his widow and legal personal representative entered and paid rent. No lease was ever executed, and no such request as above mentioned was ever made by either party. Since his death rent had accrued due, and a sum was required for repairs:—Held, that the liability under the deed was from the first, and still was, a specialty in the same manner as if a lease had been executed in pursuance of the deed on the day of the date thereof; hence that a claim by E. for the sums due for arrears of rent and dilapidations under the covenants agreed to be entered into by B. were debts by specialty against the estate. Kidd v. Boone, 40 L. J., Ch. 531; L. R. 12 Eq. 89; 24 L. T. 356.

A landlord who does not distrain the goods of his deceased tenant, of whose estate a receiver has been appointed, is not entitled to have his rent paid out of the proceeds of the sale of such goods in priority to other creditors. Sutton's Estate, In re, Sutton v. Rees, 1 N. R. 464.

Rent is a specialty debt within 32 & 33 Vict. c. 46 (Hinde Palmer's Act), and therefore a landlord has no preferential claim against the estate of a deceased tenant for rent in arrear at the death of the tenant against the simple contract creditors. Hastings, In re, Shirreff v. Hastings, 47 L. J., Ch. 137; 6 Ch. D. 610; 25 W. R. 842.

6. Calls on Shares.

Where a Debt of Testator's Estate.]—Testator subscribed for twenty shares of 100*l.* each in a projected railroad, and paid 5*l.* on each share, and covenanted to pay the remainder when called on. He bequeathed his personal estate to his widow, and devised certain of his real estates to a trustee, in trust to sell and pay all debts due from him on mortgage, or for the purchase of estates which he had contracted for, and all other just debts that should be due from him at his death. When he died, the shares were at a premium, and no further instalment on them had been called for. Two years afterwards the act for making the railroad passed:—Held, that the testator's personal estate being exonerated from his debts, his widow was entitled to have the unpaid instalments paid out of the real estates. Blount v. Hipkins, 7 Sim. 51; 4 L. J., Ch. 13.

A testator gave certain real estate and some shares in a banking company to his executors in trust for an infant, for life, and afterwards for his children, but soon after the testator's death the bank became insolvent, and its affairs were wound up, and in a suit by the official manager, a large debt was established as due from the testator's estate, in respect of the shares. The executors had assented to the bequest of the shares to the infant, and received dividends:—

Held, that the infant on coming of age, having repudiated the bequest of the shares, the debt in respect of them was not to be thrown on the real estate devised to the infant, but to be borne by the residuary estate. Moffett v. Bates, 3 Sm. & Giff. 468; 26 L. J., Ch. 465; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 200; 5 W. R. 338.

Calls made upon shares in an incorporated company after the death of the owner, are payable out of his general personal estate, and not by the legatee for life under a gift of all the testator's shares in the company. Clive v. Clive, 1 Kay, 600; 23 L. J., Ch. 981. S. P., Jacques v. Chambers, 4 Railw. Cas. 499, varying S. C., Ib. 205; 2 Coll. C. C. 435; 16 L. J., Ch. 243; 11 Jur. 295. But see Addams v. Ferick, 26 Beav. 384; 28 L. J., Ch. 594; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 588. Day v. Day, 1 Dr. & Sm. 261; 29 L. J., Ch. 466; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 365; 2 L. T. 167; 8 W. R. 288.

—— Specific Bequest of Shares by Testator.]—Where a testator makes a specific bequest of shares in an unfinished railway company, the specific legatee has to bear the calls which are made after the testator's death. Day v. Day, 1 Dr. & Sm. 261; 29 L. J., Ch. 466; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 365; 2 L. T. 167; 8 W. R. 288.

A testator gave to his son "any shares in railways, mines, and other undertakings that might belong to him at his decease":—Held, that all calls upon railway shares becoming due subsequently to the death of the testator were payable by the legatee; but such payments as might be necessary to constitute the testator a complete shareholder, and such calls as should be due at the time of his decease, would be payments out of his general assets. Ib.

Specific legatees of shares in a banking company, held liable to pay the calls made subsequent to the testator's death. Armstrong v. Burnet, 20 Beav. 424; 24 L. J., Ch. 473; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 765; 3 W. R. 433.

Distinction between the cases in which specific legatees of shares take cum onere, and those in which the general personal estate of the testator is liable to pay the future calls for the benefit of the legatees. Ib.

Where the interest of a testator in the subject-matter which he professes to bequeath is complete, or where it is so treated and considered by him and by all persons connected with it, the future calls fall on the legatees and not on the general personal estate. But where further payments are required to make perfect the interest which the testator professes specifically to bequeath, then the general personal estate is applicable for that purpose. Ib.

A banking company was established in 1836. By the deed of settlement 5*l.* per share was payable immediately, and the directors were empowered, at any time, to make a further call of 5*l.*, and on nonpayment, the shares might be forfeited. The shares were transferable, and, on transfer, the former proprietor was released. Legatees and executors might sell, but were not to be members until a transfer to them, and until then, were not entitled to the current dividends. The shareholders thereby covenanted to observe the clauses of the deed. A shareholder died in 1843, having specifically bequeathed his shares to infants. The executors in 1845 transferred the shares into their own names, and they assented to the legacies. Afterwards, in 1848, the further call of 5*l.* per share was made:—Held, that it was payable by the legatees, and not out of the testator's residuary estate. Ib.

Where shares not fully paid up are specifically bequeathed, the question whether the specific legatee or the residuary estate is liable to the future instalments, depends on whether the calls are actually made before the death of the testator. Addams v. Ferick, 26 Beav. 384; 28 L. J., Ch. 594; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 588.

A. bequeathed shares in a banking company. Before her death three calls were authorised at stated intervals, but she died before two of these periods:—Held, under the circumstances, and from the practice of the company, that the calls were not to be considered as really made until a call letter had been sent to the shareholders; and that as to those sent after the testatrix's death, the specific legatee, and not the residuary estate, must bear the calls. Ib.

Executors held entitled to no indemnity against liability in respect of shares in a banking company specifically bequeathed, the order of the court, in an administration suit, being of itself a perfect indemnity to them. Ib.

A testator bequeathed shares in companies, in which he was an original shareholder, to his son, when he completed his majority:—Held, that the legatee, on attaining twenty-one, was entitled to the dividends from the testator's death, and to have the shares fully paid up out of the residuary estate. Wright v. Warren, 4 De G. & Sm. 367.

When there is a gift of a general residue to one for life, and then over, part of the property consisting of shares not fully paid up, as a general rule, legatees of such shares specifically bequeathed will be liable to pay calls made after the testator's death. But the rule does not apply where there is an intention to be collected from the form of the will that no severance of the property should take place during the life of the tenant for life. Box, In re, 1 Hem. & M. 552; 33 L. J., Ch. 42; 9 L. T. 372; 12 W. R. 67.

—— Liability of Testator's Estate for Future Calls.]—Subject to s. 75 of the Companies Act, 1862, the liability of a shareholder for future call is not a debt. Kershaw, In re, Whittaker v. Kershaw, 60 L. J., Ch. 9; 45 Ch. D. 320; 63 L. T. 203; 39 W. R. 23—C. A.

Notice of a remote contingent liability on the part of a testator is not sufficient to prevent his executor from distributing his residuary estate; and if the executor distributes with such notice, and the liability afterwards ripens into a debt, he will be entitled to call on the residuary legatees to refund. Jervis v. Wolferstan, 43 L. J., Ch. 809; L. R. 18 Eq. 18; 30 L. T. 452.

The executors of a testator had during his lifetime, and at his request, become trustees of a deed, whereby certain shares in an unlimited company were settled on a tenant for life, with remainders over. While the company was a going concern, and believed to be perfectly solvent, they distributed the residuary estate; afterwards the company was ordered to be wound up. Large calls were made in respect of the shares, and the remaindermen all disclaimed:—Held, that the trustees and executors were entitled to be indemnified out of the testator's estate, and to call on the residuary legatees to refund. Ib.

—— Out of what Fund Payable.]—A testator by will, gave (after the death of his wife) any shares in railways, mines, or other undertakings that might belong to him at his death, to his second son; and in case of his death without issue, the same to revert to his two other children. The testator was possessed of railway shares, upon which after his death, calls were made. The calls were paid by his widow, as executrix, and the company had power to make further calls. The residue was not sufficient to meet those calls. The court directed a sale of the shares by the executrix, who was to retain the sums already paid by her for calls, and to invest the residue in consols, the dividends of which were to be paid to her for life, without prejudice to the question out of what fund the calls already paid were ultimately to be borne. Day v. Day, 28 L. J., Ch. 947.

A testator bequeathed residuary personalty to trustees, with permission to continue existing investments, upon trust to convert and invest in the stock or shares of any company in Great Britain, and pay the income to a tenant for life, with remainder over. He declared that "the calls, if any, which at or after my decease may be or become due in respect of any shares for the time being constituting part of my residuary personal estate, shall be paid by" the trustees out of income and not out of capital. The testator at his death held waterworks and railway shares, upon which some instalments were due, but not yet payable. After his death the trustees sold some shares on which a call was actually payable, and allowed the brokers to retain the amount of the call out of the sale moneys, for the benefit of the purchaser. After the testator's death the trustees accepted allotments of valuable shares offered to them in respect of their proprietorship in the company:—Held, that the instalments due on shares accepted by the testator in his lifetime, when payable, and the amount of the call moneys deducted on the occasion of the sale, were calls within the meaning of the will, and hence payable out of income. Beran v. Waterhouse, 46 L. J., Ch. 331; 3 Ch. D. 752.

Held, that the shares accepted by the trustees did not constitute part of the testator's residuary personal estate at his death, and hence that the calls on such shares were payable out of capital. Ib.

—— Shares taken by Executors.]—Executors applied for shares in a company in exchange for shares held by their testator in another company, the business of which had been taken over by the company to which the application was made. An offer of an exchange of shares had been made o the testator in his lifetime, but he had never eplied to it. The executors had originally been entered on the register individually as "executors of W. D., deceased," in respect of the shares; but at their request their names were removed from the register, and their testator's entered in their place as holders of the shares:—Held, that this was a new contract entered into by the executors, upon which the testator's estate was not liable. The testator's name was a mere dummy name, and the executors were personally liable in respect of the shares. Cheshire Banking Co., In re, Duff's Exors.' Case, 32 Ch. D. 301; 54 L. T. 558—C. A.

After a Winding-up.]—On the application of executors, a sum of money was appropriated to answer the liability of the testator's estate in respect of shares in a joint stock company which was being wound up; the official manager not having gone in before the master, but appearing on the motion. Hawkins, In re, 1 W. R. 446.

—— Nature of Debt.] — A call under the Winding-up Acts, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45, and 12 & 13 Vict. c. 108, though the shareholder has executed the deed, is not a specialty debt. Royal Bank of Australia, In re, 3 Sm. & G. 272; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 11; 4 W. R. 186. S. C., nom. Robinson's Executors, Ex parte, affirmed on appeal, 6 De G. M. & G. 572; 26 L. J., Ch. 95; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1173; 5 W. R. 126. See now 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89, s. 75.

The call made by the master in winding-up is a liability quite independent of any stipulation contained in the deed of settlement, and depends upon the general rules of the law of partnerships. Ib.

The main purpose of the Winding-up Acts is not to secure the interests of creditors, but to effectually adjudicate and settle the legal and equitable rights of the partners inter se; and those rights must depend upon the contracts into which the parties have entered; and the Winding-up Acts have not altered the force and effect of those contracts, but only the mode of enforcing them (by calls). Ib.

R. became a shareholder in a banking company, and executed the deed of settlement for 120 shares. In winding up the affairs of the company, the master decided that the official manager's claim in respect of a call of 100*l.* per share on the 120 shares held by R. should be considered as a specialty debt, and as overriding the set-off claimed by the executors of R. in respect of simple contract creditors. On motion to reverse or vary this decision:—Held, that the call created an original liability by force of the Winding-up Acts, and that the right of the official manager to receive, and the duty of the contributory to pay, and the remedy for enforcing that duty, arose only under the statute; and therefore the call made upon R. was not a specialty debt against his assets; and the master's decision was reversed. Ib.

Where a testator held shares in a company, the calls on which shares formed specialty debts:—Held, that, as against simple contract creditors, no part of the estate could be reserved to provide for future calls. Wentworth v. Chevell, 26 L. J., Ch. 760; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 805; 5 W. R. 743.

Payment of simple contract debts by executors allowed, where the testator had been a shareholder in a banking company by deed under seal, and calls had been afterwards made in respect of the shares held by him, to meet which calls there were no assets. Henderson v. Gilchrist, 22 L. J., Ch. 970; 17 Jur. 570; 1 W. R. 426.

—— Companies Act, 1862, s. 75.]—The liability of a contributory to pay calls made since the winding-up is a debt by specialty which binds the heirs of the contributory under the Companies Act, 1862, s. 75. Buck v. Robson, 39 L. J., Ch. 821; L. R. 10 Eq. 629; 23 L. T. 391.

When an administratrix had distributed the whole of the intestate's assets without making provision for calls on shares after being placed on the list of contributories in a winding-up:—Held, that there ought to be a decree for payment, and in default for administration. Price v. Mayo, 43 L. J., Ch. 402; 22 W. R. 401.

Under Schemes of Arrangement.]—Sums payable in respect of bank shares at the times mentioned in various schemes for the reconstruction of those banks are debts of the deceased, which his executors are entitled to deduct from the sum total of the assets in order to ascertain the balance liable to probate duty. Master in Equity v. Pearson, 66 L. J., P. C. 25; [1897] A. C. 214; 75 L. T. 526—P. C.

Executor, how far Bound as a Shareholder.]—A declaration by the public officer of a joint stock company against the executrix of a shareholder for calls, stated, that by the deed of settlement it was provided that the shareholders, while holding shares, should be partners in the company; and that, in addition to 5*l.* required to be paid by each shareholder before the execution of the deed, the directors should have power to call for the further payment by each shareholder, or his executors, of 45*l.* on every share held by him. It then averred, that after the testator's death, and whilst the defendant was a shareholder as such executrix, the directors made a call. Breach, nonpayment by the defendant as executrix. Pleas, non est factum, and a denial that the call was made whilst the defendant was a shareholder as executrix:—Held, first, that the covenant by the shareholders to pay calls bound their executors, in case a call was made on them, although the covenant did not contain the words "or their executors," and consequently there was no variance in the statement of the contract. Wills v. Murray, 4 Ex. 843; 19 L. J., Ex. 209.

Held, secondly, that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed on the other issue, inasmuch as the defendant was in one sense a shareholder as executrix, notwithstanding the deed provided that no executor should become a shareholder without the consent of the directors, and until he had done certain specified acts, which requisites were not in this case complied with. Ib.

The deed of settlement of a joint-stock banking company defined the term "shareholder and member" as meaning the owner of a share or interest in the capital and joint stock of the company. It provided that no benefit of survivorship should arise among the shareholders, but that the shares should be transmissible to personal representatives. But there were also provisions that no executor as such should be a member of the company, but might elect to sell his testator's shares or constitute himself a member in the manner therein mentioned, and that the directors might forfeit the shares if the executor did not constitute himself a member. The deed provided for the payment of calls by the shareholders. A transferee of shares, who by his purchase-deed covenanted to perform the stipulations of the deed of settlement, died, and his executor took no step to become a member:—Held, that the company was entitled to prove in a suit to administer his estate as a creditor in respect of a call made after the testator's death. Heward v. Wheatley, 3 De G. M. & G. 628; 22 L. J., Ch. 435; 17 Jur. 403; 1 W. R. 216.

The deed of settlement of a joint-stock banking company provided that the executor of a deceased shareholder should not be a member of the company in respect of such shares, but should be at liberty to sell the shares, or at his option to become a member on complying with certain provisions, as to giving notice of his desire to become a member, and specifying the shares in respect of which he claimed to be a member, and if he did not elect to become a member, he was not to be entitled to any dividend accruing due after the testator's death:—Held, that the executor of a deceased shareholder, who had not complied with the provisions, did not, by receiving a single dividend in respect of the testator's share, accrued due since his death, render himself liable to be sued in scire facias as a member of the company. Ness v. Armstrong, 7 D. & L. 73; 4 Ex. 21; 18 L. J., Ex. 473; 13 Jur. 847.

The executor of a deceased shareholder in a banking company held not liable to make good, out of his testator's assets, debts contracted by the company subsequently to the testator's death, though the shares were registered in the executor's name, and he received the dividends in his character of executor, the debts due at his testator's death having been subsequently discharged by the company. Labouchere v. Tupper, 11 Moore, P. C. 198; 5 W. R. 797.

The executors of a shareholder are not liable in an action for calls in the statutory form under the Companies Clauses Act, when the call is made in the lifetime of the testator. Birkenhead, Lancashire and Cheshire Junction Ry. v. Colesworth, 6 Railw. Cas. 211; 5 Ex. 226; 1 L. M. & P. 244; 19 L. J., Ex. 240; 14 Jur. 354.

—— After Payment of Legacies.]—Payment to legatees is no answer to the claims of creditors, though no debt had arisen at the time of such payment. Newcastle Banking Co. v. Hymers, 22 Beav. 367.

Where, therefore, a testator held shares in a banking company, and nine years after his death the bank was wound up, and a call made:—Held, that payments to legatees in the meantime could not be allowed to the executors as against the official manager in respect of the call. Ib.

A shareholder in a company who before his death had been released from all liability in respect of his shares in consideration of a certain payment, by his will gave legacies, which his executors duly paid. The company afterwards endeavoured to set aside the release, and they failed in the first instance, but on appeal succeeded in setting aside the release:—Held, that the executors were personally liable to refund the amount paid to the legatees, to meet the calls made upon the testator's estate in respect of the shares. Bewley, In re, Jefferys v. Jefferys, 24 L. T. 177; 19 W. R. 464.

The executors of a deceased shareholder in a company, which was a going concern at the time of his death, paid a legacy under his will without providing for any contingent liability in respect of the shares which they retained unsold. The company was subsequently wound up, and the executors were placed on the list of contributories:—Held, that they were liable to pay the amount of the legacy in satisfaction of calls. Taylor v. Taylor, 39 L. J., Ch. 676; L. R. 10 Eq. 477; 23 L. T. 134; 18 W. R. 1102.

By a local act it was enacted that N. and all other persons who had already subscribed, or who should thereafter subscribe, to the undertaking, should be united into a company for the purposes of the undertaking, that the number of directors should be six, and the qualification of a director the possession of fifty shares in the undertaking; and that N. and K. and four others should be the first directors in the company, and should continue in office till the first ordinary meeting, and that at such meeting the shareholders might either continue in office the directors appointed by the act, or might elect a new body of directors. N. and K. had both signed the petition on which the act had been obtained, and had attended meetings of the company, and had each on one occasion signed the minutes. No other directors ever were elected, and there was never any register of shareholders. N. and K. were both dead; and N.'s representatives, after giving the statutory notice to creditors, had duly distributed his assets. The company having been ordered to be wound up:—Held, that the representatives of N., as well as those of K., must be settled on the list of contributories for fifty shares, the fact that N.'s executors had duly distributed his assets notwithstanding. Dublin and Metropolitan Junction Ry., In re, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 294.

—— Order to Pay under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45.]—Under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45, the master made an order for placing an executrix on the list of contributories in respect of shares in the undertaking held by the testator, and directing her to pay 1,469*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.* out of the assets of the testator, if she had so much in her hands to be administered. This order having been registered as a charge against the executrix, as well as against the testator, an application to the court to alter or vacate the entry was refused. Thomas, Ex parte, 9 C. B. 740.

7. Crown Debts.

Order and Contribution of Assets for.]—If there is a debt owing to the king, equity will order it to be paid out of the real estate, that other creditors may have satisfaction of their debts out of the personal assets. Sagitary v. Hyde, 1 Vern. 455.

—— Marshalling.]—Debt to the crown, levied out of lands mortgaged by debtor, subsequent to becoming indebted to the crown:—Held, that all the estates of which he was seised whilst a crown officer, must, according to their ratable value, be contributory with the mortgaged premises to pay the debt; excepting, however, lands purchased under decree of foreclosure against debtor, the purchaser not having notice of the crown debt, and having got in an old judgment against the ancestor of the debtor. The court would itself be the agent of a fraud, if it displaced a title given by itself, where the proceedings were in all respects conformable to the rules and established law of the court, the purchaser paying his money into court, and the conveyance made under its sanction, and everything transacted, not only with regularity, but optimâ fide by the purchaser. But although all the estates are thus contributory, in case of the mortgagee, yet, as between the debtor's eldest son deriving under settlement, and purchasers from the son, the contributory fund must be so marshalled, as to make the son's remaining property first applicable, and if that be insufficient, the portion of the last purchaser must be applied, before that of any prior purchaser. Hartly v. O'Flaherty, Beat. 61.

—— Since 32 & 33 Vict. c. 46—Incidence as between Specialty and Simple Contract Creditors.]—In the administration of the insolvent estate of a deceased person, since Hinde Palmer's Act (32 & 33 Vict. c. 46), a simple contract debt due to the crown is payable only out of the proportion of the assets which the simple contract debts bear to the specialty debts, in priority to other simple contract debts. Notwithstanding the act, it does not fall, ratably or otherwise, on the proportion attributable to the specialty debts. Wilson v. Coxwell (52 L. J., Ch. 975; 23 Ch. D. 764), and Jones, In re, Calver v. Laxton (55 L. J., Ch. 350; 31 Ch. D. 440), applied. Williams, In re, Williams v. Williams (42 L. J., Ch. 158; L. R. 15 Eq. 270) distinguished. Bentinck, In re, Bentinck v. Bentinck, 66 L. J., Ch. 359; [1897] 1 Ch. 673; 76 L. T. 284; 45 W. R. 397.

8. Judgment Debts.

Judgment Debts—What are.]—An administrator pays away all the assets in satisfying debts on specialty; decreed to pay a debt due by a decree, though he had no notice of the decree before he has paid those debts. Searle v. Lane, 2 Vern. 37, 88.

A decree in equity for a sum certain is equal to a judgment at law, and shall be paid pari passu therewith; but if the decree be for an account, it is only equal to a judgment quod computet till the account be stated. S. C., 2 Freem. 103.

A final decree upon a sum ascertained, is equal to a judgment; but a mere decree for an account of plaintiff's demand, and of the personal estate come to the hands of defendant, with mere direction for payment out of the result of that account, does not prevent the executor paying a judgment. Perry v. Phelips, 10 Ves. 33; 7 R. R. 31.

An administration suit having been instituted, another suit was instituted against an executor, by the decree in which he was declared liable to make good a certain sum to the estate of his testator, and was to be charged with the balance, in the accounts directed to be taken in the first suit:—Held, that this did not constitute a judgment debt against the executor. Garner v. Briggs, 27 L. J., Ch. 483; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 230; 6 W. R. 378.

The executor died, and a suit was instituted for the administration of his estate. On further directions in the former suits it was directed that the amount due from the executor should be ascertained, and the plaintiff in these suits should go in and prove for that amount in the suit for the administration of the executor's estate:—Held, that this amount was not a judgment debt against the executor's estate. Ib.

An order under Ord. XIV. r. 1, giving liberty to sign final judgment for the amount claimed by the writ of summons, is not equivalent to signing or entry of judgment, so as to give a judgment creditor's right of priority to a plaintiff who has failed to follow up the order by signing judgment under Ord. XLI. Gurney, In re, Clifford v. Gurney, 66 L. J., Ch. 32; [1896] 2 Ch. 863; 75 L. T. 332; 45 W. R. 92.

Of Deceased—When Undocketed.]—A debt on a judgment against a testator or an intestate, not docketed according to the directions of the 4 & 5 Will. & M. c. 20, was put by that act on a level with simple contract debts. Hickey v. Hayter, 6 Term Rep. 384; 1 Esp. 313; 3 R. R. 213. S. P., Steel v. Rorke, 1 Bos. & P. 307.

Under the plea of plene administravit, an executor might give in evidence that the plaintiff's judgment not being docketed, he had paid away all the effects in discharging debts of an inferior degree. Ib.

A judgment to be entitled to preference in administration, must have been docketed pursuant to 4 & 5 Will. & M. c. 20; and notice of it in any other way is of no consequence. Hall v. Tapper, 3 B. & Ad. 655.

Judgment not docketed has no preference against heirs, executors, or administrators. Landon v. Ferguson, 3 Russ. 349.

—— Since 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11.]—By 4 & 5 Will. & M. c. 20, judgments not docketed were not to have any preference against heirs, executors, or administrators in the administration of estates; 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, closed the docket:—Held, that the old law was thereby revived, and that the administrator had committed a devastavit by paying a simple contract debt before a judgment debt, even though he had no actual notice of the latter. Fuller v. Redman, 26 Beav. 600; 29 L. J., Ch. 324; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1045; 7 W. R. 430.

The provision of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, s. 4, that all judgments shall, after the expiration of five years from the entry thereof, be null and void against lands, tenements and other hereditaments as to creditors, unless registered within five years before the right of such creditors accrued, refers only to creditors who have some right or interest in such lands, tenements, or hereditaments, as, for example, by virtue of a creditor's decree, directing a sale of such property. Simpson v. Morley, 2 Kay & J. 71; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1158.

Creditors of a deceased debtor have not on his death a right against his leasehold property in the hands of his executor or administrator within the meaning of the act. Ib.

Quære, if they have, even after a creditor's decree, any such right in the specific chattels of the deceased debtor, unless the decree directs them to be sold for the benefit of the creditors. Ib.

Terrin, In re (2 Dru. & War. 147), distinguished. Ib.

—— Since 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 3—Unregistered Judgment.]—The 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 3, restores the protection which was given to representatives against undocketed judgments by 4 & 5 Will. & M. c. 20: and therefore, where judgments are not registered, so as to form a charge upon land, they have no priority over simple contract debts; and an executor, even with notice of the judgment debts, is justified in parting with the assets to simple contract creditors. Turner, In re, Walter v. Turner, 3 N. R. 413; 33 L. J., Ch. 232; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 147; 9 L. T. 758; 12 W. R. 337.

The 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 3, is not restricted in its operation to the protection of heirs, executors and administrators against claims by unregistered judgment creditors, but absolutely deprives unregistered judgment debts of all priority in the administration of assets; and the act applies equally to judgments of county courts as to other judgments. Ib.

The meaning of s. 3 of the act 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, like that of s. 3 of the act 4 & 5 Will. & M. c. 20, is not merely that protection is given to an executor or administrator against an action for a devastavit by a judgment creditor of the testator or intestate whose judgment has not been registered, but that such a judgment debt is not entitled in the administration of the estate to any priority over the simple contract debts of the testator or intestate. Turner, In re (33 L. J., Ch. 232), followed. Van Gheluire v. Nerinckx, 51 L. J., Ch. 929; 21 Ch. D. 189; 47 L. T. 46; 30 W. R. 789.

Before 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 3, if an administrator paid simple contract debts he would not be allowed them against a judgment creditor, though the judgment was unregistered when the payment was made, and though he had neither notice nor knowledge of its existence. Fuller v. Redman, 26 Beav. 600; 29 L. J., Ch. 324; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1046; 7 W. R. 430.

A judgment signed in 1854, but not registered until after the death of the debtor, which happened after the passing of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, is, by s. 3, not entitled to preference in the administration of the debtor's estate. Kemp v. Waddingham, 35 L. J., Q. B. 114; L. R. 1 Q. B. 355; 13 L. T. 709; 14 W. R. 390.

In the administration of an estate an unregistered judgment debt has no priority over simple contract debts. Illidge, In re, Davidson v. Illidge, 53 L. J., Ch. 991; 27 Ch. D. 478; 51 L. T. 523; 33 W. R. 18—C. A.

—— 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 4.]—The 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 4, as to registering judgments, is not retrospective; so that where a debtor died before the passing of the act, a judgment, which had not been registered within five years before his death, retained its priority in the administration of his assets. Evans v. Williams, 2 Dr. & Sm. 324; 34 L. J., Ch. 661; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 256; 12 L. T. 762; 13 W. R. 423.

—— Judicature Act, 1875, s. 10.]—The rule by which a judgment creditor of a testator is entitled to priority over simple contract creditors in the administration of the assets of the testator under an administration decree is not affected by s. 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875, which provides that in such administration of assets the same rule shall prevail as to the respective rights of secured and unsecured creditors as may be in force under the law of bankruptcy with respect to bankrupts' estates. Smith v. Morgan, 49 L. J., C. P. 410; 5 C. P. D. 337. S. P., Maggi, In re, Winchouse v. Winchouse, 51 L. J., Ch. 560; 20 Ch. D. 545; 46 L. T. 362; 30 W. R. 729.

Of Executor.]—A judgment obtained against an executor (before 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11) is entitled to preference in the administration of the testator's estate over simple contract debts, though not docketed pursuant to 4 & 5 Will. & M. c. 20. Gaunt v. Taylor, 3 Scott (N.R.) 700; 3 Man. & G. 886; 11 L. J., C. P. 68.

The 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 3, which provides that unregistered judgments shall have no preference in the administration of assets, does not apply to judgments obtained against a personal representative; and consequently such judgments, if obtained before decree, must, though not registered until after decree, be paid in preference to simple contract debts, and in order of priority according to the dates of their being entered up. Jennings v. Rigby, 33 Beav. 198; 33 L. J., Ch. 149; 9 L. T. 308; 12 W. R. 32.

By 32 & 33 Vict. c. 46, the distinction between specialty and simple contract debts in the administration of assets of deceased persons is abolished, but a creditor who first takes legal proceedings against the legal personal representative, and obtains judgment, is, though it is not registered, entitled to be paid his debt in full in priority over all other creditors. Williams, In re, Williams v. Williams, 42 L. J., Ch. 158; L. R. 15 Eq. 270; 28 L. T. 17; 21 W. R. 160.

A creditor who has obtained judgment against the executor of his deceased debtor before a decree is made for the administration of the debtor's estate has priority over other creditors, and that priority is unaffected by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 46. Stubbs, In re, Hanson v. Stubbs, 47 L. J., Ch. 671; 8 Ch. D. 154; 26 W. R. 736.

But where a creditor had obtained in an action in the exchequer division an order nisi to sign judgment against the executrix of his debtor, and before judgment had been signed another creditor obtained in the chancery division a decree for the administration of the deceased debtor's estate, he was held to have no priority; and the action in the exchequer division was transferred to the chancery division, and proceedings therein stayed upon motion made for that purpose. Ib.

A creditor obtained a judgment against the executor, and, on the same day, a decree was made for the administration of the estate:—Held, that the judgment creditor had obtained no priority. Parker v. Ringham, 33 Beav. 535.

—— By Confessing Judgment.]—Bond creditor brings a bill against an executor for recovery of his debt, and, pending this suit, the executor confesses a judgment to another bond creditor, the executor may pay this judgment before the bond debts. Goodfellow v. Burchett, 2 Vern. 299.

Where the representative of an intestate is seeking to give preference by confessing judgment, the court will give the plaintiff leave to proceed at law, to recover judgment with a cesset executio, and in the court of equity for a discovery and account of assets. Baker v. Dumaresque, 2 Atk. 119.

Decree quod computet makes no variation as to an executor, for before a final decree he may confess a judgment, and it does not at all alter the nature of the demand. Smith v. Eyles, 2 Atk. 385.

In an action of covenant, interlocutory judgment quod recuperet was signed, but before final judgment defendant died, and his executor confessed judgment to a bond creditor. He may plead that judgment in bar to a sci. fa. in the action on the covenant. Ib.

Executors in equity as well as at law may prefer any creditors in equal degree, or after an action at law brought by one creditor, may confess judgment to another. Waring v. Danvers, 1 P. W. 295.

Effect of a judgment confessed by an executor pending a suit. Parker v. Dee, 3 Swan. 529, n.; Pigott v. Nower, id. 534, n.

Assignment of part of the assets, and judgment confessed to a creditor by one executor, not available against the dissent of the others on behalf of the general creditors; though perhaps the court would not interpose against the particular creditor, if the property had actually passed, or to deprive him of any legal advantage. Lepard v. Vernon, 2 Ves. & B. 51; 13 R. R. 13.

Priority of—Inter se.]—An executor ought to pay that creditor first who uses the first diligence; so at law the first judgment shall be preferred; but otherwise as to legatees, for there being no priority among them, their legacies shall be paid pari passu. Ashley v. Pocock, 3 Atk. 208.

Where, after the death of A. B., who was indebted on bond to C. and D., judgments were entered up by them against his executor, and an administration suit was instituted by C.:—Held, in administering the estate, that C., whose judgment was prior in time to D.'s, was entitled to priority of payment. Dollond v. Johnson, 2 Sm. & G. 301; 23 L. J., Ch. 637; 18 Jur. 767; 2 W. R. 505; 2 Eq. R. 621.

In a suit to administer the estate of a testator, judgments obtained against his executors are payable according to their respective dates out of legal assets. Ib.

The priority of creditors, by decree, over subsequent judgment creditors, established. Morrice v. Bank of England, 3 Swan. 573.

In the administration of assets judgments rank inter se, according to the time of their entry upon the roll under the statute 3 Geo. 2, c. 7 (Ir.) Burke v. Killikell, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 1.

Of Heir — Simple Contract Debts of Intestate — Priority — Descended Land.]—The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, makes real estate assets to be administered in courts of equity for payment of simple contract debts of the deceased; and the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 13, makes a judgment a charge on any lands of which the judgment debtor is seised, or over which he shall have any disposing power, for his own benefit; and it makes such judgment an equitable mortgage thereon:—Held, that judgments entered up against the heir for his own debt, before any action or suit by the simple contract creditors of the ancestor, have no priority over the simple contract creditors of the intestate, in respect of the descended estate. Kinderley v. Jervis, 22 Beav. 1; 25 L. J., Ch. 538; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 602; 4 W. R. 579.

Voluntary.]—A voluntary judgment given by a freeman of London, payable three months after his death, is to be postponed to debts by simple contract, and to the widow's part, but will bind the freeman's legatory part. Fairebeard v. Bowers, 2 Vern. 202; Pre. Ch. 17.

Assignment by Executor after judgment for Benefit of Creditors.]—An executrix, after probate and after judgment against her for a debt due from her testator, by deed assigned all his property and effects to trustees for the benefit of his creditors:—Held, that the assignment was valid, as against the judgment creditor. Wolverhampton and Staffordshire Banking Co. v. Marston, 7 H. & N. 148; 30 L. J., Ex. 402; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1040; 4 L. T. 524; 9 W. R. 790.

Foreign.]—A foreign judgment constitutes only a simple contract debt. Wilson v. Dunsany (Lady), 18 Beav. 293; 23 L. J., Ch. 492; 18 Jur. 762; 2 W. R. 288.

Irish.]—Where a person died domiciled in Ireland, leaving property in Ireland and England, and the same executors in both countries:—Held, that an Irish judgment had priority over English simple contract creditors, against Irish property remitted to England by the executors, and being there administered. Cook v. Gregson, 2 Drew. 286; 23 L. J., Ch. 734; 2 W. R. 401.

A person domiciled in Ireland died, leaving English and Irish assets. At the time of his death he was indebted upon a decree in a foreclosure suit obtained in Ireland, under which the mortgaged estate was sold, but proved insufficient to pay the charges upon it. He was also indebted upon covenants, and judgments recovered in England, but upon which judgment had not been entered up in Ireland. In a suit for the administration of his estate :—Held, that the assets of the testator must be administered according to the law of his domicile; and the priorities of his various creditors be such as they would be by the law of Ireland; that the decree in the foreclosure suit in Ireland gave no priority over the creditors by covenant, and that all must be paid pari passu. Wilson v. Dunsany (Lady), 18 Beav. 293; 23 L. J., Ch. 492; 18 Jur. 762; 2 W. R. 288. But see Kloebe, In re, Kannreuther v. Geiselbrecht, 54 L. J., Ch. 297; 28 Ch. D. 175; 52 L. T. 19; 33 W. R. 391.

Attachment of Debts.]—An executor of a judgment creditor is not entitled, under the C. L. P. Act of 1854, s. 61, to attach a debt due to the judgment debtor before he has made himself a party to the judgment. Baynard v. Simmons, 5 El. & Bl. 59; 24 L. J., Q. B. 253; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 657; 3 W. R. 422.

Where judgment is recovered against an executor, a debt due from a third person to the testator's estate may be attached; and it is no answer that a decree has been made in a suit in chancery for the administration of the estate. Burton v. Roberts, 6 H. & N. 93; 29 L. J., Ex. 484.

A judgment creditor who has obtained judgment against an intestate's estate, before an administration decree, is entitled under a garnishee order to enforce his judgment against a debtor to the estate. Barnes, In re, Harper v. Barnes, 36 L. J., Ch. 63; 15 L. T. 312. S. P., Fowler v. Roberts, 2 Giff. 226; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1189; 8 W. R. 492.

A judgment in the lord mayor's court, obtained against the garnishee, does not entitle the plaintiff to rank as a judgment creditor in the administration of the garnishee's assets. Holt v. Murray, 1 Sim. 485.

A creditor who obtains a foreign attachment in the lord mayor's court, but who, before judgment, is restrained from proceeding in consequence of a decree made in a suit to administer the estate of the debtor, is not entitled to any priority in respect of such attachment over other creditors in the administration of the assets of the debtor. Redhead v. Welton, 30 L. J., Ch. 577; 4 L. T. 230; 9 W. R. 473.

Sect. 45 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, restricting the rights of creditors under execution or attachment, is not made applicable to the administration of insolvent estates in the chancery division by the Judicature Act, 1875, s. 10. Pratt v. Inman, 59 L. J., Ch. 274; 43 Ch. D. 175; 61 L. T. 760.

Lien of Judgment Creditor.]—A testator directed the trustees of his real estate to raise, by mortgage, any sum not exceeding 20,000*l.*, and to apply the same in paying such of the creditors of M. as they should think fit. The trustees raised 6,000*l.*, and in their answer to a bill by a judgment creditor of M. to enforce his lien, they stated that they had raised this sum, but had not further exercised their power, and refused to do so, except under the direction of the court. They then filed a bill to have the trusts carried into execution by the court, and to this bill they made the judgment creditor a party, and stated in it that they intended to raise the whole 20,000*l.* :—Held, that the judgment creditor had an equity to sue to have the fund raised secured, if not to have the whole 20,000*l.* raised and distributed; and that the trustees were bound, if not by the will, by their answer, and the statement in their bill, to raise the whole 20,000*l.* Joel v. Mills, 3 Kay & J. 458.

The conusor of a judgment, by his will in 1802, bequeaths certain leaseholds specifically, and appoints the conusee a trustee under his will. The executor assents to the bequest in 1808, having at the time assets for the payment of all debts of the testator. A suit is instituted in 1812 for a sale of part of the testator's property by a specific encumbrancer, and under the decree in that cause, the judgment is proved, and declared a charge on the premises. No sale takes place, and after the death of the conusee in 1822, his widow, who was entitled to the judgment under a settlement which gave the conusee a life interest in it, files her bill to raise the amount, which she amends in 1835, making parties the specific legatee, his wife and children, upon whom the chattel had been settled by a post-nuptial settlement :—Held, that she was entitled to compel the owner of the chattel to contribute to the payment of the judgment. Mannix v. Drinan, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 108.

A. confessed a judgment, and died intestate, seised of fee simple estates, and possessed of a term of years. G., his only son and next of kin, died under age, having bequeathed the term to M., the wife of D.; and the real estates descended on B., his heir-at-law. M. died, and D. took out administration to her; he was also executor to G. In 1834 D. mortgaged the term as his own property; afterwards, in the same year, B. filed a bill against D. to have the judgment paid off out of the term; a general demurrer to this bill, for want of equity, was allowed. In 1835 B. filed a second bill against D., and the mortgagee of the term for the same purpose as the former, and a demurrer by D. to this bill, for want of equity, was also allowed. In May, 1837, B. filed a third bill, for the same purpose, against D. and the mortgagee, but did not serve the mortgagee with process or prosecute the suit. In November, 1837, D. conveyed the equity of redemption to the mortgagee. In 1841 D., as personal representative of G., obtained a decree against B., as heir of G., for payment of the sum of money; and B. did not in that suit set up any claim in respect of the judgment :—Held, that, under these circumstances, B. had lost his right to be recouped out of the term the amount of the judgment, which was levied out of the real estate of C. in his hands. The judgment creditor being barred from levying his debt out of the term, though not out of the real estate, the owner of the real estate is also barred of his equity to be recouped the amount of the judgment out of the term. Boyd v. Belton, 1 Jo. & Lat. 730.

When Binding on Devisee.]—Devisee not bound by the amount of a claim substantiated against the executors in an action at law to which he was not a party. Willson v. Leonard, 3 Beav. 373.

A judgment recovered against executors, is not evidence against a devisee. Marten v. Whichelo, Cr. & Ph. 257 ; 10 L. J., Ch. 384.

The plaintiff in a creditors' suit having taken the bill pro confesso, against one of the defendants, who was the executor, adduced no evidence of his debt as against the other defendants, who were the devisees of the testator's real estate, and who did not admit the debt except an examined copy of the judgment which the plaintiff had recovered for at law against the executor. The court, under the circumstances, refused leave to supply the defect in the evidence at the hearing, and dismissed the bill as against the devisees, with costs. Ib.

In a creditors' suit for administration of the real and personal estate of a testator, a judgment recovered against the executors (who were also trustees of the real estate) is primâ facie evidence of a debt as against the persons interested in the real estate ; but they will be at liberty to adduce rebutting evidence. Harrey v. Wilde, 41 L. J., Ch. 698 ; L. R. 14 Eq. 438 ; 27 L. T. 471.

A., B. and C., being successive tenants in tail of property held under an inalienable parliamentary title, and B. having, after the death of A. entered into possession of the estates, and, together with them, of certain leaseholds formerly in the possession of A., his executors brought an ejectment against B. to recover possession of the leaseholds as part of his estate. B. having died before trial of the action, another action was brought against C., the successor in title. C., who was also executor of B., compromised the action on terms of giving judgment and buying the leaseholds at a certain price, with a further stipulation that 4,000*l.* should be allowed as a debt from B.'s estate in respect of rents received by B. Before the compromise, a creditors' suit was instituted and a decree made for the administration of B.'s estate, which was insolvent. On a summons by A.'s executors to prove against B.'s estate for the amount of the rents actually received by him :—Held, that the judgment in the action against C. was not evidence of wrongful possession by B., which could serve as a foundation for the claim, and that the admission by the executor as to mesne profits in the compromise was inoperative, being made after the decree. Talbot v. Shrewsbury (Earl), L. R. 14 Eq. 503 ; 20 W. R. 854.

Rights in respect of in Administration Proceedings.]—A judgment creditor is entitled to have satisfaction out of the real estate of the deceased debtor, whether his will were duly executed or not ; and, therefore, he has no direct interest in establishing it, and carrying the trusts into execution. Bomford v. Wilme, Beat. 253.

The ordinary course of the court, in a suit by a judgment creditor, is to decree an account only of the debt due to the plaintiff, and all other creditors of the same rank, and not to carry the administration of the assets further than to provide payment of that class of creditors. Ib.

Although a judgment creditor may proceed at law, if he comes into this court to have payment out of the equitable assets, he must submit to take them as the debtor has directed. He is as much bound here by those directions, as a simple contract creditor who has no other remedy. Locke v. Peacock, 2 Moll. 421.

Where an estate is sold under a decree of the court for payment of debts, a judgment creditor will be entitled to be paid out of the whole produce of the estate, and not out of a moiety only. Tunstall v. Trappes, Lawson's Case, 3 Sim. 300.

Assets are not marshalled against judgment creditor. Sharpe v. Scarborough (Earl), 4 Ves. 538.

In 1811 a creditors' suit was instituted by a simple contract creditor ; the answers were got in in 1820 ; the plaintiff's debt was admitted ; and, thereupon, the assets were brought into court in 1823 ; another simple contract creditor obtained judgment against the executors ; no decree was made in the cause until 1829 :—Held, that the judgment thus obtained had priority over all the simple contract debts. Larkins v. Paxton, 2 Beav. 219.

Where A., a bond creditor of the intestate for 600*l.*, brought an action against the administratrix, who pleaded no assets ultra 54*l.*, and then A. procured the commissary to assign him the administration bond, upon which he brought his action, and the administratrix suffered judgment by default. Decreed, that the judgment should stand as a security for so much as should fall short to satisfy A. Greenside v. Benson, 3 Atk. 248. See Canterbury (Archbishop) v. Wills, Salk. 315, where this question was determined.

In a creditors' suit, the plaintiff did not satisfactorily prove his debt, and the bill was retained, with liberty to establish the debt at law. Semble, that a judgment obtained by him under such circumstances, would not give him priority over the other simple contract creditors. Gibert v. Hales, 8 Beav. 236.

—— Interest.] — In the administration of assets, interest is not allowed on a judgment debt merely on the ground that the creditor has been prevented from rendering available his judgment by the decree and proceedings in the suit, though the debt may, by those means, have been withheld from him for several years. Berrington v. Evans, Younge, 276.

—— Costs.]—If lands have been sold under a decree, and judgment creditors, knowing that they have no chance of the fund reaching them, render it necessary to file a supplemental bill against them, they will not get their costs in that suit ; and semble, they will be obliged to pay the costs occasioned by such vexatious conduct. Barrett v. Bermingham, Sau. & Sc. 419 ; 1 Ir. Eq. R. 417.

A party files his bill as a judgment creditor, obtains a decree, and compels the other creditors to prove their demands under it. On taking the account he is found to have been overpaid, and to be a debtor to the estate for the balance so overpaid :—Held, that he is not entitled to the costs of his suit, and the court will order him to bring in the balance due by him, the bill remaining in operation for the other creditors. Graves v. Wright, 1 Con. & L. 267 ; 2 Dr. & War. 77.

On a bill filed by the executors of a judgment creditor to raise the amount due on the judgment, it appeared that the plaintiffs were overpaid :—Held, that they were not entitled to the costs of the suit. Ib.

d. Marshalling.

Generally.]—It being the object of a court of equity, that every claimant upon the assets of a deceased person shall be satisfied as far as such assets can, by any arrangement consistent with the nature of the respective claims, be applied in satisfaction thereof, it has long been settled, that where one claimant has more than one fund to resort to, and another claimant only one, the first claimant shall resort to that fund on which the second has no lien. Lanoy v. Athol, 2 Atk. 446.

Where two estates are mortgaged to A., and one only of the estates to B., A. shall take his satisfaction out of that which is not in mortgage to B., though the estates descend to two different persons. Ib.

Assets cannot be marshalled where only one fund chargeable. Ord v. Ord, Dick. 440.

Instances of the rule, that a person having a double fund shall not, by his option, disappoint another who has only one. Aldrich v. Cooper, 8 Ves. 382; 7 R. R. 86.

General principle of marshalling assets, that party having two funds, his choice shall not have the effect of disappointing another who has only one, but the latter shall stand in the place of the former; upon that principle, benefit of vendor's lien on estate for purchase-money extended to third persons. Trimmer v. Bayne, 9 Ves. 209.

The principle that one creditor shall not take a part of the fund which otherwise would have been available for the payment of all the creditors, and at the same time be allowed to come in pari passu with the other creditors for satisfaction out of the remainder of that fund, does not apply where that creditor obtains by his diligence something which did not and could not form a part of that fund. Cockerell v. Dickens, 3 Moore, P. C. 98; 1 Mont. D. & D. 45.

The principle that a creditor taking solely to himself part of the insolvent estate cannot come in upon the remainder pari passu with the other creditors, does not apply where a creditor realises a fund which the assignees could not have reached, as in this case, a foreign real estate. Ib.

The general rule of equity is, that all fair creditors stand in a situation equally favourable; and therefore, if a subsequent creditor, by using due diligence, has contrived to receive his debts, the court will not interfere to oblige him to account for what he has so received, and refund it to a prior creditor. Dillon v. Burton, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 101.

The doctrine of marshalling amounts to this, that where one person has a clear right to resort to two funds, and another person has a right to resort to one only of the two funds, the latter may say that, as between himself and the double creditor, the double creditor shall be put to exhaust the security upon which the single creditor has no claim; but the doctrine does not apply where the single creditor is himself bound to the party entitled to the other security. Dolphin v. Aylward, L. R. 4 H. L. 486; 23 L. T. 636.

Marshalling assets, by letting simple contract creditors come in place of a specialty creditor, can only be where the specialty creditors had a remedy against the real and personal assets of the debtor deceased, whose assets are in question. Lacon, or Lacam v. Mertins, 1 Ves. Sen. 312. And see S. C., 3 Atk. 1.

Assets are never marshalled by reason of a fact arising or happening subsequent to the death of the party. Kearnan v. Fitzsimon, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 16.

The dictum of Lord Clare, in Kearnan v. Fitzsimon, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 16, that the rule of marshalling assets holds only where it is proper to be done at the death of the party whose assets are to be marshalled, and can never arise upon any subsequent fact or accident considered. Ellard v. Cooper, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 376.

Assets marshalled, if it appears at any period of the cause that specialty creditors have gone upon the personal estate, though the bill is not framed with that view. Gibbs v. Ougier, 12 Ves. 413; 8 R. R. 348.

As between Simple Contract and Specialty Creditors.]—Where specialty creditors exhaust the personal assets, simple contract creditors stand in their place, and may come upon the real. Galton v. Hancock, 2 Atk. 424; Ridgw. 301. S. P., Soames v. Robinson, 1 Myl. & K. 500; 2 L. J., Ch. 153; Lloyd v. Williams, 2 Atk. 108 (bond creditors). Charles v. Andrews, 9 Mod. 151 (specialty debts secured on real estate). Aldrich v. Cooper, 8 Ves. 382; 7 R. R. 86 (mortgagee of freeholds and copyholds, also a specialty creditor), Robinson v. Tonge (1 P. W. 680) being overruled.

—— Voluntary Conveyance.]—A. conveyed part of his lands in trust to pay his debts, and other part to maintain his children; this last conveyance is voluntary and void as against creditors, though good against himself. So where creditors, having a lien on land, take satisfaction out of the personal estate, which was liable to debts of an inferior nature, the inferior creditors shall stand in their place and have satisfaction out of the land. Sneed v. Culpepper, 7 Vin. Abr. 52, pl. 7.

—— Unpaid Vendor.]—If the vendor of an estate, the contract for which was not completed in the lifetime of the testator, who was the purchaser, is afterwards paid the purchase-money out of the personal assets, the simple contract creditors of the testator shall stand in the place of the vendor with respect to his lien on the estate. Quære, if a pecuniary legatee would be entitled to the same benefit against the devisee. Selby v. Selby, 4 Russ. 336; 6 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 117; 28 R. R. 117.

—— Judgment Creditor.]—Assets are not marshalled against judgment creditors. Sharpe v. Scarborough (Earl), 4 Ves. 538.

—— Insufficiency owing to Devastavit.]—When specialty debts of a deceased person have been paid out of his personal estate, which was sufficient also to pay his simple contract debts, and the executor subsequently commits a devastavit which renders the personal estate insufficient to pay simple contract creditors, they are entitled to be paid out of the real estate of the debtor, to the extent to which the personal estate has been onerated by the specialty creditors. Ellard v. Cooper, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 376.

As against Devised Estates.]—Under a charge of debts, creditors by simple contract may, by marshalling, follow devised estates; if no descended estates, or they have been applied. Kidney v. Coussmaker, 12 Ves. 155; 2 R. R. 118.

As against Property mortgaged jointly with Testator's.]—An executor mortgaged his testator's estate conjointly with his own for 3,000*l.*, of which 1000*l.* was declared invalid as against the testator's estate. A creditors' suit was afterwards instituted, and the executor subsequently made a further charge on the same estates for 2,500*l.*, and which was declared invalid as regarded the testator's estate:—Held, that the creditors had no equity to compel the mortgagee to obtain payment of his first mortgage wholly out of the executor's private estate, so as to exonerate the testator's estate for their benefit. Shaleross v. Dixon, 7 L. J., Ch. 180.

Interest, Right to.]—Simple contract creditor entitled to stand in the place of the specialty creditor, who had exhausted the personal estate, against the real estate, is not, it appears, entitled to charge the real estate with interest, although the fund taken by the specialty creditor was productive. Leighton v. Hayes, 2 Moll. 523.

Where the personal estate was exhausted by the specialty creditor, and a decree for marshalling the assets made, a considerable time having elapsed before the real estates could be made available:—Held, that the simple contract creditors were not entitled to have raised out of the real estate, in satisfaction of their debts, the interest which would have accrued on the specialty debts if they had remained unsatisfied. Cradock v. Piper, 15 Sim. 301.

Equity of Creditors generally to Benefit—Practice of Court.]—One dies indebted by mortgage and simple contract, one of the simple contract creditors gets judgment of assets, cum acciderent; the executor applies the assets to pay off the mortgage; the simple contract creditor shall stand in the place of the mortgagee as to what he has exhausted out of the personal assets, and this being only by the aid of equity, all the simple contract creditors shall come in equally with the creditor that has got judgment. Wilson v. Fielding, 2 Vern. 763; 10 Mod. 426.

The court will not marshal assets for the payment of a simple contract debt out of real estate, where the bill has not been filed on behalf of all the creditors of the deceased; and liberty to amend the bill at the hearing was refused under the circumstances. Connolly v. M'Dermot, 3 Jo. & Lat. 260.

Where a testator, supposing himself to be entitled to an estate in fee, which he had only in tail with ultimate remainder in fee, devised that estate among others for payment of debts, and afterwards by recovery obtained the fee, but did not republish his will; and afterwards a bill was filed on behalf of his creditors, both by specialty and simple contract creditors, against the legatees and heir-at-law for administration of the personal estate, and that if necessary the will might be established and the debts paid out of the realty, and the defendants did not by their answer deny that the particular estate passed by the will; and a receiver was appointed of the estate generally, and the suit then abated and was not revived till eighteen years afterwards, and the objection was then taken that where a supplemental bill was filed by a simple contract creditor the estate did not pass, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to marshal, the original bill not being expressly or apparently framed for that purpose:—Held, nevertheless, that as the plaintiff sought to affect the descended estate in place of specialty creditors, he was entitled to have the benefit of the estate in question by marshalling. Vickers v. Oliver, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 211; 11 L. J., Ch. 112; 6 Jur. 273.

A simple contract creditor who has acquired a right of marshalling real estate is not barred by the lapse of less than twenty years. Ib.

Specialty Creditors—Different Specialties.]—One dies, leaving a debt by judgment, and another by bond; the judgment creditor levies his debt out of the personal estate; whether the bond creditor shall, in equity, stand in the place of the judgment creditor, and charge the land with his debt. Porey v. Marsh, 2 Vern. 182.

A person mortgages freehold estates; and two months afterwards he surrendered copyhold to the use of the mortgagee, to secure the same debt. In a suit after the death of the mortgagor, for the administration of his assets, the freeholds were sold with the consent of the mortgagee, and the personal estate having been exhausted, the mortgage debt was, by order of the court, satisfied out of the proceeds of the freeholds:—Held, that the specialty creditors of the mortgagor were entitled to stand in the place of the mortgagee against the copyholds, to the extent of the sum which the mortgagee had received from the freehold estate. Gwynne v. Edwards, 2 Russ. 289, n.

Husband and wife being lessees of a rectory, assign it to trustees, in trust to sell and pay certain bonds of the husband and mortgages on his freehold estates; and by deed of even date, the husband, in consideration of his wife having joined in the assignment, conveys his freehold estates in trust for himself and his wife for their lives, and after their deaths to be sold for benefit of their children. The produce of the rectory was not sufficient to pay, in full, both the bonds and mortgages:—Held, that the bond creditors had no right, as against the children, to throw the mortgages upon the produce of the freeholds. Boazman v. Johnston, 3 Sim. 377; 30 R. R. 172.

Although a specialty creditor has a right to resort to the descended real estates of his debtor as legal assets, he cannot participate in the benefit of the trust of his debtor's real estate devised by him upon trust for sale for payment of his debts, without bringing what he had obtained out of the descended estates into hotchpot. Chapman v. Esgar, 1 Sm. & G. 575; 18 Jur. 341; 2 W. R. 86.

—— Volunteers.]—Creditors by specialty, who are mere volunteers, are not entitled to compete with creditors on simple contract for valuable consideration, but as against the devisees of the debtor have a right to stand in the place of mortgagees who have exhausted the fund provided by the testator for the payment of debts. Lomas v. Wright, 2 Myl. & K. 769; 3 L. J., Ch. 68.

Testator devised his estates in B. to the same uses as the estates comprised in his eldest son's marriage settlement were thereby limited to; and he devised his estates in M. to trustees in trust by sale or mortgage to raise portions of 5,000*l.* each for his youngest children; and from and after the performance of that trust, and subject thereto in the first instance, and subject to the payment of such of his debts as his personal estate should be insufficient to satisfy, he devised those estates to his eldest son in fee, and appointed him his executor. The testator died indebted by specialty as well as simple contract, and his personal estate being insufficient to pay his debts, his eldest son, with the concurrence of the trustees of the estates in M., sold those estates, and exhausted the proceeds in making good the deficiency of the personal estate to pay the testator's debts:—Held, that his youngest children were entitled in respect of their portions to a charge on the estate in B. equal in amount to the proceeds of the estates in M., which had been applied to pay the specialty debts. Legh v. Legh, 15 Sim. 135.

A. executed a voluntary settlement of real estate to uses in favour of his four children, and he covenanted that the estate should remain to those uses and for quiet enjoyment. He afterwards mortgaged the settled estate with his own unsettled estates, and died:—Held, that the children were entitled to throw the mortgages on the unsettled estate, and as against legatees, to prove under the covenants against the settlor's assets for the damage they had sustained by the mortgage. Hales v. Cox, 32 Beav. 118.

S., the owner of an estate, subject to an outstanding term, mortgaged it to F. H., who acted as the solicitor of both parties, handed over certain documents to F., which he represented to be, and which F. on his representations believed to be, the title deeds of the property. S. subsequently sold the estate, unknown to F., to C., without notice of the prior incumbrance, ostensibly to pay certain legacies charged upon it, together with other property belonging to S.:—Held, that F. was entitled to have the legacies paid out of the other estates upon which they were charged; and, in the event of their being sufficient, to hold the estate free from the charge. Finch v. Shaw. Colyer v. Finch, 19 Beav. 500; 18 Jur. 935. S. C., 5 H. L. Cas. 905; 26 L. J., Ch. 65; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 25.

Legatees, as between.]—One, by will, gives several legacies, some charged on the real estate, and others not; if the personal estate proves not sufficient to pay all, the legacies charged on the real estate shall be paid thereout, or if they have been paid out of the personal estate, the other legacies, as to so much, shall stand in their place upon the land. Bligh v. Darnley (Earl), 2 P. W. 620. S. P., Masters v. Masters, 1 P. W. 422. Hanby v. Roberts, Ambl. 127. S. C., nom. Hamly v. Fisher, Dick. 104. S. C., nom. Hanby v. Fisher, 2 Coll. C. C. 512, n.

Trust of a term by will, to "pay the several legacies hereby given, and also the several other legacies hereinafter bequeathed"; a codicil, reciting that the legacies given by the will to the testator's daughters were not an adequate provision, gave each of them a further legacy, in addition to the said legacies given them respectively by the will. The legacies by the codicil are not charged upon the real estate; assets marshalled accordingly. Bonner v. Bonner, 13 Ves. 379.

Pecuniary and demonstrative legatees, with a deficient fund on which their legacies are charged, have a right to throw simple contract creditors on descended estates, so as to marshal the assets in their favour. Sellon v. Watts, 28 Beav. 519; 9 W. R. 847.

The rule, where there are two classes of legatees, the one having a charge upon real estate, the other having no such charge, and the personalty is not sufficient to satisfy both, that the legatees, whose legacies are so charged, shall be paid out of the land, in order to leave the personal estate to those who have no other fund, applies equally to the case where one of the legacies only is charged upon real estate. Scales v. Collins, 9 Hare, 656.

The court does not construe a charge upon real estate of one only of several legacies if the personal estate should not be sufficient as intended for the exclusive benefit of that legatee, but construes the intention of the testator to be, that all his legacies shall be paid, and therefore that the charge is to take effect if the personal estate be insufficient for the payment of all the legacies. Ib.

—— Legacy charged on Real Estate—Legatee dying before Pay Day.]—Legacy charged on real estate, and payable at a future day, sinks, as to the real estate, by the death of the legatee before the time of payment, and the assets cannot be marshalled. Pearce v. Loman, 3 Ves. 135.

Where a legacy is given out of a mixed fund of real and personal estate, payable at a future day, and the legatee dies before the day of payment, it is doubtful whether the court will marshal assets so as to turn such legacy upon the personal estate, in which case it would be vested and transmissible; whereas, as against the real estate it would sink by the death of the legatee. Prowse v. Abingdon, 1 Atk. 482.

As between Legatees and others—Creditors—Mortgagees—Devisees.]—Court will marshal assets in favour of legatees, where specialty creditors exhaust, as against the heir, in respect of estate descending, and against residuary devisee, but not as against a specific devisee. Hanby v. Roberts, Ambl. 127; Dick. 104; 2 Coll. C. C. 512, n.

A testator, after directing payment of his debts out of the proceeds of his personal estate and certain real estate, and bequeathing the surplus of this mixed fund to C., devised the residue of his real estate to C., "nevertheless charged in manner thereinafter mentioned," and then followed the bequest of an annuity charged on the estates subject to the last-mentioned devise. He then bequeathed a legacy to C., and the personal assets being insufficient for the discharge of the debts:—Held, the residuary devise being regarded as specific, that the legatee was not entitled to marshal the assets as against the devisee. Hensman v. Fryer, 39 L. J., Ch. 97; L. R. 3 Ch. 420; 17 L. T. 394; 16 W. R. 162. Reversing, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 681.

If a creditor by bond exhaust the personal estate, a legatee shall stand in his place and be paid out of real estate. Burton v. Pierpoint, 2 P. W. 81. S. P., Tipping v. Tipping, 1 P. W. 730.

Right of legatees to stand in the place of specialty creditors, paid out of the personal estates, against estates descended. Aldrich v. Cooper, 8 Ves. 396; 7 R. R. 86.

Legatees not entitled to stand in the place of bond creditors, and to have satisfaction out of the real estate devised, but are entitled to stand in the place of mortgagees. Forrester v. Leigh, Ambl. 172.

A. devises (after payment of his debts, which he wills to be first paid) his lands (in mortgage) to B., his wife, for life, and after her death to C., and directs the residue of his personal estate to be placed out at interest, B. to have the interest during her life, and after her death to C., and gives B. 1,500*l.*, provided she accept the devises and bequests in lieu of dower; there is not sufficient personal estate to pay the debts and legacies; if the mortgagee take part of the personal estate, the legatee shall, for so much, stand in his place. Lutkins v. Leigh, Cas. t. Tal. 53. S. P., Norris v. Norris, Dick. 542.

Where the mortgage debts of a testator are primarily payable out of his personal estate, the devisees of a mortgaged estate are not entitled to have the mortgage debt satisfied out of the personal estate until the pecuniary and specific legatees and annuitants are satisfied; the pecuniary legatees and annuitants being entitled to have the assets marshalled, so that any payment in respect of the mortgage debt of the personal estate would have to be recouped by the mortgaged estate. Porcher v. Wilson, 14 W. R. 1011.

Where the testator gave his wife an annuity, and made it a primary charge, in priority of all other legacies, on a leasehold, which was, with two policies, subject to two mortgages, and directed that if the rents were insufficient to satisfy the annuity, then to be paid out of his other personal estate; the executors paid off the mortgages out of the proceeds of the policies and the general personal estate, and the rent was found insufficient to pay the annuity in full:—Held, that the legatees (other than the wife) were entitled to have the assets marshalled, and to stand in the place of the mortgagees, to the extent of so much of the mortgage as should be so apportioned upon the leasehold estate. Johnson v. Child, 4 Hare, 87.

One seised in fee owes debt by bond, and devises his lands to his heir in tail, and gives several legacies, after which he dies, leaving the heir his executor; the heir, with personal estate, pays off the bond debts, by which means there are not assets to pay the legacies; the legatees are without remedy, the land being devised in tail to the heir; otherwise had the land descended to such heir in fee. Herne v. Meyrick, 1 P. W. 201; Salk. 416.

So, though the court will marshal the assets in favour of a simple contract creditor, and (generally speaking) in favour of a legatee, yet where such legatee is a pecuniary one, he will not be relieved by being permitted to come in the place of the bond creditors upon the land in the hands of a devisee thereof. Ib.

One dies indebted by bond, and by will gives a legacy of 500*l.*, and devises his lands in fee to J., leaving a personal estate sufficient only to pay the bond; the legatee shall not stand in the place of the bond creditor, to charge the land, in regard the land is specifically devised; secus, if the land had descended to the heir. Clifton v. Burt, 1 P. W. 679; Pre. Ch. 540.

A legatee in the will of a tenant in tail has no equity to throw judgments which are a charge on the estate entailed, exclusively on it in exoneration of the testator's general assets. Douglas v. Cooksey, Ir. R. 2 Eq. 311.

A testator seised absolutely of the lands of A., and in tail of the lands of B., by his will left an annuity charged on all his property. A judgment creditor, whose judgment was a charge on both, sold the lands of A., which were insufficient to pay him, and afterwards sold the lands of B. for the balance due to him:—Held, that the annuitant had no equity to marshal, as against the remainderman in tail, so as to be recouped out of the produce of the sale of B. the amount paid to the judgment creditor out of the produce of the sale of A. Ib.

Real assets, descended, how marshalled between specialty and simple contract creditors and legatees. Fenhoulhet v. Passavant, Dick. 253.

—— Heir Devisee.]—Where real estates are devised to the heir, although for certain purposes he takes by descent, yet as between him and the devisees of other parts of the testator's estates, the estates devised to the former are not to be applied in payment of the debts in priority to the estates devised to the latter. Biederman v. Seymour, 3 Beav. 368; 10 L. J., Ch. 177.

Under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 106, s. 3, an heir to whom lands are devised by his ancestor, takes them as devisee for all purposes, and therefore the pecuniary legatees are not entitled to have the assets marshalled as against him. Strickland v. Strickland, 10 Sim. 374; 9 L. J., Ch. 60.

—— Charge of Debts on Real Estate.]—If one owes debts by bond, and devises his lands to J. in fee, and leaves a specific legacy, and dies, and the bond creditors come upon the specific legacy for payment of his debts, the specific legatee shall not stand in the place of the bond creditor, to charge the land, and why. Haslewood v. Pope, 3 P. W. 323.

One devises all his personal estate to his daughter, and all his real estate to trustees in trust, to pay debts, &c., remainder to his daughter in tail, remainder over; the personal estate shall, in the first place, be all applied to pay the debts. Ib.

On a devise of lands to pay debts, a legatee, whether specific or pecuniary, shall be paid out of the lands, if the simple contract creditors exhaust the personal estate. Ib.

Where the testator, by his will, had ordered his trustees to possess themselves of his estates and substance, and to pay debts, it was held, that this was a charge on the real estate, and that the assets should be marshalled for the legatees, to let them in so far as the personal estate had paid towards the debts. Foster v. Cook, 3 Bro. C. C. 347.

Testatrix, after giving an annuity and legacies, devised her real estate, subject to the said annuity and legacies, and her debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and the debts of her late brother; the assets were marshalled in favour of a legatee by a codicil. Norman v. Morrell, 4 Ves. 769; 4 R. R. 347.

The personal estate being amply sufficient for the debts, though not equal to the discharge of the legacies in full, and the real estate being devised, the court would not, under a direction to the executors to pay the debts and funeral expenses as soon as conveniently may be, marshal the assets in favour of the legacies. Keeling v. Brown, 5 Ves. 359; 5 R. R. 70.

A testator after bequeathing a number of pecuniary legacies to different persons, and giving a certain field to his godson, directed that all his debts and the above legacies should be paid and discharged within six months after his decease; and all the rest and residue of his estate, both real and personal, he gave to N. The personal estate proving insufficient to pay the debts and legacies, it was:—Held, upon demurrer to a bill by some of the legatees seeking to charge their legacies on the real estate which passed under the residuary devise to N., first, that there was no equity in favour of pecuniary legatees, to have the assets marshalled, so as to throw the debts upon the real estate devised to N.; but, secondly, that both the debts and legacies were, by the words of the will, effectually charged upon that estate. Mirehouse v. Scaife, 2 Myl. & C. 695; 7 L. J., Ch. 22. Affirming 1 Jur. 134 on different grounds.

A testator, by his will, directed that his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses should be paid out of the fund thereinafter provided for the payment thereof. He then devised his real estate to trustees for sale, and directed them, out of the proceeds, to pay his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and to hold the residue on certain trusts. He then bequeathed his personal estate, after and subject to the payment of his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses:—Held, that the personal estate was the primary fund for the payment of debts; held, also, that the doctrine of marshalling was applicable in favour of the legatees and annuitants, and that they might stand in the place of the creditors as against the real estate devised in trust for sale and payment of debts. Paterson v. Scott, 1 De G. M. & G. 531; 21 L. J., Ch. 346; 16 Jur. 898.

A testator devised real estates upon trust for payment of his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and subject thereto upon various trusts; and bequeathed legacies and annuities:—Held, a case for marshalling at the instance of a legatee of an annuity where the personal estate had been exhausted in payment of debts. Ib.

A testator bequeathed legacies to A., B. and C., payable out of his personal estate, and he devised his real estates, subject to the payment of his debts, to D. and E. The personal estate being exhausted in payment of the debts, the legatees were held entitled on the principle of marshalling to have recourse for payment to the real estate to the prejudice of the devisees. Surtees v. Parkin, 19 Beav. 406.

The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, has not affected the law as to the marshalling of assets in favour of pecuniary legatees against devisees of real estate charged with or devised subject to the testator's debts. Rickard v. Barrett, 3 Kay & J. 289.

The question now, as before the act, is one simply of intention on the whole of the will. Ib.

A mere charge of debts upon the real estate or a mere devise of the real estate, subject to testator's debts, without any trust, is sufficient, in the event of the personal estate proving inadequate to pay both debts and legacies, to entitle the legatees to come upon the real estate so far as the personalty has been applied in payment of debts. Ib.

A testatrix, after directing her debts and funeral and testamentary expenses to be paid by her executors as soon as conveniently might be, and making a certain specific bequest, gave a legacy of 500*l.* to L. M. She then made other specific bequests, and devised and bequeathed the residue of her personal estate and all her real estate to her trustees upon trust for sale and conversion, and to hold the proceeds of sale upon trust for certain beneficiaries therein mentioned, and she appointed her trustees executors of her will. The personal estate not specifically bequeathed was insufficient to pay the legacies in full after satisfying the debts and funeral and testamentary expenses:—Held, that L. M. was entitled to have the assets marshalled so that her legacy of 500*l.* might be considered a charge on the real estate to the extent to which the personal estate had been applied in the payment of the debts and funeral and testamentary expenses. Stokes, In re, Parsons v. Miller, 67 L. T. 223. S. P., Salt, In re, Brothwood v. Keeling, 64 L. J., Ch. 494; [1895] 2 Ch. 203; 43 W. R. 500. Contra, Bate, In re, Bate v. Bate, 59 L. J., Ch. 277; 43 Ch. D. 600; 62 L. T. 559.

A testator directed estates to be sold, and the produce to be applied in payment of the mortgages due from him, and the residue of the produce to be considered and applied as part of the residue of his personal estate; and he gave and devised the residue of his real and personal estate upon trust, after payment of his just debts, for the benefit of all his children; and the testator afterwards, by a codicil, confined the residuary gift of the produce of the estates directed to be sold to his younger children:—Held, first, that the devisees of the produce of the real estate directed to be sold were entitled to have the personal estate applied in payment of the mortgages; secondly, that pecuniary legatees were entitled to stand in the place of the mortgagees, against the estates so devised, to the extent to which the mortgages have been paid out of the personal estate; and, thirdly, that such pecuniary legatees were not entitled to stand in the place of a vendor to the testator, part of whose purchase-money remained unpaid at the testator's death, to the extent to which the purchase-money had been paid out of the personal estate. Wythe v. Henniker, 2 Myl. & K. 635; 3 L. J., Ch. 24.

—— Unpaid Vendor.]—M. agreed to purchase an estate of plaintiff for 1,200*l.*, but died before he had paid the whole of the purchase-money. M., by will, gave 800*l.* to his sister, and devised the estate purchased, and all his personal estate, to J., his executor, who committed a devastavit, and died, whereupon the purchased estate descended upon B., his son. The court, to give the legatee a chance of being paid out of the personal estate, directed plaintiff to take satisfaction on the purchased estate for the remainder of the purchase-money. Pollexfen v. Moore, 3 Atk. 272.

Pecuniary legatees are entitled, as against the devisees (under the doctrine of marshalling assets), to stand in the place of an unpaid vendor whose lien has exhausted the personal assets. Lilford (Lord) v. Keck, 35 Beav. 77; 35 L. J., Ch. 302; L. R. 1 Eq. 347; 14 W. R. 240.

Where the vendor of an estate would have absorbed the personal assets in payment of his purchase-money, a ratable contribution was decreed as between the devisee of the estate and the legatees and annuitants under the purchaser's will. Headley v. Readhead, G. Coop. 50.

If the vendor of an estate the contract for which was not complete in the lifetime of the testator, who was the purchaser, is afterwards paid the purchase-money out of the personal assets, the simple contract creditors of the testator shall stand in the place of the vendor in respect of his lien on the estate. Quære, if a pecuniary legatee would be entitled to the same benefit against the devisee. Selby v. Selby, 4 Russ. 336; 6 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 117; 28 R. R. 117.

Where a party, who had contracted for the purchase of an estate, died leaving the greater part of the purchase-money unpaid, and the estate descended to his heir-at-law, the vendor's lien for the unpaid purchase-money was marshalled for the benefit of a pecuniary legatee. Sproule v. Prior, 8 Sim. 189; 6 L. J., Ch. 1. Overruling Coppin v. Coppin, 2 P. W. 291.

Paraphernalia, Claim for.]—Where the personal estate has been exhausted to pay specialty creditors, the widow shall stand in their place for her paraphernalia upon the real assets of the heir. Snelson v. Corbet, 3 Atk. 369. The widow shall stand in the place of creditors for the amount of her paraphernalia against real assets devised. Tynt v. Tynt, 2 P. W. 542.

Between Legal and Equitable Assets.]—Where there are legal and also equitable assets, the creditors who will take their satisfaction out of the legal assets shall have no benefit of the equitable assets until the other creditors, who can only be paid out of those assets, have thereout received an equal portion of their respective debts. Sheppard v. Kent, 2 Vern. 436; Pre. Ch. 190.

A. devises all his real and personal estate to his executors and their heirs, in trust to sell and pay all his debts; his real estate being only equitable assets, and the testator leaving debts by bond and simple contract; if the bond creditors are paid out of the personal estate, they shall bring it back again into hotchpot, if they would be paid anything out of the real estate. Deg v. Deg, 2 P. W. 416. And see Hazlewood v. Pope, 3 P. W. 323; Car v. Burlington (Countess), 1 P. W. 228.

J. E., in 1829, devised all his estates and effects to trustees in trust for sale and payment of debts. Subsequently to the date of his will, J. E. purchased other real estates, which, on his death in 1852, descended to his heir. In administering J. E.'s assets under the direction of the court:—Held, that specialty creditors, resorting to the descended estates, must first bring into hotchpot the assets so received before they could participate in the benefit of the trust. Chapman v. Esgar, 18 Jur. 341.

e. CARRYING ON THE TRADE OF THE DECEASED.

Where the Deceased is a Member of a Partnership.]—Where executors justified in continuing capital of a deceased partner in the concern. Fearnside v. Derham, 13 L. J., Ch. 354.

Surviving partners, and executors who are not partners, but have continued their testator's assets in the business, are liable to account for profits made in respect of the value of a deceased partner's share only where there is no absolute contract for vesting in the survivors the share of the deceased partner or only an option to take his share on certain conditions, and the surviving partners neglect to perform such conditions or to liquidate the affairs of the partnership. Vyse v. Foster, 44 L. J., Ch. 37; L. R. 7 H. L. 318; 31 L. T. 177; 23 W. R. 355.

By articles of partnership between three persons, it was stipulated that, in case of the death of any one of them, the partnership should cease on a certain subsequent day, and the property of the partnership be then divided between the surviving partners and the executors of the deceased partner. One partner, by his will, directed all his property to be converted and invested for the benefit of his children, and appointed his co-partners his executors, and died, leaving his children all infants. The two surviving co-partners, having proved the will, had the property of the partnership valued, and then proceeded to continue the business under a new firm, and debited the new firm with the value of the testator's share of the partnership property, but did not otherwise execute the directions either of the articles or of the will:—Held, that this transaction must be treated as a nullity so far as the children's interests were concerned. Wedderburn v. Wedderburn, 4 Myl. & C. 41; 8 L. J., Ch. 177; 3 Jur. 596. Affirming, 2 Keen, 722.

The executors of a testator, who were also his surviving partners, and had continued to employ his share of the partnership capital in trade, held answerable for a proportionate share of the profits of the trade, notwithstanding that the capital of the partnership at the time of the testator's decease consisted only of debts due to the partnership. Ib.

When a testator has authorised the employment of his estate in trade, though the firm in which it is so employed becomes bankrupt, no proof can be made against the estate of the bankrupts in respect of the money of the testator so employed. Scott v. Izon, 34 Beav. 434.

A testator was partner in a well-established and prosperous business under articles by which, on the death of any partner, his share was to be taken by the surviving partners at a price to be ascertained from the last stock-taking, and to be paid by instalments extending over two years, with interest at 5*l.* per cent. per annum from his death. He appointed three executors, one of whom was one of his partners in the business, and another, some years after his death, became a partner; the third never was concerned in the business. The value of his share was ascertained but not paid, the amount being allowed for some years to remain in the hands of the firm, who treated it in their books as a debt, and allowed interest on it at 5*l.* per cent. per annum with yearly rests. One of the residuary legatees, upon becoming entitled to payment of her share, refused to accept payment on the above footing, and filed a bill against the executors claiming to be entitled to a share in the profits of the business arising from the use of the testator's capital. The money had been left in the hands of the firm with the knowledge of the testator's family, and all his residuary legatees, with the exception of the plaintiff, approved of what had been done:—Held, that she was not entitled to any accounts of profits, the mere delay by executors in calling in a debt due to the testator from a firm of which some of the executors are members not giving his estate any right to share in the profits of the business. Vyse v. Foster, 42 L. J., Ch. 245; L. R. 8 Ch. 309; 27 L. T. 774; 21 W. R. 207. Affirmed, 44 L. J., Ch. 37; L. R. 7 H. L. 318; 31 L. T. 177; 23 W. R. 355, supra.

Five contractors jointly contracted to build a harbour, the building of which would take at least five years. Soon afterwards one of the contractors died:—Held, that his estate was entitled to share in the profits of the contract; and that those profits were to be the actual profits ascertained when the contract was completed, and not by valuation or by sale of the contract. M'Clean v. Kennard, 43 L. J., Ch. 323; L. R. 9 Ch. 336; 30 L. T. 186; 22 W. R. 186.

The deceased contractor named in his will three executors. Before the will was proved, the four other contractors signed an agreement, in which they, and also the three executors, were named as parties, a blank being left for the names of the executors. The will was afterwards proved by two only of the executors, and those two executors then signed the agreement:—Held, first, on the construction of the agreement, that, though signed by two only of the executors, it was binding on the other contractors; secondly, that no regard could be paid to evidence that the other contractors expected the concurrence of the third executor, and would not have entered into the agreement if they had been aware that he would renounce. Ib.

Liability of Executor.]—By the law of England, if an executor or a trustee joins a partnership or company, he is personally liable for all the consequences, and if he acted within the scope of his authority he must seek indemnity from the trust estate. Lumsden v. Buchanan, 4 Macq. H. L. 950. S. P., Barker v. Parker, 1 Term Rep. 295; 1 R. R. 201.

Where the executors of a deceased partner continued his share of the partnership property in trade for the benefit of his infant daughter:—Held, that they were liable upon a bill drawn for the accommodation of the partnership, and paid in discharge of a partnership debt, although their names were not added to the firm, but the trade was carried on by the other partners under the same firm as before, and the executors, when they divided the profits and loss of the trade, carried the same to the account of the infant, and took no part of the profits themselves. Wightman v. Townroe, 1 M. & S. 412; 14 R. R. 475.

An executor of a trader carrying on the trade after his death, though avowedly in the character of executor, is nevertheless personally liable for all the debts contracted in the trade after the testator's death, whether he is entitled or not to be wholly, or to any extent, indemnified by the testator's personal estate, and whether the testator's estate is sufficient or insufficient for that purpose. Labouchere v. Tupper, 11 Moore, P. C. 198; 5 W. R. 597.

Neither does the propriety of the executor's conduct, as between himself and those beneficially interested in the testator's personal estate, give the creditors of the trade, becoming so after the death of the testator, the rights of creditors of the testator; it being immaterial, as far as they are concerned, whether the testator, if he had a partner, was bound by a covenant with him that the executor should continue the trade in partnership with the surviving partners. Ib.

A promissory note given to a creditor by one of the executors in the name of the testator's firm, while the executor was carrying on the business pursuant to directions in the will, but was ignorant that the estate was insolvent:—Held, personally binding on the executors. Lucas v. Williams, 3 Giff. 150; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 207.

Held on appeal, that the right of the executor to restrain proceedings on a judgment which entitled the creditor to execution de bonis propriis could not be asserted in an action to administer the estate of his testator, and decision affirmed on that ground. S. C., 4 De G. F. & J. 436; 10 W. R. 606.

Executors carried on their testator's trade in that character, and in the ordinary course of the business accepted a bill, describing themselves in it simply as executors of their testator:—Held, that neither these circumstances, nor the form of the acceptance, relieved the estate of one of the executors, who died in the lifetime of the other, from the ordinary equitable liability upon the bill. Liverpool Borough Bank v. Walker, 4 De G. & J. 24.

When Authorised.]—It is a rule, without exception, that, to authorise executors to carry on a trade with the property of a testator held by them in trust, there ought to be the most distinct and positive authority and direction given by the will itself for that purpose. Kirkman v. Booth, 11 Beav. 273; 18 L. J., Ch. 25; 13 Jur. 525.

A gift and devise by one of the partners in a cotton-mill of all his property, estate, and effects, to trustees, upon trust to lay out and invest two third parts thereof upon real or good personal security, or to transfer the same, and allow it to remain in the concern of which he was one of the co-partners in the names of his trustees, and alter, vary, change, and transpose the same as they should think fit, and stand possessed of the same upon trust for the two sons of the testator, with certain powers of advancement out of their respective shares:—Held, to authorise the executors to continue the moneys of the testator in the trade, but not to trade with the moneys by becoming partners in the firm. Travis v. Milne, 9 Hare, 141; 20 L. J., Ch. 665.

The surviving partners of a testator, dealing with the property of the testator with the knowledge that it belongs to his estate, are bound to inquire into the trusts on which it is held, and are liable as if they had actual notice of those trusts. Ib.

A testator appointed an executor, with power to manage, conduct, carry on, and improve his estate. The property consisted of a moiety of an estate in Jamaica. The trustee took a lease of the other moiety, and managed the whole for the trust estate:—Held, that although the taking of this lease was not authorised by the will, yet that, under the circumstances of this case, the acquiescence of the cestui que trust and otherwise, the trust estate was liable for arrears of rent and dilapidations. Neate v. Pink, 3 Macn. & G. 476; 21 L. J., Ch. 574; 16 Jur. 69.

Power of Administrator cum testamento annexo.]—A testator empowered the executors or executor acting under his will to carry on his business, if they should see fit. The executors renounced probate. It was held, that the administratrix could not carry on the business under the power. Lambert v. Rendle, 3 N. R. 247.

Power of Court to Authorise.]—In a suit instituted for administration of the estate of an intestate trader by beneficiaries, where there are infants interested, the court has no jurisdiction to authorise the administrator to carry on the trade of the intestate. Land v. Land, 43 L. J., Ch. 311.

The court has jurisdiction in an administration suit to direct a trade or business in which minors are interested to be continued, and will so direct if it is clearly for their benefit. Perry v. Perry, Ir. R. 3 Eq. 452.

Rights of Executor—Indemnity.]—Executors who carry on the business of their testator in accordance with his instructions and with the assent of the creditors are entitled to be indemnified out of the testator's estate against liabilities properly incurred in the conduct of the business in priority to the claims of the testator's creditors. Dowse v. Gorton, 60 L. J., Ch. 745; [1891] A. C. 190; 64 L. T. 809; 40 W. R. 17—H. L. (E.)

A similar rule applies where a specific portion of the assets is appropriated to the carrying on of the trade. Johnson, In re, Shearman v. Robinson, 49 L. J., Ch. 745; 15 Ch. D. 548; 43 L. T. 372; 29 W. R. 168.

The principle of Dowse v. Gorton ([1891] A. C. 190), that creditors of a testator's business carried on after the death are, through the executors, entitled to have their claims discharged in priority to creditors of the testator at his death, is applicable although the will contains no power to carry on the testator's business, and although the business has been carried on under the direction of the court in administration proceedings. Brooke, In re, Brooke v. Brooke, 64 L. J., Ch. 21; [1894] 2 Ch. 600; 8 R. 444; 71 L. T. 398.

The sole executrix of a testator, who was also his sole legatee, carried on his business for about six months after the testator's death. No authority to carry on the business was contained in the will, but the creditors of the testator assented to its being carried on by the executrix. An order was afterwards made by the court that the deceased's estate should be administered in bankruptcy. Williams, J., held that the executrix had carried on the business for the purpose of properly realising the estate, and was entitled to an indemnity for debts incurred by her in carrying on the business, and that her creditors, in respect of such debts, should be paid in priority to creditors of the deceased:—Held, that the executrix was not entitled to an indemnity, on the ground that the business was carried on by her, not for the purpose of winding up the estate, but for her own maintenance and benefit, and that there was no evidence of such a consent by the creditors of the testator as would make her their agent in carrying on the business. Millard, In re, Yates, Ex parte, 72 L. T. 823—C. A. Reversing, 2 Manson, 56.

Executors directed by the will of their testator to employ his estate in his business do not lose their right to an indemnity against the estate for debts incurred by them in the business by reason of their inability to account, and their creditors consequently do not lose their right of claiming through that indemnity against the estate. Kidd, In re, Kidd v. Kidd, 8 R. 261; 70 L. T. 648; 42 W. R. 571.

A testator by his will directed his executors to carry on his business. This they did, and incurred certain debts. A creditor of the testator then commenced an administration action, and obtained judgment. The assets were insufficient to pay both the costs and expenses of the executors and the debts incurred by them in carrying on the business. The minutes were referred to the judge to be spoken to, by order of the district registrar:—Held, that, the executors having continued the business lawfully with the consent of the creditors, the general rule applied, and the executors were entitled to be paid out of the assets their costs and expenses in priority to the debts incurred by them in carrying on the business. Owen, In re, Frisby v. Owen, 66 L. T. 718.

An executor who in the winding up of the testator's affairs, and acting in pursuance of the will, and according to testator's course of business, gives a promissory note for a trade debt of the testator, is not entitled to be indemnified in full in respect of the promissory note out of an insolvent estate. Lucas v. Williams, 4 De G. F. & J. 439; 10 W. R. 677.

—— Right to Sue.]—Where executors continued to carry on the business of the testator, and drew bills as executors for goods sold to the defendant, several of which bills the defendant accepted and paid:—Held, that they might sue as executors for the price of such goods. Aspinall v. Wake, 3 M. & Scott, 423; 10 Bing. 51; 2 L. J., C. P. 227.

—— Price of Goods supplied.]—A licensed victualler appointed as his executors the brewer and the spirit merchant with whom he dealt, and directed them to carry on his trade. Supplies were furnished by them for that purpose. The court refused to declare that they were entitled to the cost price only, but directed an inquiry whether the supplies were properly furnished at the ordinary market price. Smith v. Langford, 2 Beav. 362.

Where an executor, in carrying on the business of the testator, has supplied such business with goods, the onus lies upon the executor to show, as to goods not of his own manufacture, what was the cost price, and as to goods of his own manufacture what would be a fair allowance in respect of their cost, including in such allowance a fair proportion of establishment expenses and interest on capital, treating the manufactory as part of his capital. Williams, In re, Morgan v. Williams, 40 W. R. 636.

—— Lien.]—Upon the decease of a partner in trade, the firm was indebted to him for money advanced; the business was continued by the surviving partner, who, with the money of the firm, made additions to the stock in trade:—Held, as the executors of the deceased partner had permitted the continuance of the business, that they had no lien upon the subsequently acquired stock in trade for the money advanced to the firm by their testator. Payn v. Hornby, 27 L. J., Ch. 689; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 446.

Right of Trade Creditors.]—Where a trader has by his will directed his executor or trustee to carry on his trade and to employ a specific portion of the trust estate for the purpose, the rule is, that, though the executor or trustee is personally liable for debts incurred by him in carrying on the trade pursuant to the will, he has the right to resort for his indemnity to the specific assets so directed to be employed, but no further; and, consequently, the creditors of the trade are entitled to stand in the place of the executor and the trustee and to claim the benefit of that right so as to obtain payment of their debts: but the rule does not apply where the executor or trustee is in default to the specific trust estate devoted to the trade; in such a case, the defaulting executor or trustee not being himself entitled to an indemnity except upon terms of making good his default, the creditors are in no better position, and are therefore not entitled to have their debts paid out of the specific assets unless the default is made good. Johnson, In re, Shearman v. Robinson, 49 L. J., Ch. 745; 15 Ch. D. 548; 43 L. T. 372; 29 W. R. 168.

An action having been instituted to administer the estate of a testator who had impliedly directed his executors to carry on his trade, certain persons who were creditors since his death applied for liberty to attend the proceedings with a view to enforcing their rights against the assets:—Held, that it was premature so to apply till, on further consideration, the executors were proved not to be in default, as in that case alone would the creditors be entitled to stand in the place of the executors in their right of indemnity against the estate. Morris, In re, 23 L. R., Ir. 333.

—— In respect of Goods bought by Representative.]—The administratrix of an intestate, a dealer in builder's materials, carried on the intestate's trade, and bought cement for the purposes of the trade. On the 15th of April, 1886, a receiver and manager was appointed in an administration action by the infant child of the intestate. On the 22nd of April the vendors recovered judgment against the administratrix for the price of the cement, but judgment was not signed till the 18th of May, on which day the cement remaining in specie was sold along with other effects under an order in the administration action. Execution was never issued by the vendors of the cement, but they applied in the administration action to have the proceeds of its sale applied in payment of their debt. The court refused this relief, but declared them entitled to a lien on the beneficial interest of the administratrix in the intestate's estate. The vendors appealed:—Held, that the cement, as between the vendors and administratrix, was the property of the administratrix, she being a debtor to them for the price, and that as between the administratrix and the estate the cement belonged to the estate subject to the right of the administratrix to be indemnified for the price if she was not a debtor to the estate—that the vendors could not have any higher claim than hers, and were not entitled to anything more than the order gave them. Whether the order was right in declaring them entitled to a lien, quære. Evans, In re, Evans v. Evans, 34 Ch. D. 597; 56 L. T. 768; 35 W. R. 586—C. A.

The widow of a testator carried on his business under a direction in the will that the executors should allow her to carry it on, and to have, while carrying it on, the use of the capital employed in it, and of his other personal estate. After her death, the plaintiffs, who had supplied her with goods for the purposes of the business, filed a bill against the testator's personal representative, claiming a lien on the funds employed in the trade, and by their interrogatories asked for accounts of the testator's personal estate and of the personal estate employed in the business. The executor declined to set forth the accounts, on the ground that if it should be decided at the hearing that the plaintiffs had no such lien as they claimed, the discovery would be useless:—Held, that the executor was bound to give the account. Thompson v. Dunn, L. R. 5 Ch. 573; 18 W. R. 854.

—— Creditor, when he can administer.]—If a testator gives his executors power to trade with a portion of his capital, a creditor for debts incurred by the executor has no right to a decree to administer the assets employed in trade. Owen v. Delamere, 42 L. J., Ch. 232; L. R. 15 Eq. 134; 27 L. T. 647; 21 W. R. 218.

Rights of Testator's Creditors.]—The executrix of a trader, who was also his residuary legatee, continued after his death to carry on his business ostensibly as her own:—Held, that the assets of the business in her hands were not impressed with any trust in favour of the testator's creditors, and consequently that, on her second marriage, such of those assets as remained in specie, as well as the property into which the rest had been converted, passed to her second husband. Fells, In re, Andrews, Ex parte, 46 L. J., Bk. 23; 4 Ch. D. 509; 36 L. T. 38; 25 W. R. 382.

—— Rule in Clayton's Case.]—A., the widow and administratrix of B., continues B.'s trade after his decease. B. at his death was indebted to C. on balance of account. A. continues to receive goods from, and to make payments to C. as B. had done, and she is charged in account by C. with the debt. The payments made by her to C. exceed the debt, but a balance is ultimately due to C.:—Held, that B.'s debt was discharged by A.'s payments, and that the ultimate balance cannot be proved as a debt against A.'s estate. Sterndale v. Hankinson, 1 Sim. 393; 27 R. R. 210.

Carrying on through Agent.—Three executors and trustees, A., B. and C., were authorised to carry on the testator's farm; A., with the concurrence of B. and C., managed the whole affairs relating thereto:—Held, that in taking the accounts against B. and C., A. was to be considered their agent. Toplis v. Hurrell, 19 Beav. 423.

—— Right to Sue.]—If executors, who are by their testator's will to carry on his business for the benefit of his family, suffer a person to carry on the trade in his own name, such person may bring actions in his own name for goods sold by him, although he is afterwards accountable to the executors. Wilkes v. Lister, 6 Esp. 78.

What Assets may be employed.]—Under bankruptcy of executor and trustee, directed by will to carry on trade, and a limited sum to be paid to him for that purpose:—Held, the general assets beyond that fund were not liable. Garland, Ex parte, 10 Ves. 110; 1 Smith, 220; 7 R. R. 352.

Testator directing, by will, his trade to be carried on with the capital then employed therein; and executors failing in the business:—Held, the capital only, and not the general assets of testator, was liable to creditors. Richardson, Ex parte, 3 Madd. 138; Buck, 202; 18 R. R. 204.

Proof was allowed in respect of trust property of infants continued by the administratrix in the trade in which the testator was engaged, carried on by the bankrupt's constituting a new firm of which the administratrix was a member; and the infants might prove either against the separate estate of the administratrix, or the joint estate, as might be most advantageous for them. Watson, Ex parte, 2 Rose, 259; 2 Ves. & B. 414; 13 R. R. 128.

A testator by his will, dated 1816, gave the mass of his property to his wife for life, remainder to his children, and appointed his son, the bankrupt, and his widow, executors. The trusts on the will were, inter alia, that the executors should carry on the testator's business, retaining therein the sum of 1,200*l.* The bankrupt and his mother carried on business till 1821, when the widow retired from business, and the bankrupt, by deed, admitted that there was a sum of 497*l.* odd in the business, and agreed to pay the widow an annuity and allow interest on the capital remaining in the business. The adjudication took place in November, 1849:—Held, that the cestuis que trustent had an equitable charge on the bankrupt's interest under the will for the sum of 497*l.* odd, and that this property under the will ought to be sold; and if insufficient to realise a sufficient sum, that the cestuis que trustent might prove for the residue. Good, Ex parte, 1 Fonb. N. R. 78.

Where a testator directs his trade to be carried on after his death, such part of his property only will be liable, in case of bankruptcy, which he has directed to be embarked in the trade. Thompson v. Andrews, 1 Myl. & K. 116; 2 L. J., Ch. 46.

Where a testator directed a specific portion of his property to be employed in carrying on his trade, creditors whose debts had arisen in the course of the subsequent trading were allowed to claim only against such specified portion of the assets. Cutbush v. Cutbush, 1 Beav. 184; 8 L. J., Ch. 175; 3 Jur. 142.

A person in trade, by his will, directed that his wife should carry on his trade until his youngest child should attain twenty-one, and that his wife should have the occupation of the house of business, and the management and disposal of the capital stock belonging to him at the time of his decease. The testator also authorised the trustees to augment or diminish the capital employed therein as they pleased. The trustees, who were also named as executors in the will, renounced probate, and administration with the will annexed was granted to the widow, who carried on the trade, and wasted and misapplied the capital stock and effects embarked therein:—Held, that as the trade was carried on by the widow, to whom the power to increase the capital was not given, such part only of the testator's estate as was embarked in the trade was liable to the payment of the debts incurred by the widow in carrying it on. Ib.

Where an order is made in an administration suit that executors may carry on the business of the testator, parties supplying on credit what is necessary for that purpose are entitled to be paid out of the funds in court forming part of the testator's estate, though the estate is insufficient to pay testator's debts. Tinkler v. Hindmarsh, 2 Beav. 348.

A trader bequeathed to his nephew T. the house and concerns in which he carried on his business, together with the stock, subject to his legacies and an annuity to his wife, the annuity to be paid to her by T. out of the profits of the business to be carried on by T. in the testator's house; and in case T. should at any time wish to discontinue carrying on the business, the testator directed that his wife should be paid 1,000*l.* in full for all claims, and that her annuity should thenceforth cease. He bequeathed several legacies, and appointed T. his executor and residuary legatee. T. continued to carry on the testator's trade, and became bankrupt:—Held, that the will contained such a direction to carry on the business as would, on T.'s bankruptcy, peril the trade assets existing at the testator's death, to the prejudice of the legatees. Hall v. Fennell, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 615.

A direction in a will that the testator's trade shall be carried on does not of itself authorise the employment in the trade of more of the testator's property than was employed in it at his decease; nor does such a direction, coupled with a direction that the testator's debts shall be paid, authorise a mortgage of his real estate, not employed at his death in the trade, for the purpose of carrying it on. M'Neillie v. Acton, 4 De G. M. & G. 744; 23 L. J., Ch. 11; 17 Jur. 1041; 2 Eq. R. 21.

—— Implied Power to mortgage Premises.]—A testator by his will directed that his business should be carried on by his executors thereinafter named, and appointed as such his wife and S., the latter of whom renounced probate. The testator had carried on his trade in premises of which he was seised for a freehold estate. These were not devised to the executors. The testator had deposited the title-deeds of the premises with his bankers by way of equitable mortgage. The testator's widow, who proved the will, continued carrying on his trade, and after his death she obtained from the bank a further advance for the purpose, as she stated, of carrying on the business, on the security of the deeds, which remained throughout with the bank:—Held, that the direction to carry on the business was given to the executors virtute officii, and that all powers incident thereto were capable of being exercised by the acting executrix; but held also, that the freehold premises were not assets employed by the testator in the business at the time of his death, within the doctrine of M'Neillie v. Acton (4 De G. M. & G. 744), so as to impliedly authorise the executrix to mortgage them for the purpose of carrying on the business, and that, therefore, the deeds were not a valid security for the advances made subsequently to the testator's death. Devitt v. Kearney, 11 L. R., Ir. 225.

But on appeal to the court of appeal in Ireland:—Held, (a) that the absence of a devise of the freehold premises to the executors did not prevent their making a valid mortgage thereof; (b) that the fact that some of the advances were made before probate was immaterial; (c) that the direction to carry on the business was given to the executors virtute officii, and that all powers incident thereto were capable of being exercised by the acting executrix alone; and (d) that a fresh deposit of the title-deeds was unnecessary. Devitt v. Kearney, 13 L. R., Ir. 45—C. A.

Held, also, that the freehold premises were assets employed by the testator for the purpose of his business at the time of his death, and that the executrix was impliedly authorised to mortgage them for the purpose of carrying on the business, and therefore the deposit constituted a valid security for all the advances. Ib.

And see SELLING OR MORTGAGING ESTATE, II. d. 4, ante, col. 1250.

—— Right to Premises and Plant.]—A testator, after giving legacies and annuities, proceeded to say: "My executors may realise such part of my estate as they think right and in their judgment to pay the aforenamed legacies." He then directed his business to be carried on till his son attained the age of thirty, but did not dispose of the profits, nor did his will contain any further disposition of his real or personal estate, except a gift of a particular house. The testator carried on his business in a freehold mill which was his own property:—Held, that, so long as the testator's business was continued for the purposes and under the directions of the will, the executors were entitled to the free use and occupation of the business premises, and of the fixed plant and machinery therein, without paying any rent for the same. Cameron, In re, Nixon v. Cameron, 53 L. J., Ch. 1139; 26 Ch. D. 19; 50 L. T. 339; 32 W. R. 834—C. A.

But held, that the descended real estate could not be affected by the direction to carry on the testator's business any further or otherwise than such carrying on might be necessary for payment of the legacies and annuities given by the will, and that, so soon as they were provided for, the direction to carry on the business became inoperative, and ceased to be binding either on the heir-at-law or the next of kin, and that any surplus profits which had arisen since the testator's decease, after providing for the legacies and annuities, must be apportioned between the heir-at-law and the next of kin according to the values of the real and personal estate employed in the business. Ib.

Other Matters — Admission of Executor as Member of Partnership.] — A testator was a member of a partnership at will in a bank without any provision entitling the executor of a deceased partner to an interest in the good-will of the concern. The credit in which the bank was rendered capital unnecessary, and at the testator's death the property of the concern exceeded its liabilities by a very small amount, the testator's share in which was far exceeded by the balance due from him to the bank on his private account, as a customer. After his death the surviving partners admitted into the firm his son, who was his executor, but who was not admitted into the firm in that character, and the business continued to be carried on without any separation or appropriation of the partnership assets as they existed at the testator's death. In a suit against the executor for the administration of the testator's estate:—Held, that he was not accountable to the testator's estate for the profits which he had received as a partner in the bank. Simpson v. Chapman, 4 De G. M. & G. 154.

—— Unauthorised Continuance of Trade—Liability of Executor.] — Executors who were directed by the will to call in the testator's personal estate, with all convenient speed, continued his trade for some years after his death, and ultimately a considerable loss was sustained. But the court refused to charge them with the loss, as they had acted bonâ fide, and according to the best of their judgment. Garrett v. Noble, 6 Sim. 504; 3 L. J., Ch. 159.

—— Right of Execution Creditor of Executor in respect of a Private Debt.]—If an executor, in pursuance of the directions contained in the testator's will, carries on the testator's business, and in so doing contracts debts, the fact that he has carried on the business in his own name and that the testator's assets employed in it are ostensibly the executor's own property will not entitle a judgment creditor of the executor to take in execution the testator's assets. Lapse of time and an enjoyment of the assets in a manner inconsistent with the trusts of the will, coupled with the consent of the beneficiaries, may, however, raise an inference of a gift of the assets by them to the executor, and entitle his judgment creditor to take them in execution. But, when the possession and the time which has elapsed are in accordance with the trusts of the will, no such inference can arise. Ray v. Ray (G. Coop. 264; 14 R. R. 255) distinguished. Morgan, In re, Pillgrem v. Pillgrem, 50 L. J., Ch. 834; 18 Ch. D. 93; 45 L. T. 183; 30 W. R. 223—C. A.

—— Power to postpone Sale of Business—Profits—Tenant for Life or Remainderman.]—A testator devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate upon the usual trusts for sale and conversion, the proceeds to be invested and to be held upon trust for his wife for life, and, after her death, for his children. The will contained the usual power to postpone the sale and conversion of the real and personal estate, and the usual direction that until sale and conversion the rents, profits, and income thereof should be paid to the same persons and applied in the same manner as the income of the trust estate. The will contained no reference whatever to the business of the testator, which comprised the bulk of his estate. The executors carried on the business for nearly two years with a view to its sale as a going concern, and the question arose whether the profits of the business during that period were to be treated as capital or income:—Held, that the executors had power to carry on the business for a reasonable period with a view to its sale as a going concern; and that, as the testator had expressly directed that the profits of his personal estate until conversion were to be treated as income, the general rule laid down in Howe v. Dartmouth (Earl) (7 Ves. 137; 6 R. R. 99) did not apply, and therefore the widow was entitled to the profits of the business. Brown v. Gellatly (L. R. 2 Ch. 751) and Kirkman v. Booth (11 Beav. 279) distinguished. Chancellor, In re, Chancellor v. Brown, 53 L. J., Ch. 443; 26 Ch. D. 42; 51 L. T. 33; 32 W. R. 465—C. A.

A direction in a will empowering trustees to postpone the sale and conversion of any part of the testator's property for such period as to them should seem expedient, justifies the trustees in postponing the sale of the testator's business, and in carrying on the business with a view to benefit the tenant for life who is entitled to the profits till sale. Crowther, In re, Midgley v. Crowther, 64 L. J., Ch. 537; [1895] 2 Ch. 56; 13 R. 496; 72 L. T. 762; 43 W. R. 571.

A power to postpone the sale of all or any part of a residue devised and bequeathed on trust to sell, and particularly to sell his business of a pawnbroker with all convenient speed:—Held, not to give power to carry on the business for an indefinite time. The court, under the circumstances, authorised the trustees to carry on one of the testator's two businesses (of a pawnbroker) for two years. Crowther, In re ([1895] 2 Ch. 56), considered. Smith, In re, Arnold v. Smith, 65 L. J., Ch. 269; [1896] 1 Ch. 171; 74 L. T. 14; 44 W. R. 280.

XI. DISTRIBUTION.

a. According to What Law.

According to Law of Domicil — Foreign Domicil — Interest.]—In an administration by the court of the assets in this country of a testator who had a foreign domicil at the time of his death, although the property will be distributed according to the law of the place of domicil, the payment of interest will be governed by the practice of the Court of Chancery. Hamilton v. Dallas, 38 L. T. 215; 26 W. R. 326.

Foreign Creditors.] — In the administration of the English estate of a deceased domiciled abroad, foreign creditors are entitled to dividends pari passu with English creditors. Wilson v. Dunsany (Lady), 18 Beav. 293; 23 L. J., Ch. 492; 18 Jur. 762, disapproved of. Klœbe, In re, Kannreuther v. Geiselbrecht, 54 L. J., Ch. 297; 28 Ch. D. 175; 52 L. T. 19; 33 W. R. 391.

See also INTERNATIONAL LAW.

b. BY STATUTES OF DISTRIBUTION.

The Intestates' Estates Act, 1890, charges an intestate's estate with 500*l. in favour of his widow, to be in addition to her share of residue where the estate exceeds* 500*l.*

Jurisdiction.]—The contention between the common law and the ecclesiastical court gave rise to the Statute of Distributions. Wallis v. Hodson, 2 Atk. 116.

The jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical court was made more extensive by the Statute of Distributions. Ib.

Bill for a distribution proper in this court. Howard v. Howard, 1 Vern. 134.

Construction of.]—The Statute of Distributions is to be construed by the rules of the civil law. The act of 1 Jac. 2, c. 17, is an act of continuance of the statute of 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 10. Wallis v. Hodson, 2 Atk. 116.

The difference between the civil and common law in the computation of the degrees of proximity, the former to be the rule in the construction of the Statute of Distributions. Mentney v. Petty, Pre. Ch. 593.

Chancery to determine by same rules as to distribution and legacies as the ecclesiastical court. Thomas v. Ketteriche, 1 Ves. sen. 334.

The rules of computing degrees differ in the civil from the canon law: our courts compute by the former. Ib.

The term "legal representatives" in 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 10, s. 6, signifies descendants, and not next of kin. Price v. Strange, 6 Madd. 161; 22 R. R. 266.

The term "next of kindred" in s. 7 of the statute does not include the issue of children of the intestate, but children and their descendants are all included under the term "children," which means children living at the death of the intestate either themselves or their descendants. Lockyer v. Vade (Barnard. Ch. 444) followed. Natt, In re, Walker v. Gammage, 57 L. J., Ch. 797; 37 Ch. D. 517; 58 L. T. 722; 36 W. R. 548.

Operation of—Period of Vesting.]—The right to the distributive share under the Statute of Distributions vests immediately on the intestate's death, but not to exclude a posthumous child. Edwards v. Freeman, 2 P. W. 442.

The shares under the statute become vested immediately after the decease, though not payable until the year thereafter. Brown v. Shore, 1 Show. P. C. 25.

—— Conversion of Estate into Money.]—The rule of the Statute of Distributions which requires the conversion of an intestate's estate into money is introduced simply for the benefit of creditors, and the facility of division among the next of kin; but, as regards the substantial title to property, the right of the next of kin (subject only to the claims of creditors) is complete. Cooper v. Cooper, L. R. 7 H. L. 53; 30 L. T. 409; 22 W. R. 713.

A residuary legatee under a will has a clear and tangible interest in the residue, and the Statute of Distributions being nothing but a will made by the legislature for an intestate, his next of kin stand, with regard to his personal estate, in the same condition as does a residuary legatee under a will. Ib.

Both may therefore be subject to the rule of election. Ib.

In these respects a creditor does not resemble either. Ib.

An administrator is not bound to sell chattels real of his intestate, in order to distribute the produce among the next of kin, where there are no debts to be paid. Bradley v. Flood, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 236.

He may, if any of the next of kin require it, convey to them their respective shares. Ib.

In a suit for the administration of an intestate's effects, the court may after payment of the debts, &c., declare the rights of the next of kin to chattels real, without directing a sale, if any of them require it. Ib.

—— Borough English Lands.]—A descent of lands in Borough English to the youngest son will not prevent his having a full distributive share of all personal estate. Lutwyche v. Lutwyche, Ca. t. Talbot, 279.

—— Widow.]—A widow who has been divorced a mensa et thoro, on the ground of adultery, is nevertheless entitled to a share in the effects of her deceased husband, under the Statute of Distributions. Rolfe v. Perry, 1 N. R. 428.

A widow, as such, cannot take under a limitation to the next of kin of her husband according to the Statute of Distributions. Cholmondeley v. Ashburton (Lord), 6 Beav. 86.

Nor under a limitation to the "relations" of her husband according to the statute. Worëley v. Johnson, 3 Atk. 758.

Where an intestate leaves a widow, but no next of kin, the widow is not entitled to the whole of his personal estate, but one moiety belongs to her, and the other to the crown. Cave v. Roberts, 18 Sim. 214; 6 L. J., Ch. 4.

As to distribution among wife, mother, and brother, but no children of intestate. Keilway v. Keilway, 2 Stra. 710; 2 P. W. 344; Gilb. 189. And see Stanley v. Stanley, 1 Atk. 455, post.

—— Children.]—A person dies intestate, leaving one child; the whole personal estate belongs to him within the Statute of Distributions. Palmer v. Garrard, Pre. Ch. 21.

—— Illegitimate Children.]—The Statute of Distributions being a statute not for Englishmen only but for all persons, English or not, dying intestate and domiciled in England, and applying universally to persons of all countries, races and religions whatsoever, the proper law for determining the "kindred" under that statute is the international law adopted by the comity of states. Therefore a child born before wedlock, of parents who were at her birth domiciled in Holland, but legitimated according to the law of Holland by the subsequent marriage of her parents:—Held (by James and Cotton, L.JJ., dissentiente Lush, L.J.), entitled to a share in the personal estate of an intestate dying domiciled in England as one of her next of kin, under the Statute of Distributions. Boyes v. Bedale (1 H. & M. 798) disapproved. Goodman's Trusts, In re, 50 L. J., Ch. 425; 17 Ch. D. 266; 44 L. T. 527; 29 W. R. 586—C. A. And see INTERNATIONAL LAW.

—— Posthumous Children.]—J. died intestate, and left issue, T., who died within a week after his father, and his wife enceinte, and on the 20th May following the plaintiff was born; she is entitled to her share under the Statute of Distributions, as much as if she had existed in his lifetime. Wallis v. Hodson, 2 Atk. 114; Barnard. Ch. 272.

That the shares vest on the death of the intestate holds equally in lineal and collateral succession. Ib.

A child en ventre sa mère is in rerum naturâ, and is as much one as if born in the father's lifetime. Ib.

Distributory share vests on the intestate's death, but not so as to exclude a posthumous child. Edwards v. Freeman, 2 P. W. 446.

—— Brothers and Sisters.]—In case of intestacy, the grandfather shall not share with the brother. Evelyn v. Evelyn, 3 Atk. 762; Amb. 191.

—— Half Blood.]—The sister of the half blood shall come in for an equal share, upon the Statute of Distributions, with the brother or sister of the whole blood. Crooke v. Watt, 2 Vern. 124; Show. P. C. 108.

Under the statute 1 Jac. 2, c. 17, brothers and sisters of the half blood of an intestate are equally entitled with brothers and sisters of the whole blood to share with their mother, after the death of the intestate's father, in the personal property of the intestate dying without wife or children. Jessopp v. Watson, 1 Myl. & K. 665; 2 L. J., Ch. 197.

Posthumous brother of the half blood shall take under Statute of Distributions. Burnet v. Mann, 1 Ves. Sen. 156.

—— Other Relations.]—First cousins twice removed come under the denomination of first and second cousins, as second cousins, they being related to propositor in same—namely, sixth degree. Silcox v. Bell, 1 Sim. & S. 301; 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 137; 24 R. R. 173.

Grandmother takes before aunt, being in second degree; great-grandmother equally with aunt, in third degree. Lloyd v. Tench, 2 Ves. Sen. 215.

Grand-daughter of the sister and the daughter of the aunt of the intestate are in equal degree. Thomas v. Ketteriche, 1 Ves. sen. 333.

Grandfather on the father's side, and grandmother on the mother's side, equally entitled by the Statute of Distributions. Moore v. Barham, 1 P. W. 53.

The grandmother is entitled to a distribution of the grandchild's personal estate, in exclusion of the uncles and aunts. Woodroff v. Winkworth, Pre. Ch. 527.

One dies intestate, leaving an uncle and a deceased aunt's son, the latter shall have no share under the Statute of Distributions. Bowers v. Littlewood, 1 P. W. 594.

Per Stirpes or per Capita.]—When grandchildren shall take per stirpes, and not per capita. How far in collateral successions the parties shall take per capita and not per stirpes. Lockyer v. Vade, Barnard. Ch. 444.

A share of the residuary estate of a testatrix (a widow), which she had given by her will, lapsed. She had had only two children, a son and a daughter, both of whom died before her. Three children of the son, and one child of the daughter, survived the testatrix:—Held, that, under the Statute of Distributions, the four grandchildren took the lapsed share, so far as it arose from personal estate, per stirpes not per capita. Under the Statute of Distributions the division of personal estate among descendants of an intestate is always to be per stirpes. Natt, In re, Walker v. Gammage, 57 L. J., Ch. 797; 37 Ch. D. 517; 58 L. T. 722; 36 W. R. 548.

Where no brother or sister of intestate, nephews take per capita; otherwise per stirpes. Lloyd v. Tench, 2 Ves. Sen. 215. S. P., Walsh v. Walsh, Pre. Ch. 54; 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 24, pl. 7; Davers v. Dewes, 3 P. W. 50.

Where an intestate leaves brother's or sister's children, they take per capita. Stanley v. Stanley, 1 Atk. 455.

An intestate left a mother, wife, and brother's children, infants. Lord chancellor directed his personalty to be divided into four parts, whereof two to be given to the wife, one to the mother, and one to be vested in stock for the children in equal shares, in the name of the accountant-general. Ib.

Aunts and nephews being in equal degree of relationship to an intestate, they are equally entitled under the Statute of Distributions, and take per capita, not per stirpes. Durant v. Prestwood, 1 Atk. 454. S. P., Lloyd v. Tench, 2 Ves. sen. 215.

If an intestate leaves no children, but grandchildren and great-grandchildren only, they take per stirpes and not per capita. Ross's Trusts, In re, 41 L. J., Ch. 130; L. R. 13 Eq. 286; 25 L. T. 817; 20 W. R. 231.

—— Extent to which Representation allowed.]—Intestate dies, leaving a deceased brother's child, and a deceased brother's grandchild: the grandchild not admitted to any distributory share; the clause in the statute which says that there shall be no representatives among collaterals, beyond brother's and sister's children, being intended to be that none shall take by representation but the children of brothers and sisters to the intestate. Pett's Case, 1 P. W. 25; 1 Salk. 250; 1 Ld. Raym. 571.

The son of a dead uncle not entitled to a distribution with a living uncle. Maw v. Harding, Pre. Ch. 28; 2 Vern. 223. And see Carter v. Crawley, Sir T. Raym. 496; 1 Freem. 296; Beeton v. Darkin, 2 Vern. 168.

—— Hotchpot — Advancement.]—Advancement to the eldest son, if personal property, must be brought into hotchpot under the Statute of Distributions. Kircudbright (Lord) v. Kircudbright (Lady), 8 Ves. 51; 6 R. R. 216.

The Statute of Distributions affects only the personal estate undisposed of, in order to make the provision of each child equal, but takes away nothing that has been given to any child. Edwards v. Freeman, 2 P. W. 443.

A provision by a father for a child by will not to be brought into hotchpot, nor a provision of land for an heir. Ib. 440.

One settles a rent out of lands upon a younger child; this is an advancement, pro tanto. Ib. 441.

As contingent debts are within the statute, so must contingent provision for children be. Ib. 442.

The provision in the Statute of Distributions for bringing advances by way of settlement into hotchpot applies only to actual intestacy, not where there is an executor; and consequently a complete will, though the executor may be declared a trustee. Walton v. Walton, 14 Ves. 324. And see Vachell v. Jeffreys, Pre. Ch. 170.

—— What is an Advance.]—The purchase of a commission in the army is an advancement to be brought into hotchpot. An annuity is an advancement to be brought into hotchpot—viz. the value at the date of the grant, or if it has ceased, the payments received, at the option of the child. Kircudbright (Lord) v. Kircudbright (Lady), 8 Ves. 51; 6 R. R. 216.

The widow has no claim upon what is brought into hotchpot among the children. Ib.

Any sum of a considerable amount paid out of the common fund of a family, to or for the benefit of a child, is an advance within the meaning of the Statute of Distributions, the intention of the statute being to make the provision for all the children equal. Boyd v. Boyd, 36 L. J., Ch. 877; L. R. 4 Eq. 305; 16 L. T. 600; 15 W. R. 1071.

So a premium paid upon the occasion of a son being articled to an attorney and solicitor is an advance to the son, though the profession is afterwards relinquished. Ib.

So a sum paid for the purchase of a commission in the army for a son is an advance. Ib.

Sums paid by a father to a son to enable him to pay debts of honour, the nonpayment of which would have compelled him to leave the army, are advances. Ib.

A father, who died intestate, allowed his sons, first, varying yearly sums till marriage, and fixed yearly sums after marriage; secondly, paid a son's fee to a special pleader; thirdly, his dues to an inn of court; fourthly, the outfit and passage money of a son in the army and of his wife to India; and fifthly, his debts, without payment of which he must have left the army:—Held, that these payments were not advancements by portion within the Statute of Distributions, 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 10. Taylor v. Taylor, 44 L. J., Ch. 718; L. R. 20 Eq. 155.

He also paid, first, a son's entrance fee to one of the inns of court; secondly, the price of his commission in the army, and contemporaneously that of his outfit; thirdly, certain sums for establishing him, late in life, in business:—Held, that these payments were advancements within the statute. Ib.

To constitute "an advancement by portion," the gift must be something given by the parent to establish the child in life, or to make what is called a provision for him. Ib.

An administrator, being one of the two next of kin of the intestate, advanced since the intestate's death out of his own money sums to the other next of kin:—Held, that he might set off in an administration suit the amount of such advances against the moneys due to the other next of kin from him as administrator out of the estate of the intestate. Ib.

When a father buys a commission for his son upon the understanding that he will not sell out without his father's consent, the purchase-money will be treated as an advancement, unless there is evidence of a binding agreement contemporaneous with the purchase. Andrew v. Andrew, 30 L. T. 457; 22 W. R. 682.

Husband, by marriage settlement, secures a portion for daughters of the marriage, in default of issue male. There is one daughter only. The husband survives that wife and marries again; leaves issue by the second wife, and dies intestate; the daughter by the first marriage being an infant, and her portion not then due: if the daughter lives till the portion is due, it is an advancement, pro tanto, and must be brought into hotchpot as to the other issue. Edwards v. Freeman, 2 P. W. 436.

W., on his son's marriage, settled 5,000*l.* annuities on himself for life, then on his wife for life, remainder to his son for life, remainder to his intended wife for life, with remainder to the issue of the marriage:—Held, that not only so much as his life estate in the annuities should be valued at, but the whole 5,000*l.* must be brought into hotchpot before the son can be admitted to a share of W.'s personal estate, who died intestate. Wayland v. Wayland, 2 Atk. 635.

A father by deed covenanted to pay to each of his six daughters an annuity of 200*l.* for her life, subject to a proviso that the income of any property which he might thereafter settle on any of his daughters should be taken in discharge, pro tanto, of her annuity. On the marriage of one of his daughters he covenanted for payment to trustees of 5,000*l.*, the covenant not to be enforced during his life if he should pay interest at 4*l.* per cent. during that period. On the marriage of two others, being entitled to a life interest in a fund with a power of appointment amongst his children, he appointed one-sixth of such fund to each of such daughters, and surrendered to her his life interest in such sixth (exceeding 200*l.* a year), they releasing their annuities. A fourth daughter died in his lifetime, leaving issue, and the remaining two annuities were still subsisting at his death. The father died intestate. In a suit for administration:—Held, that the payments of the annuities during the life of the intestate must be considered to have been made by way of allowance for maintenance and not of advancement, and the 5,000*l.* and the subsisting annuities only were to be brought into hotchpot, the value of the latter being calculated at the death of the intestate. Hatfield v. Minet, 47 L. J., Ch. 612; 8 Ch. D. 136; 38 L. T. 629; 26 W. R. 701—C. A.

A., on marriage of B., his eldest son by first wife, made bill of sale of furniture for his use for life. On second marriage he purchased copyhold in borough English, which was surrendered to use of himself for life, remainder to wife for life; remainder to his own right heirs; and he also settled 2,000*l.* for separate use of wife during their joint lives, and then to survivor for life, with power to leave it to any children of marriage; and in case of no appointment, to children and survivors equally—viz. daughters at eighteen or marriage, and sons at twenty-one or marriage. There were several sons and daughters all unmarried, and under the age specified. Father and mother died intestate:—Held, on question of distribution, that bill of sale was an advancement pro tanto, and to be brought into hotchpot. Pratt v. Pratt, Fitzg. 284; 1 Stra. 935.

Also, held, the 2,000*l.* should be brought into hotchpot. But whether the borough English should be also brought in was reserved for further consideration. Ib. But see Lutwyche v. Lutwyche, Ca. t. Talb. 279.

—— Advance to Heir.]—The son and heir entitled to 500*l.* under a marriage agreement, decreed to bring into hotchpot upon the Statute of Distributions, though in nature of a purchaser. Phiney v. Phiney, 2 Vern. 638.

A father, by deed, conveyed real estate to trustees for a term of years, upon trust, during his lifetime, to pay to his eldest son an annuity of 100*l.* Some years afterwards the father died intestate:—Held, that the advancement to the eldest son, being an annuity charged on land, was within the exception made by the Statute of Distributions, 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 10, s. 5, in favour of the heir-at-law, and need not be brought into hotchpot. Chantrell v. Chantrell, 37 L. T. 220.

Money laid out by the intestate in repairs of houses which descended to his eldest son as heir is not an advancement to be brought into hotchpot under the statute; otherwise if the houses had been given to the son in the father's life. Smith v. Smith, 5 Ves. 721; 5 R. R. 22.

—— Issue of Advanced Child Deceased.]—A father advances one of his children in part, and the child dies, leaving issue; then the father dies intestate, the issue of the dead child claiming a distributive share shall bring into hotchpot what their father had received. Proud v. Turner, 2 P. W. 560.

A testator bequeathed all the residue of his property to his wife, whom he appointed sole executrix. She predeceased the testator. One of the testator's daughters had received, on the occasion of her marriage, a sum of 700*l.*; she also died in the lifetime of her father, leaving two children:—Held, that the Statute of Distributions applied, and the sum advanced to the daughter must be brought into hotchpot. Harte v. Meredith, 13 L. R., Ir. 341.

—— Advance by Mother—Being Widow.]—If the mother, being a widow, advances a child, and dies intestate, leaving many children, the child advanced shall not bring what he received from his mother into hotchpot. Holt v. Frederick, 2 P. W. 356; 2 Eq. Abr. 446.

—— Inquiry as to Advances.]—In administering the estate of an intestate who has made advances to his children in his lifetime, the inquiry as to advances should follow the words of the Statute of Distributions. Ennis, In re, Waterton v. Ennis, 43 L. T. 748; 28 W. R. 885.

Where Barred by Will.—Provision by will in bar of dower and thirds does not bar widow from taking under an intestacy by the failure of a legacy. Gartshore v. Chalie, 10 Ves. 17; 7 R. R. 311.

Testator gave his wife real and personal estate in bar, &c., of all dower or thirds which she can have or claim in, out of, or to all or any part of his real and personal estate, or either of them; he gave the residue to four persons, and afterwards by codicil directed them to dispose thereof in charities; part of the residue being invested in real securities, goes according to the statute as undisposed of, and the widow is not barred. Pickering v. Stamford (Lord), 3 Ves. 332. Affirmed, 3 Ves. 492; 16 R. R. 185.

Testator gave real and personal estate to one daughter, in satisfaction of her child's part of whatsoever more she might have expected from him, or out of his personal estate; he also gave a provision to his wife in full of her dower, thirds or other claim at law or in equity, or by any local custom, to any other part of his real or personal estate; the residue to his other daughter; upon her death in his life, he by codicil gave it according to the appointment of his wife; the power not being duly executed, the residue goes according to the statute, as undisposed of, and the widow and daughter are not barred. Ib. 335.

A testator gave his wife (in the event which happened) an annuity of 30*l.*, and declared such annuity to be in lieu of all dower and claims that his wife might have upon all or any of his estate and effects. The testator's personal estate was except so far as the annual income was directed to be applied to the maintenance of his children, undisposed of:—Held, that his widow was not barred from participating in the undisposed-of personalty as one of the next of kin. Tavernor v. Grindley, 32 L. T. 424.

A testator, by his will, cut off his widow from any part of his property, and directed she should not receive any benefit therefrom, but he made no disposition of his property:—Held, that she was nevertheless entitled to the share of the undisposed-of residue. Johnson v. Johnson, 4 Beav. 318. And also Lett v. Randall, 24 L. J., Ch. 708; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 747; 3 W. R. 564.

Testator, after stating that it was his will that neither L. S. nor her children should take any benefit from his property other than what was given to her or them; and that it was not his intention that G. S., or any person claiming under him, should partake of any share in the distribution of his personal estate except what was given to him or them, said he considered that the provision which he had made for his brother and two sisters was adequate for their support, and therefore it was his intention that they should not, nor should any of them, take any benefit from his property except what was given for them; and he declared that L. S., G. S. and his brother and two sisters, should not be entitled to take any share of his personal estate of which he might happen to die intestate, but should be wholly excluded therefrom in the same manner as if they had all died in his lifetime. There was an intestacy as to residue:—Held, that the next of kin other than the five persons named who were excluded were entitled. Bund v. Green, 12 Ch. D. 819; 28 W. R. 275.

Where Barred by Settlement.]—Settlement in bar of all the wife's demands out of her husband's personal estate by the custom of the province of York, or otherwise, will bar the wife of her distributive as well as customary part. Benson v. Bellasis, 1 Vern. 15; 2 Ch. Rep. 252.

A man by marriage articles covenants to pay his wife, if she survive him, 1,500*l.* in full of dower, thirds, custom of London, or otherwise, out of his real and personal estate. A. dies intestate. The wife is barred of her share by the Statute of Distributions. Davila v. Davila, 2 Vern. 724.

Leasehold estate settled "in lieu of dower," is not a bar of thirds. Creswell v. Byron, 3 Bro. C. C. 362.

A provision previously to the marriage of a female infant in bar of dower, thirds and all claim upon the real and personal estate of the husband, if precarious and uncertain, as that the personal estate shall go according to the custom of London, does not bar her. Smith v. Smith, 5 Ves. 189 ; 5 R. R. 22.

Provision by settlement in lieu, &c. of all dower or thirds which wife might otherwise be entitled to of real or personal estate :—Held, to bar her interest in what was not disposed of by will of husband. Druce v. Denison, 6 Ves. 385.

Provision by marriage settlement not held a purchase of all the property of wife, unless that is expressed or clearly imported. Ib.

A covenant by the husband in marriage articles to provide a jointure of 200*l.* sterling per annum, such jointure to be levied on the lands of D. and B., though the jointure be paid, will not bar the wife's right to her distributive share of the personal estate. Creagh v. Creagh, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 68.

On the marriage of A. a certain sum was settled in trust for her for life, "as and for her jointure, in full lieu, bar and satisfaction of any dower or thirds which she could or might claim at common law, out of all or any of the estates, real, personal or freehold," of her intended husband :—Held, that this settlement barred her claim on the personal estate of her intestate husband, under the Statute of Distributions. Gurly v. Gurly, 8 Cl. & F. 743. Affirming, 2 Dr. & Wal. 463.

Where a husband covenanted by his marriage settlement to give, devise, bequeath and secure to his widow an annuity for her life after his decease, to be levied, raised and paid to her by his heirs, executors or administrators, and the husband afterwards died intestate :—Held, on the authority of Crouch v. Stratton (4 Ves. 391), that the widow's share of the husband's personal estate, under the Statute of Distributions, was not to be taken by her as a performance of his covenant either wholly or pro tanto. Salisbury v. Salisbury, 6 Hare, 526 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 480 ; 12 Jur. 671.

A rent-charge expressed to be for a jointure, and in lieu of dower and thirds at common law, does not bar the jointress of her distributive share in her husband's undisposed-of personal estate. Colleton v. Garth, 6 Sim. 19 ; 2 L. J., Ch. 75.

Husband covenants to give his wife by deed or will 1,000*l.* at his death, if she survives him ; but dies intestate ; she is not entitled to her distributive share, in addition to her claim under the covenant. Lee v. D'Aranda, 1 Ves. sen. 1 ; 3 Atk. 419.

A marrage settlement contained a clause, that the provision thereby made and intended for the wife in the event of her viduity should be accepted, deemed and taken in full lieu of dower or thirds, to which she might be entitled at common law or otherwise howsoever :—Held, that she was barred of her share of her husband's personal estate under the Statute of Distributions. Burgess, In re, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 164.

The word "thirds" is not confined to real estate, but is a general expression, which may signify, according to the context and scope of the instrument, the interest of a widow in any property, whether personal or real, of her deceased husband. Thompson v. Watts, 2 John. & H. 291 ; 31 L. J., Ch. 445 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 760 ; 6 L. T. 817 ; 10 W. R. 485. S. P., Sambourne v. Barry, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 28.

In construing a stipulation in a marriage settlement, that the provision thereby made for the intended wife is "in lieu of dower or thirds," the court considers the fund out of which the provision was made. Ib.

Where, therefore, by an ante-nuptial settlement the provision thereby made for the intended wife was partly charged on personalty of the intended husband, who had children by a former marriage :—Held, on his dying intestate, that the claim of his widow to a distributive share in his personal estate was barred by a stipulation in the above words. Ib.

Where a husband covenanted on his marriage that, for the purpose of making a further provision for his intended wife, in case she should survive him, a trustee should stand possessed of all his personal property at the time of his death, in trust for the use and benefit of the intended wife and the issue of the marriage, with power to her to distribute the same as she might think proper among such issue, and the husband died before her intestate, and there was no issue :—Held, that the wife, besides taking a life interest in such personalty, was, in the absence of express words to the contrary, entitled to her share of the corpus under the Statute of Distributions. Young v. Young, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 615. And see Garthshore v. Chalie, 10 Ves. 1 ; 7 R. R. 311.

By a marriage settlement, part of the husband's real estate and of the lady's fortune was vested in trustees, upon trust to pay the rents and interest of the lands, tenements, hereditaments and premises, stocks, funds and securities to the husband for life ; and, after his death, to pay the wife, for her life, an annuity, to be in full for her jointure, and in lieu, bar and full satisfaction of and for her dower and thirds at common law, which she could or otherwise might have or claim out of, &c. "the said lands, tenements, hereditaments and premises, stocks, funds and securities whereof or whereunto" the husband, at any time during the said intended coverture, should be seised or entitled for any estate of inheritance to which dower or thirds is incident ; and subject thereto, and in the event which happened—viz. there being an only child of the marriage, to 7,000*l.* for such child, in trust for the husband absolutely :—Held, that the settlement barred the wife of dower and her distributive share of the real and personal estate comprised in the settlement, but not of dower or of her distributive share out of or in the other real and personal estate of the husband. Sambourne v. Barry Ir. R. 6 Eq. 28.

Personal estate belonging to an intended husand was settled in trust for him for life, with successive trusts for the wife durante viduitate and the children (if any) of the marriage in the usual form, with an ultimate limitation to the husband, his executors, administrators or assigns, for his and their own use and benefit. The wife survived and married again. The first husband died intestate, and on the ultimate limitation taking effect, the wife claimed her share in his assets under the Statute of Distributions :—Held, though she had by her second marriage forfeited her life estate, she had not forfeited her claim to a distributive share in the husband's assets, and that his personal representatives took in trust for his next of kin under the statute, and not beneficially. O'Brien v. Hearn, Ir. R. 4 Eq. 103; 18 W. R. 514. Affirmed, 18 W. R. 1014.

Where Barred by Separation Deed.]—Husband and wife having agreed to live apart from each other, a sum of stock was invested in the name of trustees, &c., by a separation deed, containing the usual provisions. The husband agreed to pay to his wife, for her maintenance, an annuity of 180*l.* a year, and it was declared that the stock was intended as a security for the payment of that annuity. The deed contained a proviso, that the husband should be indemnified out of the annuity against the debts and contracts of his wife, and all dower and thirds at common law, or by custom, which she at any time thereafter might claim, challenge, or demand from, out of, or against her husband, or his present or future estate, real or personal, and an agreement that the wife should make and execute all such acts, deeds and matters as should be requisite for the purpose of releasing, barring, or extinguishing all dower or thirds at the common law, or by custom, which she could or might claim or demand, in, to, or out of, any real or personal estate of her husband. The husband afterwards died intestate:—Held, that the deed did not deprive the wife of her share of the husband's personal estate, under the Statute of Distributions, she electing to take under the intestacy. Slatter v. Slatter, 1 Y. & C. 28.

Proviso in a deed of separation that the wife surviving shall be entitled to her dower and thirds, out of all real and personal estates, whereof the husband shall die seised or possessed, construed not as a covenant to leave her such a portion of the real estate as she would be entitled to under the statute had he died intestate, but that she would be in the same situation as if not separate as to dower and thirds—i.e. the actual share by the law or custom; not interfering therefore with his testamentary disposition. Cochran v. Graham, 19 Ves. 63.

Wife of Convict—Property of—Before 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23.]—The wife of a felon convict died intestate, leaving personal property acquired by her subsequently to her husband's conviction:—Held, that such property belonged to the crown, and not to the next of kin of the intestate. Coombs v. Her Majesty's Proctor, 2 Rob. Ec. Rep. 547; 16 Jur. 820. S. P., Reg. v. Whitehead, 2 M. C. C. 181.

Intestates' Estates Act, 1890—Partial Intestacy.]—The Intestates' Estates Act, 1890, does not apply to cases of partial intestacy. Twigg's Estate, In re, Twigg v. Black, 61 L. J., Ch. 444; [1892] 1 Ch. 579; 66 L. T. 604; 40 W. R. 297.

c. By Customs of London and York.

19 & 20 Vict. c. 94.]—By 19 & 20 Vict. c. 94, the 4th section of the Statute of Distributions, saving the customs of the city of London and the province of York, is repealed, save only with respect to the distribution of the personal estate of persons who may have died on or before December 31, 1856, and it is enacted that "the special customs respecting the distribution of the personal estates of intestates observed in the city of London, or in relation to the citizens and freemen of such city, and in the province of York, and certain other places, shall, with reference to all persons dying on or after January 1, 1857, wholly cease and determine."

Note.]—The customs of London and York not having affected the distribution of estates in any case of death since January 1, 1857, the cases thereon are now omitted as obsolete.

XII. Refunding.

a. By Legatees.

1. For Creditors.

In what Cases — At whose Suit.] — Where assets fall short, legatees shall refund to unsatisfied creditors; but where an executor has made voluntary payment to a legatee, he shall not make him refund: otherwise, if the executor pays a legatee by compulsion. Newman v. Barton, 2 Vern. 205.

Where executor assents to legacy, he shall not have it refunded; secus, where compelled to pay it by suit in equity. Noel v. Robinson, 1 Vern. 94.

A creditor shall compel a legatee to refund, and so shall one legatee another, where assets are deficient. S. C., 2 Vent. 358; 2 Ch. Ca. 145; 2 Ch. Rep. 248.

Legatees paid before creditors where the assets fell short, decreed to refund to an unsatisfied creditor. Anon., 1 Vern. 162.

Legatee, when liable to refund. Jewon v. Grant, 3 Swan. 659.

If an executor pays a legacy on supposition that there are assets to pay all other legacies, and afterwards there is a deficiency of assets, legatee must refund. Edwards v. Freeman, 2 P. W. 447.

Executor paid legacy, assets found deficient, legatee to refund. Davies v. Davies, Dick. 32.

Where the court administers the assets the trustees are protected against all claims on the testator's estate, but legatees still remain liable in respect of their beneficial interest. Underwood v. Hatton, 5 Beav. 36.

Testator desires to be buried decently, executrix borrows 100*l.* for the purpose, and gives her bond; legatees not compelled to refund, but account directed of residue. Langley v. Oates, 2 Eq. Abr. 455.

A tenant for life was wrongfully permitted to enjoy a perishable property in specie. The executor died, and the tenant for life then proved the will, and continued to receive the income. On a bill against the representatives of the executor and the tenant for life, which contained no special charge, and after the common decree:—Held, that in such a suit a legatee could not be made to refund overpayments voluntarily made by the executor; and, secondly, that the tenant for life must account for the surplus income received by her after she had proved the will, but not for that received before. Lichfield v. Baker, 13 Beav. 447.

If a tenant for life, bound to keep down an annuity, be permitted by the executrix to receive the rents without performing the obligations, and the executrix pays the annuity, she cannot afterwards recover any portion of the past payments out of the general personal property which has been appropriated. Riky v. Kemmis, Ll. & G. t. Sugd. 131.

—— Notice of Liability—Shares in Company liable to a Call.]—K., a married woman, became entitled to the residue of a testator's estate for her separate use. A part of the residue consisted of fifty shares in a limited company, which were not fully paid up. The residue of the estate was paid to K., and the certificates of the shares handed to her, but no transfer of them was executed. A call was afterwards made, which the executors paid. An order was afterwards made on an originating summons taken out by the executors, declaring that they had a lien on the shares for the amount of the call, interest and costs, and in default of payment liberty was given to the executors to sell the shares. The shares were sold, but did not realise sufficient to pay what was due to the executors, and they commenced a second action to compel K. to indemnify them:—Held, that the first action was not a bar to the second, and that the executors were entitled to recover:—that the knowledge of the executors that the shares were not fully paid up, and that a call might be made at some future time, was not notice of a debt, and therefore they were entitled to call on the residuary legatee to refund. Semble, that an executor who has paid the residue of the estate to the residuary legatee can recover from the legatee the amount of any costs, charges and expenses properly incurred by him after he has so paid over the residue to the extent of the amount so paid over. Kershaw, In re, Whittaker v. Kershaw, 60 L. J., Ch. 9; 45 Ch. D. 320; 63 L. T. 203; 39 W. R. 23—C. A.

—— Fund in Court.]—In a suit for the administration of a testator's assets, after the decree on further directions had sanctioned payments made by the executor in discharge of legacies, and had directed the fund in court to be apportioned among the other legatees, a creditor obtained permission to prove his debt; the master subsequently reported a debt to be due to him; but, in the meantime, the fund had been apportioned, and part of it had been paid over, while the remainder had been carried to the account of particular legatees:—Held, that the creditor was entitled to receive out of the funds of the legatees, remaining in court, not the whole of the debt, but only part of it, bearing the same proportion to the whole as the legacies given to those legatees bore to the whole amount of the legacies given by the will. Gillespie v. Alexander, 3 Russ. 130: 27 R. R. 35.

In a suit instituted in 1814 to administer the personal estate of an intestate who died in 1807, the master reported that no debts had been proved, and, by the decree on further directions in 1817, the whole of the residue was apportioned and distributed; but, as the plaintiff was then an infant, his share, amounting to four-ninths of the fund, was retained and carried to his separate account. In 1825 a foreign prince, claiming to be a creditor of the intestate, petitioned for leave to prove his debt against the sum remaining in court; and the plaintiff, coming of age soon after, applied to have that sum paid out:—Held, that the creditor was not precluded by the previous proceedings, or the lapse of time, from tendering such proof before the master; but that every defence should be allowed those which would have been competent upon a new bill; that the debt, if established, must be restricted, as against the fund in court, to that proportion which the plaintiff's share bore to the whole amount distributed, and therefore that, after reserving a sum equal to four-ninths of the claim, the residue of the fund ought to be paid out to the plaintiff. Greig v. Somerville, 1 Russ. & M. 338.

A testator gave two legacies of 2,000*l.*, payable at a future time, and made a residuary bequest. The executors, having paid all the ascertained debts of the testator, invested the two legacies in consols in the names of themselves and the two legatees, and paid over the residue to the residuary legatee. Ten years after the death of the testator a debt was established against the testator's estate, in an administration suit, in respect of a breach of covenant under a lease. The chief clerk certified that the funds applicable to the payment of the debt were first, the residuary estate, and, secondly, the two legacies of 2,000*l.* The residuary legatee had become insolvent. The two legacies had been ordered to be brought into court:—Held, that the debt was payable out of the legacies, without prejudice to the rights of the legatees and those claiming under them, as between themselves and the other parties. Noble v. Brett, 24 Beav. 499; 27 L. J., Ch. 516; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 623; 6 W. R. 219. And see S. C., 26 Beav. 233; 28 L. J., Ch. 322; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 4.

—— Property specifically bequeathed.]—Property specifically bequeathed is not discharged from its liability to the testator's debts by the circumstance that there has come to the hands of the executor personal property of the testator, not specifically bequeathed, more than sufficient to pay his debts, and funeral and testamentary expenses, and that the specifically bequeathed property has been made over by the executor to the specific legatee. Davies v. Nicolson, 2 De G. & J. 693; 27 L. J., Ch. 719; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 49; 6 W. R. 790.

Leasehold property was specifically bequeathed to F. R.; the residue was bequeathed to J. R., and in the residue were included other leasehold houses. The executor handed over the residue to J. R., and when F. R. attained twenty-one, the executor assented to the specific bequest, and assigned the same to F. R. A creditor, in respect of unpaid rent and repairs to the leaseholds, included in the residue, obtained judgments against the executor, and these remaining unpaid, he filed a bill for the general administration of the testator's estate. The chief clerk certified, that the specifically bequeathed leaseholds were liable to the plaintiff's debt, but the vice-chancellor varied the certificate:—Held, that notwithstanding the assent and assignment, the specifically bequeathed leaseholds were liable to the debt; that creditors were entitled to pursue their remedies against all the assets, and that, therefore, if there were no assets in the hands of the executor, there must be a decree against the leaseholds specifically bequeathed for payment of the plaintiff's debt. Ib.

The rule applied in Gillespie v. Alexander (3 Russ. 130; 27 R. R. 35) is not applicable where the estate has not been administered by the court. Ib.

—— Right of Purchaser or Mortgagee of Legacy.]—Semble, a purchaser of a legacy which has been paid or delivered, cannot be called on to refund or pay any portion of a debt subsequently established against a testator's estate. Noble v. Brett, 24 Beav. 499; 27 L. J., Ch. 516; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 623; 6 W. R. 219. But see Jennings v. Bond, 2 Jo. & Lat. 720; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 755.

Where executors and trustees have paid a pecuniary legacy, not charged on real estate, to a legatee who is also one of the residuary legatees of the proceeds of sale of the testator's real estate, the legatee covenanting to repay the legacy if required so to do; on the personal estate, after defraying prior charges upon it, proving to be insufficient to meet the pecuniary legacy, the executors and trustees are entitled, as against a mortgagee, subsequent in date, of the legatee's residuary interest in the proceeds of sale of realty, to retain thereout a sum equal in amount to the pecuniary legacy which was paid in advance. Moore, In re, Moore v. Moore, 45 L. T. 466.

A testator bequeathed leaseholds to his son, and appointed him and another person his executors. Three years after testator's death, the son settled the leaseholds on his marriage:—Held, that as against the son's wife and children, the property was not liable to the testator's creditors. Spackman v. Timbrell, 8 Sim. 260; 6 L. J., Ch. 147.

Assets of a testator, settled bonâ fide on the marriage of the residuary legatee, are no longer liable to the claims of creditors. Dilkes v. Broadmead, 2 De G. F. & J. 566; 30 L. J., Ch. 268; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 56; 3 L. T. 605; 9 W. R. 238.

Therefore a bill filed against a residuary legatee and the trustees of a settlement, to recover the amount paid by the plaintiff, by reason of the testator's breach of the covenants in a lease, was dismissed with costs. Ib.

—— Right of Purchaser where Fund in Court.]—The purchaser of a reversionary interest in a fund in court in an administration suit takes, subject to the claim of any creditor who may prove his debt at any time before the fund is paid out, the fund being available for creditors so long as it remains in court. Hooper v. Smart, 45 L. J., Ch. 99; 1 Ch. D. 90; 33 L. T. 499; 24 W. R. 152.

In 1863 an administration suit was instituted, and by an order made in it a fund in court was set aside to answer a life annuity given by the will, the rest of the assets being subsequently paid and transferred to the residuary legatees, who were also entitled to the fund in court, subject to the life interest of the annuitant. In 1873 a declaration was made in another suit, that the estate of the testator in the first suit was liable for breaches of trust which had been committed by him:—Held, that the plaintiffs in the second suit were entitled to go against the fund in court, notwithstanding that the reversion in it had been sold for value; and that the fund was liable for the whole of their debt, and not merely to that proportion of it which the fund itself bore to the total net assets of the testator. Ib. And see Jennings v. Bond, 2 Jo. & Lat. 720; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 755.

Delay, Laches or Acquiescence on part of Creditor.]—The testator leaves assets sufficient to pay all debts and legacies; the legatees receive payment, which the creditors might also have had if they had demanded it in time; they lie by for eleven years, and the estate is wasted: yet the legatees shall refund. Hardwick v. Mynd, 1 Anstr. 112; 3 R. R. 562.

A creditor, who, by lying by, permits the executor, having at that time assets for payments of debts, to pay a legacy, does not thereby lose his right to compel that legatee to contribute to the payment of his debt, if the executor subsequently waste the assets, but the assets of the defaulting executor must be first resorted to, and the insolvency of the executor not having been proved:—Held, that the legatee was entitled to an inquiry on the point, even after a decree to account and a report under it. Mannix v. Drinan, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 108.

Ten legatees out of seventeen having been overpaid on coming of age, ordered to refund after the lapse of eighteen years, the estate proving deficient. The executors, if compelled to pay, to have a remedy against those legatees. Rowe v. Thorpe, 1 Jur. 771.

A., one of co-trustees, A. and B., who had committed a breach of trust, died, and his personal estate was distributed among his legatees; and two of those legatees then died, having received their legacies; and the residuary personal estate of one of them was paid over to her residuary legatee. These distributions were made in ignorance of any demand arising out of the breach of trust in which A. had concurred. Ten years after the eldest of the two cestuis que trustent attained twenty-one, they filed a bill against B. and the personal representative of A., and his surviving legatees, and the personal representatives of his deceased legatees, and the residuary legatee of one of those deceased legatees, and against the father and mother of the plaintiffs, praying to have the fund replaced:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to call upon the surviving legatees of A., and the personal representatives and legatees of his deceased legatees, to refund, and that, without any previous inquiry as to whether the plaintiffs had known of or acquiesced in the breach of trust, or the compromise of a suit brought against A. and B. for the same purpose by the plaintiffs by their next friend during their infancy. March v. Russell, 3 Myl. & C. 31; 6 L. J., Ch. 303; 1 Jur. 588.

The right of a creditor to make legatees refund may be lost by laches, acquiescence, or by such a course of dealing as would render the assertion of such right inequitable. Ridgway v. Newstead, 2 Giff. 492; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1185; 3 L. T. 360; 9 W. R. 31. Affirmed, 3 De G. F. & J. 474; 30 L. J., Ch. 889; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 451; 4 L. T. 86; 9 W. R. 401.

A testator mortgaged a leasehold brewery, and covenanted to pay the mortgage debt. By his will he bequeathed legacies and an annuity, and made a residuary devise and bequest. His son, to whom he bequeathed the equity of redemption in the brewery, carried on the business, and kept down the interest on the mortgage for thirteen years, and then (in 1856) became bankrupt. In the meantime the estate of the mortgagor had been administered by the executors, and the legacies paid and the annuity kept down. In 1857 the mortgagee's representatives instituted a suit for the administration of the testator's estate, and payment of the balance of the mortgage debt (if any) which the proceeds of the mortgaged premises might be insufficient to satisfy. The mortgaged premises having become depreciated were sold for less than the debt, and the balance was certified to be due from the executors, and was ordered to be paid by them, but they were unable to pay it; whereupon, in 1860, the mortgagee's representatives filed a bill to have the mortgagor's residuary real estate applied in payment of his debts, so far as it would extend, and to compel the legatees and annuitant to refund. The residuary devisees had mortgaged their portions, shares, and interests, as residuary legatees and executors, of and in the moneys to arise from the sale of the testator's residuary real and personal estate:—Held, first, that the lapse of time and intervening circumstances were a sufficient answer to the suit, so far as it sought to call on the legatees and mortgagees to refund. S. C., 3 De G. F. & J. 474.

Held, secondly, that the mortgage made by the residuary devisees was subject to the payment of the testator's debts. Ib.

Where mortgagees of a leasehold brewery and machinery had permitted an executor and a residuary legatee under the mortgagor's will to remain in possession of the property for fifteen years after the mortgagor's death, and had received interest from him during that time, the property having in the meantime so deteriorated in value that the security had become of less value than the debt, they were not allowed to recover the unpaid portion of the mortgage debt by following as assets of the testator, legacies to infant legatees which had been paid into court under the Trustees Relief Act, or a sum which had been paid to annuitant by the executors in satisfaction of his annuity. S. C., 4 L. T. 492; 9 W. R. 401.

Under a decree in an administration suit, a barrister tendered his claim for an amount of fees embezzled and retained by the intestate, who had been his clerk. The chief clerk disallowed the claim, on the ground that it was barred by the Statute of Limitations. The claimant took no proceeding in the administration suit to vary the certificate, and a decree was soon afterwards made, on further directions, under which the residuary estate was distributed amongst the parties beneficially interested. The barrister subsequently instituted another suit for the recovery of his demand out of the assets in the hands of the parties, amongst whom they had been distributed:—Held, that he was entitled to maintain such suit, and to a decree for payment with costs. Teed v. Beere, 28 L. J., Ch. 782; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 381; 7 W. R. 394.

T. and G. were partners in building an hotel. G. bought the share of T., who had conducted the building, and agreed to pay all the expenses. G. died, and at his death the sum of 356*l.* was due from him to T. in respect of bills which T. had paid for the building. A decree was made to administer G.'s estate. T. carried in a proof for the 356*l.* along with 82*l.* which he had paid since G.'s death. The 356*l.* was allowed and paid, the 82*l.* disallowed, and the estate was distributed. After this T. was obliged to pay further bills for the building, and filed a bill against the residuary legatees and devisees of G. to recover these sums and the 82*l.*:—Held, that the suit was maintainable as regarded the sums paid since the certificate. Thomas v. Griffith, 2 De G. F. & J. 555; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 293; 3 L. T. 761; 8 W. R. 727.

Held, also, that it not appearing on what ground the 82*l.* had been disallowed, the plaintiff had not lost his rights as to that sum. Ib.

Held, also, that the executor was not a necessary party to the suit. Ib.

The right of a creditor whose debt has not been provided for to follow distributed assets into the hands of legatees being an equitable right, will not be exercisable where the circumstances of the case would make such an exercise inequitable. When, therefore, the mortgagee of a farm, upon the death of his mortgagor, acquiesced in two of the residuary legatees taking the farm and working it, and in the distribution of the personal estate for the purpose of the share of those legatees being expended on the cultivation of the farm, he was held to have released his equitable right to fall back upon the personal estate of his debtor, the mortgage security having proved insufficient. Blake v. Gale, 55 L. J., Ch. 559; 32 Ch. D. 571; 55 L. T. 234; 34 W. R. 555—C. A.

Payment of Legacy de bonis propriis.]—If, in an action against executors for a legacy, the executors admit assets and judgment is given for payment of a legacy de bonis propriis:—Quære, whether an unpaid creditor can call upon the legatee to refund the legacy. Semble, the creditor could recover the legacy in such a case if it was in fact paid out of the testator's assets, but not if it was paid by the executors de bonis propriis. Brogden, In re, Billing v. Brogden, 38 Ch. D. 546; 59 L. T. 650; 37 W. R. 84—C. A.

2. For Legatees or Next of Kin.

In what Cases—At whose Suit.]—A legatee paid by an executor voluntarily, not obliged to refund to the rest, except in case of his insolvency. Orr v. Kaines, 2 Ves. sen. 194. S. P., Coppin v. Coppin, 2 P. W. 296.

Legacy to A., payable at twenty-one, or marriage, with interest, is a vested legacy; and, executor having become bankrupt, it might have been proved under the commission; his certificate therefore a bar, and the residuary legatee not liable. Walcott v. Hall, 2 Bro. C. C. 305.

As legatees are to be paid in proportion, so if an executor pays one legatee, and there is not enough to pay all, the legatee who is paid shall refund in proportion; so if one legatee recovers his legacy in equity, and there is not enough to pay the rest, he shall refund. Secus, if the defect of assets arises by the wasting of the executor. Anon, 1 P. W. 495.

Legacies were given, some immediate and others to be paid to persons in succession. All trust moneys were directed to be invested in the public funds or on real securities. The executor, twelve months after the death, paid all the immediate legacies, and invested the remainder of the funds in a bank. Two months afterwards the bank stopped payment, and a loss was sustained, by which the funds became insufficient to pay the deferred legacies. The executor filed a bill to have accounts taken, and that the loss might be apportioned among the deferred legatees:—Held, that, as there was no imputation on the good faith of the executor, and as he could not obtain a settlement of his accounts with the legatees, he was justified in filing the bill, and that the loss must fall upon the deferred legatees, who must bear among themselves ratably the loss of the failure of the bank, and not throw any part of the loss on the satisfied legatees. Fenwick v. Clarke, 31 L. J., Ch. 728; 6 L. T. 593; 10 W. R. 636.

When one residuary legatee, or one of the next of kin, has not received an amount larger than his share of the assets existing at the time of payment made to him, the subsequent waste of the assets by the executor or administrator does not render him liable to refund. Peterson v. Peterson, 36 L. J., Ch. 101; L. R. 3 Eq. 111; 15 W. R. 164.

When one residuary legatee of one of the next of kin is called upon by another to refund, on the ground of overpayment made, the burden of proof that the amount received was in excess of his share of the assets existing at the time of payment lies upon the person requiring the money to be refunded. Ib.

A residuary legatee received his due share of the assets from the administrator. The administrator subsequently committed waste, and the assets, thus diminished, were insufficient to pay the other residuary legatees in full:—Held, that inasmuch as the unpaid legatees might have forced the payment of their legacies in full when the administrator was solvent and able to pay them, they could not call on the legatees who had been paid their due shares to refund in order to equalise the loss occasioned by their own laches. Ib.

When executors have made a proper distribution pro tanto of their testator's estate, and have been ready to produce proper accounts to the unpaid residuary legatees, and an administration action is then instituted by the unpaid residuary legatees, and it turns out that the accounts are substantially correct, the costs of the action must be borne by the residuary legatees who take the benefit of it. Hilliard v. Fulford, 46 L. J., Ch. 43; 4 Ch. D. 389; 35 L. T. 750; 25 W. R. 161.

But where, after executors had made a partial distribution of the residue, an administration action was instituted by the residuary legatees who had not received their shares, and it then turned out that the executors had made two mistakes, first, in making their distribution upon an erroneous assumption that the residue was divisible among five persons instead of six; and, secondly, in expending part of the general personal estate in repairs of property specifically devised:—Held, that the overpaid residuary legatees could not be made to refund, that the executors must stand in the same position as if no distribution had taken place, and that the costs of the action should be paid as out of the entire residuary estate, so as to charge the executors with the share of costs attributable to each of the distributed shares; and then that the executors should pay the balance necessary to make up to the unpaid legatees one-sixth of the residue each. Form of order. Ib.

In a suit by a residuary legatee for the administration of the testator's estate, the court has jurisdiction to compel the residuary legatee to refund assets overpaid to him by the executor before the suit, to pay the legacies of legatees who are not parties to the suit. Prowse v. Spurgin, 37 L. J., Ch. 251; L. R. 5 Eq. 99; 17 L. T. 590; 16 W. R. 413.

A testator gave the residue of his real and personal property to trustees in trust to sell the realty and invest the produce with the personalty, and to pay 5,000*l.* to his daughter, the plaintiff, on her attaining twenty-one, or day of marriage, and he appointed H. and R. and his widow executors, and H. and his widow guardians of the plaintiff. The trustees did not act. More than 5,000*l.* was paid into the hands of H., who paid the plaintiff's maintenance during minority. The plaintiff, on coming of age, filed a bill against H. and R. to recover the principal, and got a decree for an account. R. then came to a settlement with X., the residuary devisee and legatee, and, having ascertained what would be coming to him, gave a mortgage for as much as was deficient of the personal estate, and X. went into possession of the real estate, R. and X. joining in securing under the mortgage pecuniary legacies to some other legatees:—Held, that he was bound to refund, and that the mortgage, if given in lieu of assets, should be treated as so much assets for the benefit of the plaintiff and unpaid legatees. Held, also, that the payment to her guardian H. did not bind the plaintiff. O'Neill v. Hamill, Beat. 618.

Bill against children for discovery of sums advanced to them, pendente lite, by their father, an insolvent executor. It appears on the answers, that two of them received 500*l.* each on their marriages, but two others received 500*l.* each for their maintenance; it was decreed, that the two last should refund, although they denied knowledge of their father's insolvency. The children were legatees under the will, but the decree went on fraud. Partridge v. Gopp, Ambl. 596.

P. bequeathed 1,000*l.* in trust for a daughter for life, with remainder for her issue; and in case of failure, in trust, as to one moiety, as she should appoint; and as to the other, it was to be considered as part of the residue bequeathed in favour of all his children, of whom J. was one. P. also bequeathed 600*l.* in trust for a daughter-in-law, A., for life, with remainder for his two grand-daughters. One of the trustees, C., possessed himself of the testator's estate, and did not invest, but retained in his hands these sums. In 1822 C. bequeathed to his two daughters legacies and annuities payable out of leaseholds bequeathed to O., to whom he devised and bequeathed the bulk of his property, and he charged certain premises with the payment of all trust moneys in his hands at his decease. C. died in 1823, and O., his sole executor, possessed himself of his estate, and thereout paid the legacies and annuities. In 1824 an indenture of release, to which J. and O. and others were parties, but to which A. was not, was executed, and thereby certain arrangements were made relating to P.'s estate, but excepting the sums above-mentioned, and another sum, being the residue of his estate. The power of appointment of a moiety of the 1,000*l.* was exercised in favour of O. and another; and the appointor died in 1858. The other moiety and the 600*l.*, and interest, remained due to the persons entitled to the same. On a bill by J. and A., praying that O. might be ordered to pay the legacies and interest, and that the annuitants under C.'s will might be ordered to refund what they had received in respect of their legacies and annuities:—Held, that, as against the annuitants, the bill must be dismissed, with costs, and that the two sums and interest due must be paid by O. personally, on the ground that there had been by the deed of 1824 a complete appropriation of the sums; that O. was accepted as the debtor for them; and that both J. and A. (A. having received interest from O.) were bound by the transactions which were carried out under it. Partington v. Currington, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1093.

—— As against a Purchaser.]—Where trustees, under an erroneous view of the effect of a will, pay to parties money to which they are not entitled, this court, in administering the estate, will compel a restitution and repayment, and will give a lien on the other interests of such parties under the will, even as against an assignee for valuable consideration. Dibbs v. Goren, 11 Beav. 483.

—— Delay or Acquiescence, Effect of.]—Where an intestate's estate has been distributed under a decree in an administration suit, among persons found by the report to be his next of kin, a person claiming to be the sole next of kin of the intestate is not precluded from filing a bill against the persons alleged to have been erroneously found to be the next of kin, for the purpose of obtaining restitution of the fund so distributed; and if the right of the plaintiff so claiming shall be established, the persons among whom the fund has been distributed will be compelled to repay it to the plaintiff, but the plaintiff will be bound by the accounts taken in the administration suit. David v. Frowd, 1 Myl. & K. 200; 2 L. J., Ch. 68.

The circumstance that an intestate's personal estate has been distributed, in a suit, among the persons appearing to be his sole next of kin, does not necessarily preclude other persons, having an equal title to that character, from afterwards instituting a new suit against the next of kin who have been thus overpaid, and compelling them to refund a proportion of their shares. Sawyer v. Birchmore, 2 Myl. & C. 611; 1 Keen, 825; 6 L. J., Ch. 277.

A married woman entitled to the income of a legacy for her separate use, continued for fifteen years, with full notice of the circumstances affecting her rights, to receive income on the footing that the legacy was liable to contribute in favour of the residuary legatees to a loss occurring on the re-investment of part of the estate. It was afterwards decided that the legacy was not liable so to contribute, but must be paid in full:—Held, that she was not entitled to recover from the residuary legatees the difference between the income of the full amount of the legacy and the reduced income she had actually received. Stafford v. Stafford, 1 De G. & J. 193; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 149.

Quære, whether the claim, apart from acquiescence, was not to a great extent barred by the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42. Ib.

An executor, acting on the advice of counsel on the construction of a will, proposed to divide in certain proportions a fund between two legatees. One of the legatees being dissatisfied, took the opinion of the counsel, which agreed with the former opinion. The executor then divided and paid over the fund in accordance with the opinions. Two years afterwards the dissatisfied legatee filed a bill against the executor and the other legatee, alleging that the will had been wrongly construed, and claiming repayment from the other legatee:—Held, that the suit could not be maintained. Rogers v. Ingham, 3 Ch. D. 351; 35 L. T. 677; 25 W. R. 338—C. A.

3. Other Cases.

Administrator against Legatee for Sum Paid by Executor before Revocation of Probate.]—P. D., by an alleged will, bequeathed 90*l.* to L., for the purpose of being applied towards building a chapel, and appointed C. executor, who obtained probate. After the grant of probate, C. paid to L. the amount of the legacy, which was applied by L., in accordance with the terms of the will. Subsequently a suit was instituted by M. D. against C., in the Probate Division, for revocation of probate. A consent was entered into between M. D. and C. in that suit, by which it was agreed that the will should be condemned, and that administration of P. D.'s estate should be granted to M. D. The consent provided for the application of certain moneys, and that C. "should have credit for all moneys properly expended, and also a sum of 100*l.* and 20*l.* paid respectively to L. for masses, without prejudice to any claim, and his costs." In an action brought by M. D., as administratrix of P. D., to recover from L. the 90*l.* which had been so paid to him:—Held, that having by the consent released the executor, she could not recover from the legatee. Duane v. Lee, 14 L. R. Ir. 56— And see PROCEEDINGS BY OR AGAINST AT COMMON LAW, XIII. a. 1, post.

4. Interest.

Interest.]—On refunding sums paid under an erroneous construction of a will, a legatee entitled to other funds, making interest in the hands of the court, is to be charged with interest; not a legatee who has no further concern in the estate. Gittins v. Steele, 1 Swan. 199; 18 R. R. 57.

—— Interim Income.]—An executor who compels a legatee to refund can recover only the capital which he has paid to the legatee, without any intermediate income. Jervis v. Wolferstan, 43 L. J., Ch. 809; L. R. 18 Eq. 18; 30 L. T. 452.

b. By Executors.

Distinction between Creditors and Legatees.]—Executors may be discharged as against legatees, though not as against creditors, the former being bound by the terms of the will, the latter not. Doyle v. Blake, 2 Sch. & Lef. 239; 9 R. R. 76.

Personal Liability.]—A mortgage comes to an executor, who receives the mortgage money, and pays it away to his testator's creditors; afterwards it appears that the mortgage had been satisfied in the testator's lifetime; the executor must refund, though he had before paid the money away in debts which he had not otherwise assets to pay. Powley v. Ray, 1 P. W. 355.

Executor pays debts with money received under a decree which is reversed; he must refund; otherwise if the appeal is delayed. Pickering v. Stamford (Lord), 2 Ves. J. 582.

Payment to legatees is no answer to the claims of creditors, though no debt had arisen at the time of such payment. Newcastle Banking Co. v. Hymers, 22 Beav. 367.

—— Costs.]—If an executor administers the estate of his testator, and pays over the residue, so that no part can be recovered to answer a subsequent debt of the testator, he will not, as against appropriated legacies, be entitled to the costs of an action brought against him by the creditor, or of a proceeding necessary to establish the debt, or of any suit by him to make the appropriated legacies available for the payment of the debt. Noble v. Brett, 26 Beav. 233; 28 L. J., Ch. 322; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 4.

Annuity—Payments by Mistake—Recouping out of future Payments.]—A testator gave his property after the death of his wife to trustees on trust to pay the interest and profits to his two daughters J. and E., to their separate use, with a direction to pay and apply for the benefit of A., the son of E., 200*l.* annually, when he attained the age of twenty-one years, and before that period such part of the 200*l.* bequeathed to him as might be judged proper; he then gave his daughters power to dispose of the principal by will, to their children or grandchildren respectively, "except that proportion of principal given to E., and from which the interest is to arise to my grandson, namely, 4,000*l.*, which sum shall be my grandson's property"; and in case either of the daughters died without issue, he limited her share of the fund over to the other daughter, her children or grandchildren. The executrix having in mistake made payments to A., in respect of his annuity, for two years before he attained twenty-one, was entitled to retain them out of the future payments of the annuity. An order authorising her to retain them, and made upon petition after the decree had been passed and entered, is regular. Livesey v. Livesey, 3 Russ. 287; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 13. But see S. C., on appeal, 3 Russ. 542; 7 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 120.

Assets Lent by Executor to Residuary Legatee—Lien on Share.]—One of several residuary legatees, with the concurrence of the others, induces the executors to sell out stock forming part of the residuary estate, and to lend him the proceeds, on his executing to them a warrant of attorney and depositing certain title deeds, as a security, but without any express lien upon or reference to his share in the residue:—Held, that the executors had upon his bankruptcy a lien on the share. Makins, Ex parte, and In re, 2 Mont. D. & D. 508; 6 Jur. 468.

Co-Executors—Claim by one to Indemnity.]—E. N. bequeaths leaseholds to trustees for sale, to pay the proceeds to his widow for life, and after in trust for the children: one executor proves; and his co-executor, the solicitor of the testator, finding himself involved in intricate transactions in respect of the leaseholds, proves also, and institutes a suit, and claims indemnity against liabilities in respect of the trust:—Held, that under the circumstances he was justified in filing the bill, and was entitled to indemnity and costs of the suit. Semble, that the assent of one executor to specific bequests does not take away the right of the other to indemnity. Turner v. Nicholls, 1 W. R. 157.

—— Contribution.] — Where a debt is due from the estate of a testator, one of whose executors is dead, and the estate of such deceased executor is the subject of administration in chancery, and the creditor of the original testator has filed a bill to recover his debt, and has compelled the surviving executor to pay the whole amount into court, such creditor cannot, for the purpose of enforcing contribution between the two executors, prove his debt against the estate of the deceased executor. Micklethwait v. Winstanley, 34 L. J., Ch. 281; 11 L. T. 582; 13 W. R. 210—L.JJ.

A creditor is not bound to wait for payment of a debt proved by him in a suit until the equities between the several parties liable to him are adjusted. Ib.

And see RIGHT OF INDEMNITY, col. 1298, ante.

c. BY CREDITORS.

In General.]—The general rule of equity is, that all fair creditors stand in a situation equally favoured, and therefore if a subsequent creditor, by using due diligence, has contrived to receive his debt, the court will not interfere to oblige him to account for what he has so received, and refund it to a prior creditor. Dillon v. Burton, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 101.

Not to Pay Debts of Higher Degree.] — Where executor pays simple contract debts, there shall be no refunding to pay debt of a higher nature. Hodges v. Waddington, 2 Vent. 360.

Mistake—Funds in Court—Exclusion of Mortgagee.]—Where a fund, paid into court in a creditors' suit, has been distributed by mistake among specialty and simple contract creditors, to the exclusion of a mortgagee, a court of equity holds such creditors liable to repay, not in solido, but pro ratâ; and no creditor will be fixed with liability in respect of the ratable part which the mortgagee may fail to recover from a creditor who, since sharing in the fund, has become insolvent, or cannot be found. Todd v. Studholme, 3 Kay & J. 324; 26 L. J., Ch. 271; 5 W. R. 277.

Pursuant to a decree in a creditors' suit real estate was sold, and the purchase-money paid into court. In consideration of such payment, a mortgagee, who was not a party to the suit, but whose mortgage was noticed in the conditions of sale, executed the conveyance, but the fund was distributed among the other creditors without any payment being made to the mortgagee:—Held, upon a bill filed by his personal representative, that the latter was entitled to recover as follows—first, from the creditors who had been paid simple contract debts, the several sums paid to them, the total amount of such sums being less than the plaintiff's claim; secondly, from the only specialty creditor so much as might be necessary to satisfy what might remain due to the plaintiff for principal moneys and interest, after deducting the total amount of the moneys paid to the simple contract creditors, whether parties to this suit or not; and, thirdly, from the solicitors of the plaintiff in the creditors' suit whatever might be necessary to make good any deficiency arising by reason of some of the creditors becoming insolvent, or of others not being to be found or the like, it being the duty of such solicitors to see that the purchase-money paid into court was properly applied. Ib.

Held, also, that the purchasers, upon payment of the purchase-money into court, had discharged the only condition incumbent upon them, and were relieved from all responsibility as to its application. But the purchaser of the largest lot having allowed the title deeds to remain with the mortgtgee, the bill, as against him, was dismissed without costs. Ib.

Held, further, that although the mortgagee's solicitor was chargeable, as between his client and himself, with gross negligence in not placing a stop order on the fund in the original suit, his duties were dehors that suit in which the primary duties lay with the solicitors of the plaintiff, who had the distribution of the fund, and that in this suit he could not be made responsible. Ib.

Principles by which the court is governed in giving directions as to costs in a suit of this nature. Ib.

—— Interest on Bond Debt—Deduction for Property Tax—After Six Years.]—Executor of obligor of bond having by mistake paid debt and interest without making deduction for property tax provided for by bond, though six years had elapsed, held entitled to have it refunded. It would have been otherwise in case of the obligor himself having paid it. Smith v. Alsop, M'Clel. 623; 13 Price 823.

—— Debit found against Alleged Creditor.]—Where the plaintiffs in a creditors' suit turned out to have been overpaid, it was held that the court had jurisdiction to order the plaintiffs to bring in the sum by which they had been overpaid. Graves v. Wright, 2 Dr. & War. 77; 1 Con. & L. 267.

XIII. PROCEEDINGS BY OR AGAINST.

a. At Common Law.

1. When Maintainable.

a. Actions by.

Executor both Plaintiff and Defendant.]—A party cannot be both plaintiff and defendant in an action; and, therefore, when the plaintiff sued as executor, and the defendant pleaded that the promises were made jointly with the plaintiff:—Held, a good plea in bar. Moffat v. Van Mullinger, 2 Chit. 539; 2 Bos. & P. 124, n; 5 R. R. 557. S. P. in equity, Miles v. Durnford, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 234; 2 De G. M. & G. 641; 21 L. J., Ch. 667.

Before Probate or Letters of Administration.]—A person suing as executor, having admitted that he had not obtained probate of the will, the court in the exercise of its general jurisdiction to prevent an abuse of its process, stayed the proceedings until probate should be taken out, and reasonable notice thereof given to the defendant. Webb v. Adkins, 14 C. B. 401; 2 C. L. R. 702; 23 L. J., C. P. 96; 2 W. R. 225.

An executor may commence an action before probate because he derives his right from the will. But an administrator ought not to commence an action before letters of administration are granted, as he derives all his authority from the ordinary. Woolrich v. Bishop, 7 B. & C. 406; 2 Man. & Ry. 431, n.; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 101.

And an administrator cum testamento annexo cannot declare before administration is granted, any more than an ordinary administrator. Phillips v. Hartley, 3 Car. & P. 121.

—— On Bill of Exchange.]—A bill of exchange had been indorsed by a testatrix, who was the holder thereof, and paid into her bankers for collection in the usual course of business. Before the bill became due the testatrix died, and when it became due the plaintiffs, as her executors, demanded the return of the bill, or its value. The bankers refused to deliver up the bill, on the ground that the plaintiffs had not taken out probate, but said they were ready and willing to give up the bill to the plaintiffs on their production of probate. Whereupon the plaintiffs, before taking out probate, began an action against the bankers for delivery up of the bill, or its value, and for damages for its detention:—Held, that all proceedings in the action should be stayed as frivolous and vexatious, until the plaintiffs took out probate. Tarn v. Commercial Banking Co. of Sydney, 12 Q. B. D. 294; 50 L. T. 365; 32 W. R. 492.

—— Continuing Proceedings after Death of Plaintiff.]—Where, after an order directing the trial of issues of fact before a jury, one of the plaintiffs died within fourteen days of the date fixed for the trial, on the application of his executors, undertaking to apply forthwith for probate, and to produce the same at the trial of the action if obtained, the court made an order continuing the proceedings. Hughes v. West, 13 L. R. Ir. 224.

On Suggestion of Death of a Sole Plaintiff.]—The provision continued in s. 137 of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, gives a right to the personal representative of a deceased sole plaintiff to enter a suggestion of the death of the plaintiff, and to continue the action only in those cases where the cause of action would before that act have survived to the representative, and he could have commenced an action in his representative character. Flinn v. Perkins, 32 L. J., Q. B. 10; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1177; 7 L. T. 364; 11 W. R. 95.

For Debts due before Death.]—A. declared as administrator of B., stating that the defendant, in B.'s lifetime, was indebted to B. in money to be paid by him to B. on request. It was proved that B. had contracted with the defendant, in writing, to do certain works for him for 400*l.*, to be paid upon completion of the works. B. died before their completion; and A., before he had taken out letters of administration, agreed with the defendant to complete, and did complete, the works:—Held, that these facts did not support the declaration, inasmuch as the contract being entire, and the works unfinished at B.'s death, no debt accrued from the defendant to B. in B.'s lifetime; although the new agreement with A. amounted, as between him and the defendant, to a rescinding of the original contract, which would entitle A., as administrator, to sue on a quantum meruit in respect of the work done by B. Crosthwaite v. Gardner, 18 Q. B. 640; 21 L. J., Q. B. 356; 17 Jur. 377.

In an action, by an executor, for work done, it appeared that his claim was for extras incurred in making a machine for the defendant by the testator beyond what was contained in the agreement and specification. The plaintiff did not produce the agreement, which was unstamped, and in the hands of a third party, but proved that the defendant had ordered, and the testator executed additions and alterations, and also that the testator had told a witness that he had received money from the defendant on account of the extras. On this evidence the defendant claimed a nonsuit, but the judge allowed the case to go to the jury, who found for the plaintiff:—Held, the defendant was not entitled to a nonsuit; but the evidence being insufficient to justify the verdict, the rule was made absolute for a new trial. Edie v. Kingsford, 2 C. L. R. 832; 14 C. B. 759; 23 L. J., C. P. 123.

The property of an intestate was assigned to assignees previously to his death; the plaintiff administered, and applied to the defendant for payment for goods sold him by the intestate in the name of the assignees, and afterwards brought an action in his character of administrator:—Held, that such action was well brought. Brandt v. Heatig, 2 Moore, 184; 19 R. R. 558.

—— On Promissory Note.]—In 1833, the plaintiff married, at which time his wife was the holder of a promissory note made by the defendant, and which had been given to her whilst sole. In 1843 the plaintiff's wife died, after giving birth to a child. It was then agreed between the plaintiff (who claimed the note as the representative of his wife) and the defendant that the latter should maintain the child, and that in consideration the defendant should receive the rents of cottages which had been the property of the plaintiff's wife, and that he should also retain the interest which might become payable on the note. In 1839 the defendant signed an indorsement on the note, to the effect that all the interest on the note was then paid. The defendant continued to maintain the child to the time of its death in 1848. In 1853, letters of administration were granted to the plaintiff, and, subsequently, in the same year, he sued the defendant on the note:—Held, first, that the agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant, that the future maintenance of the child should be taken in part payment of the interest on the note, and which had been acted upon within six years before action brought, was a sufficient payment of interest within the proviso of the 2nd section of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 14. Secondly, that the contract being with a person acting on behalf of the intestate's estate and for its benefit, the administration had relation back to what was done after the death of the intestate and before the grant of letters of administration, so as to entitle the plaintiff to sue as administrator on a promise made to him as such. Bodger v. Arch, 10 Ex. 333; 2 C. L. R. 1491; 24 L. J., Ex. 19.

In respect of Personal Contracts.]—An engineer was appointed to construct certain works, which it was calculated would occupy fifteen months, and was to be paid for his services during that period 500*l.* by equal quarterly instalments. Shortly after the end of the third quarter he died, two of the quarterly instalments then remaining unpaid:—Held, that although his death put an end to the contract for the future, it did not divest the right of action for those instalments which had already accrued to him, and his administrator was therefore entitled to recover them, and not merely upon a quantum meruit for the value of the amount of the work actually done. Stubbs v. Holywell Ry., 36 L. J., Ex. 166; L. R. 2 Ex. 311; 16 L. T. 631; 15 W. R. 869.

The defendant ordered a coat of T., a tailor; the coat was cut out and tacked together, and tried on the defendant by T., but before it was finished T. died; the coat was afterwards finished, and delivered by his widow and administratrix:—Held, that the value of the coat was recoverable upon a count for goods sold and delivered by the administratrix. Warner v. Humphreys, 3 Scott (N.R.) 226; 2 Man. & G. 853.

For Money received between Death of Intestate and Grant of Administration.]—An action for money had and received will lie by an administrator against a stranger, for debts due to the intestate, received by him between the time of the death of the intestate and the grant of administration, as well as for money arising from the sale of his goods. Welchman v. Sturgis, 13 Q. B. 552; 18 L. J., Q. B. 211; 13 Jur. 388.

Where money belonging to a testator had been received by the defendant after the testator's death:—Held, that his executor might maintain an action for money had and received in his own right. Smith v. Barrow, 2 Term Rep. 476.

French Law—Without Grant.]—The widow of a French subject became donee of the universality of the real and personal estates of the succession of her late husband, and as such, all his rights, by the law of France, vested in her, and she was entitled to enforce the same in her own name, and she became liable also to her late husband's liabilities. She was compelled to pay the amount of certain bills of exchange, of which her husband was drawer and the defendant acceptor, and recovered judgment against the defendant in France. In an action on this judgment:—Held, that she was not bound to take out letters of administration in this country previously to bringing her action. Vanquelin v. Bouard, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 341; 33 L. J., C. P. 78; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 566; 9 L. T. 582; 12 W. R. 128.

For Work done after Testator's Death.]—A., a coachbuilder, was employed up to his death by the defendant, a jobmaster; A.'s widow took out administration, and during two or three months, until her own death, did substantial repairs to carriages of the defendant on the intestate's premises and with his tools, all the materials employed being the intestate's except one shaft. On the widow's death A.'s daughter took out administration de bonis non to A.'s estate, and sued the defendant for the price of the work done by the administratrix:—Held, that the proper inference was that the first administratrix had carried on the business for the benefit of the estate, that the money recovered would therefore be part of A.'s assets, and consequently the action was rightly brought by the administratrix de bonis non. Moseley v. Rendell, 40 L. J., Q. B. 11; L. R. 6 Q. B. 338; 23 L. T. 774; 19 W. R. 619.

She having declared as administratrix of A., and alleged the work and materials to have been done and supplied to the defendant by her as such administratrix:—Held, that the declaration might and ought to be amended by stating her to be administratrix de bonis non, and the work, &c., to have been done by the first administratrix. Ib.

The executors of a baker carried on the business for about ten months under directions in the will, and during that time they supplied bread and flour to the defendant, but it did not appear that any of the materials had belonged to the testator:—Held, that as the money when recovered would be assets of the testator, they could sue as executors. Abbott v. Parfitt, 40 L. J., Q. B. 115; L. R. 6 Q. B. 346; 24 L. T. 469; 19 W. R. 718.

An administrator cannot sue in his representative character upon contracts made after the death of the intestate, in the course of carrying on the intestate's business. Bolingbroke v. Kerr, 35 L. J., Ex. 137; L. R. 1 Ex. 222; 14 L. T. 365; 14 W. R. 657.

A. agreed to do certain work, and died before the work was begun. His executors did the work, using the materials:—Held, in an action by the executors in their representative character, for work and labour done, and materials found, that the executors might recover the value of the materials. Marshall v. Broadhurst, 1 C. & J. 403; 1 Tyr. 348; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ex. 105.

For Recovery of Specific Chattel.]—Where an executor seeks the recovery of a specific chattel, he must resort to law after he has obtained a discovery in equity. Allen v. Smith, Ridgw. 288.

In Respect of Breaches of Covenant.]—An executor may maintain an action for a breach of covenant in the lifetime of the testator, relating to the realty, if it is collateral. Semble, also, he may for a substantial breach in the lifetime of the testator of a covenant running with the land. Raymond v. Fitch, 1 Gale, 337; 2 C. M. & R. 588; 5 L. J., Ex. 45.

The executor of a tenant for life may recover for the breach of a covenant to repair, committed by the lessee of the testator in his lifetime, without averring a damage to his personal estate, Ricketts v. Weaver, 12 M. & W. 718; 13 L. J., Ex. 195.

—— Agreed to be inserted in Lease—Lease never executed.]—The tenant of business premises, covenanted by a deed of arrangement, made between himself and the administrator of his deceased partner, in whom the premises were vested, to accept a lease of the premises for a term at a rent named in the deed, and it was stipulated that the lease should contain a covenant by him to keep the premises in repair, and other covenants usual in leases of a like nature. He retained possession of the premises till his death, but was never called upon to execute a lease:—Held, that the administrator was entitled to rank as a specialty creditor in respect of his claim for rent and dilapidations in the same manner as if a lease had been executed in pursuance of the deed on the day of the date thereof. Kidd v. Boone, 40 L. J., Ch. 531; L. R. 12 Eq. 89; 24 L. T. 356.

As part of the same arrangement the tenant gave to the administrator a bond to secure part of a sum due from him to the partnership, and thereby bound himself, in case he should not punctually pay the instalments therein mentioned, to pay the remainder of the sum due. The instalments were not paid regularly:—Held, that the administrator was entitled to claim as a specialty creditor for the whole sum. Ib.

Against Legatees.]—Distribution of the estate by an executor with notice of a contingent liability does not preclude him from recovering the estate from the legatees in case the contingent liability afterwards ripens into actual loss. Jervis v. Wolferstan, 43 L. J., Ch. 809; L. R. 18 Eq. 18; 30 L. T. 452.

An executor, who allows a legatee of leaseholds to take possession, and is compelled at the suit of the landlord to pay rent which subsequently accrues due, is entitled to recover the amount from the legatee as money paid to his use. Armstrong v. Swann, Ir. R. 5 C. L. 297. See also REFUNDING, XII. a, ante, col. 1594.

Asportation of Property.]—A near relative of a deceased person being in the house at the death, removed some of his jewellery from one room to another. The executor having brought trespass for this asportation, the jury found that the defendant removed the goods bonâ fide for their preservation:—Held, that this was no answer to the action. Kirk v. Gregory, 45 L. J. Ex. 186; 1 Ex. D. 55; 34 L. T. 488; 24 W. R. 614.

Semble, per Bramwell and Amphlett, BB., that if the defendant had proved not merely that the interference was made bonâ fide for the preservation of the goods, but that it was reasonably necessary, and that it was carried out in a reasonable manner, this would have constituted a good defence. Ib.

Trespass de bonis asportatis is maintainable by an administrator for a trespass committed upon the goods of the intestate after his death, and before letters of administration granted. Tharpe v. Stallwood, 1 D. & L. 24; 5 Man. & G. 760; 6 Scott (N.R.) 715; 12 L. J., C. P. 241; 7 Jur. 492.

For Injury to Personal Chattels.]—A plaint by an administratrix, complaining of an injury to the personal chattels of the intestate is not sustained by proof of injuries to a building held by him as tenant from year to year, or to machinery firmly attached to the walls and floor by bolts and screws, in the nature of trade fixtures removable as between landlord and tenant. Barnett v. Lucas, Ir. R. 5 C. L. 140.

For Loss of Interest—Deposit by Deceased in part payment of Purchase-money—Breach of Contract.]—Where the vendor of an estate (the vendee having made a deposit in part payment of the purchase-money) fails to make out a good title by the time stipulated, and the vendee dies, the personal representative of the vendee, and not his heir, is entitled to maintain an action to recover damages for loss of interest on the deposit, and for expenses incurred by the vendee in endeavouring to procure a title, the injury accruing to the personal estate. Orme v. Broughton, 4 M. & Scott, 417; 10 Bing. 533; 3 L. J., C. P. 208.

Of Mortgagee—Covenant for Specific Bequest.]—An executor of a mortgagee cannot maintain an action of covenant for a specific bequest, although his co-executor has assented to the bequest, as the covenant with the mortgagee is collateral, and does not run with the land. Canham v. Rust, 2 Moore, 164; 8 Taunt. 227.

For Trover.]—In trover for goods of the testator, the executor must declare as such if the goods were in the possession of the executor. Cockerill v. Kynaston, 4 Term Rep. 280.

Wherever the produce of the goods would be assets, the executor may sue in trover in that character, whether the conversion happened before or after the testator's death. Ib.

Detinue.]—A. having died intestate, the defendant and B. took possession of his goods and divided them between themselves. Letters of administration having been subsequently obtained by the plaintiff, detinue was brought against the defendant:—Held, that the action was not maintainable as to the goods which B. had kept possession of, as they had not been in the defendant's possession after the grant of letters of administration. Crossfield v. Such, 8 Ex. 825; 22 L. J., Ex. 325; 1 W. R. 471.

For Trespass.]—An executor can maintain trespass for injury to a chattel real of his testator done in the testator's lifetime. Hone v. Hamilton, Ir. R. 9 C. L. 15.

—— Against Sheriff.]—An intestate died in August: her next of kin took out letters of administration in the same month, and went and lived in her house till the month of November, when the goods of the intestate in the house were seized under a fi. fa. against the administrator for a debt of his own :—Held, that an action lay against the sheriff by the administrator, in his representative capacity for this seizure. Gaskell v. Marshall, 5 Car. & P. 31.

For Damage to Estate arising out of Injury to Person.]—The plaintiff sued as the administratrix of her late husband, who, whilst crossing the defendants' railway at a level crossing, was, through the negligence of the defendants, run over by an engine and sustained personal injuries which prevented him from following his occupation and earning wages, and caused him to incur expenses for medical attendance and nursing, whereby his personal estate was diminished in value :—Held, that the plaintiff could not sue in respect of damage to the intestate's estate arising as above mentioned, from the tortious injury to the intestate's person, and that the action was therefore not maintainable. Pulling v. G. E. Ry., 51 L. J., Q. B. 453 ; 9 Q. B. D. 110 ; 30 W. R. 798 ; 46 J. P. 617.

——Breach of Contract causing Death.]—Where a passenger on a railway was injured by an accident, and after an interval died in consequence : —Held, that his executrix might recover in an action for breach of contract against the railway company the damage to his personal estate arising in his lifetime from medical expenses and loss occasioned by his inability to attend to business. Daly v. Dublin, Wicklow and Wexford Ry., 30 L. R., Ir. 514.—C. A.

A wife, in the lifetime of her husband, received during a journey as a passenger on a railway, a bodily injury, in consequence of the negligence of the company, by reason whereof her husband incurred expenses and suffered pecuniary loss, and on her husband's death, without having received any compensation for the damage thereby incurred, she, as his executrix, sued the company upon their contract safely and securely to carry, to recover compensation for such expenses and loss to her testator's personal estate :—Held, that the action was an action of contract, and that a loss or damage from the breach of the contract having accrued to the personal estate of the testator, an action to recover damages by reason of that loss survived to her as executrix, and that therefore the action was maintainable. Potter v. Metropolitan Ry., 32 L. T. 36—Ex. Ch.

When a passenger on a railway was injured by an accident, and after an interval died in consequence :—Held, that his executrix might recover in an action for breach of contract against the railway company the damage to his personal estate arising in his lifetime from medical expenses and loss occasioned by his inability to attend to business. Bradshaw v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry., 44 L. J., C. P. 148 ; L. R. 10 C. P. 189 ; 31 L. T. 847 ; 23 W. R. 310.

—— Where prior Action.]—Claim, stating that the plaintiff was administratrix of her husband, who, being a season-ticket holder, was received by a railway company at their station to be conveyed as a passenger, and by their negligence was injured, and in consequence unable to attend to his business from that day to the day of his death, and incurred expense. Defence, first, denying specifically all allegations in the statement relating to the injury to the deceased and the damage arising from it ; and stating that after his death the plaintiff, as his administratrix, for the benefit of herself, as his wife, and of his children, sued the railway company in respect of the injury caused to them by his death, and recovered damages. Reply, that the company was estopped from denying the facts relating to the accident, as in the previous action they had pleaded not guilty, and that her husband was not received by them as a passenger, and those issues were found by the jury in her favour :—Held, first, that the second action was not barred by the judgment and satisfaction under the first. Leggott v. G. N. Ry., 45 L. J., Q. B. 557 ; 1 Q. B. D. 599 ; 35 L. T. 334 ; 24 W. R. 784.

Held, secondly, that there was no estoppel of which either party could take advantage, as the plaintiff sued in a different right in either action. Ib.

Continuation of Action by.]—When an action is commenced in the name of a dead man, his representatives cannot be substituted as plaintiffs. Clay v. Oxford, 4 H. & C. 690 ; 36 L. J., Ex. 15 ; L. R. 2 Ex. 54 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 944 ; 15 L. T. 286 ; 15 W. R. 109.

For present practice, see PARTIES, XIII. c. post.

On Bill of Exchange for Accommodation of one of co-Executors.]—Bills of exchange were accepted by A. for the accommodation of B., who, being one of the executors of C., and having considerable sums of money in his hands belonging to C.'s estate, which were deposited in a box in B.'s possession, discounted such bills with the moneys belonging to C.'s estate, by taking out of the box the requisite amount, deducting the discount, and at the same time placing the bills in the box :—Held, that B. could not sever his character of an accommodation holder of the said bills, from his character of executor, so as to enable him and his co-executors to sue as indorsees of the bills of exchange for a valuable consideration. —— v. Adams, Younge, 117.

Ejectment—Leasehold—Testator the Lessor.] —The executor of a lessor can maintain an action to recover possession of the lands comprised in the lease, though not suing in his representative capacity. Mahony v. Mahony, 30 L. R., Ir. 475.

Lease by Administratrix—Ejectment by—Administrator de bonis non.]—An administratrix made a lease, in 1854, of premises forming a portion of the intestate's assets, for a term of twenty-one years. The lease did not purport to be made by her in her representative capacity. The lessee admittedly went into possession under the lease, but never paid any rent. He continued in possession until 1883, when the administrator de bonis non of the intestate brought an ejectment for nonpayment of rent. The jury having found that the defendant had continued in possession on the terms of the lease :—Held, that the plaintiff (the administrator de bonis non) was entitled to a verdict for possession and arrears of rent. Doyle v. Maguire, 14 L. R., Ir. 24.

b. Actions against.

Not before Probate.]—No action can be maintained against a party as executor, until he has taken upon himself to act as such, or has proved the will. Douglas v. Forrest, 1 M. & P. 663 ; 4 Bing. 686 ; 6 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 157 ; 29 R. R. 695.

In respect of Contracts.]—A contract to supply A. from 50 to 100 tons of slate, of certain dimensions, monthly; also from 100 to 130 tons of blocks, of other dimensions, monthly, and any further quantity that he might require, not exceeding 200 tons per month; the contract to be in force to a certain time, unless previously cancelled by mutual consent, is a contract binding on his administrator, and not merely personal. Wentworth v. Cock, 2 P. & D. 251; 10 A. & E. 42; 8 L. J., Q. B. 230; 3 Jur. 340.

A contract with the plaintiff that he should endeavour to sell a picture belonging to A., and if he succeeded, A. should pay him 100*l.*; A. died. The plaintiff endeavoured to sell the picture, and after A.'s death succeeded in selling it, and brought an action against A.'s administratrix. The declaration set forth these facts, and alleged that the defendant confirmed the sale as administratrix, and the plaintiff claimed the 100*l.* from the defendant as administratrix:—Held, that the declaration was bad, and the defendant was not liable as administratrix or personally for the 100*l.*, the original authority having been revoked by A.'s death. Campanari v. Woodburn, 15 C. B. 400; 3 C. L. R. 140; 24 L. J., C. P. 13; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 17; 3 W. R. 59.

An action is maintainable against the executors of an innkeeper on his implied promise to keep safely and without diminution the goods of his guests. Morgan v. Ravey, 6 H. & N. 265; 30 L. J., Ex. 131; 3 L. T. 784; 9 W. R. 376.

A declaration stated that L., being possessed of land, agreed with M., an architect, that he should lay out the land for building purposes, and make surveys, &c.; that he should make no charge for the above services, but in the event of the land being disposed of for building purposes M. should be appointed architect on L.'s behalf, and the parties building should pay him a percentage on the outlay, provided they did not employ him as their own architect; but in the event of L. or his successors wishing to dispense with M.'s services, that he or they should remunerate him for his services in making the preparations. L. made the surveys, &c., and the land was not disposed of for building purposes, and L.'s executors dispensed with M.'s services, and put it out of their power to dispose of the land for building purposes, and thereupon M. claimed remuneration for the preparations:—Held, that he was not entitled to recover, the disposal of the land for building purposes being the event in which he was to have any remuneration; that even if the declaration could be taken as charging the executors with wrongfully putting it out of their power to dispose of the land for building purposes, no contract could be implied from the agreement that L. or they should not dispose of the land otherwise than for building, in which case M. was not entitled to anything. Moffatt v. Laurie, 15 C. B. 583; 24 L. J., C. P. 56; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 283; 3 W. R. 252.

Debt accruing after Death of Testator.]—An action of debt was maintainable against an executrix upon a cause of action accruing after the death of the testator. Riddell v. Sutton, 5 Bing. 200; 2 M. & P. 345; 7 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 60; 30 R. R. 569.

On a Covenant.]—A., by voluntary conveyance, assigned to B. his furniture, in trust to the use of A., the settlor, for his life; and, at his death, in moieties to the use of his two nieces. Covenant by A., for himself and his executors, to do all reasonable acts for further and better assigning and transferring the furniture to B., on the same trusts as by B. or his counsel should be reasonably advised. A. was in possession of the furniture till his death. On that event his executor became possessed of and sold the whole. B. sued him as executor of A. on the covenant for further assurance, averring that it was at no time necessary to sell any of A.'s chattels to pay any debt of his, and that there were no creditors of his who could impeach the validity of the conveyance; and assigning by way of breaches that the executor refused to deliver the possession of the furniture to B.; and that the executor converted and sold the same, not alleging that he sold it in market overt:—Held, that B. was entitled to recover, at least on the last breach, the value of the furniture possessed by A., from the time of his executing the deed to his death, and afterwards sold by his executor, though trover might have been sustained for the same cause of action. Ward v. Audland, 16 M. & W. 862.

In an action on a covenant for non-payment of rent and for non-repair against an executor, it appeared that the testator had been appointed assignee under 1 Geo. 4, c. 119, s. 7, of an insolvent's estate, which consisted of the premises held under lease, and other property. The testator consented in writing to act as assignee, and an assignment to him from the provisional assignee was prepared and executed by the latter, but the testator did not execute the deed, although he let the premises and received the rent:—Held, that the executor of the deceased assignee was liable, as it did not appear that the insolvent court had appointed any other assignee of the insolvent estate. Abercrombie v. Hickman, 3 N. & P. 676; 1 W. W. & H. 534; 8 A. & E. 683; 7 L. J., Q. B. 269.

For Money had and received.]—In an action for money had and received, brought by the plaintiff as administrator of Jane V., against the defendant, as executor of Ann V., it appeared that Jane and Ann were sisters, Jane being the elder. The plaintiff's case was, that Jane had lent money to E., who gave his promissory note for the amount payable to Miss V. After the death of Ann, who survived Jane, the defendant, as the executor of the survivor, sued E. upon the note, alleging it to be payable to both sisters jointly, an alteration to that effect having, as it was said, been made in the note. E. settled the action and paid the amount of the note to the defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff could only support this action by affirming the act of the defendant in obtaining payment of a note payable to both sisters, but as he would have no right to receive payment of such a note, an action for money had and received would not lie. Vaughan v. Matthews, 13 Q. B. 187; 18 L. J., Q. B. 191; 13 Jur. 470.

For Contribution.]—Where several persons jointly contract for a chattel to be made or procured for the common benefit of all, and the executors of any party dying are by agreement to stand in the place of such party dying, although the legal remedy of the party employed would be solely against the survivors, yet the law will imply a contract on the part of the deceased contractor that his executors shall pay his proportion of the price of the article to be furnished. Prior v. Hembrow, 8 M. & W. 873; 10 L. J., Ex. 371.

Semble, that an action for contribution lies against the representatives of a deceased contractor. Batard v. Hawes, 2 El. & Bl. 287; 22 L. J., Q. B. 443; 17 Jur. 1154; 1 W. R. 387.

By Creditor appointed Executor but who does not prove.]—If a debtor makes his creditor and another person executors, and the creditor neither proves the will nor acts as executor, he may maintain an action against the other for his demand on the testator. Rawlinson v. Shaw, 3 Term Rep. 557; 1 R. R. 768.

Trover.]—Trover did not lie against an executor for a conversion by his testator. Hambly v. Trott, Cowp. 371.

In respect to Legacies.]—No action lies for a pecuniary legacy. Deeks v. Strutt, 5 Term Rep. 690. S. P., Farish v. Wilson, Peake, 103. And see Southampton Corporation v. Graves, 8 Term Rep. 593; 5 R. R. 480.

But an action lies against an executor to recover a specific chattel bequeathed after his assent to the bequest. Doe d. Saye and Sele (Lord) v. Guy, 3 East, 120; 4 Esp. 154; 6 R. R. 563.

An action lies against an executrix for a legacy upon a promise in consideration of assets; but if the action is brought against her personally in her own right, the judgment can only be de bonis propriis. Hawkes v. Saunders, Cowp. 289. S. P., Atkins v. Hill, Cowp. 284.

Where an executor agrees with a legatee to allow him interest on his legacy, if he will permit it to remain in his hands, it becomes a loan to the executor, for which he is personally responsible at law, and cannot plead plene administravit in bar to an action by the legatee. Wasney v. Earnshaw, 4 Tyr. 806.

In an action against executors (upon an account stated) for a legacy, it is competent to the plaintiff to impeach any particular item or items on the credit side of the account. Rose v. Savory, 2 Scott, 199; 1 Hodges, 269; 2 Bing. (N.C.) 145; 4 L. J., C. P. 275.

E. bequeathed, subject to debts and legacies, the residue of his personal estate to his executors, to divide the same into two equal parts, and to divide one of such parts into six equal shares, and to pay one of such shares unto each of his cousins, T., W., and H., and the remaining as therein mentioned, and appointed M. his executor, who duly proved the will. M., having taken upon himself the execution of the will, called a meeting of the residuary legatees, at which H. was present, and exhibited an account charging himself with assets, and paid some of the legatees the greater portion of their share of the residue, and was about to pay H., but was prevented from so doing. Another meeting was afterwards called, at which H. was not present, when the executor exhibited another account, charging himself with assets, and crediting himself with payments and disbursements, and, amongst others, with having paid "cash for legacy duties." To this was appended a supplemental account, containing the following item:—"By cash retained for H., 179*l.* 10*s.*" In an action for money had and received, and on an account stated, brought by H. against the executor, to recover the amount of the legacy:—Held, that the action was maintainable. Hart v. Minors, 2 C. & M. 700; 4 L. J., Ex. 275.

An action does not lie for the amount of the plaintiff's distributive share of the personal estate of an intestate, admitted by the administrator to be in his hands. A fortiori it will not lie against the executor of such administrator, upon an admission made by the former, although the latter has expressly promised payment. Jones v. Tanner, 1 Man. & Ry. 420; 7 B. & C. 542; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 71.

Money retained outside Character of Executor.]—The plaintiff and three others, being residuary legatees under the will of P., the defendants, as the executors named in the will, accounted with them; and having paid to the latter the respective sums due to them thereon, took from them and from the plaintiff a release, but did not pay the plaintiff his share, he having consented to allow it to remain in their hands:—Held, that the money not being retained by the defendants in their character of executors, the plaintiff was entitled to recover it in an action. Gregory v. Harman, 1 M. & P. 209; 3 Car. & P. 205; 6 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 56. See also Moert v. Moesard, 1 M. & P. 8. Topham v. Morecraft, 8 El. & Bl. 972; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 60; 6 W. R. 294.

Where an executor receives money to the use of another he is personally liable, and may be personally sued. Waite v. Gale, 2 D. & L. 925; 14 L. J., Q. B. 212; 9 Jur. 782.

For Wrongful Acts of Testator.]—A tenant for life of an estate, in 1868, leased a farm adjoining plantations in which yew trees were growing, and which the lessor reserved to himself. In March and September, 1869, sheep belonging to the lessee died from having eaten of the yew that protruded through the fence surrounding the plantations, and clipping of yew that had been thrown over the fence by the lessor's gardener. The lessor died in February, 1870; the tenant continued to hold the farm as the tenant of the trustees of the will by which the estate was settled. In September and October, 1870, four steers belonging to him got over a ditch, which happened to be nearly dried up, on to land in the hands of the trustees, and died from eating yew there. A bill for the administration of the lessor's estate was filed in February, 1871, and the lessee brought in under the decree a claim against the executors for damages on account of the loss of his sheep and cattle so poisoned:—Held, that the claim for the losses which occurred in the lessor's life, if ever sustainable, was one in respect of an injury to property coming within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 2, and was made too late. Erskine v. Adeane, Bennett's Claim, 42 L. J., Ch. 835; L. R. 8 Ch. 756; 29 L. T. 234; 21 W. R. 802.

An administrator is liable to an action for money had and received by the intestate for coal tortiously raised and taken by him from the plaintiff's land, if the intestate has sold it and received the money. Powell v. Rees, 7 A. & E. 426; 2 N. & P. 571; W. W. & D. 680; 8 L. J., Q. B. 47.

Where part has been raised more than six months before the intestate's death, and part within six months, the plaintiff may bring trespass for so much as was raised within six months, and also for money had and received for so much as was raised before; the acts being distinct, and therefore the two actions not being incompatible. Ib.

The executors are also liable in tort, the loss of the goods being a wrong committed within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 2. Ib.

In trover against an executor, it appeared that the watch, which was the subject-matter of the action, had been given by the testatrix to S., in September, 1837; that S. re-delivered it to the testatrix in March, 1838, for the purpose of its being pawned by her; that, on its being demanded by the plaintiff, in December, 1838, the testatrix said that she would consult her solicitor; and that the testatrix died in March, 1839:—Held, that this was sufficient evidence to warrant the jury in finding a conversion within six months before the death. Richmond v. Nicholson, 8 Scott, 134; 9 L. J., C. P. 1.

—— Executor of Tenant for Life—Action against for Non-repair, by Remainderman in Fee.]—A devise of premises for life provided that the tenant for life should keep the premises in repair. The tenant for life entered upon and enjoyed the premises during her lifetime, but left them at her death out of repair. The remainderman in fee brought an action against the executor of the tenant for life in respect of the non-repair of the premises within the period of limitation prescribed by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 2, which gives a right of action against the executor of a person deceased in respect of wrongs committed by the testator to another in respect of his property:—Held, that an action of tort in respect of the permissive waste by non-repair of the premises would have lain at common law against the tenant for life in her lifetime, and consequently lay under the above-mentioned statute against her executor after her death. Woodhouse v. Walker, 49 L. J., Q. B. 609; 5 Q. B. D. 404; 42 L. T. 770; 28 W. R. 765; 44 J. P. 666.

Expenses of Removal of Sunken Vessel—Liability under Local Act.]—Under a local act, commissioners were empowered, when a vessel had been sunk or stranded, if the owner should neglect or refuse, within a certain time, to raise it, to cause it to be raised, or if that could not be effected to blow it up, and to recover the expense in a summary manner from the owner. A vessel having sunk, her two partners did not raise her, so, by order of the commissioners, endeavours were made to raise her, and these proving ineffectual, she was blown up. After the attempts to raise, but before the blowing up, one of the owners died, and proceedings were taken against the survivor and the co-executor to enforce payment of the expenses, both of the attempts to raise the ship and to blow it up:—Held, that the order for payment of the expenses could not be made against the executor, but that it might be made against the co-owner. Wilson v. Carter, 7 L. T. 676; 11 W. R. 337.

Plene Administravit—Devastavit—Estoppel.]—A creditor of a testator having recovered judgment for his debt in an action against the executor after issue found in favour of the creditor on a plea of plene administravit, sued the executor in an action on such judgment, suggesting a devastavit:—Held, that the executor could not shew that the acts of waste complained of were committed by him before such judgment with the concurrence of the creditor, as that would amount to no assets as between him and the executor, and would therefore negative the judgment, which the executor was estopped from doing. Jewesbury v. Mummery, 42 L. J., C. P. 22; L. R. 8 C. P. 56; 27 L. T. 618; 21 W. R. 270—Ex. Ch.

b. OTHER PROCEEDINGS.

1. When Maintainable.

Executor both Plaintiff and Defendant.]—A., the surviving executor of B., filed a bill to set aside a mortgage of the assets made by C., the deceased executor of B. A. was also the representative of C.:—Held, that A. could not sever his character of representative of the original testator, in which he had title to sue, from that of representative of C., in which he could not sue, to set aside his testator's deed, and on this ground the bill was dismissed. Miles v. Durnford, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 234; 2 De G. M. & G. 641; 21 L. J., Ch. 667. S. P., Moffat v. Van Mullingen, 2 Chit. 539; 2 Bos. & P. 124, n.; 5 R. R. 557.

Before Probate or Letters of Administration—When Plaintiff.]—The rule that, in order to entitle a party to sue in any court in this country, whether of law or of equity, in respect of the personal rights of a testator or an intestate, he must appear to have obtained probate or letters of administration from the proper court in this country, is subject to this qualification, that he is suing in right of the deceased. Vanquelin v. Bouard, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 341; 33 L. J., C. P. 78; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 566; 9 L. T. 582; 12 W. R. 128.

Plaintiff entitles himself as administrator; defendant pleads plaintiff is not administrator; a good plea in abatement in equity, as well as in law. Winn v. Fletcher, 1 Vern. 473.

Though administration is not taken out till after the filing of the bill, yet if granted before a cause comes to a hearing in equity it is sufficient; otherwise at law, because there the defendant may crave oyer of the letters of administration. Fell v. Lutwidge, 2 Atk. 120.

Where an executor before probate files a bill, and afterwards proves the will, such subsequent probate makes the bill a good one. Humphreys v. Humphreys, 3 P. W. 351.

An executor filed a bill before probate; plea that he had not proved the will, allowed. Simons v. Millman, 2 Sim. 241; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 148. S. P., Bourke v. Kelly, 1 Hog. 172.

A decree cannot be obtained as to a sum due to a testator until the probate has been properly stamped. Howard v. Prince, 10 Beav. 313.

If an executrix sues in that character, she must produce probate, though she could make out her title as legatee of a lease for years. Gleeson v. Cooke, 1 Hog. 294.

Bill of revivor must shew that plaintiff has proved testator's will. Humphreys v. Ingledon, 1 Dick. 29. And see S. C., 1 P. W. 752.

The plaintiffs sued as trustees of A., but omitted to prove his will, and the bill was dismissed. They afterwards presented a petition of rehearing, and moved for leave to exhibit interrogatories to prove the will, which was granted, the omission having arisen from the inadvertence of counsel, and the will not being the subject of dispute in the court. Hood v. Pimm, 4 Sim. 101; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 63.

A surviving husband, having mortgaged the reversionary share of his deceased wife in personal estate, died. Upon the death of the tenant for life the mortgagee petitioned the court; and in the proceedings on the petition a person was appointed by order of the court to represent the estates of the husband and the wife, there being no legal personal representative of either. Upon evidence being produced that the commissioners of inland revenue would be willing to accept a sum equal to administration duty, as from an administrator of the wife, without the production of an actual grant of letters of administration, if succession duty was also paid; and the petitioner being ready to satisfy these demands the court dispensed with production of letters of administration. Ranking, In re, L. R. 6 Eq. 601.

Where a testator had contracted for the sale of leaseholds to a company, but died before payment of the purchase-money:—Held, that the executors could obtain an injunction to restrain the company before obtaining probate. Newton v. Metropolitan Ry., 1 Dr. & Sm. 583; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 738; 5 L. T. 542; 10 W. R. 102.

Demurrer lies to a bill inter alia for a receiver till letters of administration granted, where no reason is shewn why they cannot be immediately taken out. Jones v. Frost, 3 Madd. 1.

An objection was taken to a bill by a husband for a legacy due to his late wife, that administration had not been taken out till after bill filed; the objection was overruled, partly because the administration had relation back to the time of the death; partly because, before taking out administration, the husband had an equitable interest. Moses v. Leci, 3 Y. & C. C. C. 359.

A bill having been filed by a party as administratrix who had not taken out letters of administration, the defendant pleaded that fact, and the plaintiff replied, and afterwards took out letters of administration:—Held, that the fact that administration was not granted to the plaintiff until after she had replied to the plea, did not preclude her from having a decree at the hearing. Davies v. Coleman, 3 Jur. 948.

In an administration suit by six infants against A. the executor, A. dies; and two of the plaintiffs, being then of age, procure administration to the testator, and they and the four infants file two supplemental bills alleging the fact of the administration, the letters not being in fact granted till some days after the filing of those bills. The administrators (defendants to the infants' supplemental bill) put in a plea that they were not administrators as alleged at the filing of the supplemental bills:—Held, that if administration be granted before hearing, it is sufficient. Horner v. Horner, 23 L. J., Ch. 10; 2 W. R. 47.

—— Petition to Wind up by Executor.]—The executor of a creditor of a company is entitled to present a winding-up petition before he has obtained probate; it is sufficient if he has obtained probate before the hearing of the petition. Masonic and General Life Assurance Co., In re, 55 L. J., Ch. 666; 32 Ch. D. 373; 34 W. R. 739.

When Plaintiff — For Indemnity against Judgment—Administration taken out to raise Case of Damage.]—The plaintiff being beneficially interested with others in an annuity or rent-charge issuing out of land, and secured by the covenant of the grantor, joined in a suit against the purchaser of the lands to whom they were conveyed expressly subject to the annuity, for the recovery of the arrears thereof; and in that suit recovered six years' arrears only, there being more due. The plaintiff then obtained administration to the grantor of the annuity, in order that she might become defendant in an action at law on the covenant. Such action was brought, and judgment by default was obtained against her for the arrears due beyond the six years: the damages and costs to be levied de bonis testatoris; et si non, the costs de bonis propriis. She then filed a bill against the purchaser, to be indemnified against the judgment:—Held, that her right to institute the suit depended upon the existence of damage which she had sustained or might sustain by the judgment, and therefore that she was bound to shew that there were assets out of which the judgment might be levied; and quære, whether she was entitled to relieve upon proof of the existence of assets, she having obtained administration to the covenantor in order to raise the case of damage of which she complained by her bill. Byrne v. Duignan, 3 Jo. & Lat. 116; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 295.

—— Agreement to Compromise Action — Adoption by Administrator of Plaintiff—Right of Administrator to Enforce.]—The plaintiff in an action having, at the instance of the defendant, consented to a compromise of the action, the plaintiff's solicitors suggested that the defendant should make an offer of a money payment in satisfaction of the plaintiff's interest in certain property which was the subject of the action. The defendant's solicitors asked the plaintiff to name a sum which he would accept. A few days later the plaintiff died intestate. His daughter thereupon instructed the plaintiff's solicitors to agree to a compromise of the action on payment by the defendant of 500*l.* The defendant's solicitors replied that the defendant would pay 450*l.* in discharge of all claims. This offer was accepted by the plaintiff's daughter. It was then arranged that a summons should be taken out by consent, staying all further proceedings in the action on the terms agreed upon. Shortly afterwards the defendant's solicitors stated that, the defendant having discovered the property to be less valuable than he originally believed, it was impossible for him to pay 450*l.* The plaintiff's solicitors declined, however, to vary the terms of the compromise. Letters of administration to the plaintiff's estate were subsequently granted to his daughter, and an order was made that the proceedings in the action should be carried on by her as plaintiff. A summons was then taken out, on behalf of the plaintiff, to stay all further proceedings in the action on the terms agreed upon. The defendant refused to consent to such summons:—Held, that the administration related back to the date of the death of the plaintiff intestate, and the plaintiff's daughter was entitled to enforce the agreement to compromise the action, although the same had been entered into before the grant of administration; that the evidence did not shew that there had been any repudiation of such agreement; and that therefore the order asked for by the summons must be made. Baker v. Baker, 55 L. T. 723.

until after his death. The banking company having filed a bill against his legal personal representative for an account, the defendants demurred, on the ground that the acts of A. were felonious, and therefore could not be made the ground of a suit in equity. The rule of public policy not applying, the demurrer was overruled, with costs. Wickham v. Gatrell, 23 L. J., Ch. 783 ; 18 Jur. 768 ; 2 W. R. 673.

—— Suit against Co-executor for Debt to Estate.]—When a person named executor, though he has not proved the will nor acted, has not renounced probate, he cannot be sued by his coadjutor at law for a debt due from him to the estate, and therefore he can properly be sued in equity. Morley v. White, 42 L. J., Ch. 880 ; L. R. 8 Ch. 731 ; 29 L. T. 822 ; 21 W. R. 828.

A person named executor, alleged to be a debtor to the estate, was made a defendant to a bill for administration, and answered it, stating that he had not acted, and purporting to disclaim. Afterwards he renounced probate, and on the bill being amended to state how he was indebted to the estate, he pleaded the renunciation :—Held, that he was originally properly made a defendant, and that the jurisdiction having once attached, still remained after the renunciation. Ib.

—— For Tort of Deceased—Actio personalis.]—By a decree in 1870 it was declared that H. and F., and the estate of their deceased partner, were liable to the plaintiffs for minerals taken by them under the plaintiffs' farm, and that H. and F. were liable to compensate the plaintiffs for user of all roads and passages under the farm, and inquiries were directed—1. As to the quantity of minerals taken and their value. 2. What quantities of minerals had been carried by the defendants through the roads or passages under the farm. 3. What, upon the result of the second inquiry, ought to be paid by the defendants as wayleave for the user of the roads and passages. 4. Whether the farm, and the mineral property of the plaintiffs under it, had sustained any and what damage by reason of the way in which the defendants had worked under the farm. Pending these inquiries F. died, and his executrix moved to stay proceedings under the second, third, and fourth inquiries :—Held, that the fourth inquiry must be stayed : but that, as the estate of F. had derived profit from the trespasses to which the second and third inquiries related, it was liable after his death, and that those inquiries must be prosecuted. But held, on appeal, that proceedings under the second and third inquiries must also be stayed, for that, apart from cases of breach of contract, a remedy for a wrongful act done by a deceased person cannot be pursued against his estate, unless property, or the proceeds or value of property, belonging to another person have been appropriated by the deceased person, and added to his estate. Phillips v. Homfray, or Fothergill v. Phillips, 52 L. J., Ch. 833 ; 24 Ch. D. 439 ; 49 L. T. 5 ; 32 W. R. 6. Extending 52 L. J., Ch. 401.

A client, in 1869, entrusted money to a solicitor to invest on mortgage of land, trusting to representations by the solicitor (who acted for both parties) that the property was of fee-simple tenure, and free from incumbrances. The mortgagor died in 1879, and the solicitor died in 1881, when the client discovered that part of the property was only leasehold for lives, and also that the solicitor held a prior mortgage on part of the lands. In an action to make the solicitor's estate liable for the deficiency of the security :—Held, that though on the evidence the solicitor would have had no defence to the action if brought in his lifetime, yet it was not maintainable against his executors. Young v. Wallingford, 52 L. J., Ch. 590 ; 48 L. T. 756 ; 31 W. R. 838.

There is no equity to maintain a bill against the representatives of a person who was accessory to a fraud, from which he derived no pecuniary benefit, merely on the ground that, if alive, he might have been answerable for costs. Walsham v. Stainton, 1 Hem. & M. 322.

—— Civil Procedure Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42), s. 2.]—A tenant for life of an estate, in 1868 leased a farm adjoining plantations in which yew trees were growing, and which the lessor reserved to himself. In March and September, 1869, sheep belonging to the lessee died from having eaten of the yew that protruded through the fence surrounding the plantations, and clipping of yew that had been thrown over the fence by the lessor's gardener. The lessor died in February, 1870 ; the tenant continued to hold the farm as the tenant of the trustees of the will by which the estate was settled. In September and October, 1870, four steers belonging to him got over a ditch, which happened to be nearly dried up, on to land in the hands of the trustees, and died from eating yew there. A bill for the administration of the lessor's estate was filed in February, 1871, and the lessee brought in under the decree a claim against his executors for damages on account of the loss of his sheep and cattle so poisoned :—Held, that the claim for the losses which occurred in the lessor's life, if ever sustainable, was one in respect of an injury to property coming within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 2, and was made too late. Erskine v. Adeane, Bennett's Claim, 42 L. J., Ch. 835 ; L. R. 8 Ch. 756 ; 29 L. T. 234 ; 21 W. R. 802.

The plaintiff brought his action for damages and an injunction against the firm of T. & Co. for torts committed by the firm. The firm consisted of T. alone, who died more than six months after the commencement of action, and the action was continued against his executors : —Held, that T. having died more than six months after the commission of the acts complained of, no action, either for damages or injunction, could be maintained against his executors ; although the action had been commenced in the lifetime of the testator, and although the executors continued the business in the name of the firm. Kirk v. Todd, 52 L. J., Ch. 224 ; 21 Ch. D. 484 ; 47 L. T. 676 ; 31 W. R. 69—C. A.

—— Light—Obstruction by Deceased Person completed more than Six Months before Death —Continuing Injury.]—Where an actionable obstruction to ancient lights is continued by the obstructor down to his death, an action for damages lies against his executors or administrators under s. 2 of the Civil Procedure Act, 1833, though the obstruction was completed more than six months before his death. Woodhouse v. Walker (49 L. Pending Litigation for Probate.] — Jurisdiction of a court of equity for an account of personal estate, and a receiver, pending a litigation for probate, though an administration pendente lite might be obtained in the Ecclesiastical Court. Atkinson v. Henshaw, 2 Ves. & B. 85. S. P., Ball v. Oliver, 2 Ves. & B. 96. Watkins v. Brent, 1 Myl. & Cr. 97 ; 7 Sim. 512 ; 5 L. J., Ch. 49. Wood v. Hitchings, 3 Beav. 504 ; 2 Id. 289 ; 10 L. J., Ch. 257 ; 4 Jur. 858.

A., the executor of the surviving executrix of the testator, obtains probate to her estate ; this is challenged by her next of kin and recalled, and pending that recall a suit is instituted for the administration of the estate of the original testator ; and upon the question whether a decree for account could be taken, treating A. as the legal personal representative of the original testator and his testatrix :—Held, that it could not, although, if the litigation in the Ecclesiastical Court was prolonged, means might be found to prosecute the suit. Way v. Way, 2 W. R. 395.

On demurrer to a bill filed by the assignee of a deceased insolvent, who had been discharged under the 53 Geo. 3, c. 138, against the personal representative of the insolvent :—Held, that the jurisdiction of equity to direct an account of the after-acquired property of the deceased in favour of the unsatisfied creditors, was not ousted by the provisions made by the above act for enforcing payment at law out of the after-acquired property. Byrne v. Byrne, Fl. & K. 435. Affirmed, 2 Dr. & War. 71 ; 1 Con. & L. 189 ; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 621.

The jurisdiction of the court of chancery cannot be taken away unless by express words. Ib.

Second Action — Fresh Evidence.] — After account taken and final decree in a cause instituted in the Court of Exchequer, in which the executors were plaintiffs for an account of assets, on an original bill in this court by one of the next of kin for an account against the executors, charging that the account under the decree in the exchequer was collusively taken, stating particular items of surcharge, and that some assets were subsequently received, as appeared by evidence newly-discovered :—Held, that the executors not having brought all the assets in their hands into account, is not such a fraud as will entitle the plaintiff to file an original bill after an account taken and final decree. It should have been a bill of review upon the newly-discovered evidence filed in the exchequer, and the receipt of assets subsequent to decree is matter of supplement. Dolan v. Nevill, 2 Moll. 494.

Generally.]—Distinction between the right to an account, and the right to the administration of a fund admitted to be in hand. Kohler v. Reynolds, 26 L. J., Ch. 415 ; 5 W. R. 422.

In the absence of any averment in the bill, the court will not, upon demurrer, assume that assets have come to the hands of an administrator without assuming also that they have been duly administered. Ib.

Infant Personal Representative.]—If letters of administration are granted to an infant, under which he receives and disposes of the assets of the intestate, an account cannot be directed in respect of his receipts during infancy. Hindmarsh v. Southgate, 3 Russ. 324 ; 27 R. R. 81. And see 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 24.

Against one or more Personal Representatives.] —Bill for account cannot be filed against one co-executor only, either by a creditor or as residuary legatee. Scurry v. Morse, 9 Mod. 89.

Several executors, and some admit assets ; yet an account decreed against the rest. Norton v. Turvill, 2 P. W. 145.

An infant legatee sued for an account against the two executors ; one of them had not proved, and denied having received any assets ; the account was directed against both. Price v. Vaughan, 2 Anstr. 524.

A co-executor beyond seas need not be made party to a bill for account against the other. Cowslad v. Cely, 1 Eq. Abr. 73. Cp. S. C., Pre. Ch. 83.

Against Representative of Accounting Party.] —Pending an account directed by the decree the accounting party died. An order was made, on motion to revive, against his executor, and that he might either admit assets or account for his testator's estate. Cartwright v. Shepheard, 20 Beav. 122.

Defendants, executors to their father, who was guardian in socage to plaintiff, ordered to answer for profits taken by him. Burgh v. Wentworth, Cary, 54.

A deed apportioning rent between A. and B., executed without any consideration or intention of bounty by A.'s agent, without authority, and in ignorance that the rent had been conclusively apportioned by a former deed, not enforced against A. But A., when afterwards apprised of his rights, obtaining from B. a settlement according to the former apportionment, and for several years after, during the life of B., paying the whole rent, without demanding contribution, not entitled, after the death of B., to an account against his assets ; as from A. being in active litigation with B. during his whole life, it was not to be presumed that the forbearance arose from kindness, but that A. knew, if he stirred his demand during B.'s life, he might have started some countervailing demand which B.'s representative had no means of setting up. A. entitled to contribution according to the former apportionment against C., the remainderman, from the death of B., when he went into possession ; also from a purchaser of part of the lands from the time of the purchase. Stratford v. Aldborough, Beat. 228.

Against Executor, where Business of Testator is carried on by some other Person.]—The widow of a testator carried on his business under a direction in the will that the executors should allow her to carry it on, and to have, while carrying it on, the use of the capital employed in it, and of his other personal estate. After her death, the plaintiffs, who had supplied her with goods for the purposes of the business, filed a bill against the testator's personal representative, claiming a lien on the funds employed in the trade, and by their interrogatories asked for accounts of the testator's personal estate and of the personal estate employed in the business. The executor declined to set forth the accounts, on the ground that if it should be decided at the hearing that the plaintiffs had no such lien as they claimed the discovery would be useless: —Held, that the executor was bound to give the account. Thompson v. Dunn, L. R. 5 Ch. 573; 18 W. R. 854.

Where directed—Where Personal Representative is a Beneficiary.]—The plaintiff, being entitled to one-third of a residue, filed a bill against the defendants, the executrixes, who were entitled to the other two-thirds, for the usual accounts. The defendants' answer stated that the plaintiff had informed the defendants that she (the plaintiff) had possessed herself of part of the assets:—Held, that this suggestion (which was not proved) did not entitle the defendants to a cross account against the plaintiff. Davies v. Peers, 5 L. J., Ch. 123.

On a claim, filed by one of two administrators, who were respectively beneficially interested in the property, for an account of the rents of certain leaseholds received by the other administrator, and the appointment of a receiver, the court refused the appointment of a receiver, but ordered the account. Scurrah v. Scurrah, 14 Jur. 874.

—— Where there has been a Submission to Account.]—A., made defendant in an original suit, being out of the jurisdiction of the court, never appears to the bill, nor is he served with subpœna to answer; he dies abroad, and letters of administration are taken out to his estate, and the suit revived against his administratrix, who denies assets, but submits to account. On objection taken, that he was no party to the original suit, and that a bill of revivor was not the proper course:—Held, that, as his representative submitted to account, the decree could be made against his estate. Collins v. Collins, 11 L. J., Ch. 384.

—— Where Assets Admitted.]—Admission of assets prevents the necessity of setting forth accounts. Pullen v. Smith, 5 Ves. 21.

—— Insufficient Admission of Assets.]—A bill of revivor against the executor of a deceased party, prayed that he should either admit assets or for an account. The executor admitted assets sufficient to answer the plaintiff's demand, if any, he being advised that the plaintiff had not any demand against the assets:—Held, not a sufficient admission of assets, and that an account should be directed. M'Tiernan v. Bell, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 193.

To a legatee's bill the executor admitted assets sufficient to pay the legacies, but relied on his right to retain them as an indemnity for the contingent liability on the testator's covenants, and did not set out the amount of the assets:—Held, the answer was insufficient, and that the executor was bound to set out the amount of the assets. M'Auley v. M'Auley, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 142.

Executor unable to state whether houses, the rent of which he has been receiving as executor, are leasehold or freehold, not allowed to set up the title of the heir-at-law as between himself and the personal representative. Freeman v. Fairlie, 3 Mer. 35; 17 R. R. 7.

That the executor is uncertain whether part of the property is real or personal, and (if real) who are the persons entitled to it, does not afford him any ground for declining to set forth in answer to a bill by the personal representatives what he has done with the property. Id. 36.

—— After Release.]—Release expressing that administrator had received "all" testator's property, court will not assume that he has received anything since, so as to direct an account. Taunton v. Pepler, 6 Madd. 166.

—— After Agreement not to take Proceedings.]—An agreement by a creditor not to take proceedings against the debtor during his life, nor against the debtor's estate during the life of his wife, if she should survive him, construed (as to the latter clause) to mean that any beneficial interest which the wife might take in the property of the husband should not be disturbed during her life, and not to be an agreement that the creditor should be debarred from suing the personal representative of the husband; and, therefore, the creditor obtained a decree for an account against the wife as the personal representative of the husband, with a declaration that the interest of the wife was not to be disturbed during her life. Harman v. Richards, 10 Hare, 81; 22 L. J., Ch. 1066.

—— Where the Right to an Account is Disputed.]—If an executor, knowing a plaintiff's title, by answer denies it, he is not bound to set out an account of assets; but if the title does not lie in his knowledge, he is, sed quære. Sweet v. Young, Ambl. 353.

Administrator disputing by his answer the fundation of the bill, viz., a balance of accounts against the intestate's estate, need not set forth an account of the personal estate, &c., by way of schedule. Phelips v. Caney, 4 Ves. 107. But see Elmer v. Creasy, 42 L. J., Ch. 807; L. R. 9 Ch. 69, 71.

Bill by cestuis que trustent against the representatives of a deceased trustee, to make his estate liable in respect of alleged breaches of trust, and asking that the defendants might admit assets, or set out accounts of the deceased's estate. The defendants did not admit assets; and denying the plaintiff's title to relief, refused to set out any account:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to know whether there would be assets to satisfy their claim in case of success, and that the defendants were bound to set forth some account not in detail, but in an abridged and general form. Cull v. Ingles, 37 L. J., Ch. 385; 19 L. T. 183; 16 W. R. 477.

—— As between Legatee Indebted and Testator's Estate.]—Testator bequeathed an annuity to B., who was acting as collector of the rents of his leasehold estate. By a codicil, dated 1837, reciting that B. was in arrear in respect of such rents, testator declared that the annuity should not be payable until B. had settled with his executors from the date of that codicil, and paid the balance due, and that the first payment in respect of the annuity should be three months after payment of such balance. Testator died in 1845. B. did not send in his accounts till 1850, when he claimed a balance due to himself thereupon. The executors rejected the accounts as unsatisfactory, and in particular as including an allowance of 450*l.* as commission for collecting, whereas they swore in their answer that they believed B. was to act gratis. B. being examined, swore that he had been promised the usual commission; but the accounts were somewhat suspicious, and only commenced in 1839. In May, 1850, B. filed his bill for the annuity, alleging that he could not make out better accounts without documents in defendant's possession:—Held, that, irrespective of the question whether an agreement had been made to allow B. a commission, and irrespective also of the question whether the production of accounts to the satisfaction of the executors was a condition precedent or subsequent to B.'s right to enjoy the annuity, the accounts between B. and the testator's estate ought to be taken by this court in this suit, inasmuch as the estate could not be properly cleared while the contingent claim to the legacy was suspended over it. Brogden v. Merton, 22 L. J., Ch. 1040; 17 Jur. 824.

—— Other Cases.]—Bill by a married woman for an account against an executor and trustee, charging him with wilful default, her husband and a solicitor acting for all the legatees having been present at, and consented to, what was practically, though not formally, a settlement of the account, and certain items which were objected to appearing to the court to be fair and reasonable, dismissed with costs, to be paid by her next friend. Ibberson v. Warth, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 440; 3 W. R. 230.

An executrix, the widow of the testator, who died in 1783, was, under his will, entitled during her widowhood to 400*l.* a year for the maintenance of herself and children, but only to 60*l.* a year for herself if she married again. She was appointed receiver of her children's fortune, and in 1791 she married B., but, concealing her marriage, passed her accounts as a widow on her death in 1794. B. administered to her and the testator, and passed his accounts in continuation of the widow's without acknowledging their marriage. All the children having attained their majority, disputed B.'s accounts, which were then referred to arbitration. Catherine, the eldest child, married before the award was made, and one of the arbitrators was a trustee of her settlement: her marriage was concealed from the court, and B. paid her husband sums which ought to have been paid to her trustees. In 1836 C. and her children filed a bill against B. and the trustee:—Held, that all the accounts should be taken again without regard to the award or to the accounts passed subsequently to the marriage of Catherine; that B.'s estate should be charged with the difference between the 60*l.* and 400*l.*, which his wife had received; and that the consideration of the liabilities of C.'s husband and of the trustee under her settlement should be reserved until the report. M'Can v. O'Ferrall, 8 Cl. & F. 30; West, 593.

Effect of a decree against administrator, entitling him to an injunction against the suit of a creditor, qualified by requiring an account of the assets, either by the answer or affidavit. Gilpin v. Southampton (Lady), 18 Ves. 469.

Account of mesne profits since title accrued decreed against executor, upon special ground that plaintiff was prevented from recovering in ejectment by rule of court of law, and by injunction at instance of occupier, who ultimately failed both at law and equity. Pulteney v. Warren, 6 Ves. 72; 5 R. R. 226.

What Items included—Profit on Investment.]—If an executor lay out the assets on private securities, all the benefit made thereby shall accrue to the estate; yet the executor shall answer all the deficiency, and the particular circumstances, of good conduct in the executor, cannot prevail against the general rule. Adye v. Feuilleteau, 1 Cox, 24.

—— Assets received Abroad.]—A creditor of a person who died intestate in India took out letters of administration to the deceased in that country. He then came to England, and obtained letters of administration from the Prerogative Court. Afterwards, one of the intestate's next of kin procured that administration to be revoked, and administration to be granted to himself:—Held, that the Indian administrator is compellable to account to him for assets possessed in India as well as in this country, in a suit instituted by him as personal representative only of the intestate, and to which the other next of kin, who were resident in India, were not parties. Sandilands v. Innes, 3 Sim. 263.

A suit cannot be instituted for an account of assets of a testator, possessed by an executor in Honduras, unless the will is proved here, or a sufficient reason assigned why it is not proved here. Lewis v. Gentle, 7 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 43.

—— Money paid over by Executor to other Persons.]—Under a decree for an account, and applying personal estate in payment of debts and funeral expenses, and directing the clear surplus to be paid over, making to the parties all just allowances, the Master ought to allow payment in discharge of legacies. Nightingale v. Lawson, 1 Cox, 23.

Creditors cannot, on a bill filed by them, charge an administrator with sums received, when the sums so received have been paid over to persons appointed at a meeting of the creditors of the deceased. Hindmarsh v. Southgate, 3 Russ. 324; 27 R. R. 81; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 24.

Under a general reference to Master of just allowances the executor cannot be charged with over-payment from estate, though the court might make the charge. Browne v. Spooner, 1 Ves. J. 291.

—— Amount of Rents of Real Estate wrongly paid to Deceased Person.]—The widow of a testator, with the acquiescence of his heir, was let into possession of certain freehold houses, under an erroneous supposition that they passed by the will along with other property, in which a life interest was devised to her; and before the error was discovered or her right disputed she died. On a bill filed by the heir, against her personal representative, praying the delivery of title deeds, and an account, it was held, that the suit was maintainable for the rents received during her continuance in possession; that as the defence of the Statute of Limitations was not raised upon the pleadings, the account should be taken from the time when the plaintiff's title first accrued; and that the plaintiff was not at liberty to set off the amount of such rents against payments made by the widow in her character of executrix, those payments being, by virtue of a special trust, a primary charge upon the estates, of which, subject to the widow's life interest, the plaintiff was devisee. Moneypenny v. Bristow, 2 Russ. & M. 117; 1 L. J., Ch. 88.

—— Against Executor Partner with Deceased.]—Where one of two executors was a partner with the testator, the residuary legatees may sustain a bill for an account of the partnership transactions against the executor, though collusion between them is neither charged nor proved. Cropper v. Knapman, 2 Y. & Coll. 338; 6 L. J., Ex. Eq. 9.

—— Against Executor de son tort, Partner with Deceased.]—If a defendant answers, he must answer fully; he cannot refuse to answer as to part, on the ground that the plaintiff is not entitled to that portion of the relief sought. Leigh v. Birch, 32 Beav. 399; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1265; 11 W. R. 554.

A plaintiff filed a bill for an account against a defendant in his character of executor de son tort, and also in his character of a surviving partner of the deceased:—Held, that he having answered, must answer fully, both in his character of executor and surviving partner. Ib.

In a suit for an account by the next of kin of a deceased partner against the surviving partner, who also filled the character of executor de son tort of the estate of the deceased partner:—Held, that the defendant, by submitting to answer the bill, rendered himself liable to set out not only the accounts of the estate so received by him, but also of the partnership dealings and transactions. Ib.

If he intended to object to answer the interrogatories as to the accounts of the partnership, he ought to have demurred to that part of the relief sought. Ib.

—— Against Real Estate—Prayer for General Relief.]—A bond creditor not having prayed an account of the testator's real estates in a suit for payment of his debt, he was held not entitled to such relief under the prayer for general relief. Chapman v. Chapman, 13 Beav. 308; 20 L. J., Ch. 465; 15 Jur. 265.

—— Absence of Heir—Produce of Real Estate—Actual Receipt by Executor.]—A testator directed his real estate to be sold by his Jamaica executors, and the produce remitted to A. and B., his English executors. B. and C. were the consignees and agents of the testator and of his executors. The assets, including 2,253*l.*, part of the produce of the real estate, were remitted from Jamaica to B. and C. on account of the executors in England, and the amount was entered to the credit of the estate of the testator. After the death of B., A. instituted a suit for an account of the receipts of B. and C., on account of the personal estate of the testator since his death, but the heir-at-law was not made a party. The bill specified the items of 2,253*l.*, which the answer stated to be the produce of the real estate. The decree directed an account of the dealings and transactions in the bill mentioned, and of the receipts of B. and C. on account of the testator's personal estate since his death; and the Master, in taking the accounts, charged C. with the 2,253*l.* The defendant C. obtained a rehearing of the cause, and excepted to the report, and contended either that the decree was wrong in authorising an account of the real estate in the absence of the heir, or that the Master had been wrong in including this item; but the court overruled the objection. Pringle v. Crookes, 7 Beav. 257.

—— Limited Account.]—There is no instance of an executor answerable only pro tanto, as having administered only partially. Kilbee v. Sneyd, 2 Moll. 201.

—— Other Cases.]—In a suit against defendants, who were the personal representatives both of a testatrix who died during coverture, and of her husband, praying an account of her separate estate; and a declaration that certain sums of stock which stood, and always had stood, in her name, constituted part of that estate; although the husband and his executors during a long period of years had uniformly acknowledged those sums to be, and dealt with them as being, part of her separate property; and although strong evidence was adduced by the plaintiff, which was not met by any evidence on the other side, yet the court refused to make the declaration at the original hearing, and only referred it to the Master to take the account generally, with special inquiries founded upon the evidence. Hornby v. Hunter, 1 Russ. 89. Affirmed, 5 Russ. 149.

In a suit by residuary legatees of A. against the personal representatives of B., who was the executor of A., for payment of a debt due from B. to A., the amount of which was not admitted, and also for an account of the personal estate of A.; praying also, unless assets were admitted an account of the personal estate of B., and, that being insufficient, seeking to charge his real estate:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a declaration that a particular debt or sum constituted an item in the account to be taken; but that evidence tending to shew that the defendants should be charged with such particular debt or sum was admissible. Tomlin v. Tomlin, 1 Hare, 236.

Where an executor died insolvent after a sum had been reported due from him in an administration suit, and a supplemental suit was instituted against his personal representatives:—Held, that the decree in the latter suit ought to embrace the general administration of the executor's estate. Cochrane v. Robinson, 9 Sim. 377; 7 L. J., Ch. 266.

Executor bound to accumulate, cannot account as if the money had been laid out in the funds, if it was not so laid out, or being so, he had sold out an advance. Raphael v. Boehm, 11 Ves. 108. Affirmed 13 Ves. 407; 8 R. R. 95.

Trustees and executors under the will of a testator, who had directed them to invest a share of his residuary estate, either in the public funds or on mortgage, at 5 per cent., having admitted by their answer that they had from time to time balances in their hands, and it being proved that, many years after the death of the testator, they had not invested the share, either in the funds or on mortgage, inquiries will be directed at the original hearing concerning the balances retained by them, and the prices of 3 per cent. stock, at the several times when such balances were in their hands. Hockley v. Bantock, 1 Russ. 141.

After a perishable fund, part of a general residue had been for some time wrongfully enjoyed by the tenant for life, who was also executor, the remainderman filed his bill for an account simply, though he had notice of the existence of such a fund as part of the residue, and the fact also appeared by the answer, and at the hearing the common decree for account was made. On further directions the court directed the perishable fund to be converted as from the date of the order only, but refused to make the tenant for life account for prior receipts, but the Lord Chancellor, on appeal, gave the accounts as upon a conversion made when the tenant for life proved the will. Lichfield v. Baker, 2 Beav. 481; 9 L. J., Ch. 291.

A father, administrator during minority of his daughter, who was executrix, and the residuary legatee of her grandmother's estate, agreed, that when she married plaintiff, she should have 800*l.*, which, in the settlement, was called a portion. Lord Hardwick refused to decree an account of the grandmother's estate, as she had been dead twenty years, but directed that the father's representative should account for his personal estate as to the 800*l.* only, and interest at 4 per cent. from the marriage. Wood v. Briant, 2 Atk. 521.

Under a decree for the administration of the estate of G., the plaintiff brought in his claim as a creditor, and a portion of his claim was disallowed; subsequently, after the distribution of the assets, the plaintiff paid other moneys on account of G.'s estate, and filed a bill against the residuary legatees for an account of what was due to him in respect as well of the disallowed portion of his original claim as of the moneys subsequently paid:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to have an account taken of what, if anything, was due to him. Thomas v. Griffith, 2 Giff. 504. Affirmed, 30 L. J., Ch. 465; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 465; 3 L. T. 761; 9 W. R. 293.

Interrogatories as to Accounts.]—A bill was filed against an executor to establish a lien on the testator's estate for administration and an account, and the usual interrogatories as to accounts were administered. The executor submitted that he ought not to answer as to the accounts till the lien was established:—Held, that he must answer at once, but that he need not go into minute details, and that a fair general account would be sufficient. Thompson v. Dunn, L. R. 5 Ch. 573; 18 W. R. 854.

In an administration action the persons beneficially entitled have a right to call upon an executor defendant before the hearing or the close of the pleadings to answer interrogatories, by which he is required to make discovery on oath of the accounts of the estate. This rule has not been abrogated or altered by the judicature acts and rules. Semble, that in such a case, if an account has been already rendered, it would be a sufficient answer to verify such an account. Sutcliffe, In re, Alison v. Alison, 50 L. J., Ch. 574; 44 L. T. 547; 29 W. R. 732.

Objection by one of several Persons entitled to an Account.]—One of several residuary legatees, or others entitled to an account, refusing to join as co-plaintiff, being satisfied with the account rendered without suit by the executor, or other accounting party, cannot object in a suit instituted by the rest, on the ground that the costs will have to come out of the residue, or common fund, because, if the account taken in that suit be surcharged, all would participate equally. Lansdowne (Marquis) v. Beauman, 1 Moll. 89.

One of several Plaintiffs bound by Settled Account.]—Where in a suit for an account of a testator's estate, one of the plaintiffs was bound by a settlement of accounts, made some time after the testator's death:—Held, that the other plaintiffs could not in a suit so framed carry the account further back than the date of such settlement. Lambert v. Hutchinson, 1 Beav. 277; 8 L. J., Ch. 196.

Order excluding Creditors.]—After order upon motion directing the preliminary inquiries as to the testator's estate, debts, &c., ordered that creditors who should not come in should be excluded the benefits of the order. Trotter v. Walmesley, 7 Beav. 264.

For Accrued Interest—At suit of Co-defendant after Decree.]—In a suit against the executrix and trustee of a fund, which the latter had invested in an improper security, and been ordered to restore, the court refused to make an order for the trustee to render an account of the interest received to the widow, who was tenant for life, as a decree between co-defendants, and no such case made by the pleadings. Goodwin v. Clewley, 2 Beav. 30; 3 Jur. 552.

Vouching.]—A sum of 27*l.* for wages due to the servants of a testator at his death, and another sum of 16*l.* for keeping a house, for the repairs of which the testator's estate was liable, were allowed to an executor in passing his accounts (under the circumstances of the case) on his own affidavit, and without vouchers. Caton v. Rideout, 19 L. J., Ch. 408; 15 Jur. 308.

Executor discharges himself by his affidavit, without voucher, when the amount of the item is under 40*s.*, and by his affidavit, with production of the voucher when above 40*s.*, saving all just cause of exception. That is sufficient proof, if no objection, and he will be restrained, on the application of the parties interested in the first instance, from proceeding by commission. Bingham v. Clanmorris (Lady), 1 Moll. 20.

Accounts recorded in the Court of Chancery in Jamaica, in a suit instituted against executors, who had proved the testator's will in that island, ordered, in a suit against them in England, to be taken under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 54, as primâ facie evidence of the truth of the matters therein contained, with liberty to the plaintiff to surcharge and falsify. Sleight v. Lawson, 3 Kay & J. 292; 26 L. J., Ch. 553; 5 W. R. 589.

Debt to Executor—Right of Suit after Account taken.]—If there be a decree for an account to which an executor is party, and the executor has a debt which he does not claim, but lies by, and the account is taken and perfected, he shall not bring a new bill for his debt, and put the estate to the charge; this being contrary to the trust reposed in him. Cowper v. Cowper (Earl), 2 P. W. 733.

After what Time—Against Personal Representative.]—Administration taken out in 1771. Distribution to certain extent made, but a large sum retained on fraudulent pretences. No effectual measures were taken against the administrator till 1792; and that protracted in great measure by administrator's fault in court below till 1810:—Held, that notwithstanding lapse, administrator should be charged with full interest on sum remaining undistributed during the whole period of retention, with annual rests and costs incurred subsequent to original decree. Stackpoole v. Stackpoole, 4 Dow, 209.

An account was decreed against an executor after nine years, notwithstanding an account totted by a mutual friend of the plaintiffs and the defendant, and admitted by the plaintiffs in 1833, but not then examined by them or vouched by the defendant. Purcell v. Cole, 1 Longf. & T. 449.

Lapse of time will bar the right of the next of kin of an intestate to an account against an administrator. Kohler v. Reynolds, 26 L. J., Ch. 415; 5 W. R. 422.

—— At Suit of Executors.]—A testator, shortly before his death, said to the person who had for several years acted as his land agent, that he would make him a present of 300*l.*; and having been suddenly taken ill, he desired the agent to retain that sum out of a larger balance then in his hands. No third person was present at this declaration, and on the day after the testator died. The agent was also a solicitor, and acted as such, together with his partner, for the testator; and there was a suit pending against the latter in the Exchequer at the time of his death. After the testator's death, in 1831, the agent acted as the solicitor of the executors and made out for them an account of the testator's assets, in which the 300*l.* was treated as a gift by the testator in his lifetime to the agent, and the inventory returned by the executors contained a similar account of that sum. In 1832 the agent furnished an account to the executors, stating all the circumstances under which he claimed credit for the 300*l.*, and taking credit for it against the balance in his hands, and stating that he retained the residue of the balance to meet the costs due to him and his partner, the amount of which he was then unable to ascertain. That account was retained by the executors without objection. In 1839 they filed a bill against the agent, for an account of the sum due by him to the testator's estate:—Held, that the agent was not entitled to retain the 300*l.*, at the death of the testator, and that the executors had not, by acquiescence, precluded themselves from disputing his right to it. Walsh v. Studdart, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 161; 2 Con. & L. 423; 4 Dr. & War. 159.

Order for Accounts without Administration under Ord. XV. r. 1, Effect of.]—An order for accounts under Ord. XV. r. 1, without a decree of administration, made in an administration action, does not prevent a creditor of the estate from suing the executor or the executor from paying a debt due from the estate. Barratt, In re, Whitaker v. Barratt, 59 L. J., Ch. 218; 43 Ch. D. 70; 38 W. R. 59.

—— Account on the Footing of Wilful Default.]—A claim against an executor for an account, on the footing of wilful default, is not a "case of ordinary account" within the meaning of Ord III. r. 8, and consequently a summary order for such an account cannot be made under r. 1 of Ord. XV. Bowen, In re, Bennett v. Bowen, 51 L. J., Ch. 825; 20 Ch. D. 538; 47 L. T. 114.

3. Administration under Direction of Court.

(a) Jurisdiction.

Discovery of Assets before Probate.]—A bill may be brought against an executor for discovery of the personal estate before the will is proved, or during the litigation thereof in the Spiritual Court. Dulwich College v. Johnson, 2 Vern. 49.

Bill by an administrator for discovery of the personal estate; it is no bar to the discovery that the administration is litigated. Wright v. Bluck, 1 Vern. 106.

Where Interim Protection Claimed.]—A bill to protect a testator's estate until a legal personal representative has been appointed, and also to administer the estate, is irregular. It should be limited to the first object. Overington v. Ward, 34 Beav. 175. S. P., De Feuchères v. Dawes, 5 Beav. 110; 11 L. J., Ch. 394; 6 Jur. 594. Rawlings v. Lambert, 1 Johns. & H. 458.

Where suit Collusive.]—In an administration suit, a party, interested in the residue, by his answer averred that, according to his information and belief the suit was collusive, as between the plaintiff and the executors and other parties; there being no replication, the allegation was taken as proof of the fact: and it was held, that the fact was no objection to the making of the decree. Humble v. Shore, 3 Hare, 119.

Within a Year after Death.]—The court may order administration of an estate before the expiration of a year from the death of the testator. Tennant, In re, Prosser v. Mossop, 29 W. R. 439.

A next of kin may bring an action for administration of the intestate's personal estate within a year from the intestate's death. Wallis v. Wallis, 9 L. R., Ir. 511.

Where the Deceased was a Lunatic so found.]—Bill to administer the estate of a deceased person found lunatic by commission, and for an account of the dealings of the defendants with his estate from the date of the lunacy till his death, alleging fraud. Demurrer by the defendants, who were the executors and trustees of a will made before the lunacy, and also committee and surety under the commission that the proper jurisdiction was in lunacy. Overruled with costs. Scammell v. Light, 4 Giff. 127; 1 N. R. 83; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1122; 7 L. T. 414; 11 W. R. 83.

Scotch Assets—Testator domiciled in Scotland.]—A testator domiciled in Scotland, and possessed of a large personal and some heritable property in Scotland, and of a comparatively small personal property in England, by will made in Scotch form appointed several persons to be executors and trustees, some of whom resided in England and some in Scotland. The trustees obtained a confirmation of the will in Scotland, and the confirmation was sealed by the English Court of Probate under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 56. An infant legatee, resident in England, brought by his next friend an action here to administer the estate, and the writ was served upon some of the trustees in England, and, under an order, upon the Scotch trustees in Scotland. The trustees appeared without protest, and took no steps to discharge the order, but obtained an order of reference to inquire whether the further prosecution of the action would be for the benefit of the infant plaintiff; upon which an order (not appealed from) was made for the further prosecution of the action. The trustees removed all the English personalty into Scotland before the action came on for trial:—Held, that the English court had jurisdiction to administer the trusts of the will as to the whole estate, both Scotch and English; and that as no proceedings were pending in a Scotch court (if such were possible) by which the interests of the infant plaintiff could have been equally protected, the jurisdiction was not discretionary, but that the decree was a matter of course. The dicta of Lord Westbury in Enohin v. Wylie (10 H. L. Cas. 1) disapproved. Ewing v. Orr-Ewing, 53 L. J., Ch. 435; 9 App. Cas. 34; 50 L. T. 401; 32 W. R. 573—H. L. (E.)

Where the probate division of the High Court of Justice has granted a general probate of the will of a testator domiciled in Scotland, the chancery division will make the ordinary decree for the administration of the personal estate of the testator, without limiting it to the English assets, and notwithstanding the opposition of a majority of the executors. Stirling-Maxwell v. Cartwright, 48 L. J., Ch. 562; 11 Ch. D. 522; 40 L. T. 669; 27 W. R. 850.

Administration of Estate of Intestate in Newfoundland—Decree of Colonial Court—Res Judicata.]—Demurrer for want of equity to bill for administration of the estate of an intestate which was the subject of a suit in Newfoundland; from the decree in which suit an appeal was about to be brought to the privy council. Henderson v. Henderson, 3 Hare, 100.

Rules of 1883 — Pending Proceedings.]—An administration action was commenced in December, 1882, by an executrix and beneficiary. Pleadings were delivered, from which it appeared that there were several questions between the parties; but it was ultimately arranged that a general administration decree should be taken, upon admissions in the defence, according to agreed minutes, and notice of trial was given on 2nd October, 1883. Upon the case coming on as a short cause upon motion for judgment, North, J., refused to make the proposed decree in face of the provisions of Ord. LV. r. 10, of the rules of 1883, merely because the action had been commenced before they came into operation, and he directed a reference to chambers to inquire whether, under the circumstances of the case, a general administration of the testator's real and personal estate should be ordered. Llewellyn, In re, Lane v. Lane, 53 L. J., Ch. 602; 25 Ch. D. 66; 49 L. T. 399; 32 W. R. 287.

—— Discretion—Limited Accounts and Inquiries.]—A direction by a testator that his executors shall take proceedings to have his estate administered by the court, does not deprive the court of its discretion to refuse to make an order for administration; but weight ought to be given to such a direction in considering whether the order shall be made. Where such a direction had been given, an order was made in chambers, on the application of one of the executors, more than a year after the death of the testator, declaring that the estate ought to be administered by the court, and directing an inquiry of what the estate then consisted. The defendants (the other executor and a party beneficially interested) moved to discharge this order, on the ground that an order for administration was unnecessary and would cause great and useless expense. North, J., refused to discharge the order, and his decision was affirmed by the Court of Appeal, who expressed their approval of the limited form in which the order was made. Stocken, In re, Jones v. Hawkins, 57 L. J., Ch. 746; 38 Ch. D. 319; 59 L. T. 425—C. A.

A party interested in the estate of a deceased person, even though that party be an infant, is not entitled, as a matter of course, to an administration judgment at the expense of the estate. Having regard to Rules of Supreme Court, 1883, Ord. LV. r. 10, a party interested is only entitled to an administration judgment where there are questions which cannot be properly determined except by an administration action; but the court has power under that rule to order a limited administration only, that is, to direct particular accounts and inquiries, if it sees that the question can thus be properly determined, the object of the rule being to prevent general administration except in cases of necessity. Wilson, In re (infra), considered. Blake, In re, Jones v. Blake, 54 L. J., Ch. 880; 29 Ch. D. 913; 53 L. T. 302; 33 W. R. 886—C. A.

Infants were entitled under a will to legacies amounting together to 35,000*l.*, and they were also together entitled, in remainder, subject to the life interests therein of four persons, to seven elevenths of the residuary estate. An originating summons was taken out under Ord. LV. r. 4, by one of the tenants for life and the infants, asking for the administration of the testator's estate. The summons was supported by one of the trustees, but was opposed by the other trustees and all the beneficiaries other than the plaintiffs:—Held, that, notwithstanding the discretion given to the court by Ord. LV. r. 10, the infants were entitled to an order for administration, but that the court had power to direct only such accounts and inquiries to be taken and made as were absolutely necessary for their protection. Wilson, In re, Alexander v. Calder, 54 L. J., Ch. 487; 28 Ch. D. 457; 33 W. R. 579.

Letters of Administration—Stamp.]—Where an administrator brings an action to administer the estate of a deceased person claiming a considerable amount as due to his estate, and the letters of administration are stamped for a nominal amount only:—Held, that this is not a bar to the action. Rowe, In re, Jacobs v. Hind, 60 L. T. 596. See S. C. in C. A.

In Bankruptcy — Insolvent Estate — Debtor resident Abroad for more than Six Months prior to Decease.]—By s. 125, sub-s. 1, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, "any creditor of a deceased debtor whose debt would have been sufficient to support a bankruptcy petition against such debtor had he been alive, may present to the court a petition in the prescribed form praying for an order for the administration of the estate of the deceased debtor according to the law of bankruptcy," and by sub-s. 10, "unless the context otherwise requires, 'court' in this section means the court within the jurisdiction of which the debtor resided or carried on business for the greater part of the six months immediately prior to his decease":—Held, that the context referred to in sub-s. 10 was not limited to the context in s. 125, but embraced the whole act. Where, therefore, a debtor, who was a domiciled Englishman, had resided for more than six months immediately prior to his death at Mayumba in Africa, where he carried on his business, and where he died:—Held, that the London court of bankruptcy had jurisdiction to make an order for the administration of his estate under s. 125 of the act, by reason of the provision in s. 95 that if the debtor against whom a bankruptcy petition is presented is not resident in England, the petition is to be presented to the High Court. Evans, Ex parte, Evans, In re, 60 L. J., Q. B. 143; [1891] 1 Q. B. 143; 64 L. T. 242; 39 W. R. 98; 7 Morrell, 297—C. A. See also (c) ii., post, col. 1662.

—— Transfer from Chancery Division to Court of Bankruptcy.]—The power given by the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, s. 125, sub-s. 4, to transfer the administration of an insolvent estate from the Chancery Division to the Court of Bankruptcy, is a discretionary power, and not a power which the judge is bound to exercise whenever the estate is shewn to be insolvent. The circumstance that the executor has a right of retainer and a liberty not to plead the Statute of Limitations to a debt, which rights would be recognised in the Chancery Division, but might be taken away by a transfer to the Court of Bankruptcy, is not a ground for the transfer. Baker, In re, Nichols v. Baker, 59 L. J., Ch. 661; 44 Ch. D. 262; 62 L. T. 817; 38 W. R. 417—C. A.

In County Court—Jurisdiction.]—The county courts have power, under the County Courts Equitable Jurisdiction Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 99), to entertain administration suits instituted by the assignees and representatives of next of kin, and of the other classes of persons specified in s. 1, sub-s. 1, of that act. Turner v. Rennoldson, 42 L. J., Ch. 510; L. R. 16 Eq. 37; 28 L. T. 330; 21 W. R. 558.

—— Discretion as to Exercise of.]—A person interested in the estate of a deceased person is not entitled as of right to an administration order in a county court, the combined effect of Ord. VI. r. 6, and Ord. XXII. r. 11, of the County Court Rules, 1886, being to place the granting of such order within the discretion of the county court judge. Pearson v. Pearson, 56 L. T. 445.

—— To Restrain Proceedings.] — Notwithstanding that, by Ord. I. r. 8, of the County Court Orders in Equity, 1865, a decree cannot be made till a month after the plaint has been filed, a county court judge has not jurisdiction under Ord. XII. r. 1, of the County Court Orders in Equity, 1865, in a creditor's administration suit, before decree, or on an ex parte application, to restrain a creditor's action commenced previously to the institution of the suit. Nokes v. Gandy, 43 L. J., Ch. 276; L. R. 17 Eq. 297; 29 L. T. 828; 22 W. R. 293.

—— Further Proceedings in Aid of—Discretion as to Carriage.]—Where in the course of an administration suit, outside proceedings have to be brought, the county court judge has power to direct by whom such proceedings are to be taken. The personal representatives of the testator whose estate is to be administered, if his conduct is unimpeached, is primâ facie the person to have carriage. McKinlay v. Mackey, [1895] 1 Ir. R. 302.

Ord. XXXVI. r. 9, of the County Courts (Ireland) Orders, 1890 [the language of which is practically identical with Ord. LI. r. 11, of the English County Court Rules, 1889], is not limited to a suit in existence at the time of making the order for carriage of proceedings, but extends to any proceedings which may have to be instituted in the course of an administration suit, and for its furtherance. Ib.

—— Transfer from.]—A plaint in a county court for the administration of an estate, stated that the value of the property did not exceed 500*l.* At the hearing, an application, of which notice had been given, was made by the defendant that the plaint might be struck out, on the ground that the estate exceeded 500*l.*; and the court had consequently no jurisdiction. The judge, after hearing evidence in proof of the excess of value, ordered the suit to be transferred to the Court of Chancery:—Held, that the suit was in progress within the County Court Act, 1865, s. 9, and the value of the property appearing to be under 700*l.*, directions were given that the suit should be proceeded with in chambers, as upon an administration summons. Birks v. Silverwood, L. R. 14 Eq. 101.

(b) Practice.

Intituling Writ.]—The writ of summons in an action for administration ought to be entitled in the matter of the estate. Eyre v. Cox, 24 W. R. 317.

Action or Summons—Under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86.]—Practice of the court in granting or refusing the common administration decree, upon summons, in cases involving complicated questions. Rump v. Greenhill, 20 Beav. 512; 24 L. J., Ch. 90; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 123; 3 W. R. 51.

Where a married pecuniary legatee took out a summons in chambers for administration of the testator's real and personal estate (the summons being afterwards confined to the personalty), and the husband was not served or made a party to the summons, and the evidence that he was either dead or out of the jurisdiction was insufficient, the summons was dismissed as being, under the circumstances of the case, an inconvenient mode of administration. Lesiter v. Camm, 14 L. T. 97; 14 W. R. 472.

Where a bill was filed for the administration of a testator's estate, and sought to charge the representative of the testator's executrix, on the balance of an account, and such representative had offered to pay a sum in full, but had refused to account; and there was a question on the construction of the will to be decided:—Held, that the suit was properly instituted by bill, and that the case was not one for an administration summons, under s. 45 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, and therefore that the plaintiff was entitled to his costs. Smith v. Spilsbury, 1 Dr. & Sm. 151; 8 W. R. 596.

The court has jurisdiction under the 45th section of the Chancery Practice Amendment Act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, to entertain an application, by a beneficiary under the will of a married woman, made under a power contained in a deed, for a summons, requiring the executors named therein to shew cause why an order for the administration of the personal estate of the testatrix should not be made. Sewell v. Ashley, 3 De G. M. & G. 933. S. C., 10 Hare (App.) lxvii.; 22 L. J., Ch. 659; 17 Jur. 269.

A married woman, having under a will an absolute power over a fund, made a will whereby she appointed it specifically to trustees upon trust for A. for life, with remainders over; and made a residuary gift to the same trustees upon certain trusts. One only of the trustees proved the will:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 45, to make an order upon summons by A. for administration of the estate of the married woman. Berkeley, In re, Berkeley v. Mason, 44 L. J., Ch. 554; L. R. 19 Eq. 467; 23 W. R. 687. But see Newbery, In re, Allcroft v. Farnan, 10 W. R. 378.

A creditor's summons was taken out in chambers in a cause. Upon the return of the summons, the chief clerk, finding that he had no jurisdiction, adjourned the summons into court at the suggestion of all parties, to come on with the cause upon further consideration:—Held, that the application by summons was regular, but that it ought to have been referred to the judge in chambers, and not adjourned into court. Halliley v. Henderson, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 202.

An order was made against an executor, in chambers, for taking the accounts, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 45. The executor insisted on a release:—Held, that there being no jurisdiction to set aside the release on summons, the order was irregular. Acaster v. Anderson, 19 Beav. 161; 24 L. J., Ch. 437; 3 W. R. 156.

Where an inquiry as to personal estate was directed in a suit, commenced by administration summons, and a question arose, in the course of such inquiry, whether there was a binding agreement for a settlement, which it became necessary to determine, in order to ascertain what the personal estate consisted of, and the chief clerk determined that question, and this finding was objected to as being ultra vires:—Held, that the chief clerk had power to decide the question, it being necessary to do so to carry out the inquiry. Wadham v. Rigg, 2 Dr. & Sm. 78; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 206; 6 L. T. 180; 10 W. R. 365.

In a suit commenced by summons, the court may decide questions between parties entitled to the residuary estate, if those questions are founded upon the decree, but it cannot go out of the decree; and if that did not extend beyond estate not specifically bequeathed, the court cannot determine nor direct inquiries as to the question of conversion of leaseholds, involving the assumption of their being specifically bequeathed. In such a case, under a decree made on a summons, as well as on bill, if the decree is insufficient it must be reheard. West v. Laing, 3 Drew. 331; 4 W. R. 1.

In an administration suit, commenced by summons, the chief clerk certified that the testatrix had contracted to sell a house and furniture, that the executors had completed the contract by an assignment of the property, and that they had in such assignment included another house, without having received any additional consideration. On the cause coming on upon further consideration, an attempt was made to charge the executors with a breach of trust in respect of the house:—Held, that this could not be done in a suit commenced by administration summons, but offered to direct an inquiry as to the value of the house. Delevante, In re, Delevante v. Child, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 118; 1 L. T. 397.

Two executors and trustees under a will which directed a general conversion, sold and realised a large amount, which was received by one by the direction of both. The one who undertook the sole management of the estate became bankrupt, and a great loss occurred. A suit was instituted by summons in chambers, and under the common decree it was sought on summons to charge the non-acting executor and trustee with two surcharges, on the ground of constructive receipt. Summons dismissed, with costs, on the ground that such a surcharge could not be made in such a form of suit. Peterson v. Peterson, 16 L. T. 377.

An executor may be deprived of his costs of suit upon a decree made on an administration summons and without a bill charging him with misconduct. King, In re, Gilbert v. Lee, 34 Beav. 574; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 899; 12 L. T. 818; 13 W. R. 1012.

—— As against the Crown.]—When three suits were instituted for the administration of the estate of an intestate, and the Crown, who claimed the property, was defendant in all, two of them being by bill and one by summons:—Held, that such a suit could be properly instituted against the Crown by summons, and a decree was made in all three suits. Polini v. Gray, 22 W. R. 255.

—— Service of Summons.]—Under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 45, the only person to be served with the summons is the executor or administrator of the deceased; but the court has power to direct service of the order upon other persons with the like effect, as when service of a decree is directed under s. 42. Berkeley, In re, Berkeley v. Mason, 44 L. J., Ch. 554; L. R. 19 Eq. 467; 23 W. R. 687.

—— Under Order LV.]—In 1867 T. P. mortgaged an estate to L. and A. for 1,000*l.*, and at the same time E. P. and C. P. gave to L. and A. a joint and several bond in the penal sum of 400*l.* reciting that the 1,000*l.* had been advanced at the request of E. P. and C. P., and that they had agreed to give as a better security for part thereof, a bond conditioned for payment of 200*l.* and interest. The bond was conditioned to be void if the mortgagor paid the mortgage-money and interest according to his covenant. T. P. paid the interest till December, 1877, after which it fell into arrears, and in 1880 the mortgagees entered into possession. E. P. died in 1883 without having made any payment or given any acknowledgment. L. and A. as creditors under the bond, took out a summons for administration of his estate. E. P.'s representatives disputed the claim on the ground that this was a proceeding to recover money secured on land, and was barred by the lapse of twelve years under the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874. Bacon, V.-C., without giving any opinion on this question, dismissed the summons under the discretion given by Ord. LV. r. 10, on the ground that a disputed debt ought not to be tried on summons:—Held, that as there were no facts in dispute the vice-chancellor ought to have decided the question of law on the summons. Powers, In re, Lindsell v. Phillips, 30 Ch. D. 291; 53 L. T. 647—C. A.

Semble, a joint creditor who desires to proceed against the separate estate of a deceased partner should do so by action and not by originating summons. Barnard, In re, Edwards v. Barnard, 55 L. J., Ch. 935; 32 Ch. D. 447; 55 L. T. 40; 34 W. R. 782—C. A.

An action was brought against the surviving trustee of a will, claiming a declaration that he was not entitled to charge in account with the plaintiff, who was a cestui que trust under the will, the costs of an action brought by the superior landlord in consequence of the failure by the trustee to repair some houses which formed part of the trust property, or to charge commission paid to a collector who had collected the rents of the same property, and also claiming (if necessary) administration of the testator's estate. There was no practical dispute as to the facts:—Held, that the points in dispute between the parties might have been decided upon an originating summons, under Ord. LV. r. 3, and that, although the plaintiff succeeded in his claim, no costs of the action would be given. Johnson, In re, Wagg v. Shand, 53 L. T. 136.

Two legatees having alleged that they had been induced to execute a release indemnifying the executors of a testator's estate without having had independent advice:—Held, that they were entitled to take out an originating summons under Ord. LV. r. 3, of the Rules of Court, 1883, to have the release set aside, the question of the validity of the release being one "arising in the administration of the estate," and "affecting" the rights of the legatees within the meaning of that order. Garnett, In re, Gandy v. Macaulay, 50 L. T. 172; 32 W. R. 474.

An executor having retained a sum of 1,100*l*., which he claimed to have received from the testator as a donatio mortis causâ, and the estate being thereby reduced so as to be insufficient to pay the legacies bequeathed by the will in full, a legatee whose legacy abated, applied on summons for the administration of the personal estate of the testator:—Held, that the question whether the sum so retained by the executor formed part of the testator's assets should not be tried by administration summons. Neilan v. Farrell, 29 L. R., Ir. 12.

—— Profit Costs—Recovery.]—After taxation and payment of costs in an administration, part of the costs were handed to one of the executors under an agreement between him and the solicitors that he should receive half the profit costs:—Held, that though there might be ground for an independent action against the executor for having made a profit out of his office, these costs could not be recovered from him by a summons in the action taken out by the party having conduct of the proceedings. Thorpe, In re, Vipont v. Radcliffe, 60 L. J., Ch. 529; [1891] 2 Ch. 360; 64 L. T. 554.

Originating Summons — Service.] — In an administration action commenced by originating summons under Ord. LV. rr. 3 and 4, of the Rules of Court, 1883, the defendant being a person of unsound mind not so found by inquisition, the summons was served, as required for writs by Ord. IX. r. 5, of the same rules, on the person under whose care the person of unsound mind was. No appearance was made by the defendant on return of the summons, and none was entered. Notice of motion was served for the appointment of a guardian ad litem, as required by Ord. XIII. r. 1, of the same rules in case of default of appearance to writs. The court, holding that the rules as to the service of writs applied to an originating summons, made an order appointing a guardian ad litem. Pepper, In re, Pepper v. Pepper, 53 L. J., Ch. 1054; 50 L. T. 580; 32 W. R. 765.

—— Right of Residuary Legatee to set up Statute of Limitations.]—Upon the hearing of an originating summons, taken out by the executor, under Ord. LV. r. 3, to determine whether a defendant is a creditor or not, it is competent for the residuary legatee, also a defendant, to set up the objection of the Statute of Limitations, notwithstanding the refusal of the executor to interfere. Wenham, In re, Hunt v. Wenham, 61 L. J., Ch. 565; [1892] 3 Ch. 59; 67 L. T. 648; 40 W. R. 636.

Joinder of Causes of Action—Before the Judicature Acts.]—Where in an administration suit the bill was filed against the executors, and B. was added as a defendant, but no assets were stated to be in his possession, and nothing was alleged against him, except that a fictitious sale had been made to him of part of the testator's estate, demurrer by B. allowed for want of equity. Demurrer by the same defendant allowed for multifariousness, on the ground that the question as to the validity of the sale could not be decided in an administration suit. Marshall v. Gilliard, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 483; 14 L. T. 618; 14 W. R. 830.

A plaintiff by his bill sought to have the personal estate of an intestate administered, and asked to have a deed under which he had dealt with his share of the same estate declared void:—Held, on demurrer, that such a bill was multifarious. Bouck v. Bouck, 35 Beav. 643; L. R. 2 Eq. 19; 14 W. R. 682.

A bill for an account of a testator's estate, and also to set aside sales made by the executor and trustee to himself and to another person:—Held, multifarious. Salvidge v. Hyde, Jac. 151. Reversing 5 Madd. 138.

In order to determine whether bill is multifarious, the inquiry is not whether each defendant is connected with every branch of the cause, but whether the plaintiff's bill seeks relief in respect of matters which are in their nature separate and distinct. Ib.

Demurrer for multifariousness to bill by creditor against the personal representative of his deceased debtor, and against the trustee of a fund which his debtor was entitled to receive, the bill charging that plaintiff had acquired a specific lien on the debt due to testator, overruled. Grady v. Furlong, 2 Moll. 418.

A testator invested moneys in the name of his sister, and made a will giving her an annuity and appointing the plaintiffs his residuary legatees. The plaintiffs then obtained the ordinary administration decree against the executors, served it on the testator's sister, and moved for an injunction to restrain her from dealing with the fund invested in her name by the testator which she claimed as her own:—Held, that the question between the testator's estate and his sister could not be tried in this way, but required the institution of a distinct suit. Walker v. Seligmann, 40 L. J., Ch. 601; 25 L. T. 294.

When plaintiffs have a common interest in all the matters comprised in a suit, the objection of a defendant that he is not concerned in the whole subject-matter is one the allowance of which is in the discretion of the court, which will be guided by considerations of convenience under the particular circumstances of the case. Coates v. Legard, L. R. 19 Eq. 56 ; 31 L. T. 625 ; 23 W. R. 40.

An administratrix of an intestate assigned a share in a business forming part of the intestate's estate to trustees to pay the intestate's debts, and then for her, and subsequently assigned her own beneficial interest in the share to the same trustees on certain trusts. The next of kin, who were also co-heiresses of the intestate and interested under his marriage settlement, filed a bill against the administratrix, the assignees in trust of the share in the business, and the trustees of the settlement, for administration of his real and personal estate, and of the trusts of the settlement. The assignees in trust of the share in the business demurred for multifariousness :—Held, that the various interests of the infants could be most conveniently ascertained in one suit ; and consequently, that the demurrer must be overruled. Ib.

—— Since the Judicature Acts—Action for Recovery of Land.]—In an action by the heir-at-law, who was also one of the next of kin of an intestate, against the administratrix, who was in possession of the intestate's real estate, leave was given to join a claim for the recovery of the land, and a claim for the administration of the estate. Kitching v. Kitching, 24 W. R. 901.

An action for the administration of personal estate may be joined with an action to establish title to real estate, when the plaintiff claims both estates under a common gift in the same will. Whetstone v. Dewis, 45 L. J., Ch. 49 ; 1 Ch. D. 99 ; 33 L. T. 501 ; 24 W. R. 93.

Ord. XVIII. relates to Joinder of Causes of Action.

Creditor's Action.]—Bill against executor and heirs of obligor, to be paid out of personal assets, and if not sufficient, out of real; assets descended, decreed. Walter v. Goring, Dick. 299.

Bill by single bond creditor, for payment of what was due out of real assets descended. Robinson v. King, Dick. 297.

Where a bond creditor brings a bill against an executor for an account of assets and satisfaction, it is no objection for want of parties that he has not brought other bond creditors or creditors of a superior nature before the court, for the court only decrees an account, with a direction for the executor to pay in a course of administration. Anon., 3 Atk. 572.

Held, that where a single creditor brings a bill, there is no general account of debts directed, but the course is to direct an account of the personal estate, and of that particular debt which is ordered to be paid in course of administration ; and all debts of a higher or equal nature must be paid by the executor, and must be allowed to him in his discharge. Att.-Gen. v. Cornthwaite, 2 Cox, 45.

A bond creditor, claiming also an equitable mortgage on real estate, filed his bill for foreclosure, and in aid for the administration of the personal estate, against the executors and the parties entitled to the mortgaged estate. He failed in proof of the equitable mortgage :—Held, that he was not on such a record entitled to a decree, as a specialty creditor, for the administration of the real estate. Chapman v. Chapman, 13 Beav. 308 ; 20 L. J., Ch. 465 ; 15 Jur. 265.

—— Right to Sue Administrator appointed Pendente lite by Probate Division.]—An administrator pendente lite, appointed by the probate division under s. 70 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, may, without the leave of the probate division, be sued in the chancery division by a creditor of the deceased. Toleman, In re, Westwood v. Booker, 66 L. J., Ch. 452 ; [1897] 1 Ch. 866 ; 76 L. T. 381 ; 45 W. R. 548.

In a probate suit one B. was appointed administrator and receiver pendente lite. Two months later an originating summons was taken out in the chancery division by one W., who claimed to be a mortgagee and creditor of the testator's estate, asking, as against B., who was made defendant, that an account might be ordered in respect of a tramway in or near London ; that a certain mortgage might be declared valid and subsisting ; that accounts might be taken of what was due thereunder, and for a sale of the mortgaged property. Upon motion by the administrator and receiver, pursuant to directions, to restrain the chancery proceedings against him, and for a stay of those proceedings :—Held, that a judge of this division has no power to restrain or stay proceedings in the chancery division, but that leave should be given to the administrator and receiver to defend those proceedings, and that he would have to apply for his costs in this court and also in the chancery proceedings, the executors to have their costs of this application out of the estate. Leave was granted to the administrator and receiver to appeal against this decision on the one point of want of jurisdiction to restrain. Martin v. Toleman, 77 L. T. 138.

—— Separate Estate of Deceased Partner—Joint Creditors—Separate Creditors.]—Under decree obtained by separate creditor, for satisfaction out of assets, the surviving partner a bankrupt, and the joint estate insolvent, the joint creditors not entitled pari passu with the separate creditors to the separate estate, but can only claim the surplus after satisfaction of the separate debts. Gray v. Chiswell, 9 Ves. 118 ; 7 R. R. 151.

In a creditors' suit for the recovery of a partnership debt against the assets of a deceased partner, the surviving partner is a necessary party, and the case is not within the Thirty-second Order of August, 1841, which enables a plaintiff to proceed against one or more persons severally liable. Hills v. M'Rae, 9 Hare, 297 ; 20 L. J., Ch. 533 ; 15 Jur. 766.

A creditor of a partnership firm brought an administration action against the executor of a deceased partner. Afterwards a separate creditor of the same partner brought an administration action against the executor, and obtained judgment :—Held, on an application by the plaintiff in the first action for the conduct of the proceedings in the second action, that a joint creditor of a firm could not maintain a simple action for the administration of the estate of a deceased partner, and therefore that the first action was not properly constituted. Application of the plaintiff was consequently refused. McRae, In re, Forster v. Davies, 53 L. J., Ch. 1132 ; 25 Ch. D. 16 ; 49 L. T. 544 ; 32 W. R. 304—C. A.

Where the estate of a deceased partner is being administered at the suit of a separate creditor, and no partnership creditor is party thereto, the certificate ought to distinguish between the separate debts of the deceased and the debts of the firm in which he was partner, and at some stage of the proceedings the surviving partner ought to be brought before the court, so as to have an opportunity of disputing the finding as to the partnership debts. Hodgson, In re, Beckett v. Ramsdale, 55 L. J., Ch. 241; 31 Ch. D. 177; 54 L. T. 222; 34 W. R. 127—C. A.

Creditors, who are—Voluntary Covenant.]—A voluntary covenant is sufficient to support a creditors' suit against the representatives of the covenantor. Watson v. Parker, 6 Beav. 283; 12 L. J., Ch. 221; 7 Jur. 143.

—— Unliquidated Damages.] — A creditors' suit to administer the estate of a deceased person may be instituted by one whose claim is for unliquidated damages recoverable for breach of covenant. Burch v. Coney, 14 Jur. 1009.

—— Voluntary Assignee of a Debt.] — A voluntary assignee of a debt due from a person deceased cannot maintain a suit for the administration of the deceased's estate. Sewell v. Moxsy, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 189; 21 L. J., Ch. 824; 16 Jur. 608.

—— Surety.]—A., as surety to a firm, signed a joint and several bill of exchange, on the faith that B. would join as co-surety. B. never signed it, but A. was afterwards compelled to pay it by proceedings at law, at the suit of an indorsee. One of the firm died, and the others became bankrupt: — Held, that the claim of A. was sufficient to support a creditors' suit for the administration of the estate of the deceased partner. Rice v. Gordon, 11 Beav. 265.

—— Holder of Promissory Note.] — Where, in a creditors' suit, the plaintiff's claim was on a promissory note, and the defendant was an infant, and the debt was not proved, the court made the usual decree, upon an affidavit of the signature of the maker of the promissory note. Gascoyne v. Lamb, 11 Jur. 902.

—— Costs of Lunacy Proceedings.]—A commission de lunatico inquirendo was issued against a man on the petition of his wife, and he was found lunatic, and died:—Held, that if the proceeding was for his benefit, the solicitor employed in it by the wife was entitled to institute a creditors' suit in respect of his costs. Chester v. Rolfe, 4 De G. M. & G. 798; 23 L. J., Ch. 233; 18 Jur. 114; 2 Eq. R. 19.

The cost of issuing a commission of lunacy, if for the lunatic's benefit and after the lunatic's death, may be proved against the lunatic's estate, notwithstanding the pendency of a traverse of the inquisition. Cumming, In re, 5 De G. M. & G. 30; 23 L. J., Ch. 261; 18 Jur. 181; 2 W. R. 248.

—— Costs of Probate Action.]—A will was proved by A., who acted as executor for some months. Then the Probate Court, and the House of Lords on appeal from the Probate Court, decreed probate to B. instead, and directed all the costs to be paid out of the estate. There was very little personal estate, but considerable real estate. B. filed a bill for the administration of the real and personal estate of the testator in order to obtain payment of his costs:—Held, that the Probate Court, not having jurisdiction over real estate, could not, neither could the House of Lords on appeal from the Probate Court, make an order for payment of the costs out of the real estate. B. therefore was not entitled to a decree for the administration of the real estate, but, as he had acted for some time as executor, he was entitled to a decree for the administration of the personal estate. Charter v. Charter, 45 L. J., Ch. 705; 3 Ch. D. 218; 34 L. T. 412; 24 W. R. 874.

—— Where there is a Direction to carry on Testator's Trade.]—If a testator gives his executors power to trade with a portion of his capital, a creditor for debts incurred by the executors has no right to a decree to administer the assets employed in trade. Owen v. Delamere, 42 L. J., Ch. 232; L. R. 15 Eq. 134; 27 L. T. 647; 21 W. R. 218.

—— Liability arising from Foreign Law.]—Estates in a foreign country were the subject of certain settlements called fidei commiss., somewhat analogous to entails in England, and by the law of the foreign country the possessor of these estate was liable for deterioration whether voluntary or permissive, and entitled to compensation for improvements; and after his death the liability could be enforced in accordance with a special procedure code as between his representatives and his successor. The successor to the estates brought an action in England against the executrix of the late possessor, who was a domiciled Englishman and left property in England, for administration of his estates:—Held, that the plaintiff's claim did not depend simply on tort, but was dependent on an implied contract or implied obligation which by the law of the foreign country every possessor under a fidei commiss. takes upon himself when he enters into possession of the property under it, and that therefore the action could be maintained here against his legal personal representative; and that the mere fact that the claim could not be finally established without proceedings being taken in the foreign courts was not a ground for the action being at once dismissed. Batthyany v. Walford, 56 L. J., Ch. 881; 36 Ch. D. 269; 57 L. T. 206; 35 W. R. 814—C. A.

—— Debitum in presenti solvendum in futuro.]—A creditor, having debitum in presenti solvendum in futuro, may maintain a creditors' bill. Whether he can obtain a decree for immediate security must depend on circumstances. Whitmore v. Oxborrow, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 13; 12 L. J., Ch. 21; 6 Jur. 985.

—— What Evidence required.] — Where an apothecary files a bill to obtain payment of sums due to him from the testator's estate for professional charges, he must prove that he has been duly licensed in manner required by the 55 Geo. 3, c. 194. Hood v. Hall, 6 Jur. 1121.

The admission of the debt by the answer of one of two executors, is a sufficient foundation for a decree in a creditors' suit. Burdett v. Booth, 10 L. J., Ch. 356.

Simple contract creditor filing a bill to execute trusts of will for payment of debts, must prove his debt, although his demand be not contested. Caledon (Lord) v. Every, 2 Moll. 360.

Bill by a creditor against an administrator, who, by his answer, stated he believed the debt was due. It being thought doubtful whether this was a sufficient foundation for a decree, plaintiff consented to exhibit an interrogatory. Hill v. Binney, 6 Ves. 738.

To obtain the usual decree in a creditors' suit, it is not sufficient for the plaintiff to put in an acceptance of the testator proved as an exhibit. Quære, whether any evidence should be given of the consideration. Keaton v. Lynch, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 437.

In a bill against the executors, the plaintiff having stated two promissory notes of the same date, one for 15,000*l.* sterling, the other for 15,000 French louis, given by the testator for securing a sum of 15,000*l.*; on an affidavit by one of his executors that he had inspected the first note, and observed on the face of it circumstances tending to impeach its authenticity; that he was informed, and believed, that the second note had been produced by the plaintiff for payment in a foreign country; and he was advised and believed that it was necessary, in order that his answer might fully meet the case, that he should, before answer, have inspection of the second note; it was ordered that the defendant should not be compelled to answer till a fortnight after production of the second note. Wales (Princess) v. Liverpool, 1 Swanst. 114; 1 Wils. Ch. 113; 19 R. R. 282.

In a creditors' suit for administration of the real and personal estate of a testator, a judgment recovered against the executors (who were also trustees of the real estate) is primâ facie evidence of a debt as against the persons interested in the real estate; but they will be at liberty to adduce rebutting evidence. Harrey v. Wilde, 41 L. J., Ch. 698; L. R. 14 Eq. 438; 27 L. T. 471.

Where, in a suit instituted by three creditors, it was objected that one of the plaintiffs had not proved his debt, the court will not favour such an objection. Pearcy v. Dicker, 13 Jur. 997.

A decree may be obtained in a creditors' suit, for a reference to the master to take the usual accounts of the personal estate and of the debts of an intestate, without entering into evidence to prove the plaintiff's debts; notwithstanding the bill may pray a sale of the intestate's real estate, and the heir-at-law of the intestate may be an infant, the form of the decree being, that the plaintiff shall be at liberty to exhibit an interrogatory to prove his debt. Ayles v. Cox, 11 L. J., Ch. 408.

—— Stamp.]—A. filed a bill on behalf of himself and other creditors against the executors who had renounced. Subsequently he took out administration, and amended his bill by inserting an allegation to that effect, and a prayer for administration generally:—Held, that he must still be regarded as plaintiff in a creditors' suit, and therefore could not get a decree until the instrument, under which he claimed as a creditor, had been stamped. Nichols v. Nichols, 10 W. R. 598.

—— Where the Creditor is Estopped.]—The plaintiff, as solicitor of a banking firm, in order to prevent the taking out of circulation notes issued in the lifetime of the testator, who was at the head of the banking concern, induced the mother and guardian of the testator's heir to forego proceedings to compel the application of the primary funds to the payment of the testator's debts in exoneration of certain descended estate, by representing that such proceedings were wholly unnecessary, and that the property primarily liable was abundantly sufficient for the payment of the testator's debts. The plaintiff afterwards filed a creditors' bill against J. W., the executor and devisee of the testator, and against the heir, and upon the bankruptcy of J. W. his assignees were brought before the court by a supplemental bill:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the common decree against the personal and devised real estate of the testator, but the bill as against the heir was dismissed with costs. Jones v. Waters, 2 Myl. & K. 610.

An agreement by a creditor not to take proceedings against the debtor during his life, nor against the debtor's estate during the life of his wife, if she should survive him, construed (as to the latter clause) to mean that any beneficial interest which the wife might take in the property of the husband should not be disturbed during her life, and not to be an agreement that the creditor should be debarred from suing the personal representative of the husband, and therefore the creditor obtained a decree for an account against the wife as the personal representative of the husband, with a declaration that the interest of the wife was not to be disturbed during her life. Harman v. Richards, 10 Hare, 81; 22 L. J., Ch. 1066.

Action by one Creditor on Behalf of others — As to Real and Personal Estate.] — In a creditors' action for the administration of an intestate's real and personal estate, the writ must be indorsed with a claim by the plaintiff "on behalf of himself and all other creditors." Royle, In re, Fryer v. Royle, 5 Ch. D. 540; 36 L. T. 441; 25 W. R. 528. Explaining Wooldridge v. Norris, post. Contra, Cooper v. Blissett, 45 L. J., Ch. 272; 1 Ch. D. 691; 24 W. R. 235. O'Kelly v. Bodkin, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 361. M'Keown, In re, 22 W. R. 292.

A plaintiff, at the request of A., became surety for repayment of 50*l.* advanced to B., and A. gave him a bond of indemnity. A. died, having appointed the defendants his executors, and having devised to them certain property in trust to pay the 50*l.*, "if then due from him as a surety." The creditor called upon the plaintiff to repay the 50*l.*, and he had requested the defendants to do so:—Held, that the plaintiff could maintain a bill to administer the estate of A. and execute the trusts of his will, and that he need not sue on behalf of himself, and all other creditors. Wooldridge v. Norris, 37 L. J., Ch. 640; L. R. 6 Eq. 410; 19 L. T. 144.

—— As to Personal Estate.]—In a creditors' action for the administration of the personal estate of a deceased person, the plaintiff need not, since 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 45, sue on behalf of all the creditors in order to obtain a general account of debts. Blount, In re, Naylor v. Blount, 27 W. R. 865.

—— As to Real Estate.]—Bill by a mortgagee, with the additional security of a bond, to be satisfied out of personal and real assets; the bill, after consideration, dismissed, so far as it prayed satisfaction out of the real estate. Bedford v. Leigh, Dick. 707.

The court will not decree a specialty debt to be paid out of the deceased's real estate, unless the creditor sues on behalf of himself and all the other specialty creditors; but leave will be given to amend the bill at the hearing. Johnson v. Compton, 4 Sim. 47.

A creditor cannot have a decree for the administration of real estate, unless he sues on behalf of all creditors. Ponsford v. Hartley, 2 John. & H. 736. S. P., May v. Selby, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 235; 6 Jur. 52. Vincent, In re, Parham v. Vincent, 26 W. R. 94. Worraker v. Pryer, 45 L. J., Ch. 273; 2 Ch. D. 109; 24 W. R. 269.

Though an account of real estate can only be had at the suit of a creditor in a bill on behalf of all creditors, still, if in a suit not so entitled, it becomes expedient to take such an account, the court will, at the hearing, direct the bill to be taken as a bill on behalf of creditors. There is no objection to a bill for an account of the estates of two testators who are joint debtors. Woods v. Sowerby, 14 W. R. 9.

In a creditor's action for administration of real estate it is sufficient that the statement of claim should express that he sues on behalf of all creditors. Eyre v. Cox, 24 W. R. 317.

If the writ in a creditors' action for the administration of real and personal estate does not shew that the plaintiff is suing on behalf of all the other creditors of the deceased, this fact ought to appear in the title of the statement of claim. Eyre v. Cox, supra, explained. Tottenham, In re, Tottenham v. Tottenham, 65 L. J., Ch. 549; [1896] 1 Ch. 628; 74 L. T. 376; 44 W. R. 539.

—— Creditors' Suit by Mortgagee.]—A bill may be maintained by a mortgagee on behalf of himself and all other the creditors of a deceased mortgagor. Shey v. Bennett, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 405; 7 Jur. 571.

A legal mortgagee may maintain a creditors' suit. Groves v. Lane, 16 Jur. 854.

A creditor by mortgage and collateral bond cannot sue both as mortgagee and also on behalf of himself and all other creditors of the debtor, such rights of suing being inconsistent with each other; nor, for the purpose of obtaining payment out of the real assets of his debtor, can he sell as sole specialty creditor, unless he makes all persons interested in contesting that fact parties to the suit. White v. Hillacre, 3 Y. & C. 597; 4 Jur. 102.

The proper form of a bill by an equitable mortgagee, being also a specialty creditor, who seeks to charge the real assets of a testator generally, as well as to enforce his security, is on behalf of the plaintiff, and all other the creditors of the testator, and the court permitted a plaintiff at the hearing to amend his bill accordingly, and with reference to the Statute of Limitations:—Held, that such bill must date from the day of the filing of the original bill, and not from the day of the amendment. Blair v. Ormond, 1 De G. & Sm. 428; 11 Jur. 665.

A mortgagee, filing a bill for the benefit of himself and the other creditors of the deceased, is entitled to payment of his mortgage money out of the mortgaged estate, before payment of the costs of suit. Aldridge v. Westbrook, 5 Beav. 188.

A creditor's bill was filed by a mortgagee, who was also a simple contract creditor of the testator in the cause, and in the course of the suit the mortgaged estate was sold, with the concurrence of the mortgagee, and the purchase-money paid into court:—Held, that notwithstanding the nature of the suit, and that the mortgagee had proved his debt before the master, he was entitled to have the whole of the proceeds of the mortgaged estate applied, in the first instance, in payment of his principal debt and interest before the payment of the costs of the suit. Allen v. Alldridge, 6 Jur. 159.

A mortgagor died, and a bill was filed by the mortgagee for the administration of the estate and payment of the mortgage. The mortgaged property was sold, and the produce paid into court to a general account, and accumulated for a series of years:—Held, that the mortgagee had no right to treat the fund as appropriated to the mortgage, and take the accumulations. Irby v. Irby, 22 Beav. 217.

Mortgagee's Suit to Realise Security.]—Mortgagee may pray a sale of the mortgaged premises in the first instance, where the heir and personal representative are the same person, and the personal estate is clearly deficient. Daniel v. Skipworth, 2 Bro. C. C. 155.

A mortgagee held entitled to sustain a suit for realising his security by a sale of the mortgaged premises, against the devisee of the real estate, an infant, although a decree had been made in suits framed only for the administering the personal estate; and in such cases, where the sale is clearly for the infant's benefit, a sale will be directed in the first instance, without a reference to inquire whether it will be so or not. Davis v. Dowding, 2 Keen, 245; 7 L. J., Ch. 169.

Semble, the mortgagee may maintain a suit against the executors of the mortgagor for a sale of the property comprised in the security, and for the payment of any deficiency out of the general estate of the testator. King v. Smith, 2 Hare, 239; 7 Jur. 694.

An equitable mortgagee, if the mortgagor is dead, is entitled to have the estate sold, and the proceeds applied in payment of his debt, and to stand as a creditor for the balance (if any) on the general assets of the mortgagor. Brocklehurst v. Jessup, 7 Sim. 438.

Form of decree in a suit by a mortgagee against as well the specific as the general estate of his deceased debtor. Hanman v. Riley, 9 Hare (App.) xli.

A mortgagor, by his will, created a trust for the payment of, amongst others, the mortgage debt. In a suit to foreclose:—Held, that the mortgagee was entitled to have his mortgage paid, in the first instance, out of the general personal estate of the mortgagor, and, in default of payment thereout, to have the mortgaged lands sold, and, in case the fund so produced should prove deficient, that then the mortgagee was entitled to come in as a specialty creditor, and avail himself of the trust in the will of the mortgagor, and the decree was so made. Marshall v. M'Aravey, 3 Dr. & War. 232.

Where mortgagee is a creditor of trustee under will of estate to pay debts, and advances further moneys to trustee for payment of them, and takes mortgage of estate knowing of trust, he cannot have a sale of estate in prejudice of other creditors of testator. Turner, Ex parte, 9 Mod. 418.

Chattels real were mortgaged, and judgments were recovered by the mortgagee against the mortgagor as collateral security for the sums advanced on mortgage. The mortgagor having died, a bill was filed against his personal representative, praying an account of the sums due in respect of the mortgages, and a foreclosure and sale, and an account of the personal estate of the mortgagor. The personal representative, in her answer, stated her belief that the chattels real were adequate to discharge the sums due. A decree was then taken for an account of those sums, and of the incumbrances prior to or contemporaneous therewith, but not directing any account of the personal estate of the mortgagor. A report pursuant to that decree having been made, a decree for sale of the chattels real was pronounced. The proceeds of the sale were insufficient to pay the sums due on the mortgages:—Held, that a supplemental bill afterwards filed by the mortgagee against the personal representative of the mortgagor, praying an account of the personal estate of the mortgagor, could not be maintained, and such a bill was accordingly dismissed with costs. Joly v. Leyden, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 444.

Other Persons entitled to sue for—Beneficiary—Residuary Legatee.]—A residuary legatee has a right to institute a suit where the estate is considerable, and it is uncertain whether there will be a residue or not. Simmond, In re, Morgan v. Middlemiss, 14 W. R. 414.

—— Annuitant.]—An annuity was by will charged upon the general residue of the testator's estate. The annuity was not in arrear, but accounts, though asked for, had not been supplied until after the issue of the writ of summons, and were still insufficient:—Held, that the annuitant was entitled to administration. Wolaston v. Wolaston, 47 L. J., Ch. 117; 7 Ch. D. 58; 37 L. T. 631; 26 W. R. 77.

A testator by deed covenanted with trustees to pay an annuity to a woman during her life, to be considered as accruing from day to day, by equal quarterly payments. The testator's estate was not sufficient to pay the estimated value of the annuity as well as his other debts and liabilities, and the trustees took out an originating summons under Ord. LV. r. 3, as creditors for administration of the estate. At the time when the summons was taken out no quarterly payment of the annuity was due:—Held, that the trustees of the annuitant were not creditors of the testator, and could not take out a summons for the administration of the estate, although if an administration order was obtained by some other person they would be entitled to prove for the estimated value of the annuity. Hargreaves, In re, Dicks v. Hare, 59 L. J., Ch. 375; 44 Ch. D. 236; 62 L. T. 819—C. A.

—— Assignee of Beneficiary.]—A party entitled to, or taking by assignment, a legacy or a share of a residuary estate may institute a suit for the administration of such estate at any time before the complete administration of the assets, or before such legacy or residuary share is withdrawn from its position as assets unadministered, and constituted a trust fund applicable to the specific trusts of the will; but semble, where the right is unnecessarily exercised, the court may make the decree without costs. Cafe v. Bent, 5 Hare, 24.

Assignee of legatee filed a bill against the administrator, pending a suit to establish an alleged will, for the preservation of the assets, and a receiver, and an account of the personal estate, and to compel the administrator to bring in the assets received by him, and to restrain him from further receiving them, and praying that the rights of the plaintiff under the will might be ascertained:—Held, on demurrer, that the relief must be limited to the preservation of the assets, to which an account was also incidental; and that the plaintiff was not entitled to a declaration of the rights under the will, or to have the assets administered. Tom v. Deane, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 39.

—— Next of Kin.]—A next of kin may bring an action for administration of the intestate's personal estate within a year from the intestate's death. Wallis v. Wallis, 9 L. R., Ir. 511.

In a suit by a plaintiff claiming to be one of the next of kin of an intestate against the administrator (the solicitor to the Treasury), the cause was heard short, and a decree was made, notwithstanding that the defendant objected on the ground that a search was being prosecuted for documents which, if found, would prove the plaintiff to be illegitimate. Felstead v. Gray, L. R. 18 Eq. 92.

A father gave his residuary personal estate upon trust for three daughters for their lives, with remainder on trust for their children or issue, with cross-remainders between them; and if his daughters should all die without having any children or issue entitled under the trusts aforesaid, on trust for such person or persons as would have been entitled under the Statute of Distributions if he had then died intestate. The three daughters entitled under the will were unmarried; these and another daughter were the sole statutory next of kin of the testator at the present time:—Held, that an action for administration by collateral relations, who would have been some of the next of kin at the present time if the four daughters were dead, was demurrable for want of interest. Clowes v. Hilliard, 46 L. J., Ch. 271; 4 Ch. D. 413; 25 W. R. 224.

Bill by next of kin, intended legatee, in an unexecuted testamentary paper before probate or administration obtained against the executor in a former will for an account of personal estate of testator (alleging fraud, collusion, &c.). Defendant demurs. Demurrer overruled. Morgan v. Harris, 2 Bro. C. C. 121.

—— Right of Widow of Intestate in respect of her Charge under Intestates' Estates Act, 1890, to administer Realty.]—The widow of an intestate entitled under the Intestates' Estates Act, 1890, to a charge for 500*l.* upon his real and personal estate, has a sufficient interest in the real estate to entitle her to maintain an action for administration. M'Ferran v. M'Ferran, [1897] 1 Ir. R. 66.

—— Other Cases.]—A testator devised certain estates by name, together with his farming stock and furniture, to his beloved wife, to sell, to discharge all his creditors; and he constituted his wife and T. W. his executors, and he appointed to sell and dispose of all his estates and chattels, in such manner as they should jointly agree upon, or not to sell if it seemed most advisable to keep them, or in any way they should think proper, so that every creditor had his money, and if sold, all overplus to his wife, towards her support and her family:—Held, upon demurrer, that the testator's children had such an interest in the devised estates as enabled them to sustain a bill against the widow and her co-executor, impeaching a sale on the ground of fraud, and praying an account of the rents and profits. Woods v. Woods, 1 Myl. & C. 401.

Debtor on death of creditor is bound to pay the latter's representative, and cannot file bill for direction. Darthez v. Winter, 2 Sim. & S. 536; 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 175.

Conduct and Prosecution—In general.]—It being important that administration suits should be conducted in a friendly spirit, the court will not facilitate strangers to the estate—creditors, for instance—having the conduct of the same. Penney v. Francis, 30 L. J., Ch. 185; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 248; 9 W. R. 8.

—— Executor.]—The conduct of proceedings for the benefit of an estate will not be taken away from an executor without sufficient grounds being shewn. Harrison v. Richards, 14 W. R. 823.

—— Creditors' Suit.]—Bill filed by one creditor on behalf of self and rest; he has absolute dominion over suit and decree, and may dismiss bill at pleasure; but secus, after decree, the rest may prosecute it if they think fit. Handford v. Storie, 2 Sim. & S. 196; 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 110.

Creditor having come in under decree, cannot institute a fresh suit; but on account of delay, he was permitted to prosecute that decree, though only interested in the first part thereof. Edmunds v. Acland, 5 Madd. 31.

The court will not on the ground of irregularity in a decree in a creditor's suit, take the conduct of the suit from the plaintiff and give it to another creditor, though collusion be suggested. Where decrees had been obtained in two creditors' suits for the administration of the same estate, the court ordered that the plaintiff in the suit in which the second decree had been made should be at liberty to attend the proceedings under the first decree; but, on the ground that he was a stranger to that suit, refused to give him the conduct of it. Smith v. Guy, 2 Ph. 159.

An order that a creditor who is no party to an administration suit, or who has not gone in under the decree and proved his debt, should have the conduct of the suit, would be irregular. S. C., 2 Coop. t. Cott. 289.

A simple contract creditor obtained an order to administer the intestate's estate. He afterwards had notice that the estate was insufficient to pay the specialty creditor, and the costs of the administratrix, but he still persisted in prosecuting the suit:—Held, that the fund must be applied, first, in paying the costs of the administratrix, then in paying the plaintiff's costs down to the notice, and the residue in payment of the specialty creditor. Sullivan v. Bevan, 20 Beav. 399.

A plaintiff who sues as creditor, will not be deprived of the conduct of the suit because the master has reported that he is not a creditor, if exceptions to that finding of the report are pending, and there is no reason to suppose that the exceptions will not be prosecuted actively. Jeudwine v. Agate, 5 Russ. 283.

Where the prosecution of an administration suit has been neglected for several years, the conduct of it was given to parties who had been proved to be creditors, until further order. Beale v. Symonds, 2 H. & Tw. 374.

In a creditors' suit, the plaintiff obtained a decree to account. Afterwards, and before the decree was made up, the plaintiff was paid his demand. The plaintiff having neglected to prosecute the cause, the court gave the carriage of the suit to a third person, alleging himself to be a creditor of the deceased. Hines v. O'Keeffe, 2 Jones, 625.

—— Delay.]—Creditor having been restrained from proceeding at law on account of decree obtained, allowed to prosecute suit, where proceeding on decree delayed for some years. Powell v. Wallworth, 2 Madd. 183.

On account of great delay in prosecution of suit, creditor was, on petition, allowed to prosecute. Fleming v. Prior, 5 Madd. 423. S. P., Bowen v. Webb, 2 Fowl. Ex. Pr. 212.

Where great delay has occurred in the prosecution of a decree for the administration of assets, a creditor may apply to have the conduct of the cause, though it has become abated by the death of a defendant. Cook v. Bolton, 5 Russ. 282.

Motion by a plaintiff in a creditors' suit, for leave to go before the master and prosecute a cause instituted by the next of kin of the deceased, on the ground of wilful delay in that suit, granted. Sims v. Ridge, 3 Mer. 458.

Though the assets, excepting a small part, not realised, were situated in Ireland, where another creditors' suit for the administration of the same estate was being actively prosecuted, the plaintiff in a creditors' suit in this country is bound to proceed with proper diligence; and not having done so, the conduct of the cause was given to another creditor applying for the same who had proved his debt under the decree. Driswell v. King, 8 L. J., Ch. 158.

—— Delay, Mismanagement and Improper Conduct.]—The conduct of a creditors' suit was taken out of the hands of the plaintiff on the ground of delay and mismanagement in regard to the sales of real estates, delay in the payment of money into court, and the appropriation by the plaintiff's solicitor of rents and profits of the estates, in discharge of his costs. Price v. North, 2 Y. & C. 628; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 9.

—— Employment of Executor's Solicitor.]—It is not a sufficient ground for depriving a plaintiff of the conduct of a creditors' suit, that the proceedings up to the decree have been conducted by the executor's solicitor, with the view of obtaining an injunction against a creditor proceeding at law. Bookless v. Crummack, C. P. Cooper, 125.

—— Bankruptcy.]—Order, in the nature of a supplemental decree, for a creditor who had proved his debt to carry on a creditors' suit, where the original plaintiff had been bankrupt. English v. Hayman, 9 Hare (App.), lxvii.

If, after a decree in a creditors' suit, the suit abates by the death or bankruptcy of the plaintiff, another creditor cannot upon petition, without filing a supplemental bill, upon leave for that purpose, obtain an order giving to him the conduct of the cause. Nash v. Ward, 9 L. J., Ch. 265.

—— Limited Order.]—A creditors' suit was instituted in 1803, and in 1806 the usual decree was made, and a sum was paid into court. The suit became defective in 1807 by the death of the personal representative of the debtor, and the decree was not prosecuted. In 1853 the representatives of the plaintiff (having revised the suit against the administrator de bonis non of the debtor) petitioned for payment of his debt out of the money in court. The court gave leave to prosecute the decree as to the debts. Forster v. M'Kenzie, 17 Beav. 414.

—— Inspection of Papers.]—The prosecution of a decree in a creditor's suit having been taken from the plaintiff and committed to another creditor under the fifty-sixth Order of 1828, the plaintiff's solicitor was ordered to allow that other creditor's solicitor to inspect and take copies of all the papers in the cause in his possession. Bennet v. Baxter, 10 Sim. 417; 9 L. J., Ch. 137; 4 Jur. 50. And see Heslop v. Metcalfe, 8 Sim. 622; 7 L. J., Ch. 49; 1 Jur. 816.

—— Other Matters.]—The conduct of an administration suit was taken from the plaintiff and given to a defendant. The master afterwards was of opinion that the suit had been defective from the beginning for want of parties, and suspended the prosecution of the inquiries directed by the decree, to enable the defect to be supplied:—Held, that a bill for that purpose filed by the defendant having the conduct of the suit without previous notice to the plaintiff was not irregular, so as to entitle the plaintiff to move to take it off the file, and a motion to that effect was refused with costs. Lys v. Lee, 4 De G. M. & G. 219.

In a suit instituted by a legatee against an executor, in which the common decree for an account had been made, an order was obtained, by consent, to dismiss the bill, the executor agreeing to pay the legatee's costs as between solicitor and client. Such order was, two years afterwards, discharged, on the petition of a creditor of the testator, and the suit ordered to be continued under the control of the creditor, he paying back to the executor the costs as between party and party. O'Donnell v. Young, 5 L. J., Ch. 30.

—— In concurrent Actions.]—See col. 1716, post.

One Action for the Administration of Two Estates.]—Cases in which the residuary estate of one testator having devolved upon another, it is proper to join the executors of the first testator in a suit to administer the estate of the second, and to take the accounts of both estates in one suit. Young v. Hodges, 10 Hare, 158.

A., B., C. and D. were co-partners. A. and B. died, and soon afterwards C. and D. became bankrupt; M., who was a creditor of the firm at the death of A. and B., and at the bankruptcy, filed a bill on behalf of himself and all the other creditors of A. and B. against the executors (who, however, had not proved), and devisees of both A. and B. and the assignees of the bankrupts, for the purpose of having the real and personal assets of both A. and B. applied in payment of their joint and separate debts:—Held, that the administration of the two estates might be comprised in one suit, and, therefore, a demurrer for multifariousness was overruled. An objection, however, made ore tenus, that no properly constituted personal representatives of A. and B. were parties, was allowed, but the court did not give the plaintiff the costs of the demurrer on the record, but merely allowed the demurrer ore tenus, without costs. Brown v. Douglas, 11 Sim. 283; 10 L. J., Ch. 14; 4 Jur. 1200.

There is no objection to a bill for an account of the estates of two testators who are joint debtors. Woods v. Sowerby, 14 W. R. 9.

(c) As to Debts.

i. Generally.

Duty of Court—Since 25 & 26 Vict. c. 42.]—Since the passing of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 42, the Court of Chancery is bound to decide on the claims of creditors coming in under an administration decree, and cannot leave them to their remedies in an action at law. Hooper's Estate, In re, Baylis v. Watkins, 3 De G. J. & S. 348; 1 N. R. 115; 32 L. J., Ch. 55; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1165; 7 L. T. 843; 11 W. R. 130.

Letting Creditors in to prove—Within what Time.]—The reason why creditors are excluded unless they come in within a limited time is because they could not be known to the court nor ascertained unless they should appear; but that does not apply to legatees, who are therefore not to be excluded from the benefit of a decree by not coming in to claim. Anon., 9 Price, 210.

Creditors let in at any time, while the fund is in court, though the time has elapsed. Lashley v. Hogg, 11 Ves. 602. S. P., Graves v. Davies, 17 Ir. Ch. R. 90.

Creditor allowed on motion to prove his debt under decree on creditors' suit, though money apportioned amongst creditors, and transferred to accountant-general, on paying costs of motion, and of reapportioning funds. Angell v. Haddon, 1 Madd. 529.

After report settled in a creditors' suit, a creditor cannot be let in to prove his debt without leave of the court, even though the report be not signed. Parker v. Moorley, 3 Y. & C. 720; 9 L. J., Ex. Eq. 16.

A foreigner, who claimed to be a creditor of the testator in the cause, petitioned to have his claim referred to the master, after he had made his report; the court made the order, upon condition of his giving security for the costs. Drever v. Maudesley, 5 Russ. 11.

The preliminary accounts of the testator's estates, debts, &c., being directed upon motion, it was ordered that the creditors who should not come in should be excluded the benefit of the order. Trotter v. Walmesley, 7 Beav. 264.

In a creditors' suit for the administration of the assets of an intestate, who had joined in a bond as a surety, the bond creditor, being aware of the suit, omitted to prove till the time limited by the advertisements for creditors to come in had expired; a decree on further directions had been made; the administratrix had admitted assets, and the principal debtor in the bond had become bankrupt:—Held, that he might still be let in upon terms, the fund remaining undistributed. Brown v. Lake, 1 De G. & Sm. 144.

No suit was commenced against the executors of a deceased banker for more than three years after his death for the debts of the bank:—Held, that creditors of the bank were excluded from coming in under a decree in a suit to administer his estate, their proper course being by petition and not by exceptions. Barker v. Buttress, 7 Beav. 134; 13 L. J., Ch. 58; 8 Jur. 89.

As to the right of a creditor to come in under a decree, at any time before the fund has been distributed, after a long delay, the court requires more than the ordinary proof of a debt in the master's office. In 1817 a trust deed was executed by A. B. for the benefit of his creditors. The deed was established by the decree in 1842, and an account of debts was directed. The petitioner in 1846 came in under the decree, and claimed in respect of promissory notes, dated in 1816, given by A. B. to his father, who died in 1828. He produced the notes and proved the signatures, but gave no proof of the consideration, or of anything being then due:—Held, that his claim had been properly rejected by the master, for after the great lapse of time the notes could not be admitted upon the ordinary proof. Hartwell v. Colvin, 16 Beav. 140.

M. was the executor of J., who had been the executor of A. A decree having been made for the administration of the estates of A. and J., a sum of 496*l.* was found due from the estate of J. to that of A., and on further consideration directions were given for raising it out of J.'s real estate. The account had been taken on the footing that at A.'s death nothing was due to him from J. for interest. Before anything further had been done, M. found a small book in the handwriting of J., by which he admitted himself to owe to A. at A.'s death 70*l.* for interest on the principal moneys due from him to A. This book contained a reference to a page in a larger account-book which had been used in making out the accounts; and this page contained an entry to the same effect. The book had no index, and the page in question was at the end of the book, and separated by a number of blank pages from what went before, so that it had never been observed. M. petitioned to have the amount to be raised out of J.'s estate increased by allowing this interest. Fry, J., refused the application on the ground that at the time when the account was taken M. had in his hands the account-book which contained materials enabling him to make the claim:—Held, on appeal, that the case fell within the ordinary rule, that a creditor may come in as long as there are assets undistributed, and that the additional amount ought to be raised. Metcalfe, In re, Hicks v. May, 49 L. J., Ch. 192; 13 Ch. D. 236; 41 L. T. 572; 42 L. T. 383; 28 W. R. 499.

—— Claim to be Mortgagee.]—A bond creditor proved his debt under a decree in a creditors' suit; he also claimed to have an equitable mortgage for the amount. The matter stood over to amend his charge, &c. He neglected to do so, and was reported a bond creditor only. The estate was sold, the money paid into court, and an apportionment directed. Nine years afterwards, his personal representative presented a petition for liberty to go in and establish his mortgage, alleging that he had recently discovered that the charge had not been amended: it was dismissed with costs. Cattell v. Simons, 8 Beav. 243; 14 L. J., Ch. 138; 9 Jur. 418.

—— Finding of no Debts—Charge of Fraud.]—Where a creditor, after the master had reported there were no debts, presented a petition charging fraud, and asking leave to go in and prove against the real estate, there being no receiver and no fund in court, the petition was dismissed, but without prejudice to his filing a bill. Seale v. Butler, 2 Giff. 312; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 989; 2 L. T. 659.

—— Where Creditor is out of Time.]—A creditor who, after final decree in a creditors' suit, applies for leave to file a charge under the decree to account, should state by affidavit either that he had no notice of the pendency of the suit, or, if he had, should account for his not having filed his charge at the proper time. O'Kelly v. Bodkin, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 506.

A court of equity may, by additional orders, without a bill of review or a rehearing deal with a fund which is still in court. But where a party so requiring the court to deal with the fund might have appeared at an earlier stage of the cause, he will be required to pay all the additional costs which have been occasioned by the imperfect manner in which his claim was brought forward. Montefiore v. Browne, 7 H. L. Cas. 241; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1201. And see Knierim v. Schmauss, 10 W. R. 860.

Creditor let in, but an admission of assets by the administratrix, embodied in an order made on a petition in the cause, qualified by a declaration in a subsequent order. Brown v. Lake, 1 De G. & Sm. 144.

—— Priorities.]—Arrangement of priorities between simple contract creditors coming in within the time limited by the advertisements and bond creditors coming in subsequently. Brown v. Lake, 1 De G. & Sm. 144.

—— In respect of what Fund.]—Testator by his will declared that one-fifth of the residue of his personal estate, should be divided amongst certain of his creditors named in a schedule to his will. The schedule contained both the names of the creditors and the debts due to them respectively:—Held, that the parties so named in the schedule were not to be considered as legatees but strictly as creditors, and consequently that the representatives of such as died in the testator's lifetime, were entitled to the benefit of the will; that the fund being insufficient to pay the debts in full, and many of the creditors having failed to answer the master's advertisement, their shares were to be applied in further satisfaction of the demands of the creditors who had come in, and were not to be distributed amongst the testator's next of kin. Williamson v. Naylor, 3 Y. & C. 208.

Whilst conditional orders for attachments are depending against plaintiff and defendant for not executing the deeds of conveyance to the purchaser, the creditors who came in under the decree cannot be paid out of the purchase-money, though the purchaser has gone into possession, but the court will give them leave to proceed on their securities. Ormsby v. Nicholson, Vern. & Scriv. 115.

T. died intestate, leaving E., L. and A., a minor, his next of kin. A. was his heiress-at-law. E. and L. administered to T., and also entered upon his freehold property. A. having filed a bill for an account against E. and L., obtained a decree against them as debtors to the assets of T., and also as debtors to her in respect of the rent of the freehold received by them, and for the costs of the suit. Pending this suit, E., for valuable consideration, assigned her interest in the assets of T. In another cause, in which E. and L., as administratrices of T., were parties, they were, together with A., declared entitled to a fund in court as part of his assets:—Held, that the several demands of A., under the decree in the first cause, ought to be paid out of the shares of

E. and L. in the fund in the second cause. Hodgens v. Wheeler, Sau. & Sc. 443.

—— Amount Provable.]—The master's report speaks from its date; and if a creditor of a deficient estate proves a debt in respect of bills of exchange indorsed to him by the testator, and before the master has made his report, receives certain sums from the estates of other persons liable on the bills, such sums will be properly deducted in the report from the amount of the debt proved. Jennings v. Elster, 1 Myl. & K. 440; 2 L. J., Ch. 72.

A judgment was obtained against the indorsee of a bill of exchange. In a suit for the administration of the assets of the acceptor, the report found the full amount of the debt. After the report the indorsee paid several sums on account of the debt. The assets being deficient, the debts were decreed to be paid ratably:—Held, that the sums paid by the indorsee should be deducted from the amount reported, in calculating the ratable proportion of the assets to which the creditor was entitled. Cummins v. Cummins, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 156.

Executors, before suit commenced, paid some of the testator's creditors a certain portion of their debts:—Held, that they were not entitled to any further payment until the other creditors had been paid proportionably. Wilson v. Paul, 8 Sim. 63. S. P., Mitchelson v. Piper, Id. 64; 5 L. J., Ch. 294.

A creditor having five bonds, one of which had been paid before the bill filed, and afterwards a decree that the specialty creditors should abate in proportion, he shall not be called upon to bring back what he has received, but shall only abate on the outstanding debt. Lowthian v. Hassel, 4 Bro. C. C. 167.

Testatrix bequeaths all her personal estate to trustees, in trust to sell, and out of the produce to pay all debts; "and in the next place to pay to A. 300*l.* due on bond." The testatrix owed only 120*l.* to A. upon bond; but the court decreed payment of the whole 300*l.* Whitfield v. Clemment, 1 Mer. 402; 15 R. R. 143.

Where one of two obligors in a joint and several bond had become bankrupt, and the obligee having by several dividends in the bankruptcy been paid 20*s.* in the pound upon the amount of principal and interest due at the date of the commission, also carried in a claim in respect of the same bond under a decree in a suit for the administration of the estate of the obligor who had died:—Held, that the amount due to the obligee in respect of such claim was to be computed by treating the dividends as ordinary payments on account, that is, by applying each dividend, in the first place, to the payment of the interest due at the date of such dividend, and the surplus, if any, in reduction of the principal, and, semble, the same principle of computation is applicable in bankruptcy as between the bankrupt and the creditors, where there is a surplus of the estate after payment of 20*s.* in the pound upon all the debts proved. Bower v. Marris, Cr. & Ph. 351; 10 L. J., Ch. 356.

—— After Order for Payment.]—Where, in a creditor's administration suit, an order had been made directing payment of a dividend to the creditors who had proved, a creditor who had not proved was not allowed to stay the payment of the dividend in order to have an opportunity of establishing her claim. Hull v. Falconer, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 151; 11 L. T. 761.

In a suit for the administration of the estate of a domiciled Englishman, whose property was all in this country, his debts were certified by the chief clerk in the usual course, and were paid by his executors. Afterwards, but before the executors could carry out an order of the court for the distribution of the remaining part of his estate, proceedings were commenced in France by persons claiming to be creditors of the testator, who had had notice of the proceedings here, but had not come in under them. On a petition of the executors, the order for the distribution of the testator's estate was stopped until a certain day, before which the French claimants might come in and claim in the suit here. Brett v. Carmichael, 35 Beav. 340; 35 L. J., Ch. 369; 14 L. T. 247; 14 W. R. 507.

—— Proof by Plaintiff.]—Decree for an account of the estate of plaintiff's testator come to his hands, and of his debts, and that the creditors should come in before the master. Plaintiff being a creditor was allowed to go in and prove his debt, and the master to examine him relating thereto. Newman v. Norris, Dick. 259.

—— Joint Creditor.]—In a creditors' suit for administering the assets of B., a joint creditor of A. and B. was permitted to prove. A. having become bankrupt, and it appearing that there were no joint assets of A. and B. Cowell v. Sikes, 2 Russ. 191; 26 R. R. 46.

—— After Payment of Debt into Court.]—Liberty given in one suit to prove in another for an amount appearing due in the former does not confer an absolute right of proof in the latter suit. It is the right and duty of the branch of the court to which the latter suit is attached to see that the claim made is a valid subsisting claim. Micklethwait v. Winstanley, 34 L. J., Ch. 281; 11 L. T. 582; 13 W. R. 210—L. JJ.

The effect of the payment into court by the survivor of two executors of a debt due by them jointly to their testator's estate is to discharge also the estate of the deceased executor; and an order giving liberty to the person entitled to the testator's estate to prove for that debt in a suit for the administration of the deceased executor's estate cannot after such payment be acted upon. Ib.

Lien—Tender of Amount found due—Claim after Rejection of Tender.]—A. having a lien on the testator's estate established his debt under the decree, but his claim for interest was disallowed by the master, whose report stood confirmed. The estate was sold subject to A.'s lien, and A. having refused to accept from the purchaser his principal without interest was not allowed to participate as a creditor in the purchase-money. Hempstead v. Hempstead, 4 Beav. 423.

ii. Insolvent Estate.

Secured Creditor—Before Judicature Act.]—A mortgagee petitioned for the sale of his security and to be permitted to prove the full amount of his debt, in a suit for the administration of the assets of the deceased mortgagor:—Held, that he could prove only for so much of his debt as might remain unpaid by the produce of the mortgaged estate, according to the rule in bankruptcy. Greenwood v. Taylor, 1 Russ. & M. 185.

Discussion of the principles upon which a specialty creditor, whose debt is also secured by a mortgage or lien, should prove his debt under a decree in a creditor's suit. Sir J. Leach's decision in Greenwood v. Taylor (1 Russ. & M. 185) questioned. Mason v. Bogg, 2 Myl. & C. 443; 1 Jur. 330.

In an administration suit, a mortgagee, unless he seeks the aid of a court of equity for the sale of his security, has a right to prove for his whole debt, and not for the balance only, after deducting the value of the mortgage. Rome v. Young, 4 Y. & C. 204.

Vendor of an estate obtained a decree for specific performance, with a declaration that if the purchase-money was not paid by a given day the estate should be sold, the proceeds paid to the vendor, and the purchaser be made personally liable in the event of any deficiency. The master fixed the day of payment, but the purchaser died before that day insolvent, and a creditors' suit was instituted for the administration of his assets. Upon a bill of revivor and supplement filed by the vendor, praying to have the benefit of the creditors' suit, as well as his own:—Held, that he was not entitled to prove against the general assets of the testator and at the same time to reserve his lien on the estate contracted to be sold, in case of a deficiency in the general assets. S. C., 3 Y. & C. 199; 9 L. J., Ex. Eq. 41; 2 Jur. 963.

Quære, whether in this case he had any claim on the general assets until after the estate had been sold; and if he had, whether he was entitled to prove for the whole amount, or only the deficiency after sale of the security. Ib.

A mortgagee, after foreclosure and attempted sale, admitted to prove in an administration suit on giving up the property, but not allowed costs of foreclosure. Haynes v. Haynes, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 504.

Six persons entered into a joint commercial adventure, and opened an account at a bank. To secure the bank against overdrafts they gave the bank a joint and several cash credit bond in Scotch form, a letter of guarantee, and three joint and several promissory notes. One of the joint adventurers died insolvent before the judicature acts came into operation, and a suit was instituted for the administration of his estate, in which the bank sent in a notice of claim, and filed an affidavit claiming 30,195*l.*, as being the amount due on the joint account at the date of claim. By subsequent payments by the co-obligors the amount due on the joint account was reduced to 4,139*l.*:—Held, that the collateral security afforded by the liability of the deceased obligor's co-obligors on the joint and several securities constituted the bank a secured creditor of the deceased person, that the claim had been sufficiently made, and that, according to the practice before the judicature acts, the bank's assignee was entitled to prove for the whole 30,195*l.* and interest, so long as not more than 20*s.* in the pound in all was received. Lovel v. Lovel, 45 L. T. 252.

—— Under the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-s. 1.]—The 1st sub-section of the 25th section of the Judicature Act, 1873, was not directed to take effect at the passing of the act, and therefore was suspended by the Supreme Court Commencement Act, 1874, until the 1st of November, 1875. Consequently, the estate of a person who died in April, 1874, and for the administration of which a suit was commenced in December, 1874, was to be administered according to the old rule of the Court of Chancery respecting secured creditors, and not according to the rule of the Court of Bankruptcy. Hilton v. Jones (47 L. J., Ch. 740; 9 Ch. D. 620; 38 L. T. 808; 26 W. R. 737) overruled. Sherwin v. Selkirk, 12 Ch. D. 68; 40 L. T. 701; 27 W. R. 842.

—— Under the Judicature Act, 1875, s. 10—Realisation or Valuation of Security—Proof.]—In cases of administration by the court, where, by the operation of the 10th section of the Judicature Act, 1875, the rules in bankruptcy are made applicable, a secured creditor of the person whose estate is being administered has a right of election either to realise his security (with the assistance of the court, if he pleases) and to prove for the amount by which the proceeds of the realisation fall short of his claim, or, in the alternative, to set a value upon his security, and to prove for the amount, by which his claim exceeds such valuation. If he elects to pursue the latter course, the valuation is binding, whether the proceeds of realisation of the security exceed or fall short of the valuation, and the secured creditor cannot claim the excess of the proceeds of realisation of the security if it fetches more than the valuation, nor if it fetches less can he prove against the estate for the amount by which it is deficient. A secured creditor for 1,828*l.* valued his security at 1,800*l.* It realised only 1,457*l.*:—Held, that by s. 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875, r. 101 of the Bankruptcy Rules of 1870 was made applicable to the case, and that the plaintiff could only prove against the estate for 28*l.* Hopkins, In re, Williams v. Hopkins (No. 1), 18 Ch. D. 370; 45 L. T. 117; 29 W. R. 767—C. A.

In cases of administration by the court, where, by the operation of the 10th section of the Judicature Act, 1875, the rules in bankruptcy are made applicable, a secured creditor of the person whose estate is being administered, has a right of election, either to realise his security (with the assistance of the court, if he pleases), and to prove for the amount by which the proceeds of the realisation fall short of his claim, or, in the alternative, to set a value upon his security, and to prove for the amount by which his claim exceeds such valuation. If the secured creditor is desirous of electing to realise his security, he must so elect before the period in the administration when the amount of his debt has, in ordinary course, to be ascertained by the chief clerk for purposes of proof; and if he has not at that time so elected, the chief clerk is bound to call upon him to value his security, and the valuation so arrived at will be binding, and if the security should realise less than the amount of the valuation the loss will have to be borne by the creditor. Hopkins, In re, Williams v. Hopkins (No. 2), 44 L. T. 773; 29 W. R. 752.

Secured creditors of an insolvent estate claimed for 400*l.* and interest; they valued their security at 500*l.*; their names were struck out from the schedule of creditors in the chief clerk's certificate. The security realised more than 500*l.*:—Held, that their right to the benefit of security was not limited to 500*l.* Hopkins, In re, Williams v. Hopkins, 52 L. J., Ch. 736; 48 L. T. 513; 31 W. R. 495.

In the administration of the insolvent estate of a deceased person, who died after the Judicature Act came into operation, a creditor holding a security sent in a claim in the suit, and in answer to a notice calling on him to value his security valued it at the full amount of his debt and interest:—Held, that the creditor could not subsequently reduce the valuation of the security in order to prove on the estate for the balance of his claim. Findlater v. Butler, 5 L. R., Ir. 95.

In a suit for the administration of the real and personal estate of T., a bank, to whom T. was indebted, sent in a claim in response to a posting for creditors. The claim stated the full amount of the debt, and stated also that the bank held, as security therefor, a mortgage of T.'s freehold estate. At the foot of the claim there was added the following paragraph:—"Inasmuch as there does not appear any reason to expect that the estate of the said T. will be insufficient for payment in full of his debts and liabilities, the bank have not valued the foregoing stated securities, or taken a summons asking for an order that the lands and premises affected by the said securities shall be sold or realised immediately, under the direction of the court; but if the defendant E. T. (executrix) apprehends that the estate will be deficient, and if she so informs the bank, they will thereupon take the steps required by the Judicature Act in the case of insolvent estates." In reply to an inquiry by the bank's solicitor, the solicitor for executrix wrote, on the 2nd February, 1888, stating that he believed that the estate would prove insolvent, but that he could not say what dividend it was likely to pay; and no further intimation was at any time given to the bank that the estate would prove insolvent. The chief clerk's certificate, which was filed on the 14th December, 1888, set out the bank's debt in the first schedule, and set out the mortgage in the fourth schedule, and stated that the full amount of the said debt was due thereon. On the 22nd January, 1889, the bank applied for liberty to proceed to realise their securities, with a view to ascertaining their value in the event of the estate proving insolvent:—Held, that it was still competent for the bank to value their securities, and prove for the balance of the debt against the general assets. Cooper v. Teahan, 23 L. R., Ir. 203—C. A.

—— Right to Interest on Debt—Proof.]—In the administration of an insolvent estate, a mortgaged property of the testator having been sold in the administration action, and the proceeds of sale paid into court:—Held, that the mortgagee was entitled to have the proceeds of sale applied first in payment of interest on the mortgage debt down to the date of payment, and then in payment of principal, and to prove against the estate for the unpaid balance of principal, but that the amount of the proof could not exceed the amount of principal due at the date of the judgment in the action. Summers, In re (13 Ch. D. 136) distinguished. Talbott, In re, King v. Chick, 58 L. J., Ch. 70; 39 Ch. D. 567; 60 L. T. 45; 37 W. R. 233.

In the administration of an insolvent estate a secured creditor is only entitled to interest on the amount at which he values his security from the date of valuing it, and not from the judgment for administration, which is the equivalent for adjudication in bankruptcy. Money received by secured creditors on account of such interest before the estate was found to be insolvent was deducted from the amount payable to them for principal. Ross v. Ross, 25 L. R., Ir. 362.

—— Sale of Realty—Costs of Sale—Priority.]—In a creditor's suit for the administration of an insolvent estate, mortgagees of realty, being required so to do, valued their security. An order was subsequently made for the sale of the realty, the mortgagees not objecting, and the same was carried out, the plaintiff having the carriage thereof. The amount realised was less than the sum at which the mortgagees had valued their security:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to be paid his costs of the sale out of the amount realised. Ross v. Ross, 29 L. R., Ir. 318.

J., in his lifetime, had dealings with the Royal Bank, with whom he had deposited the title deeds of certain property, including some real estate at Portarlington. At the date of his death, J. owed the bank 361*l.* 15*s.* 1*d.* In an action to administer his assets the estate proved insolvent, and the Portarlington property was sold by the plaintiffs, by consent of all the parties, and realised 195*l.* The bank had valued their security on the Portarlington property at 160*l.*:—Held, that the bank was entitled to have the sum of 35*l.* (being the excess of the proceedings of the sale over the valuation) applied to pay their general costs of the proceedings before the plaintiffs were entitled to be paid any of their costs, even the costs of the sale. Millar v. Johnston, 23 L. R., Ir. 50.

—— Suit by Mortgagee—Costs—Priority.]—Mortgagees of realty and personalty brought an action for administration of the estate of the deceased mortgagor, and the mortgaged property was sold under an order of the court. A balance was found due to the executor on his accounts of personal estate. The personal estate not comprised in the mortgage was insufficient to pay the executor's costs of action, and the proceeds of the sale were insufficient to pay the principal and interest due on the mortgage:—Held, that the executor should be paid his costs out of the personal estate not comprised in the plaintiffs' mortgage, so far as the same would reach; and that, after providing for the costs of sale of the mortgaged property out of the money realised thereby, the executor's costs, not covered by the general personal estate, should be paid out of the proceeds of the personal estate comprised in the plaintiffs' security, in priority to the plaintiffs' demand and costs. Rules as to costs in suits by mortgagees discussed. Leonard v. Kellett, 27 L. R., Ir. 418. See also COSTS—OF CREDITOR, i., 3, (c), post.

Priority—Judgment Debts.]—The rule by which a judgment creditor of a testator is entitled to priority over simple contract creditors in the administration of the assets of the testator under an administration decree is not affected by s. 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875, which provides that in such administration of assets the same rules shall prevail as to the respective rights of secured and unsecured creditors as may be in force under the law of bankruptcy with respect to bankrupts' estates. Smith v. Morgan, 49 L. J., C. P. 410; 5 C. P. D. 337.

Sect. 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875, does not introduce into the administration of insolvent estates of deceased persons the provision of s. 32 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, that all debts (with certain exceptions) are to be paid pari passu. Sect. 10 affects only the rights of the class of secured creditors as conflicting with those of the class of unsecured creditors; it does not affect the rights inter se of the members of those classes. Therefore, if a creditor of an insolvent testator recovers judgment for his debt against the executor before the date of a judgment in an administration action, he is, notwithstanding s. 10, entitled to be paid out of the assets in priority to the other creditors of equal degree. Smith v. Morgan (5 C. P. D. 337), approved and followed. Maggi, In re, Winehouse v. Winehouse, 51 L. J., Ch. 560; 20 Ch. D. 545; 46 L. T. 362; 30 W. R. 729.

The provision in the Judicature Act (Ireland), s. 28, sub-s. 1, that in the administration of insolvent estates the rules in bankruptcy shall be observed as to the respective rights of secured and unsecured creditors, does not affect unsecured creditors inter se. Therefore, where a creditor obtained judgment against an administratrix before decree for administration, the judge in chambers ordered his demand to be paid in full out of a fund in court, in priority to the other unsecured creditors. Winehouse v. Winehouse (20 Ch. D. 545), and Smith v. Morgan (5 C. P. D. 337), followed. Scott v. Murphy, 13 L. R., Ir. 10.

—— Local Rates.]—By the combined operation of s. 1, sub-s. 6 of the Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1888, and s. 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875, parochial and other local rates (including poor rate and highway and general district rates) have, in the administration by the court of the assets of any person whose death is subsequent to December 31, 1888, and whose estate proves to be insufficient for the payment in full of his debts and liabilities, the same priority which they have, by virtue of the Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1888, in the case of a bankruptcy where the receiving order is made after December 31, 1888, and, pari passu with wages and salaries, are payable before other debts. Heywood, In re, Parkington v. Heywood, 67 L. J., Ch. 25; [1897] 2 Ch. 593; 77 L. T. 423; 46 W. R. 72.

Bill of Sale.]—The 10th section of the Judicature Act, 1875, is not intended to enlarge the assets of an insolvent estate, but only to vary the rights of the persons entitled to the assets. And therefore that section does not apply the rules of bankruptcy so as to make an unregistered bill of sale void as against the unsecured creditors of an insolvent estate. D'Epineuil, In re, Tadman v. D'Epineuil, 51 L. J., Ch. 491; 20 Ch. D. 217; 46 L. T. 409; 30 W. R. 423.

Mutual Credit.]—The mutual credit clause (s. 39) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, will not be applied in the administration of the estate of a deceased person until it is shewn that the estate is insolvent, but the court may direct that a debt claimed on behalf of the estate from a creditor shall be paid into court to a separate account, with liberty to the creditor to apply, in case the estate shall prove to be insolvent. Smith, In re, Green v. Smith, 52 L. J., Ch. 411; 22 Ch. D. 586; 48 L. T. 254; 31 W. R. 413.

Married Woman—Advances to Husband—Claim against his Estate.]—The provisions of s. 3 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, postponing the claim of a wife, who has advanced money to her husband for purposes of his trade, as a creditor in case of his bankruptcy to the claims of his other creditors, must be treated as a rule of bankruptcy which is imported by virtue of s. 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875, into the case of the administration by the court of his assets in the event of his estate proving insolvent after his death. Leng, In re, Tarn v. Emmerson, 64 L. J., Ch. 468; [1895] 1 Ch. 652; 12 R. 202; 72 L. T. 407; 43 W. R. 406—C. A. Contra, Moore v. Smith, [1895] 1 Ir. R. 512—C. A.

Contingent Liability.]—A testator covenanted by deed for payment to his daughter of a sum of 5,000*l.*, with interest at 4 per cent. per annum, within one month after the death of his wife; also for payment to his daughter of an annuity of 100*l.* during the joint lives of himself and his wife and the life of the survivor, if his daughter should so long live. The testator died in 1879 insolvent, leaving his widow and daughter surviving, and a judgment was made, in a creditor's action, for administration of his estate. The daughter having sent in claims in respect of the principal sum and the annuity, they were both allowed on a valuation as at the date of the judgment, but subsequently the widow died. No certificate had yet been made in the action:—Held, applying the rules in bankruptcy as to contingent liabilities (Judicature Act, 1875, s. 10), that the daughter was entitled to prove for the full amount of the 5,000*l.*, less a rebate of interest at 4 per cent. per annum for the period between the date of the judgment and the death of the widow, and that her proof in respect of the annuity must be treated on the same principle. Bridges, In re, Hill v. Bridges, 50 L. J., Ch. 470; 17 Ch. D. 342; 44 L. T. 730.

iii. Interest.

Ord. LV. rr. 62 and 63, relate to payment of interest on debts.

Before the Orders of 1841.]—As to the rate of interest under a decree, which fluctuated in Lord Hardwicke's time, according to the nature of the fund, but which is now generally 4 per cent. Denton v. Shellard, 2 Ves. Sen. 239.

The court had decreed an account against defendant as administratrix of the assets of her husband. After his death, she took all his goods and stock-in-trade, and carried on the same business. The Master having reported 1,400*l.* due to plaintiffs, they demanded interest upon it; but the debt being on simple contract, and the administratrix not having yet sold the goods, which was her only fund for raising the money, Lord Chancellor would not allow her to be charged with interest. Ryves v. Coleman, 2 Atk. 440.

An executor settled an account with the landlord of his testator, for rent of certain freehold premises which had accrued since the testator's decease; gave him an order for the payment of the sum found due, with interest out of a certain fund when it should be made available:—Held, that such interest was not allowable to the prejudice of other creditors, although the fund itself bore interest. Short v. Judge, Hayes, 443.

Interest not given from the confirmation of the report upon demands liquidated by it, but not bearing interest in their nature, as legacies and arrears of annuities, though both legacies and annuities were charged upon land, and the annuities were not paid out of the rents and profits as possession was taken by mortgagees, and though one of the annuities was the provision for a widow. Creuze v. Hunter, 2 Ves. J. 157; 4 Bro. C. C. 316; 2 Cox, 242; 2 R. R. 38.

Interest is computed by the Master's report, upon such debts only as carry interest according to the rate they carry; and upon further directions, subsequent interest is directed only on those upon which the report has already computed interest, but no interest is computed on simple contract debts by the report or order afterwards. Id. 165.

A creditor who has proved his debt under a decree, before the orders of 1841 came into operation, is not entitled to interest upon it. Spencer v. Butler, 5 Jur. 1130.

Since the Orders of 1841.]—The 46th order, entitling creditors who prove under a decree to interest from the date of it, is not retrospective. Gullard v. Watson, 4 De G. & Sm. 139.

A. claimed a debt before the Master in an administration suit. The executors resisted the claim, and the Master disallowed it; but a suit was afterwards instituted, in which the claim was established, and liberty was given to A. to apply for payment of his debt in the administration suit:—Held, that as he had not established his debt in that suit, he was not entitled to interest upon it under the 41st general order of August, 1841. Davis v. Combermere, 15 Sim. 394; 10 Jur. 959.

A creditor (under the old practice) who comes in and proves his debt in an administration suit, if such debt does not, in its nature, carry interest, will not be entitled to such interest merely on the ground of delay in the dealing with the assets, or in consequence of accumulation being directed. Gruggen v. Cochrane, 12 L. T. 72; 13 W. R. 520.

A creditor must not only prove, but come in for the purpose of proving his debt after the orders of August, 1841, came into operation, to bring his case within the scope of those orders; and where a decree is made before those orders came into operation, the orders do not apply to that case. Ib.

To entitle a creditor in an administration suit to interest on his debt, the decree must have been obtained, as well as the debt proved, since the Gen. Ord. 46 of the 26th August, 1841 (Cons. Ord. xlii. r. 10). Wheeler v. Gill, 44 L. J., Ch. 181; L. R. 19 Eq. 316; 31 L. T. 641; 23 W. R. 227.

A creditor's suit was instituted, and the usual decree made in 1830, but no inquiries or other further proceedings were prosecuted until 1873, when an order was made on petition in the suit directing inquiries as to debts, under which the chief clerk ultimately certified the plaintiff's debt:—Held, that he had not "come in and established" his debt within the meaning of the Gen. Ord. 46 of the 26th August, 1841 (Cons. Ord. xlii. r. 10), so as to entitle him to interest thereon. Ib.

Interest at 4*l.* per cent. will be allowed on the amount of a demand for work and labour in an administration suit, from the time when the demand for interest was made. Mildmay v. Methuen, 3 Drew. 91.

Interest is not payable upon the arrears of an annuity; and it forms no exception to that rule that the annuity is for maintenance, and is secured by a bond; but in an administration suit, upon further directions, the assets of a testator may, after payment of the other debts, be rendered liable, under the 46th order of August, 1841, for interest upon the arrears of an annuity from the date of the decree, and from the subsequent times of the annuity falling due. Lainson v. Lainson, 18 Beav. 7; 23 L. J., Ch. 170; 17 Jur. 1044; 2 W. R. 82.

—— Reference as to, made on further Directions.]—The reference to compute interest under the 46th order of August, 1841, on debts not by law carrying interest, may be made on further directions, although not made at the hearing. Flintoff v. Haynes, 4 Hare, 309.

—— Deduction of Income Tax.]—On a reference to the Master to compute interest on the simple contract debts of a testator, the income tax, in respect of interest on a bill of exchange due from the estate, was deducted from the same interest; and, it appearing to have been the uniform practice of the Masters to deduct the income tax from interest on bills of exchange and promissory notes, the court declined to disturb the practice, and held the deduction to be properly made. Dinning v. Henderson, 19 L. J., Ch. 273; 14 Jur. 1038.

Insolvent Estate—Judicature Act, 1875, s. 10.]—Under s. 28, sub-s. 1, of the Judicature Act (Ireland) (equivalent to the Judicature Act, 1875, s. 10), in administering the estate of a person who has died insolvent, a creditor on the estate whose debt bears interest, is entitled to interest only up to the date of the judgment for administration, which by virtue of that section is equivalent to an adjudication in bankruptcy, in cases where the death of the person whose estate is being administered occurred after the commencement of the act. O'Brien v. Gillman, 13 L. R., Ir. 6.

In an action for the administration of the estate of a person who has died insolvent since the commencement of the Judicature Act, 1875, a creditor on the estate whose debt bears interest is not entitled to interest up to the day of payment, but only to the date of the judgment for administration, which, by virtue of the 10th section of the act, is equivalent to an adjudication in bankruptcy. Summers, In re, Boswell v. Gurney, 13 Ch. D. 136; 27 W. R. 865.

—— Eventual Surplus.]—H. died in 1882. In 1883 an order was made for the administration of his estate in a creditor's action. The estate was then insolvent, consisting of shares in a company which were worthless. These shares afterwards became valuable. In 1896 the chief clerk made a certificate stating the amount of the debts, in which he calculated interest on the debts carrying interest only down to the date of the judgment. The estate turned out more than sufficient to pay the certified debts:—Held, that the questions as to which rules of bankruptcy are incorporated by s. 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875, were all settled by the certificate, and those rules had nothing to do with the distribution of the surplus. The surplus must be distributed according to the rules of the Chancery Division, viz., in paying first interest on the debts which at law carried interest down to the date of payment, at the rates fixed by their contract, and subject thereto in paying interest at 4 per cent. to the other creditors on their debts. Henley, In re, Alcock v. Henley, 75 L. T. 307.

—— Joint and Separate Creditors—Surplus Interest—Priority.]—Prior to 1856 A. carried on a banking business in partnership with B. On the 13th March, 1856, A. died. Soon afterwards the bank stopped payment, and B. was adjudicated bankrupt. Several actions were commenced for the administration of the estate of A. By an order made in the year 1881 and in one of these actions, it was declared that A.'s separate creditors were entitled to be paid out of the estate in priority to his joint creditors, and also that A.'s separate creditors whose debts by law or special contract carried interest, were not entitled to interest in priority to the joint creditors in respect of the principal due to the joint creditors. The joint estate of the banking firm down to A.'s death, and the bank assets from that time until B.'s bankruptcy, and also B.'s separate estate, were administered in bankruptcy. The result of the actions to administer A.'s estate was that dividends amounting to 20*s.* in the pound were paid to both the separate and the joint creditors of A. on the principal sums due to them respectively, and that a surplus remained which was sufficient to satisfy all the interest on the joint as well as the separate debts:—Held, that the separate creditors, whether their debts did or did not by law carry interest, were entitled to take their interest in priority to the joint creditors. Held, also, that the dividends received ought to be accounted for in ascertaining the amount of interest due, in manner following, viz., by treating the dividends as ordinary payments on account and applying each dividend and the surplus (if any) to the reduction of the principal. Whittingstall v. Grover, 55 L. T. 213; 35 W. R. 4.

On Bond Debt—Not in Excess of Penalty.]—Where, in a creditors' suit, bond creditors had been allowed by the Master their principal and interest to the extent of the penalties of the bonds, and had received an apportionment upon the amount of the penalties upon further funds becoming available for the creditors, they were held entitled to subsequent interest on the sums mentioned in the conditions of the bonds remaining due, provided that such interest, together with the sums remaining due, did not exceed the penalties in the bonds. Walters v. Meredith, 3 Y. & C. 264.

A declaration in a decree, that a bond should be paid with interest from the 21st August, 1828:—Held, not sufficient to exclude the general rule, that the interest should not exceed the penalty. Purcell v. Blennerhassett, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 470.

Creditor's Default to Claim Payment.]—When any debt bearing interest, or any balance of such a debt remains unpaid, the creditor will be entitled to interest on the debt or any part of it of which he could not previously have obtained payment, but not on anything which remained unpaid through his own default to claim payment. Ashley v. Ashley, 46 L. J., Ch. 322; 4 Ch. D. 757; 36 L. T. 200; 25 W. R. 356—C. A.

When any debt bearing interest, or any balance of such a debt remains unpaid, the creditor will be entitled to interest on the debt or any part of it of which he could not previously have obtained payment, but not on anything which remained unpaid through his own default to claim payment. Warman v. Zeal, 25 L. T. 739.

Where the plaintiff in an administration suit obtained an order for a receiver, in 1822, but did not complete the appointment of the receiver under it until 1834, the court directed an inquiry to ascertain by whose default the receiver was not appointed, and directed, that if it should appear that it was by the plaintiff's default that he was not appointed, and if he might, through such appointment, have kept down the interest on his own demand, he should not now be entitled to so much of the interest on his debt as would have been paid by the receiver had he been appointed as early as he might have been. Newby v. Drew, 1 Jo. & Lat. 445; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 49.

Testator Domiciled Abroad at Death.]—In an administration by the court of the assets in this country of a testator who had a foreign domicil at the time of his death, although the property will be distributed according to the law of the place of domicil, the payment of interest will be governed by the practice of the Court of Chancery. Hamilton v. Dallas, 38 L. T. 215; 26 W. R. 326.

iv. Practice on Proof of.

Proof of Debt in Chambers.]—Answer of heir-at-law to bill by judgment creditor, admitting judgment, only binds the real estate. Executors cannot admit a debt, but plaintiff may prove it against executor in the office. Wood v. Blake, 2 Moll. 392.

A suit was instituted by A., on behalf of himself and all the other creditors of a testator, against the executor. The executor disputed the plaintiff's debt, but admitted that he had paid all the testator's debts which had come to his knowledge, and also the legacies given by the will, and that he was the residuary legatee. The plaintiff proved the debt; and, after the hearing of the cause, contended that the decree ought to be prefaced with a declaration that he was a creditor on the testator's estate for the amount of his debt. But the court held that, notwithstanding the special circumstances of the case, the declaration ought not to be made, and that the plaintiff was bound to prove his debt over again in the Master's office. Field v. Titmuss, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 218; 20 L. J., Ch. 328; 15 Jur. 121.

Simple contract creditor filing bill to execute trusts of will for payment of debts, must prove his debt, although his demand be not contested. Caledon (Lord) v. Ivory, 2 Moll. 360.

The proper form of a decree against the separate estate of a married woman, in a suit by a holder of her written engagement, on behalf of himself and all other creditors, for payment of their debts out of the real estate, charged therewith by her will, is an inquiry what debts there are to be paid, under the provisions of the will:—Held, that the plaintiff must therefore prove his debt over again before the Master. Owens v. Dickenson, Cr. & Ph. 48; 4 Jur. 1151.

The giving of the ordinary judgment, in administration suit at the instance of a creditor, does not relieve the plaintiff from the necessity of proving his debt in chambers, nor prevent the defendant from there disputing it. Boak v. Moore, 1 L. R., Ir. 241.

If a party who has proved a charge dies, and no personal representative can be appointed to him in Ireland, the court will allocate a sufficient sum to pay his debt, and not allow the Master's report to be delayed on that account. Piers v. Piers, 2 Hog. 271.

—— Special Circumstances.]—The Master is not at liberty to state special circumstances unless authorised by the court; and where in a creditors' suit the decree directed the usual accounts, and the Master found the amount of the debt appearing to be due to the plaintiff, but stated without the authority of the court, special circumstances not supported by evidence, raising a doubt as to the amount of the apportionment to which the plaintiff would be entitled out of the intestate's estate, which was insolvent, upon the debt so found due, the court refused to enter into the consideration of such special circumstances. Semble, that the decision would have been the same, had the special circumstances been supported by evidence before the Master. Gayler v. Fitzjohn, 1 Keen, 469; 1 Jur. 101.

A. B. and C. D. had many business dealings and transactions together. During such dealings, A. B. gave C. D. a bond for 4,000*l*. A. B. and C. D. having both died, the administrator of C. D. filed a bill against the executor of A. B. to enforce payment of the bond. The executor of A. B. also filed a bill against the administrator of C. D. for an account of the dealings and transactions between them, and claiming that the bond should be treated, not as absolute and according to the letter, but as subject to or forming part of the account. A decree was made in the two suits referring it to the Master to take the accounts, and to inquire under what circumstances the bond was given, and in this decree an account, in the handwriting of C. D., which had been proved, was entered as read:—Held, that the account was properly receivable by the Master as evidence as well in favour of the administrator of C. D., and against the executor of A. B., as in favour of the executor of A. B., and against the administrator of C. D. Dickin v. Ward, 20 L. J., Ch. 211; 15 Jur. 834.

—— Defence—What Permissible.]—Under a decree in a suit by a bond creditor, made on proof of the debt, the executors may, in the Master's office, impeach the validity of the plaintiff's debt upon grounds which were not in issue in the cause at the hearing. Whitaker v. Wright, 2 Hare, 310; 12 L. J., Ch. 241; 7 Jur. 320.

After a decree in a suit by a plaintiff on behalf of himself and all other creditors, the executor may go into fresh evidence in chambers for the purpose of establishing a case of release, although the allegations in the bill contain statements upon which the defence or release might have been sufficiently raised at the hearing. Cardell v. Hawke, L. R. 6 Eq. 464; 19 L. T. 47.

—— Right of Creditor to apply to vary Certificate.]—A creditor first making himself a party by coming into the Master's office and proving his debt, excepted to the Master's report. By proving in the cause, he acquires a right to except to the report. Wilson v. Wilson, 2 Moll. 328.

—— Right to attend Proceedings.]—When a decree has been made in a creditors' suit, leave to attend the proceedings will not be given to creditors whose claims are not yet admitted. Lacy v. Hill, 23 L. T. 582; 19 W. R. 174.

Where, upon a bill filed by simple contract creditor, the only specialty creditor is restrained by injunction from proceeding in his action at law, and it turns out, upon the Master's report, that the assets are insufficient to pay the specialty creditors, the specialty creditor, though not a party to the suit, may appear at the hearing on further directions without presenting a petition, if the case which he has to make depends only upon what appears in the Master's report. Young v. Everest, 1 Russ. & M. 426.

Non-proving Creditor—Sum set apart to provide for Debt.]—A sum set apart, on motion by the executor under Sir George Turner's Act (13 & 14 Vict. c. 35, s. 23), to provide for an unascertained debt mentioned in the Master's report, the creditor not having appeared or established the liability before the Master, but having been served with notice of and appearing on the motion. Howkins, In re, 10 Hare (App.) xxxiii., liv.

Disallowance of Claim—Appeal by One Creditor—Not available for other Creditors.]—In an administration suit where one creditor has appealed against the disallowance of a part of his claim, another creditor will not be allowed to argue, on the hearing of the appeal, against the disallowance of another claim by the same decree. Pardo v. Bingham, L. R. 4 Ch. 735; 20 L. T. 464; 17 W. R. 419.

Claims on Unsettled Accounts — Fund to answer—Title to—Inquiry.]—Where executors had invested money to answer claims on unsettled accounts between their testator and other persons, and paid the dividends to the tenant for life under the will, on a claim filed after the death of the tenant for life, by a party entitled to the fund, the court directed an inquiry before the Master as to who was the party entitled to the capital, and ordered the dividends to be paid in the meantime to the person entitled to the testator's estate. Blachford v. Toller, 15 Jur. 979.

Claim to Newly-discovered Assets.]—When a decree has been made for the administration of the estate of a deceased person, and the assets in hand have been distributed among his creditors, who have come in and proved, and at a later period further funds come in, and some only of the creditors who had proved come forward in answer to advertisements, the creditors who thus claim payment at the later period are not entitled to have the whole of the new fund applied so far as it will extend in payment of their claims, but only to receive rateable proportions of it according to the proportion which their debts bear to the total amount of the debts. Ashley v. Ashley, 46 L. J., Ch. 322; 4 Ch. D. 757; 36 L. T. 200; 25 W. R. 356—C. A.

Under an administration decree made in 1866 divers creditors carried in proofs, but the proceedings were not completed, in consequence of an insufficiency of assets. In 1888 further assets fell in, and by the chief clerk's certificate it appeared that there was a sufficient fund in court to pay all the creditors, but that some of the creditors whose claims were allowed could not be found:—Held, that the proper course was to retain in court to the credit of each of such last-mentioned creditors a sum of consols representing the amount of his debt and the interest thereon, and to fully administer the residue of the fund. Macdonald, In re, McAlpin v. Macdonald, 59 L. J., Ch. 231; 62 L. T. 541.

v. Evidence.

Claim against Estate — Corroboration.] — The court will not act upon the unsupported testimony of a claimant upon the estate of a deceased person. Grant v. Grant, 34 Beav. 623. S. P., Rogers v. Powell, 38 L. J., Ch. 648; 18 W. R. 282. Morley v. Finney, 18 W. R. 490. Harnett, In re, Leahy v. O'Grady, 17 L. R., Ir. 543. Sed quære, see infra.

The rule that a claim upon the estate of a deceased person cannot be maintained upon the unsupported testimony of the claimant applies to cases of alleged debt as well as to cases of alleged gift. Finch, In re, Finch v. Finch, 23 Ch. D. 267; 48 L. T. 129; 31 W. R. 526.

Semble, the rule is a rule of prudence rather than of law, and in an action tried by a jury it is the duty of the judge to recommend the jury to disregard the unsupported evidence of the claimant; but if they should decline to do so, and should find for the claimant, quære, if their verdict could be interfered with. Ib.

An English widow lady residing in Paris in a house which belonged to her for her separate use, married an English gentleman, and by the marriage settlement certain plate which formerly belonged to her first husband was settled to her separate use. After the marriage, her husband having family plate of his own, sent it to his wife's house in Paris, and she then sent her own plate to her son by her first marriage. Upon the death of the husband his family plate, and also a marble bust of himself, was in his wife's house at Paris. In a suit for the administration of his estate his wife claimed the plate as having been given her in exchange for her own plate, and the bust as having been presented to her by her husband:—Held, that the surrounding circumstances did not furnish corroborative evidence in support of the claim by the wife to the plate and bust, and that as the claim rested on her unsupported testimony, it could not be allowed. Ib.

Previously to her marriage with the testator, a widow had carried on a farm. After the marriage she continued to manage the business as before, upon an agreement, as she alleged, that the stock and capital were to be her separate estate. The farm was sold, and the proceeds invested in the husband's name, but as the widow alleged, as trustee for her. The widow claimed administration in respect of the proceeds of sale of the farm and for other sums which she stated that she had lent the testator out of her separate estate:—Held, that, in the absence of corroborative evidence, the claim of the widow to the proceeds of the farm and the other sums advanced to the testator could not be admitted as against the testator's estate; that the plaintiff was, however, entitled to the usual order for administration. Whittaker, In re, Whittaker v. Whittaker, 51 L. J., Ch. 737; 21 Ch. D. 657; 46 L. T. 802; 30 W. R. 787.

There is no rule of law that the uncorroborated evidence of a claimant against the estate of a dead man will be rejected, but it will be regarded with jealous suspicion. Garnett, In re, Gandy v. Macaulay, 31 Ch. D. 1—C. A.

There is no rule of law which precludes a claimant from recovering against the estate of a deceased person on his own testimony without corroboration; although the court will in general require such corroboration. Hodgson, In re, Beckett v. Ramsdale, 55 L. J., Ch. 241; 31 Ch. D. 177; 54 L. T. 222; 34 W. R. 127—C. A.

—— Cross-examination.]—A judgment creditor bringing in his claim in an administration suit, may be cross-examined as to the validity of his judgment. Leuton v. Brudenel, Baker, In re, 10 L. T. 859; 12 W. R. 1127.

An affidavit made under an administration decree in support of a claim of debt is made in a proceeding under the meaning of the 40th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, so as to subject the deponent to cross-examination. Cust v. Poyser 3 Sm. & G. 369; 26 L. J., Ch. 93; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 38. Affirmed 26 L. J., Ch. 353.

The leave of the judge is not necessary to authorise the examiner to take the cross-examination. Ib.

As a general rule a party should file his affidavits before cross-examining a party on the other side. Lancefield v. Iggulden, 41 L. J., Ch. 473; 26 L. T. 687; 20 W. R. 621.

Therefore an affidavit filed in a creditors' administration suit by executors subsequently to their cross-examination of the plaintiff upon his affidavit in support of his claim is not generally admissible in proceedings in chambers for the adjudication of the claim, but it was allowed to be used upon leave given to the deponent to reply. Ib.

Admission of Liability by Executor—After Decree for Administration.] — A., B. and C. being successive tenants in tail of property held under an inalienable parliamentary title, and B. having, after the death of A., entered into possession of the estates, and, together with them, of certain leaseholds formerly in the possession of A., his executors brought an ejectment against B. to recover possession of the leaseholds as part of his estate. B. having died before trial of the action, another action was brought against C., the successor in title. C., who was also executor of B., compromised the action on terms of giving judgment and buying the leaseholds at a certain price, with a further stipulation that 4,000*l.* should be allowed as a debt from B.'s estate in respect of rents received by B. Before the compromise, a creditors' suit was instituted and a decree made for the administration of B.'s estate, which was insolvent. On a summons by A.'s executors to prove against B.'s estate for the amount of the rents actually received by him:—Held, that the judgment in the action against C. was not evidence of a wrongful possession by B., which could serve as a foundation for the claim, and that the admission by the executor as to mesne profits in the compromise was inoperative, being made after the decree. Talbot v. Shrewsbury (Earl), L. R. 14 Eq. 503; 20 W. R. 854.

Issue directed as to Consideration for Bond.] —On a question, in the administration of assets, whether a bond given by the testator to his son for alleged arrears of salary was voluntary or for valuable consideration, the court, not relying on the admission of the testator, or the examination of the son and executor, in a case where the estate was insolvent, directed an issue on the question whether the testator, at the time of executing the bond, was indebted to the obligee to the amount thereby secured. Hepworth v. Heslop, 6 Hare, 561; 18 L. J., Ch. 352; 13 Jur. 166.

Bond Debt.] — The nature of the evidence that may be required in the Master's office in proof of debts, particularly of bond debts, considered. Whitaker v. Wright, 2 Hare, 310; 12 L. J., Ch. 241; 7 Jur. 320. S. P., Rundell v. Rivers (Lord), 1 Ph. 88; 11 L. J., Ch. 27; 6 Jur. 89.

Mortgage by Deposit.]—A. B. took an equitable mortgage, by deposit of title deeds of certain leasehold premises, from C. D., in exchange for other premises. C. D. having died, E. F., a creditor, took out administration to his estate, and expended a large sum on the premises in question, and obtained a new lease thereof to himself from the original lessors, in ignorance of A. B.'s claim, as he alleged. E. F. denied that the debt claimed by A. B., or the greater part of it, was ever incurred, and stated that no traces of it were discoverable in his (testator's) papers:— Held, nevertheless, that the usual decree must be made as in case of an equitable mortgage, viz., an account and sale of the leasehold property. Sims v. Helling, 21 L. J., Ch. 76.

4. Sales by the Court.

In General.] — Sale of real estate, decreed provisionally, without waiting the account of the personal estate previously applicable. Curtis v. Price, 12 Ves. 105; 8 R. R. 303. S. P., Holme v. Stanley, 8 Ves. 2.

Charge upon real estate, in aid of the personal, will be made available for the satisfaction of creditor by a sale, although there be personal estate outstanding, if it be not immediately applicable; there being a deficiency of personal assets, when there is a deficiency of immediately available personal estate. A creditor being not to be delayed beyond the shortest reasonable time, the court directs the immediate application of such personal fund as is immediately available, and then resorts to the real estate. The court sometimes orders real estate to be sold before a chattel real, but only when all parties are competent to consent. A plaintiff is under no obligation to pay anything more than satisfaction of his own debt, but the court always accompanies a decree for payment of even a single debt with the order, to take the account of assets. Clanmorris (Lord) v. Bingham, 1 Moll. 514.

Upon a bill filed by creditors, whose debts are charged upon the real estate, no decree for the sale of the real estate can be made, unless by consent, until the Master has reported that the personal estate is insufficient, even though its insufficiency should be admitted by the executors. Owen v. Pugh, 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 194.

If testator's personalty paid into court be clearly more than sufficient for payment of debts, legacies, &c., so that there is no occasion to resort to the produce of the estate devised to be sold for the purpose of creating a subsidiary fund for exigencies of will, court will proceed to decree execution of trust in exoneration of fund, without waiting for a final report, which would in strictness be necessary, or until the devised property should be sold. Noel v. Henley, 7 Price, 248; Dan. 211; 26 R. R. 660.

A testator directs his trustees to apply his personalty in paying debts and legacies, contemplating that there may be a surplus, and he directs the application of the rents of the realty on payment of such of his debts (except his mortgage debts) and legacies as his personalty should be insufficient to pay. A suit is instituted to administer his estate, and the personalty being insufficient to pay the debts and legacies, mortgage debts created by the testator remain unpaid, and no direction is given in the suit respecting them. The two first tenants for life and a remainderman concur in a petition for a sale of such part of the realty as shall be sufficient to pay off the mortgages and for an account:— Held, that there ought to be an inquiry what part of the real estate it will be fit and proper to sell to pay off the mortgages and for an account, the court having power after decree to direct a sale. Cooke v. Cholmondeley, 5 W. R. 835.

If a trustee, having discretion to sell trust property, submit to a decree for sale, the court is not therefore bound to carry the sale into execution. Polley v. Seymour, 2 Y. & C. 708; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 12; 1 Jur. 958.

—— Where effected by Collusion.] — Sale declared to be made subject to the trusts of the testator's will, where, under a decree that his real estate (which was devised in strict settlement, subject to debts) should be sold, the sale had been effected by collusion between the creditors and tenants for life. Manaton v. Molesworth, 1 Eden, 18.

Tenant for Life, as against.]—One seised in fee, and indebted by bond, in which his heirs are bound, devises his lands to A. for life, remainder to his first, &c., son in tail, remainder over. In a bill brought by bond creditors, the court will not decree the devisee for life to account for the profits, but only to keep down the interest; also the court will decree a sale to satisfy the bonds, though the lands be not devised for payment of debts. Manaton v. Manaton, 2 P. W. 234.

Tenant in Tail, as against.]—Tenant in tail coming in esse before the sale of real estate, should be made a party, because he is interested in having the account correctly taken, but such tenant in quasi tail of a chattel real need not be made a party to a bill for the administration of assets, under which there is had a sale of the chattel real, because it could be got at law by proceeding against the executor. Clanmorris (Lord) v. Bingham, 1 Moll. 514.

Of Lands of Lunatic Devisee.]—Estate devised away from the heir charged with payment of debts, ordered to be sold in aid of the personal estate where the devisee was insane, and the heir abroad. Williams v. Whinyates, 2 Bro. C. C. 399.

A devisee of real estate, subject to payment of debts, became of unsound mind, and was so found by inquisition. A committee was appointed, and an action for the administration of the testator's real and personal estate was commenced with the sanction of the Master in Lunacy, in the Chancery Division, by the lunatic and his committee, and, the testator's personal estate proving to be insufficient for payment of his debts, an order was made for sale of all the testator's real estate and for payment of the purchase-money into court. Under this order the real estate was sold, and the purchaser paid the purchase-money into court. He, however, raised an objection to the title of the vendors, on the ground that they could not convey without an order in lunacy:—Held, that the administration action in which the order for sale was made, having been properly commenced with the sanction of the Master in lunacy, the lunatic plaintiff was entitled to carry on the action, and was, therefore, also bound by the order for sale made in it; that the lunatic was, therefore, a trustee within the Trustees Extension Act, 1852, s. 1, of the real estate, and that his committee should be appointed to convey. Stamper, In re, Stamper v. Stamper, 46 L. T. 372.

Where Infants interested.]—Where real estate is devised to infants charged with payment of debts, if personal insufficient, sale of real not decreed till Master report personal insufficient; though infants admit it so at the hearing. Birch v. Glover, 4 Madd. 376. See Curtis v. Price, 12 Ves. 105; 8 R. R. 303.

In a suit for administering the property of a person deceased, if an infant defendant is interested in the real estates, the court will not direct those estates to be sold till the accounts of the personal estate have been taken, and the cause heard for further directions. Baillie v. Jackson, 10 Sim. 167.

Where the heir-at-law was an infant, the court, in a suit by a simple contract creditor of the ancestor, in order to protect the infant's interests, abstained from giving the usual directions for a sale, until the cause came back for further directions; but such is not the usual or regular course of the court. Lynch v. Joyce, 3 Dr. & War. 349.

In a decree for raising legacies against an infant heir of a devisee, whose estate was charged with the legacies, a sale may be directed. Walters v. Jackson, 12 Sim. 278; 10 L. J., Ch. 383.

An estate descended to an infant heir cannot be sold at the suit of creditors, on the ground that, from circumstances of the property, a sale will be beneficial to the infant. Brookfield v. Bradley, Jac. 634.

Sale or Mortgage.] — A testator directed moneys required for the purposes of his will, to be raised by mortgage of part of his real estate. The Master found that the money could be more advantageously raised by a sale of part of the estate, but the court declined to direct a sale. Drake v. Whitmore, 5 De G. & Sm. 619.

When debts are charged on settled real estate, the court, in determining whether the debts are to be raised by sale or mortgage, will give greater weight to the wishes of the persons whose interests in the estate are immediate, than to those whose interests are more remote. Metcalfe v. Hutchinson, 45 L. J., Ch. 210; 1 Ch. D. 591.

To pay Costs.]—The court has no jurisdiction to charge the costs of an administration suit on any part of the estate administered, and direct a sale against the will of a person beneficially entitled, who submits to pay his share of the costs. Lees v. Lees, 42 L. J., Ch. 319; L. R. 15 Eq. 151; 27 L. T. 743; 21 W. R. 215.

Under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104.]—The court has jurisdiction, under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, to order the real estates of a deceased debtor to be sold for payment of his debts in a suit for the administration of his estate, though it be instituted, not by a creditor, but by the heir and the next of kin of the deceased. Price v. Price, 15 Sim. 484; 16 L. J., Ch. 232.

The court has jurisdiction to order the real estates of a deceased debtor to be sold for payment of his debts, in a suit instituted, not by a creditor of the deceased, but by a person interested in his estates under his will. Rodney v. Rodney, 16 Sim. 307; 12 Jur. 665.

In order to obtain a decree for the sale of a testator's real estate for payment of his debts, under the statute 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, it is not necessary that the bill should be filed by a creditor. Dinning v. Henderson, 2 Coll. C. C. 330.

Under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86.]—In a suit to ascertain the construction of a will of real estate, and to carry the trusts thereof into execution, the court has power, if necessary, to direct a sale or mortgage of a sufficient part of the property, for the purpose of raising the taxed costs of the suit, although some of the plaintiffs are infants. Sect. 55 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, gives power to direct a sale before the hearing in those cases only in which the court could under the old practice have given such direction at the hearing. Mandeno v. Mandeno, Kay (App.) ii.

Sect. 55 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, is applicable only to cases in which, for the protection of property or other like cause, it is necessary to apply to the court for a sale, and it was not intended to enable parties, in a contested suit, to obtain, upon an interlocutory application before the hearing, a decision upon the questions in contest. Prince v. Cooper, 16 Beav. 546; 23 L. J., Ch. 343; 1 W. R. 206.

The court has power, under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 55, to order a sale before the hearing of a suit, where it is for the protection or benefit of the estate. Tulloch v. Tulloch, L. R. 3 Eq. 574.

In a suit to render the estate of a deceased trustee of a will liable for certain breaches of trust, a decree was made declaring the liability of the estate to make good what should be found due in respect of such breaches of trust, and directing accounts and inquiries. Before the chief clerk had made his certificate, but it having appeared in the course of taking the accounts and inquiries that the estate was liable for a considerable amount which the personal estate was insufficient to satisfy, the cestuis que trustent applied by petition, under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 55, for the sale of certain real estate belonging to the deceased trustee, a mortgage on which had been redeemed by the existing trustee of the will:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction to order the sale, and that it was in accordance with the practice of the court in such a case when once it had been ascertained that the real estate would have to be resorted to, to make an order for the sale of the real estate without waiting for further consideration. Bell v. Turner, 45 L. J., Ch. 681; 2 Ch. D. 409; 24 W. R. 451.

The Court of Chancery has jurisdiction, under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 47, to make an order on summons for the administration and sale of a testator's real estate, where the will only gives the executors a power to sell such estate, and to give receipts, without vesting the estate in them by devise. Colman v. Turner, 39 L. J., Ch. 776; L. R. 10 Eq. 230.

Note.—Ord. LI. r. 1 has been substituted for 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 55, which is now repealed.

Under Ord. LI. r. 1.]—An action was brought by the infant heir-at-law (by a next friend) of an intestate against the widow, who was the administratrix, claiming accounts of the personal estate, and of the rents and profits of the real estate received by the defendant. The action came on for hearing on motion for judgment, and the court was asked under Ord. LI. r. 1, to make an order for the sale of the real estate. The defendant did not object:—Held, that this was not "a cause or matter relating to real estate" within the meaning of the rule, and that the court could not order a sale under that rule. But, upon a summons under the Settled Land Act, a sale was ordered. Staines, In re, Staines v. Staines, 55 L. J., Ch. 913; 33 Ch. D. 172; 35 W. R. 75.

Under r. 1 of Ord. LI. the court has power to order a sale of real estate only when it is necessary or expedient for the purposes of the action before it that the property should be sold. No new power to order a sale is conferred. Robinson, In re, Pickard v. Wheater, 55 L. J., Ch. 307; 31 Ch. D. 247; 53 L. T. 865.

Where Rents and Profits charged.]—Where debts are directed by will to be paid out of rents and profits, the court, if it is necessary, will decree a sale. Berry v. Askham, 2 Vern. 26.

Money devised to be raised out of profits, and the profits will not raise it in a convenient time, the court will decree a sale. Heycock v. Heycock, 1 Vern. 256.

When debt and legacies are by will directed to be raised by perception of rents and profits, or by leasing and mortgaging of the land, this restrains it merely to a payment out of rents, and the court cannot decree a sale. Ridout v. Plymouth (Earl), 2 Atk. 105.

A sale directed on the words "rents and profits alone," though generally contrary to testator's intent in aid of a creditor, on the ground of law, that in a will those words meant and passed the land itself; another construction, however, as to legacies, upon the addition of the words, "as the rents and profits, &c., should advance the money." Baines v. Dixon, 1 Ves. Sen. 41.

Devise of "rents, profits, and produce" of West India estate to be consigned to trustees, and applied by them in disencumbering an estate in Scotland of debts, and also in payment of other debts, funeral expenses, and legacies:—Held, on rehearing, that such charges could only be paid out of the annual perception of rents and profits, and that part of the former decree which had directed a sale was reserved. Conyngham v. Conyngham, 1 Ves. Sen. 522.

B. devised his estate to trustees to pay yearly rents and profits in discharge of his wife's jointure, his sister's annuity, and in payment of his debts and the interest thereof, then to certain uses. The creditors file a bill praying a sale, but this court cannot under such a devise decree the estate to be sold. Lingard v. Derby, 1 Bro. C. C. 311.

Devise for payment of debts by rents and profits, out of the statute of fraudulent devises; but a gross sum for that purpose will not be limited to annual rents, but is to be paid with all convenient speed. Distinction between debts and legacies and annuities, but the same provision for all is evidence, although not conclusive, that all are to be paid in the same way. The same inference as to costs, directed to be paid in the same manner, exonerating the fund generally liable in the first instance. Bootle v. Blundell, 1 Mer. 193; 19 Ves. 494, 528; G. Coop. 136; 15 R. R. 93.

Words in will "rents and profits" tended beyond their natural meaning, viz. 'annual profits," to mortgage or sale, when necessary to effect the object, such as raising a gross sum, for fines on renewal, as well as portions; and are not controlled by apparent intention to preserve estates entire. Allan v. Backhouse, 2 Ves. & B. 65. Affirmed Jac. 631; 13 R. R. 23; 23 Ib. 167.

A direction in a will to pay debts out of the rents and profits of real estate primâ facie charges the debts on the corpus, unless the will contains a context shewing that annual rents and profits only are meant. Metcalf v. Hutchinson, 45 L. J., Ch. 210; 1 Ch. D. 591.

When debts are charged on settled real estate, the court, in determining whether the debts are to be raised by sale or mortgage, will give greater weight to the wishes of the persons whose interests in the estate are immediate, than to those whose interests are more remote. Ib.

Of Incumbered Estates—In General.]—In a creditors' suit for the administration of real estate subject to a mortgage having priority to the claims of creditors, a sale of the estate free from the mortgage cannot be directed without the consent of the mortgagee, whether he is a party to the suit or not. Wickenden v. Rayson, 6 De G. M. & G. 210; 25 L. J., Ch. 162; 4 W. R. 39.

If, however, the mortgagee is a party to the suit, the direction will not be made in the common alternative form, namely, that the property shall be sold free from his security if he concurs in the sale, and subject to it if he does not concur; but the court will require the mortgagee to elect at once whether he will concur or not. Ib.

The court has no jurisdiction to order a sale of the mortgaged property freed from the mortgage, without the consent of the mortgagee. Ib.

An implied power of sale in the executor of a mortgagor, arising from a direction in the will to pay debts, will not enable the court to direct the sale of the mortgaged estate, if it cannot make a decree for foreclosure. Bolton v. Stannard, 27 L. J., Ch. 845; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 576; 6 W. R. 570.

Such a decree can only be made in a creditors' suit. Ib.

A. took a mortgage of part of the property devised by B. L.'s will. A suit was afterwards instituted by a party claiming under the will, for administration of the testator's estate, to which A. was made a party for the sake of impeaching his security. A receiver was appointed, and A., who had not given the notice requisite to enable him to take possession, did not oppose. Before decree the parties entitled to the equity of redemption of the mortgaged property brought an action, with the sanction of the court, against parties asserting adverse rights, and in November, 1849, the action was, with the sanction of the court, compromised. A. was served with notice of the applications relating to these proceedings, but did not in any manner interfere. During these proceedings a decree for accounts and inquiries was made, and in November, 1849, A. was found to be first incumbrancer. In 1853, a decree on further directions was made, directing a sale and obliging A. to concur. A. did not oppose, but shortly afterwards, having discovered that a sale would be prejudicial to him, he presented a petition for the discharge of the receiver, and to be let into possession. This was refused by Sir W. P. Wood, Vice-Chancellor, on the ground that A. was not entitled to take possession till the costs relating to the action and compromise had been paid:—Held, on appeal, that the mortgage had priority over the costs incurred in relation to the action, and over the general costs of suit, and that the prayer of the petition must be granted:—Held, also, that the decree on further directions must be varied by directing the sale to be subject to the mortgage if the mortgagee should not concur, and free from it if he did concur. Langton v. Langton, 24 L. J., Ch. 625; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1078; 3 Eq. R. 394; 3 W. R. 222—L.JJ.

The grantor of an annuity which was the third incumbrance on his real estates, executed a trust deed (to which the annuitant was not a party), whereby the estates were conveyed to trustees, on trusts for sale to discharge the incumbrances according to their priorities: and the first trust of that deed was to pay the costs of the trustees in the conduct of the sale. After the execution of the trust deed, the trustees applied to the annuitant for his consent to the sale. In answer to that application the solicitors of the annuitant offered to facilitate the sale, but asked for a copy of the trust deed: adding, "When we have seen the deed we shall be better able to inform you whether our clients will have any difficulty in joining in the conveyances." And, in answer to a subsequent application, they assented to the appropriation of a part of the rents towards rendering the property more eligible for sale. Part of the property was sold, the annuitant concurring in the sale, whereby a sufficient sum was realised to pay the prior incumbrances; but it being apprehended that the residue of the property would not realise enough to pay both the costs of the trustees and to redeem the annuity, the trustees applied to the annuitant for leave to retain, in the first place, out of the future proceeds of sale, a sum sufficient to pay their costs. This being refused, and a bill being filed to compel the annuitant to join in the conveyances:—Held, under the circumstances, that he was not bound to do so, except upon the terms of having the annuity redeemed. Crosse v. General and Reversionary Investment Co., 3 De G. M. & G. 698; 2 Eq. R. 579.

Where a second incumbrancer's demand would exhaust the entire fund in a creditor's suit, the court refused to allow him to pay off the first incumbrance and take a conveyance without the expense of a sale; but, all parties consenting, referred it to the Master to ascertain the value of the debt and estate, and, if it would not be beneficial to have a sale, directed the conveyance to be made as asked. Lynch v. Kelly, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 342; 3 Jo. & Lat. 628.

—— Where Incumbrancer consents—Costs—Interest—Completion.]—The mortgagee or incumbrancer, consenting to a sale of the mortgaged premises in an administration suit, does not thereby waive his right to be paid his principal, interests, and costs, out of the moneys produced by the sale, in priority to the costs of the plaintiffs in the cause. Hepworth v. Heslop, 3 Hare, 484; 9 Jur. 796.

In a suit to administer a mortgagor's estate, the mortgagee, who was not a party, came in and consented to a sale. The produce formed the whole of the assets, and was less than the mortgage:—Held, that the mortgagee was entitled to the whole fund, after payment of the costs of sale. Dighton v. Withers, 31 Beav. 423.

Where, by consent of a mortgagee, property is sold by the court free from the mortgage security. Semble, that the costs of other parties of the sale ought not to be paid out of the proceeds of sale in priority to the mortgage debt; but whether they ought not to be so paid where the estate is so sold in an administration suit in which the mortgagee has proved for the whole mortgage debt, quære. Mackinlay, In re, Ward v. Mackinlay, 2 De G. J. & S. 358.

Where lands subject to a mortgage had been sold under a decree, in a creditor's suit, the mortgagee joining in the conveyance of the lands free from his mortgage:—Held, that he was entitled to have the expenses of the actual sale, but no more, borne out of the proceeds of the sale, the costs and expenses being left to be defrayed out of the general assets. Berry v. Hebblethwaite, 4 Kay & J. 80.

In an administration suit, an estate was ordered to be sold discharged of the mortgage, if the mortgagee consented. The mortgagee consented to the sale:—Held, that the mortgagee was only entitled to six months' interest from the date of his consent, if paid within that time, and the interest to the day of payment if paid afterwards, out of the proceeds of the sale. Day v. Day, 31 Beav. 270.

A mortgagee who was a party to the suit, consented to a sale of the mortgaged property:—Held, that he must produce, and leave in the Master's office, the title deeds which were necessary, in order to complete such sale. Livesey v. Harding, 1 Beav. 343.

—— Sale Subject to Incumbrance.]—A., having a lien on the testator's estate, established his debt under the decree; but his claim for interest was disallowed by the Master, whose report stood confirmed. The estate was sold subject to A.'s lien, and A. having refused to accept from the purchaser his principal without interest, was not allowed to participate as a creditor in the purchase money. Hempstead v. Hempstead, 4 Beav. 423.

—— Under Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, s. 5.]—Where a real estate, forming part of an estate which is being administered by the court, is charged with an annuity, upon further consideration the court will not, under the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, s. 5, direct the property to be sold free from the annuity, but will direct an application in chambers as to the mode of sale. Patching v. Bull, 46 L. T. 227; 30 W. R. 244.

Under s. 5 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, an order for the sale of land free from an incumbrance (the incumbrancer not being a party to the action) should follow the words of the act, which are to be interpreted strictly, and after directing payment into court of the purchase money, and setting apart a sufficient amount to meet the claims of the incumbrancer, proceed to declare that thereupon any person interested should be at liberty to apply in chambers for a declaration that the land is free from the incumbrance. Dickin v. Dickin, 30 W. R. 887.

Where lands charged with legacies were ordered to be sold in an action, and it was impracticable to procure a release from the legatees, and the purchase money largely exceeded all the incumbrances on the lands, the court made an order under the 5th section of the act declaring that on payment of the purchase-money into court the lands should be freed from such charge. Archdale v. Anderson, 21 L. R., Ir. 527.

—— Proceeds of Security Less than Debt.]—In a suit to administer a mortgagor's estate, the mortgagee, who was not a party, came in and consented to a sale. The produce formed the whole assets, and was less than the mortgage:—Held, that the mortgagee was entitled to the whole fund, after payment of the costs of sale. Dighton v. Withers, 31 Beav. 423.

The unexpired term in a house, and the goodwill of a business established in it, were sold in a creditor's suit, with the consent of a person with whom the lease had been deposited as a security, and brought a price less than the amount of his debt:—Held, that the equitable mortgagee was entitled to the whole of the purchase money, whether arising from the value of the goodwill, or from the value of the lease, independently of the goodwill. Chissum v. Dewes, 5 Russ. 29; 29 R. R. 10.

Where the fee simple of estates mortgaged by an intestate, illegitimate, was not worth the mortgage money:—Held, that the mortgagor could not on that account, as against the Crown, entitled to the equity of redemption, be deemed a bare trustee for the mortgagee, within 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 23, s. 2; the estate ordered to be sold in the administration of assets, the mortgagee to become a purchaser, with liberty to apply to the Crown for a grant of the fee. Rogers v. Maule, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 4.

Other Matters.]—The Court of Appeal, though it may be of opinion that a sale of real estate forming part of an estate being administered by the court would more conveniently take place in the district registry where the administration action was commenced, will not interfere with an order of the judge of the court directing the sale to take place in his own chambers, that being a matter for the discretion of the judge. Macdonald v. Foster, 6 Ch. D. 193; 37 L. T. 296; 25 W. R. 687—C. A.

A testator directed certain parts of his real estate to be sold, and the proceeds were to be held by the trustees on the same trusts as those created by the testator with respect to the unsold parts of his estates. A settlement was directed by the will to be made comprehending those trusts:—Held, that before the court in chambers could direct a sale of the portions of the real estate, it must be satisfied that all proper parties were before the court. Consequently, that all persons taking interest in the unsold parts of the estate under the testator's will, down to and including the first vested estate of inheritance, were necessary parties to the suit. Pigott v. Pigott, 8 L. T., 268.

Evidence of the propriety of a sale of an estate by private contract heard and approved of in court, and not referred to chambers. Pimm v. Insall, 10 Hare (App.), lxxiv.

5. Payment into Court.

(a) In General.

In what Cases.]—Equity will not take securities out of hands of executor unless on a strong case. Clare v. Almuty, 2 Eq. Abr. 420.

A clear and strong case must be made out for court to order administrator to bring personal estate unapplied into court. Scott v. Becher, 4 Price, 346; 18 R. R. 722.

Unless all persons interested in a fund are before the court, an order for payment of it into court will not be made on an undertaking by the plaintiff to make them parties, except perhaps in cases of administration or creditors' suits. Marriage v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 18 L. J., Ch. 216.

Quære, whether such an order would be made in those suits. Ib.

Personal property in the hands of a testamentary guardian and executor ordered into court, there being no particular purpose to be answered by leaving it outstanding. Blake v. Blake, 2 Sch. & Lef. 26.

Executor not called on to lodge money except upon affidavit of his insolvency, or an admission by him of the balance in his hands after payment of debts. Rutherford v. Dawson, 2 Ball. & B. 17.

It is no ingredient to take the assets out of the hands of an executor that he is not of affluent fortune, as long as the testator has placed his confidence in him without regarding his circumstances. Hathornthwaite v. Russell, 2 Atk. 126.

An executor is bound to pay into court money due from himself. Eagleton v. Kingston, 8 Ves. 466.

In July 1852 H. quitted England for America, and wrote home announcing his safe arrival at New York. There was evidence that he was in declining health when he quitted England, and that, from his character, education, and previous life, he would, if living, have communicated with his friends in England. Advertisements requesting information concerning him had been inserted in the American newspapers, but he was never heard of again. The father of H. died in September 1853 intestate. One of the next of kin of the father, supposing the son to have predeceased him, filed a bill for the administration of the father's estate:—Held, that there was primâ facie evidence of the death of H. in his father's lifetime to entitle him to have the personal estate secured in court. Danby v. Danby, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 54.

—— Validity of Will contested.]—Where will is contested in Ecclesiastical Court on the ground of insanity of testator, executor ordered to pay in 1,000*l.* he has collected of testator's money into the bank in the name of the accountant general, and receiver appointed of the whole estate to pay in from time to time what he receives whilst the will is contesting. Montgomery v. Clark, 2 Atk. 379.

A motion on the suit of the next of kin of a deceased person, whose will is the subject of litigation in the Ecclesiastical Court, for the payment into this court of money which was in the hands of the executor of the alleged will, refused; no decision either in the Ecclesiastical

Court or at law having been come to on the validity of the will, and the executor insisting upon such validity by his answer, and denying that he was insolvent. Edwards v. Edwards, 10 Hare (App.), lxiii.

An executor, whose title is in dispute in the Ecclesiastical Court, will not be ordered to pay into court money which was received by him as executor before the appointment of a receiver pendente lite. Reed v. Harris, 7 Sim. 639; 5 L. J., Ch. 126.

—— Pending Appeal.]—Executor being reported to hold a balance and the party interested calling for the investment of it, pending an appeal by the executor, court will compel the executor to bring in the sum reported. Carmichael v. Wilson, 3 Moll. 92.

—— Annuity charged on House—Insurance Money of House.]—A testator charged his real estate with an annuity to his widow, and subject thereto devised it to S. A. in fee, and appointed her his executrix. The testator had insured a house; policy expired a few months after his death, and was then renewed by S. A. Soon afterwards the house, which was the whole of his real estate, was burnt down. The insurance money was ordered to be paid into court on a motion by the widow, in a suit instituted by her against S. A. for administration. Parry v. Ashey, 3 Sim. 97; 30 R. R. 132.

—— Scotch Infants — Administration by Court—English will.]—A curator bonis and factor loco tutoris of Scotch infants is not bound to pay into the Court of Chancery assets belonging to the infants receivable under an English will of which the curator is administrator, and which is in course of administration by the court. Mackie v. Darling, L. R. 12 Eq. 319; 19 W. R. 796.

—— Order as to part of fund only.]—Widow being, as administratrix, possessed of property of intestate, consisting of bank stock, motion to restrain her from disposing of it, and payment into court, was refused; but, being clearly entitled to her third, ordered to pay the two-thirds into court. Rogers v. Rogers, 1 Anstr. 174.

Where part of a residuary estate has been invested on an improper security, and the defendant has an interest therein, the court, on being satisfied that there is no existing claim on the estate, sometimes confines the amount to be paid into court to the share of the plaintiff. Score v. Ford, 7 Beav. 333.

—— Income of Fund in Court.] — On a motion to pay assets of a testator into court, the court declined to direct the payment of the income to the tenant for life, to be continued, unless the executor took upon himself the responsibility of the payment. Abby v. Gilford, 11 Beav. 28.

Contra, Dando v. Dando, 1 Sim. 510.

—— Against Party not Executor or Administrator.]—In a suit for the administration of a testator's estate, the court refused, upon motion, to order the payment into court of a fund which was claimed as a donatio mortis causâ, and which was admitted by the answer of the party claiming it to be in her possession. Cutting v. Rand, 5 L. J., Ch. 213.

A. died in a colony, and made colonial representatives, and bequeathed his residue to B., who afterwards died. B.'s representative received, from A.'s colonial representatives, his residue. The representative of B. was also a creditor of A:—Held, that in a creditors' suit the representative of B. could not be compelled to bring into court the money so paid to him by A.'s colonial representatives. Silver v. Stein, 1 Drew. 295; 21 L. J., Ch. 312.

An executor had deposited at his bankers money, being part of the estate, and an order had been made that the executor should pay the money into court, and sequestration had issued against him:—Held, that an adverse order to pay the money in could not be made against the bankers, not being parties to the suit, but on their submission to the jurisdiction a directory order was made. Manton v. Manton, 40 L. J., Ch. 93.

In a suit against the bank and an administrator, appointed under 38 Geo. 3, c. 87, the court, on motion before decree, ordered stock standing in the testator's name to be transferred to the accountant-general. Warburton v. Hill, 5 Sim. 532.

—— Legacy for Life—Right of Residuary Legatee.]—The rule that if personal property consisting of money or stock is limited to A. for life, and after his death to B. absolutely, it will be ordered into court for administration in an action by B. for the purpose, is not absolute, and will only be enforced as against A. where there is reasonable ground, such as danger to the fund, for the application. Braithwaite, In re, Braithwaite v. Wallis, 52 L. J., Ch. 15; 21 Ch. D. 121; 48 L. T. 857; 31 W. R. 180.

Form of Order.]—The order upon the executors to bring in the fund, ought to direct, not the first balance reported, but the balance to be reported on a further account, to be taken after deducting all such costs, charges, legacies, and expenses, as are presently payable, to be brought in. Barry v. Barry, 1 Moll. 210.

Evidence.]—On motion to compel the executor to pay the fund into bank, the answer only of the executor can be relied on. No affidavit can be used except that of a calculator or accountant, who examines the schedule annexed to the answer, and swears to the amount in the hands of the executor appearing therefrom. Black v. Creighton, 2 Moll. 554.

Costs.]—The court in ordering the assets to be brought in does not cramp an executor who is engaged in suits, by leaving him to carry on those suits upon his own funds. It allows him to retain sufficient not only for costs already incurred, but for probable growing costs. Betagh v. Concannon, 2 Moll. 559.

An executor, having been ordered to pay money into court, is not thereby deprived of his lien on the fund for his costs. Blenkinsop v. Forster, 3 Y. & C. 205; 8 L. J., Ex. Eq. 8. And see Knapman, In re, 50 L. J., Ch. 629; 18 Ch. D. 300; 45 L. T. 102—C. A.

A party who had been ordered to transfer large sums of stock into court, paid the broker at the rate of 1*s.* 3*d.* per cent. for identifying him on making the transfer:—Held, that the payment, which amounted to 28*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, was proper, and ought to be allowed in taxing the party's costs.

Davenport v. Powell, 14 Sim. 275; 14 L. J., Ch. 115.

One guinea only is allowed to the broker of the accountant-general for the transfer of stock into court, and where executors had, upon such a transfer, employed their private broker, the additional amount paid by them to him was disallowed. Hopkinson v. Roe, 1 Beav. 181.

The costs of transferring stock from the name of the testator into the names of the executors, were disallowed. Ib.

Effect of Order to Collect and Pay in.]—The effect of an order in an administration suit, that a personal representative shall get in the outstanding personal estate, and, within a certain date, pay the proceeds into the bank to the credit of the cause, is to ear-mark the outstanding personal estate, and to disable the personal representative from dealing with such proceeds otherwise than by paying them in as directed. Harries v. Rees, 37 L. J., Ch. 102; 17 L. T. 418; 16 W. R. 91.

The solicitors of the personal representative are in such a case bound, as officers of the court, to take notice of the order. Ib.

The solicitors of the personal representative in such a case having retained, in payment of their costs incurred before the date of the order, part of the proceeds of the estate which they had since the order collected, and having paid over other part to the personal representative, were held to have disobeyed the order, and to be chargeable with the amount of the proceeds collected by them, with interest from the time they had received them, and with the costs of suit up to the hearing. Ib.

(b) On Admission of Assets.

In what Cases.]—Executor not called on to lodge money, except upon affidavit of his insolvency, or an admission by him of a balance in his hands after payment of debts. Rutherford v. Dawson, 2 Ball & B. 17. And see Richardson v. Bank of England, 4 Myl. & C. 165; 2 Jur. 911.

Practice to order payment of money into court upon admission in the defendant's answer. Strange v. Harris, 3 Bro. C. C. 365.

It is only when an executor, in his answer to the bill of the next of kin, &c., admits that he has a clear residue in his hands, free from all demands, that he is ordered to bring it into court. Standish v. Herbert, 2 Moll. 522.

Where an executor admits that he has received a certain sum belonging to the testator's estate, but adds that he has made payments, the amount of which he does not specify, the court will allow him to verify the amount of his payments by affidavit, and order him, on motion, to pay the balance into court. Anon., 4 Sim. 359.

An executor having admitted a large balance of the personal estate to be in his hands, was ordered to pay the whole into court; although he stated that an action was pending against him for debts to a considerable amount, due from the testator, but with liberty in case the plaintiff in the action should recover, to apply to the court to have a sufficient sum paid out again. Yare v. Harrison, 2 Cox, 377.

An executor, for some years, received the rents of property specially bequeathed. The specific legatee having instituted a suit against him:—Held, that he could not set up the adverse title of a third party as a defence to a motion to pay the amount into court. Held, also, that the executor was not entitled to deduct the amount of debts, &c., paid by him, there having, apparently, been sufficient general assets out of which they ought to have been paid. Lord v. Purchase, 17 Beav. 171.

—— What Sufficient.]—Executor, admitting a balance due from him to the testator upon an unsettled account, ordered to pay the amount into court, notwithstanding there were debts of the testator still outstanding, the testator having died three years before. Mortlock v. Leathes, 2 Mer. 491.

The court will not order an executor to pay into court money which he states by his answer to have retained in satisfaction of a debt due to him from the testator. Middleton v. Poole, 2 Coll. C. C. 236.

Admission by an executor, that the whole amount of the property is near 40,000*l.*, and that the whole is invested in India in public securities, either in his name or in the name of the house in which he is a partner, and subject to his disposal, unless some part is in the hand of the said house at interest, which he believes may be the case: not a sufficient admission of money in his hands to order the payment into court of any part of it. Freeman v. Fairlie, 3 Mer. 39; 17 R. R. 7.

Administrator ordered on motion to transfer a sum of consols into court, upon admission in his examination before the Master that he had possessed it, and sold it out after the bill had been filed, and invested it in other securities which he did not specify. Hinde v. Blake, 4 Beav. 597.

An executor who had proved the will in India, and in his answer admitted that, after payment of all the known debts, a certain balance of the estate remained in his hands, subject to other charges and expenses, the amount of which he had not ascertained, and that he had invested such balance on personal security in India; ordered to pay the balance into court, allowing a reasonable sum to be retained in respect of the suggested deductions, by a day which would afford time for the remittance of the fund from India. Roy v. Gibbon, 4 Hare, 65.

A party having obtained probate to a will, which was afterwards cancelled on the ground that the alleged will was a forgery, and under that probate possessed himself of personal property of the deceased; on administration obtained by another party, and bill filed against the executor for an account and payment of the personal property of the deceased, in his answer, this defendant admitted having received certain moneys, but alleged he had paid them away under the provisions of the will. An application by the administrator, on motion, that the defendant should pay into court those sums admitted by him to be received, and alleged to be improperly paid away, was refused. Auld v. Stewart, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 399.

An executor, believing that there would be assets sufficient to pay a legacy, became trustee in and executed the marriage settlement of the legatee, in which it was recited that she was entitled to the legacy, and it was agreed that it should be assigned upon certain trusts. A suit was afterwards instituted against the executor for a breach of trust by the testator, which suit, if successful, would exhaust the assets:—Held, in a suit by the cestui que trust under the settlement, that there had been an admission of assets primâ facie binding on the executor, and he was ordered to lodge in court the amount of the legacy, without prejudice to his taking such proceedings as he might be advised to be relieved against the admission of assets, in the event of there being a decree against him in the suit for the breach of trust by his testator. Chaigneau v. Bryan, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 172.

In an administration action notice of motion was served upon a defendant, an executor, for payment into court of money, part of the testator's estate, which it was shewn by affidavit that he had received. The defendant did not appear on the motion:—Held, that the defendant not having disputed the affidavit, there was a sufficient admission that the money was in his hands, and that he must be ordered to pay it into court. Freeman v. Cox, 47 L. J., Ch. 560; 8 Ch. D. 148; 26 W. R. 689.

—— Money in hands of Executor's Partner.]—Money admitted by executor to be in hands of his partner, is in his own hands for the purpose of being ordered to be paid into court. Johnson v. Aston, 1 Sim. & S. 73.

A. and B. were appointed trustees, and A., B. and C. executors of a will. A. and C. alone proved. B., in his answer, said he declined to act in the trusts; but it appeared that B. and his partner were indebted to the testatrix at her death, that her executor had lent them part of the assets, and that they had paid some of her debts. The court, on motion, ordered B. to pay into court the balance due from him and his partner, who was not a party to the suit. White v. Barton, 18 Beav. 192.

—— At what Stage.]—In bill by legatees against executor, if he admits balance due on his examination and claims no interest, court will order him to pay it into court before report. Curgenven v. Peters, 3 Anstr. 751.

An executor admitting assets, and ordered to bring them in, cannot rely upon his own demands set forth in a charge under the decree, but not proved, as cause against the issuing of an attachment for non-compliance with the order; nor would the court extend the time for bringing in the money until after the Master should have made his report, there having already been unreasonable delay. D'Arcy v. D'Arcy, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 407. And see Id. 408, n.

Where, in an administration suit, the executor by his answer, admits that there are assets still outstanding, lent by the testator on personal security, the court will not, before the hearing, compel the executor to bring the money into court, or give security to abide the decree. Costelloes v. Cantwell, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 386.

The defendant in the original suit, after a decree that she should lodge in court a certain sum when ascertained by the Master, died. The suit was revived against her executors, who admitted assets by their answer, and the amount of the sum was ascertained by the report. Upon motion by the plaintiffs, the executors were compelled to bring in the money, without waiting until the cause should be heard. Mackinnon v. Palmer, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 74.

—— Order in one of two Concurrent Actions.]—A suit being instituted in this court by a legatee for payment of her legacy, and another suit being instituted in the Vice-Chancellor's court by the residuary legatee of the testator for the administration of his estate, the plaintiff in this suit gave notice of motion for the executrix of the testator to pay into court money admitted by her answer to be in her hands, and for the appointment of a receiver, and for certain preliminary inquiries. The day after the service of the notice of motion, the plaintiff in the other suit, who employed the same solicitor as the executrix, obtained an order for the executrix to pay the money into court in that suit, before the application was made here. Under these circumstances, the court refused to make any order interfering with the order in the other suit, until it was seen how that order was prosecuted. Thorne v. Worrall, 4 Jur. 933.

—— Special Order by Consent.]—Where a bill was filed against an executor and universal devisee of the estate of a party, who, as trustee, had committed a breach of trust by selling out stock to which the plaintiff was entitled for life, with remainder to his children, and the bill prayed an account of the real and personal assets of the party who had committed the breach of trust, the court, on a motion for payment of the balance of such real and personal estate, admitted by the defendant to be in his hands, into court, refused to make the order, the bill not being one framed as in a creditors' suit; but, by consent, made a special order. Reeve v. Goodwin, 10 Jur. 1050.

(c) Misconduct of Executor.

Misapplication of Assets.]—An executor had improperly invested money of his testator on a promissory note. On the executor's death, his executrix renewed the note to herself. She was ordered, upon motion, to pay the sum into court as money received by her, and lent out again. Boulter v. Broderip, 10 L. J., Ex. Eq. 93.

An executor and trustee who had lent trust money on unsurrendered copyholds, a deposit of a lease and a bond ordered on motion to pay the amount into court. Wyatt v. Sharratt, 3 Beav. 498.

Executors, having personal estate of the testator given to them by the will upon trust, to lay out on good and sufficient security, for an infant, to be paid on his coming of age, after a decree to account, and after notice by the next friend of the infant plaintiff, lending a part of such personal estate upon mortgage, ordered to pay the same into court; but the motion asking, in the alternative, that the executors might be ordered to replace the amount by so much stock, as the same would have purchased at the time of investment, was to that extent refused. Widdowson v. Duck, 2 Mer. 494; 16 R. R. 206.

Executor by schedule to answer acknowledging that he had received property and lent it on promissory note (which is an improper use, though at interest), ordered to pay money into court. Vigrass v. Binfield, 3 Madd. 62.

The former partners of a testator (who had retired before his death) were appointed his executors, with power to apply certain policy-moneys in their trade, provided they gave such security to the residuary legatees as W. might approve. W. refused to act; and the executors, without giving security, applied the policy-moneys in payment of a partnership debt, for which the testator had mortgaged them. They were directed to pay the amount into court as well as an admitted balance due to the testator from the partnership. Costeker v. Horrox, 3 Y. & C. 530; 3 Jur. 996.

(d) On stay of Action by Creditor.

Right of Creditor.]—On an application being made to stay a creditor's suit, because of a decree obtained in an administration suit, subsequently instituted by two of the executors against the third, as there was no evidence of the amount of assets received by the executors, and as it appeared that the creditor's case in the first depended on vouchers and documents in the hands of the executors, the court ordered the motion to stand over until the executors had put in their answer in that suit. Macrae v. Smith, 2 Kay & J. 411; 4 W. R. 472.

Semble, that a creditor whose suit in equity is stayed, as well as a creditor who is restrained from prosecuting an action at law, is entitled to have a discovery of assets possessed by the executors, and payment of the amount into court. Ib.

Whether an executor, upon obtaining an injunction to restrain a creditor from suing at law, is bound to pay into court the amount of assets in his hands, quære. Dawson v. Whalley, 10 L. J., Ch. 383.

(e) Under Statutory Powers.

The Trustee Act, 1893, repealed s. 32 of 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, the Trustee Relief Act, 1847, the Amendment Act of 1849, and the Trustee Relief Act (Ireland), 1848; and s. 42 of the Trustee Act, 1893, replaces the repealed enactments.

Under 36 Geo. 3, c. 52.]—Order made upon petition under the statute 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, for transferring into the hands of the accountant-general a stock legacy to the account of infant legatees. Watlington Will, In re, 1 W. R. 194.

An application for a transfer of consols, purchased by means of a legacy paid into court, under the statute 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, need not be by petition, but may be made by motion. Bennett, Ex parte, 19 L. J., Ch. 375; 15 Jur. 213.

Under the Trustee Relief Acts—In what cases—Costs.] — Payment into court by an executor of a legacy bequeathed to a married woman, not specifically appropriated, the husband and wife being abroad, and the husband requiring it to be paid under a power of attorney: —Held, that the executor had a right to pay it in, his costs of paying in to be out of the general estate; his costs of appearing on a petition to be paid out of the legacy. Jones, In re, 3 Drew. 679.

When there is a doubt to whom a legacy is payable, the executor should reserve a portion of the residue to meet the costs of proceedings in court. Birkett, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 846; 9 Ch. D. 576; 39 L. T. 418; 27 W. R. 164.

In such a case the better course is to take out an administration summons, waiving inquiries, and adjourn the case into court, or to agree upon a statement of facts in the nature of a special case. Ib.

If the executor does pay it in he will be left to take his costs out of the residuary estate, and will not have them out of the legacy. Ib.

Where a husband of a married woman mortgaged a legacy belonging to his wife, and which was charged upon land, with powers of distress and entry, and the mortgagee threatened to take proceedings at law to recover the legacy, upon a bill by the wife to have the legacy raised, the owner of the land charged held to be entitled to pay the money into court, and protect himself from being vexed by double proceedings. Duncombe v. Greenacre, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 987; 8 W. R. 657.

A married woman absolutely entitled to a legacy joined with her husband in calling on a trustee, in whose hands the fund was, to pay it to the husband; she repudiating any claim to a settlement, the trustee declined to pay, and paid the amount into court. Upon a petition by the husband and wife for payment of the fund to the husband, the wife consenting:—Held, that the trustee was justified in paying the fund into court, and should be allowed his costs of so doing, and of the petition. Swan, In re, 10 L. T. 334; 12 W. R. 738.

6. Receiver.

Pending Probate or Grant of Administration.] —A receiver will not be appointed over the personal estate of a testator, if his will has not been proved, or any steps taken in the Ecclesiastical Court for that purpose. Gore v. Gore, 1 Hog. 237.

Demurrer lies to bill, inter alia, for a receiver till letters of administration granted, where no reason is shewn why they cannot be immediately taken out. Jones v. Frost, 3 Madd. 1; Jac. 466.

Jurisdiction of a court for an account of personal estate and a receiver, pending a litigation for probate, though an administration, pendente lite, might be obtained in the Ecclesiastical Court. Atkinson v. Henshaw, 2 Ves. & B. 85. S. P., Ball v. Oliver, Id. 96.

The Court of Chancery will not interfere by appointing a receiver upon the mere ground that two wills are in controversy in the spiritual court; and no special case that the property is in danger and cannot be secured by administration pendente lite. Richards v. Chave, 12 Ves. 462. And see Knight v. Duplessis, 1 Ves. Sen. 324.

Whilst will is contesting in Ecclesiastical Court on the ground of insanity of testator, receiver appointed of the whole estate to pay in from time to time what he receives. Montgomery v. Clarke, 2 Atk. 379.

Where no probate or administration has been granted, it is of course to appoint a receiver, pending a bonâ fide litigation in the Ecclesiastical Court, to determine the right to probate or administration, unless a special case can be made for refusing such appointment. Rendall v. Rendall, 1 Hare, 152; 11 L. J., Ch. 93.

The fact that the litigation in the Ecclesiastical Court is on the question of which of two alleged wills shall be admitted to probate, and that the defendant in the suit in equity is named executor in both wills, is not a ground for refusing to appoint a receiver. Ib.

Where probate or administration has been granted by the Ecclesiastical Court, a receiver will not be appointed pending litigation to recall probate or grant of administration, unless a special case be made out for such appointment. Ib.

The institution of a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court for the purpose of recalling probate, is not a ground upon which alone this court will interfere to restrain the executor from receiving assets. Watkins v. Brent, 1 Myl. & C. 97; 7 Sim. 512; 5 L. J., Ch. 49. S. P., Rutherford v. Douglas, 1 Sim. & S. 111. Connor v. Connor, 15 Sim. 598; 16 L. J., Ch. 371; 11 Jur. 662, n. Newton v. Ricketts, 10 Beav. 525; 16 L. J., Ch. 372, n.; 11 Jur. 662. Whitworth v. Whyddon, 2 Macn. & G. 52; 2 H. & Tw. 445; 14 Jur. 142.

Where, however, the executor had agreed, through his proctor, that the validity of the testamentary paper, by which he was appointed, should be tried in the suit to recall probate; an order was made for an injunction and a receiver, and that order was affirmed on appeal. S. C.

Probate by one executor, enures to the co-executor. Although probate or letters of administration may have been granted, yet if a sufficient case is made for disputing their validity, and a suit has been commenced in the ecclesiastical court for the purpose of having them revoked, this court will protect the property of the deceased by granting an injunction and receiver, pending the litigation in the ecclesiastical court. S. C., 7 Sim. 512.

Receiver granted, at the instance of an executor, pending a suit in the ecclesiastical court, to have the probate annulled; the defendant, who was the party impeaching the will and setting up an intestacy, having by her own acts prevented the executor from getting in the assets. Marr v. Littlewood, 2 Myl. & C. 454.

Bill by one of the next of kin against the executors and one of the legatees in a will fraudulently obtained by them from a person of unsound mind, praying for an account, and for an injunction and receiver pending a suit in the ecclesiastical court to recall the probate:—Held, maintainable in this court, and demurrer for want of equity overruled. Dimes v. Steinberg, 2 Sm. & G. 75.

Although the court will appoint a receiver on account of the pendency of a suit in the ecclesiastical court respecting the validity of a will, it will not, on that account alone, order the person named as executor to pay into court money in his hands belonging to the deceased's estates. Reed v. Harris, 7 Sim. 639; 5 L. J., Ch. 126.

Pending a contest between the plaintiff and defendant in the ecclesiastical court as to the validity of two wills made by the testatrix, the plaintiff filed a bill for a receiver of the testatrix's estate, and to set aside an assignment made by her to the defendant. The court declined to appoint a receiver of the property comprised in the assignment, that property being claimed by the defendant independently of either will. Jones v. Goodrich, 10 Sim. 327; 9 L. J., Ch. 120; 4 Jur. 98.

Pending a litigation as to administration in the ecclesiastical court a bill was filed praying a receiver, and that upon the administrator being appointed and brought before the court, the rights of the parties might be declared, and the estate administered; a demurrer to the latter part of the relief was allowed. De Feuchères v. Dawes, 5 Beav. 110; 11 L. J., Ch. 394; 6 Jur. 594.

—— Since 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77.]—The Court of Chancery may appoint a receiver of personal estate pending the grant of probate, delayed on account of a caveat having been entered where a suit in the probate court has not been actually constituted. Parkin v. Seddons, 42 L. J., Ch. 470; L. R. 16 Eq. 34; 28 L. T. 353; 21 W. R. 538.

The court will also, under the same circumstances, appoint a receiver pendente lite of the rents of real estate, if neither the devisee nor the heir-at-law is in actual possession. Ib.

The defendant as heir-at-law of a testator entered a caveat against the grant of probate of the will, and also forcibly took possession of part of the testator's real estate. No further proceedings were taken in the probate court beyond entering the caveat. Upon a motion by the executor of the will for a receiver of all the real and personal estate:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction to appoint a receiver of the real estate (except that part in the possession of the defendant) as well as of the personal estate. Ib.

To a bill for the administration of real and personal estate, and for the appointment of a receiver and a new trustee, a plea in bar, by the alleged executors, that they had been prevented proving by the plaintiff's entering a caveat in the court of probate, was overruled. Tempest v. Camoys (Lord), 35 Beav. 201; 14 L. T. 8; 14 W. R. 326.

When the result of a suit in the Probate Court to set aside a will had been, in effect, to put the property comprised therein in such a position that no person had a legal right to deal with it, and litigation was impending in the same court, as to who ought to be the legal personal representative of the testator, a caveat having been also entered:—Held, that although there was no litigation actually pending, yet, under the circumstances, the court had jurisdiction to make an order for the appointment of a receiver. Grimston v. Turner, 22 L. T. 292; 18 W. R. 724.

When a will had been proved and afterwards impeached and declared void, the executors condemned in costs, and a suit instituted for a receiver pendente lite which had failed, a motion to make the executors pay the costs of the suit for the receiver was refused. S. C., 22 L. T. 646; 18 W. R. 747.

The appointment of a receiver in such a suit is a matter entirely within the discretion of the court. S. C., 18 W. R. 781.

The Court of Chancery has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver in a simple case of contested heirship. Hitchen v. Birks, L. R. 10 Eq. 471; 23 L. T. 335; 18 W. R. 1015.

When administration has been granted the court will not exercise its jurisdiction to appoint a receiver of personal estate, unless a special case is made—a rule which will be strictly enforced, since the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, enables the Court of Probate to appoint an administrator pendente lite, with powers similar to those of a receiver. Ib.

—— Application by Co-executor in Probate Division.]—Where an executor had, before probate, and without the assent of his co-executor, intermeddled in the estate and made preparations to dispose of a portion of it, the court gave leave to the co-executor to issue a writ against him claiming an injunction to restrain him from dealing with the estate before probate, and praying for the appointment of a receiver. Moore, In goods of, 57 L. J., P. 37; 13 P. D. 36; 58 L. T. 386; 36 W. R. 576; 52 J. P. 200.

—— Of Intestate's Business.]—Where there is no representative of an intestate's estate, in a suit to restrain interference with the business of the intestate, the court will grant an injunction and receiver on a sufficient case made. Steer v. Steer, 11 L. T. 502; 13 W. R. 225.

A manager and receiver appointed, on a motion ex parte, to carry on the business of an intestate before grant of letters of administration has been obtained. Blackett v. Blackett, 24 L. T. 276; 19 W. R. 559.

Receiver appointed—Practice after Probate or Administration.]—A receiver having been appointed, the executor being out of the jurisdiction, on administration afterwards taken out, it was referred to the master to reconsider the appointment of receiver, regard being had to the administration granted. Faith v. Dunbar, Coop. 200.

Where a suit is instituted in equity merely for the protection of the assets, pending a litigation for probate in the Ecclesiastical Court, the practice of the court is, upon the grant of probate, to discharge the receiver, stay all proceedings in the suit, and dispose of the costs. Barton v. Rock, 22 Beav. 376.

In such a suit, for which there was not a reasonable foundation, the court ordered the plaintiff to pay all the costs, though a receiver had been appointed. Ib.

When, after proceedings had been commenced in the Probate Court to test the validity of a will, a bill was filed for a receiver of the testator's personal estate, and a motion made for a receiver, which motion stood over, and during its pendency the Court of Probate appointed an administrator pendente lite:—Held, that it was the intention of the legislature to extend the powers of an administrator pendente lite appointed by the Court of Probate, and such administrator having the same power of protecting the property as a receiver, the court refused to appoint a receiver. Veret v. Duprez, 37 L. J., Ch. 552; L. R. 6 Eq. 329; 18 L. T. 501; 16 W. R. 750.

On Insolvency of Executor or Administrator.]—Court will appoint receiver of intestate's personal estate, if administrator is sworn to be insolvent, before his answer is come in, although fact of his being abroad (stated in plaintiff's affidavit) be denied. Scott v. Becher, 4 Price, 346; 18 R. R. 722.

Creditor filing a bill against executor cannot make a debtor of the debtor a party; in case of insolvency of the executor, the court will on petition appoint a receiver, and compel the executor to allow his name to be used in bringing actions. Utterson v. Mair, 2 Ves. J. 95; 4 Bro. C. C. 270. See also Rex v. Simpson, 1 W. Bl. 458.

An executor and trustee becoming a bankrupt, a receiver was appointed, though the testator knew, after he had made his will, that a commission had been issued. Langley v. Hawk, 5 Madd. 46. But see Gladdon v. Stoneman, 1 Madd. 143, n.; Stainton v. Carron Co., 18 Beav. 146; 23 L. J., Ch. 299; 18 Jur. 137; 2 Eq. R. 466; 2 W. R. 176.

The circumstance that the party who has the administration of the testator's real and personal effects, is an uncertificated bankrupt, and was not appointed to his office by the testator is not a sufficient reason to induce the court to appoint a receiver before answer, where several parties interested decline to join in the application. Smith v. Smith, 2 Y. & C. 353; 6 L. J., Ex. Eq. 70.

An action was commenced in the court of one of the vice-chancellors for the administration of the estate of a testator, against the administrator with the will annexed. The administrator, being interested in that capacity in the estate of another testator, commenced an action for the administration of his estate in the court of a different vice-chancellor, and then became bankrupt. The plaintiff in the first suit moved in that suit that a receiver of the estate might be appointed, and that the plaintiff might be permitted to prosecute the second action in the name of the administrator:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the order asked for, and that it was properly made in the court to which the first action was attached. In such a case it is not the modern practice to permit the receiver to carry on an action in the name of a bankrupt executor or administrator. Hopkins, In re, Dowd v. Hawtin, 19 Ch. D. 61; 30 W. R. 601.

After an order had been made on summons for the administration of the real and personal estate of a testatrix, the sole executor and trustee became bankrupt:—Held, that a receiver ought to be appointed, and that the fact of the assignees not being before the court was not a sufficient reason for refusing to appoint one. Johnson, In re, Steele v. Cobham, L. R. 1 Ch. 325; 14 L. T. 242; 14 W. R. 493.

The court has jurisdiction to restrain an executor who has become bankrupt since the death of the testator from further acting as executor; and, if there is a co-executor willing to continue to act, will not require the appointment of a receiver. Bowen v. Phillips, 66 L. J., Ch. 165; [1897] 1 Ch. 174; 75 L. T. 628; 45 W. R. 286.

On Ground of Poverty of Executor.]—Receiver not appointed on mere ground of executor being poor. Howard v. Papera, 1 Madd. 142. S. P., Hathornthwaite v. Russel, 2 Atk. 126. Anon., 12 Ves. 4.

—— Of Husband of Executrix.]—An executor is under no obligation to give security, nor is it usual for a court of equity to compel him to give any security, unless upon affidavit of insolvency or misconduct. But where an executrix, appointed guardian of three children by her first husband, marries a second husband in necessitous circumstances, the court will appoint a receiver. Dillon v. Mountcashel (Lady), 4 Bro. P. C. 312.

Executor out of Jurisdiction.]—Where a sole executor was abroad, and the beneficiaries under the will were unable to obtain an account from the person left in control of the property during the executor's absence, the court sanctioned the appointment of a receiver. Dickens v. Harris, 14 L. T. 98. S. P., Westby v. Westby, 2 Coop. t. Cott. 210. Smith v. Smith, 10 Hare (App.) 71. And see Taylor v. Allen, 2 Atk. 213, where husband of executrix was abroad, and order made.

Creditor's Administration Action—Executor's Right of Retainer.]—The court will not interfere with an executor's right of retainer by appointing a receiver at the instance of the plaintiff in a creditor's administration action merely because the executor will probably exercise his right to the prejudice of the general body of creditors, nor unless it is shewn that the assets are being wasted. Wells, In re, Molony v. Brooke, 59 L. J., Ch. 810; 45 Ch. D. 569; 63 L. T. 521; 39 W. R. 139.

Where Estate in Danger by Misconduct of Executor or Administrator.]—Where it is probable there will be a misapplication and wasting of the effects of an intestate, by a limited administrator, who is only trustee for an infant, the court will appoint a receiver. Havers v. Havers, Barnard. 23.

Receiver appointed before answer upon affidavit of misapplication and danger to the property in the hands of an executor, the co-executors consenting to the order. A strong case necessary against an executor. Middleton v. Dodswell, 13 Ves. 266. See also Anon., 12 Ves. 4.

A receiver appointed where the trustees and executors had neglected to get in the testator's estate, and had thereby deprived infant legatees of their maintenance, and in consequence of non-performance of duty and general misconduct. Richards v. Perkins, 3 Y. & C. 299; 8 L. J., Ex. Eq. 57; 3 Jur. 168.

An order for injunction and receiver as against an administratrix of a deceased intestate, was granted on motion, after the common decretal order made upon summons for taking the simple administration accounts, a case of misconduct and wilful default against the administratrix having come to light in the course of the proceeding under such decretal order. Brooker v. Brooker, 3 Sm. & Giff. 475; 26 L. J., Ch. 411; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 381; 5 W. R. 382.

A testator devised all his real and personal estate to his daughter and her husband for life, "with reversion at their deaths to his granddaughter S. L. R.," and he appointed the husband of his daughter sole executor. On a bill by S. L. R. against the executor, alleging irreparable waste and injury to the testator's estate, some parts of the testator's personal estate having been taken in execution by the sheriff under a judgment, recovered against the executor for his own private debt, and a threatened immediate sale thereunder: S. L. R. was appointed receiver instanter on waiving all salary, and giving the usual security. Rawson v. Rawson, 11 L. T. 595.

In a suit for the administration of an insolvent estate instituted by a creditor bonâ fide for the protection of the property, the court appointed a receiver, although a receiver of the same estate had been previously appointed in an administration suit in the Lord Mayor's Court instituted by a creditor likely to act in concert with the personal representative, who was alleged to be misappropriating the assets. Nothard v. Proctor, 24 W. R. 34.

A receiver appointed where the executrix, being in possession of certain leasehold and other personal estate, had allowed ground rents to be in arrear, although the plaintiff had already obtained an order equivalent to a decree for sale and administration. Bywater's Estate, In re, Sargent v. Johnson, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 227.

A person holding by the warrant of her Majesty the office of judicial assessor to the native princes, and being also chief justice of her Majesty's dominions on the Gold Coast of Africa, took possession of the personal effects of a British subject who died intestate, domiciled at Cape Coast Town, in Africa, and claimed to be the official administrator of these assets by usage, in his capacity of judicial assessor, and as such to be entitled to 7½ per cent. commission upon them. He afterwards transmitted part of the assets to this country to be sold, and the proceeds carried to the account of the intestate's estate, and came to this country himself on leave of absence for a short time. The father of the intestate, being his sole next of kin, obtained letters of administration to him in England, and filed his bill against the judicial assessor for administration and for a receiver. And upon motion for a receiver in the suit:—Held, that the Court of Chancery had jurisdiction to sustain the application, as the assets and the judicial assessor were both in this country, whatever might be the nature of his authority; and that, there being the danger of his taking the assets again out of the jurisdiction, although he might be the proper representative of the intestate in Africa, a good case was made for the appointment of a receiver. Hervey v. Fitzpatrick, Kay, 421; 23 L. J., Ch. 564; 2 Eq. R. 444; 2 W. R. 338, 365.

Other Circumstances.]—A receiver, to collect personal estate, appointed by decree, to be continued until the further order of the court. Raymond v. Franks, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 24.

Receiver appointed, on application of executor, to collect assets in India; but receiver to find sureties resident in England. Cockburn v. Raphael, 2 Sim. & S. 453; 25 R. R. 244.

On a claim filed by one of two administrators, who were respectively beneficially interested in the property, for an account of the rents of certain leaseholds received by the other administrator, and the appointment of a receiver, the court refused the appointment of a receiver, but ordered the account. Scurrah v. Scurrah, 14 Jur. 874.

Secus, where the claim was by a specific legatee against executor. Lord v. Purchase, 17 Beav. 173.

Pending a question whether estates devised were subject to a bond executed by the testator for making a settlement on his wife and children, the court refused to appoint a receiver, the devisees in trust consenting to pay the rents into court. Prebble v. Boghurst, 1 Swan. 313; Wils. Ch. 161.

A. and B. were trustees and executors. A. paid more than he received, in the expectation of repayment out of a mortgage forming part of the assets. A. died, and B. refused to act. In an administration suit, a receiver of the mortgage was appointed against the representatives of A. Palmer v. Wright, 10 Beav. 234.

Where two members of a partnership obtained a renewed lease of the partnership premises, and the administratrix of a deceased partner shewed a primâ facie title to participate in the benefit of it, the court protected the property until the rights of the parties could be decided by appointing a receiver. Clegg v. Fishwick, 1 H. & Tw. 390; 1 Macn. & G. 294; 19 L. J., Ch. 49; 13 Jur. 993.

Where it was doubtful whether a power of sale of realty, given to an executrix by the will, vested under a codicil in a co-executor thereby nominated, the court appointed a receiver of the rents and profits of the real estate. Yetts v. Palmer, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 954; 8 L. T. 528; 11 W. R. 765; 2 N. R. 255.

Testator bequeathed the residue of his real and personal estate to his widow, her heirs, executors, and administrators, "having a perfect confidence she will act up to those views which I have communicated to her, in the ultimate disposal of my property after her decease." The testator's widow died intestate. The bill alleged that the testator had bequeathed the residue of his property to his wife, on the faith of a promise that she would dispose of his property in favour of the plaintiffs, who were natural children of the testator. The court, on motion, supported by affidavits verifying the allegation, granted a receiver of the real estates against the heir and second husband of the widow. Podmore v. Gunning, 5 Sim. 485.

Receiver appointed in a suit by a specialty creditor, the assets being admitted, by the answer, to be insufficient to meet the demand. Chalk v. Raine, 7 Hare, 393 ; 18 L. J., Ch. 472 ; 13 Jur. 981.

Motion in behalf of infant, to restrain defendant executor from receiving more of personal estate, and rents and profits of real estate, and for receiver refused ; pr. ami ordered to pay costs of motion. Buckley v. Buckeridge, Dick. 395.

In a creditor's action for administration against an executrix, a decree has been made and a summons taken out for a receiver; but pending the summons, the sole defendant died. The court, on the application of the plaintiff, appointed an interim receiver, whose powers were to extend for ten days after the appointment of an administrator de bonis non, the plaintiff undertaking to use all possible speed in obtaining the appointment of such administrator and to accept short notice of motion to discharge the receiver. Parker, In re, Cash v. Parker, 48 L. J., Ch. 691 ; 12 Ch. D. 293.

Application, How made.]—In an administration suit, where an order had been made that the trustees of the estate of the testator in the cause should continue to receive the rents and profits and proceeds of the estate, and keep down the annuities bequeathed by his will, and from time to time pass their accounts in chambers, and pay in their balances, an order appointing a receiver was made in chambers by a vice-chancellor personally, upon the application of some of the beneficiaries, upon the ground that the trustees had made default in passing their accounts. The trustees and other parties opposed the application :—Held, that this was a matter connected with the management of property within the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, s. 26, and that the judge has jurisdiction to make the order in chambers. Booth v. Coulton, 18 L. T. 384 ; 16 W. R. 683.

Letters of administration were granted to the widow of B., who thereupon proceeded to administer the estate. Subsequently, upon a summons taken out by one of the next of kin against her, an order was obtained at chambers for the administration of B.'s estate. A notice of motion was afterwards served by the plaintiff in a suit by summons for the appointment of a receiver, and for an injunction against the administratrix. Upon the motion coming on to be heard, it was objected on behalf of another of the next of kin (the plaintiff in a suit by bill), that a receiver and an injunction could not be appointed and granted without a bill having been filed ; but held that the court had power to make an order for the appointment of a receiver, and to grant an injunction after a decretal order made upon an administration summons at chambers. Brooker v. Brooker, 3 Sm. & Giff. 475 ; 26 L. J., Ch. 411 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 381 ; 5 W. R. 382.

See also Bywater's Estate, In re, Sargent v. Johnson, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 227.

In a creditors' action for the administration of a testator's real and personal estate, which was commenced in a district registry, it was held, upon motion for judgment, that the court had jurisdiction to appoint a receiver. Capper, In re, Robertson v. Capper, 26 W. R. 434.

Where there were two suits for administration, and a motion for a receiver in each suit came on upon the same day, the receiver was appointed in both suits, and the court gave the carriage of the order to the plaintiffs by whom the first notice of motion for the receiver had been given. Hart v. Tulk, 6 Hare, 611 ; 18 L. J., Ch. 162.

Appointment of—At what Stage.]—In an administration action, commenced by originating summons, a receiver may (in a proper case) be appointed immediately after the service of the summons and before any order for administration has been made. Francke, In re, Drake v. Francke, 57 L. J., Ch. 437 ; 58 L. T. 305.

An administrator or executor may prefer one creditor to another, and there is no equity which entitles the court to interfere except after judgment for administration. Therefore the plaintiff in a creditor's action for administration is not entitled to interim relief against the executor or administrator unless a case is shewn of the assets being wasted. Harris, In re, Harris v. Harris, 56 L. J., Ch. 754 ; 56 L. T. 507 ; 35 W. R. 710.

Security by.]—A receiver appointed to collect in assets, and to bring actions in the name of an executrix, must give security to indemnify the executrix on account of such actions. Taylor v. Allen, 2 Atk. 213.

Account.]—The court has no jurisdiction to order, in a summary way, the executor of a deceased receiver to bring in and pass his testator's accounts, and pay the balance to be found due out of the assets. Jenkins v. Briant, 7 Sim. 171 ; 4 L. J., Ch. 2.

The court has no jurisdiction to order the personal representative of a receiver to account for the receiver's receipts without a bill being filed. Ludgater v. Channel, 15 Sim. 479 ; 16 L. J., Ch. 248 ; 11 Jur. 273.

The personal representative of a receiver having submitted to account for the rents received by the receiver in his lifetime, the court has jurisdiction to order him to pay in the sum appearing to be due on foot of the account. Form of the order in such case. Magan v. Fallon, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 490.

In 1812 the executors of a receiver applied to pass his accounts and pay in the balance : this was ordered, but payment was not made. In 1841 they were ordered to pay in the balance without interest, and it was held that they could not object the want of assets. Gurden v. Badcock, 6 Beav. 157 ; 12 L. J., Ch. 62.

Receiver not liable by the failure of the testator's banker at Bristol, with whom the receiver, when going to London to pass his accounts, deposited the money, intending to draw for it. Rowth v. Howell, 3 Ves. 566.

—— Interest.]—Executors of a receiver admitting assets, bound to answer what was upon a subsequent inquiry found due for interest. Hovey v. Blakeman, 4 Ves. 606.

Admission of assets to answer rents by the executor of a receiver, makes him liable to interest if made. Foster v. Foster, 2 Bro. C. C. 616.

Where the plaintiff, a creditor in an administration suit, obtained an order for a receiver in 1822, but it was not made absolute or acted upon until 1834, the court directed an inquiry to ascertain by whose default the receiver was not appointed; and directed, that if it should appear that it was by the plaintiff's default that the receiver was not appointed, and if he might, through such appointment, have kept down the interest on his own demand, he should not now be entitled to so much of the interest on his debt as would have been paid by the receiver, had he been appointed as early as he might have been. Newby v. Drew, 1 Jo. & Lat. 445; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 49.

—— On Application of Creditor.]—A creditor who has proved his debt under a decree, is entitled to apply to the master for a summons on the receiver to account. Locke v. Ashe, 1 Hog. 143.

Salary.]—Where the object of a consent is to appoint a receiver over outstanding personal estate, the amount of the salary to be allowed should be fixed by the consent. Burke v. Burke, Fl. & K. 89.

A testator appointed as trustee and executor a person who for many years had been the paid receiver and manager of his estate, the tenant for life being an infant; the court continued the executor as receiver at a salary. Newport v. Bury, 23 Beav. 30.

Other Matters.]—A receiver had been appointed of the testator's estate, part of which was in India; and, it having become necessary to have it remitted:—Held, that the proper course was to refer it to the master, to inquire what would be the most advantageous course for receiving and remitting it to England. Keys v. Keys, 1 Beav. 425.

Where a receiver had been appointed to get in the outstanding estate of the testator in the cause, but one of the principal debtors to the estate was willing to pay the money due from him into court, the court, on the petition of some of the defendants, ordered that the debtor should be at liberty so to do, in order that the receiver's poundage might be saved to the estate. Haigh v. Grattan, 1 Beav. 201; 8 L. J., Ch. 249.

Where a receiver had been appointed in a creditors' suit, and petitioned to be discharged after having passed his accounts; the defendant not having been latterly personally served with the warrants, after he had been so by courtesy of the plaintiff's solicitor, allowed to go and state his objection before the master. Oldfield v. Cobbett, 2 Beav. 444.

Under a decree in an administration suit, certain parties only were allowed to attend before the master; the master approved of some suits being instituted by the receiver, who was to be indemnified out of the estate, the funds appearing by affidavit to be abundantly ample; the court ordered the institution of the suits and the payment of costs out of the fund standing to the general credit of the cause, upon service on those only whom the master had authorised to attend him on the reference. Lockhart v. Hardy, 6 Beav. 267; 13 L. J., Ch. 50.

The plaintiff and the defendant were co-executors. The plaintiff being indebted to his testator in the sum of 300*l.* upon bond, filed his bill against the co-executor, for an account and distribution of his testator's estate, and prayed for a receiver; upon the answer coming in, the plaintiff found that there was no outstanding estate, and that the debt of 300*l.* due from him alone remained unapplied. The plaintiff allowed matters to rest as they were, but the defendant gave a notice of motion, asking for the appointment of a receiver, as prayed by the bill; but the application was refused without costs. Robinson v. Hadley, 11 Beav. 614; 18 L. J., Ch. 428.

A receiver who had been appointed in an administration action and ordered to pay to a legatee a sum quarterly out of moneys in or coming to his hands, was, on the application of creditors who had in an action in a common law division obtained a judgment against the legatee, ordered, under Rules of Court, 1875, Ord. XLV., to pay them their debt and costs. Cowans' Estate, In re, Rapier v. Wright, 49 L. J., Ch. 402; 14 Ch. D. 638; 42 L. T. 866; 28 W. R. 827.

A father, who died in 1844, devised to trustees a moiety of his real estate upon trusts for his son for life, with remainder to his grandson for life and his sons in tail, and to pay all his debts and sums of money as he should owe at the time of his death, whether by way of mortgage, bond, or otherwise, including 8,000*l.* charged upon the estates; and he directed that the rents and profits of the estates should be received by the trustees and be applied in liquidation of the debts until the whole, including the 8,000*l.*, should be paid; that no person to whom any estate for life or in tail was limited should be entitled to the rents and profits until the estates were totally disincumbered and cleared of debts; and that the trustees should invest the moneys which might come to their hands upon good security at interest until the same should be applied in payments under the trusts. A receiver had been appointed. The whole of the debts had been paid excepting the 8,000*l.*, by sales of parts of the estates under orders of the court, and there was an accumulation fund in court sufficient to pay the 8,000*l.*:—Held, that the receiver must be discharged, and the tenant for life be let into possession of the estates. Tewart v. Lawson, 43 L. J., Ch. 673; L. R. 18 Eq. 490; 22 W. R. 822.

7. Injunction, Dismissal and Stay of Proceedings.

To restrain Proceedings of Creditors at Law—Prior to Judicature Acts—On whose Application.]—Where creditors are proceeding at law after a decree, the executor should move to restrain them, or he may be responsible. Clarke v. Ormonde (Earl), Jac. 122; 23 R. R. 8, 143.

Creditors obtaining judgment against the executor after notice of a decree, and buying in the testator's property, would be obliged to restore it, semble. Ib.

After a decree for the administration of a testator's estate, creditors suing at law restrained, on the application of a legatee. Ib.

After a decree for the administration of the assets in a creditors' suit against an executor, the plaintiff, as well as the defendant, may move to restrain a creditor from proceeding at law. Robson v. Cameron, 3 L. J. (o.s.), Ch. 135. S. P., Dyer v. Kearsley, 2 Mer. 482, n.; Cox v. King, Ib., 483, n.

—— Prior to Decree.]—This court will not, before a decree, interpose in favour of an executor, against a creditor proceeding at law. Rush v. Higgs, 4 Ves. 638.

Where a creditor of a testator obtained judgment against an executor de bonis testatoris, and a decree was immediately afterwards made in a creditors' suit:—Held, that the executor was not entitled to an injunction to stay execution on the judgment. Vincent v. Godson, 3 De G. & S. 717.

Where, before a decree was made for the administration of assets, a creditor of a testator had obtained judgment against the executor de bonis testatoris, and a decree in an administration suit was afterwards obtained by another creditor, the court refused to restrain the creditor at law from issuing execution. Roberts, In re, Fowler v. Roberts, 2 Giff. 226; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1189; 8 W. R. 492.

Where a judgment creditor had, before the date of the decree, obtained a garnishee order nisi under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 61, a motion for an injunction to restrain him from proceeding further at law was refused, with costs. Ib.

Although an order for preliminary accounts and inquiries had been obtained in a suit for administering a testator's estate, yet the court will not, on that account, restrain a creditor from suing the executors at law. The order, however, does not prevent the parties from having the cause heard before the master has made his report. Teague v. Richards, 11 Sim. 46; 9 L. J., Ch. 293.

A bill-holder brought an action against the executors of the drawer, and obtained judgment under the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 67, before the will was proved by them, they not having applied for leave to defend. Execution was levied, but before any sale (the executors having in the meantime proved the will) a creditor obtained on summons an administration decree in equity:—Held, that the plaintiff in the administration suit was not entitled to an injunction to restrain further proceedings under the execution. Marriage v. Skiggs, Skiggs, In re, 4 De G. & J. 4; 28 L. J., Ch. 433; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 325; 7 W. R. 320.

Where a plaintiff commenced proceedings at law against the defendant as administratrix, for a debt due to him from the testator, and pending the action also instituted a creditors' suit in chancery for the same purpose; and where the defendant, before answering the plaintiff's bill, entered an appearance in the action, and obtained an order for its dismissal on payment of the debt and costs at law, and then offered terms as to the costs in chancery, which were not accepted; on a motion by the defendant to dismiss the plaintiff's bill:—Held, that on the payment of the costs offered by the defendant all the proceedings in the suit were to be stayed. Deane v. Hamber, 13 L. T. 522; 14 W. R. 167.

—— After Decree.] — Where creditor after decree (in obedience to which executor pays away assets) obtains judgment to which decree is not pleadable, equity will relieve executor. Bank of England v. Morice, 2 Bro. P. C. 465. Affirming Cas. t. Talb. 218.

After a decree in an administration suit, and after the court had taken the assets out of the hands of the executors, a creditor was restrained from further proceedings at law, although the executors had themselves given a plea of confession for judgment. But the creditor was allowed his costs. Quin v. Bagnall, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 110.

Where an estate is administered, and the residue is paid over under an order of the court, the executor will be protected, and a creditor will not afterwards be allowed to sue him at law. Dean v. Allen, 20 Beav. 1.

Creditor proceeding against executor at law, after notice of decree to account, is so far committing contempt, that upon application for injunction court will refuse him costs of further proceedings at law, and costs of application. Curre v. Bowyer, 3 Madd. 456. S. P., Mocher v. Reed, 1 Ball & B. 318. Wilson v. Wetherherd, 2 Mer. 506. Contra as to the costs, Turner v. Connor, 15 Sim. 630.

Upon motion for injunction to stay a creditor's action on ground of notice of decree in administration suit:— Motion granted, and creditor's costs taxed up to the time of notice. McMullen v. Acres, 1 W. R. 77.

Upon a motion by defendant administrator, after decree in a creditors' suit, to restrain creditors from proceeding in an action at law; the administrator having, by his answer in the cause, stated what assets had come to his hands, and having given the plaintiffs at law notice, after they had served their writ to come in and prove their demands under the decree:—Held, the defendant was entitled to the injunction, and that the plaintiffs at law were not entitled to any costs incurred by them after the notice. Pepper v. Foster, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 384.

Held, also, that the fund being deficient, the payment of the costs was not a condition precedent to granting the injunction. Ib.

If the answer did not contain a sufficiently full statement of the assets received, the court would allow the motion to stand over until the assets were accounted for. Ib.

Effect of a decree against administrator, entitling him to an injunction against the suit of a creditor, qualified by requiring an account of the assets either by the answer or affidavit. Gilpin v. Southampton (Lord), 18 Ves. 469.

In a suit for administration of the estate of a deceased debtor, the court will not grant an injunction to restrain a creditor from proceeding against the executors of the debtor at law, unless they admit assets or make an affidavit as to what money they have in their hands. Lawton v. Lawton, 8 W. R. 458.

When an administratrix of an intestate is sued by a creditor, as administratrix, she may obtain an order for taking the accounts, and then for an injunction to restrain such action, pending the taking of such accounts under 23 & 24 Vict. c 38, s. 14, she undertaking to be answerable in damages, and the affidavit of her solicitor is sufficient. Cole, In re, 17 L. T. 494.

Principles on which a creditor is restrained from proceeding after a decree for administration. Pennell v. Roy, 3 De G. M. & G. 126; 22 L. J., Ch. 409; 17 Jur. 247; 1 W. R. 237.

After the common decree in a creditors' suit, the executor, not denying that he has assets, nor disputing the debt, cannot obtain an injunction to restrain an action by a creditor of the estate against him, commenced before the suit, but not proceeded with since notice of the decree, except upon the terms of paying the costs at law, and also of the motion for the injunction. Cole v. Burgess, Kay (App.), i.

After the usual decree has been obtained in a creditors' suit, this court will stay all further proceedings in an action by a creditor against the executor, upon payment to the creditor of his costs of the action up to the time when he had first notice of the decree, although the executor may have pleaded plene administravit, and issue may have been joined on such plea. Vernon v. Thellusson, 1 Ph. 466; 14 L. J., Ch. 83; 9 Jur. 145; 7 Ib., 503.

To an action by a creditor the executors pleaded non-assumpsit and set-off, and a plene administravit præter, and the verdict was against him on all these pleas; a decree for administration of the estate having been pronounced pending the action, an injunction was granted against the creditor on payment of his costs at law. Lord v. Wormleighton, Jac. 148; 23 R. R. 14, 146.

An executor, who, in an action at law by a creditor of the testator, has pleaded according to the truth of the case, is, when the assets are taken from him, and administered in equity, entitled to the protection of the court against any personal liability in respect of such plea. Gaunt v. Taylor, 2 Hare, 413.

—— After Appointment of Receiver.]—Pendency of creditors' suit, in which a receiver has been appointed, is cause against allowing a puisne judgment creditor to proceed at law after death of conusor. Anon., 1 Hog. 69.

A judgment creditor, not a party, will not be allowed to proceed at law, if a receiver has been appointed in a creditors' suit, and a prior incumbrancer is a party. Thackaberry v. Christian, 1 Hog. 109.

—— After Injunction against Executors.]—Where an action is brought against executors, who are restrained by an injunction from disposing of their testator's effects, and they resist the claim, the court will not stay proceedings, although, if a judgment had been signed, it might stay execution. Davis v. Salter, 1 D. P. C. 561; 2 C. & J. 466.

—— In Respect of what Matters.] — An executor pleads he has no assets ultra 100*l.* to three several actions. Judgment is had in each for 100*l.*, upon which he brings his bill and moves for an injunction which is denied. Anon., 1 Vern. 119.

An action at law by a creditor against an administrator; defendant, by mistake of his attorney, pleads a false plea, and verdict for the plaintiff; though merits never tried, yet equity will not relieve. Stephenson v. Wilson, 2 Vern. 325.

After a lapse of six or seven years, equity will not restrain by injunction a creditor of an executor from taking in execution the goods of a testator for the executor's own debt. Ray v. Ray, G. Coop. 264; 14 R. R. 255.

An attorney having delivered up deeds to an executor, which he was not obliged to do till his bill was paid, and these deeds being of great use to the executor in several suits which were then carrying on; this is a sufficient consideration to make the executor liable to the attorney's whole demand, whether there be assets or not. Order of the exchequer, refusing an injunction to stay the attorney's proceedings on a judgment at law, affirmed. Hamilton (Duke) v. Incledon, 4 Bro. P. C. 4.

Executor relieved after a verdict at law had against him upon a plene administravit, and the verdict was had on producing the executor's own letter confessing a mortgage made to the testator for 300*l.*, the executor proving in equity that his mortgage appeared afterwards to be worth nothing, and that there were two prior mortgages upon the same estate. Robinson v. Bell, 2 Vern. 146.

In debt against an executor for 700*l.*, executor pleads ne unques executor, and, on proving at the trial that a chimney back or some other slight thing came to the defendant's hand, plaintiff had a verdict; but equity relieved against the verdict. So in another case, upon the like plea of ne unques executor, plaintiff proved the defendant took money for a pot of ale sold by the testator in his lifetime and equity relieved. Ib.

An administratrix having an equitable demand against the personal estate of her intestate, the court will enjoin the next of kin from proceeding in the spiritual court, to compel a distribution; but they may proceed to compel the administratrix to exhibit an inventory. Backhouse v. Hunter, 1 Cox, 342.

Wherever one creditor or legatee files a bill, and there is a decree to account, all other persons whose rights can be adjusted in the master's office, are restrained from proceeding at law; but the demand of the person restrained must be definite, as upon a bill or note, or services ascertained, and the order restraining must give him a mode of relief here. Grogan v. Grogan, 2 Moll. 334.

After a decree to account, in a suit for the administration of assets, a judgment creditor of the testator, who had notice of the decree, sued out a scire facias against the executor, and obtained judgment by default, and issued a fieri facias de bonis testatoris. The court on the application of the executor, restrained the creditor from proceeding on the fieri facias, and gave the costs of the motion against him. The cases on the subject reviewed and considered. Belmore v. Belmore, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 493.

If a cause for the administration of assets has been heard for further directions, and the executors have paid their balances into court, an injunction will be granted to restrain an action against the executors for breaches of covenant in a lease granted to the testator, and the master will be directed to ascertain the damages. Sutton v. Mashiter, 2 Sim. 513.

A court of equity restrains a creditor from enforcing his legal rights against the estate of his deceased debtor, only upon the principle that the creditor is enabled to bring into equity, with some specified exceptions, all his legal rights; and that the validity of his debt must be determined in equity upon the same principle as at law; and the circumstance that the creditor is also the plaintiff in the cause is not material as to the mode of determining the validity of such debt. Whitaker v. Wright, 2 Hare, 310; 12 L. J., Ch. 241; 7 Jur. 320.

—— Where Creditors entitled to Judgment de bonis propriis.]—Motion on behalf of a defendant for an injunction against a party's proceeding at law upon a verdict which would entitle him to a judgment de bonis propriis against an executor, refused; for his judgment would be of no service to him if he were delayed by a suit here until it could be ascertained whether there are assets of the testator to answer his demands, which might not be till after all chance of recovery against the executor de bonis propriis is entirely gone. Terrewest v. Featherby, 2 Mer. 480. And see Brooke v. Skinner, 2 Mer. 481 (n.), which was the case of a similar application; and the Lord Chancellor said that if the plaintiff at law recovered a judgment de bonis testatoris, he would not suffer execution to be taken out; but if he recovered de bonis propriis, he could not restrain the execution. Dyer v. Kearsley, 2 Mer. 482 (n.), where plaintiff had obtained the usual decree in a creditors' suit for an account; an action being then commenced against the executors by another creditor, to which they had obtained time to plead, and after the decree suffered judgment by default, plaintiff in equity moved to restrain plaintiff at law from suing out execution; and, it being argued that the executor had made himself personally liable by this proc edure, the Lord Chancellor said, that the executor's suffering judgment to go by default, was no more than his saying that he was ready to do whatever a court of law or equity might think proper, and granted the injunction. Ib., 2 Mer. 483.

Where, before the usual decree for an account in a suit by legatees against executors, a judgment has been obtained at law against them de bonis testatoris et si non de bonis propriis, a motion made after decree to restrain execution upon such judgment was refused, with costs; it appearing by the answer of the executors that they had, in fact, misapplied the assets. Lee v. Park, 1 Keen, 714; 6 L. J., Ch. 93.

Principles upon which the court after decree interferes by injunction to restrain proceedings at law with reference to the priority of the decree or judgment at law fully considered. Ib.

Whether, according to those principles, the decision would not have been the same, even if no misapplication of assets had appeared, quære. Ib.

Injunction to restrain proceedings granted against a creditor, though his judgment would entitle him to execution de bonis propriis of the executor. Bookless v. Crummach, C. P. Cooper, 125.

After decree for administration of assets, executor pleaded false plea to action brought against him by creditors of testator, in order to have an opportunity of applying for injunction to restrain action. Court granted injunction, and held creditor not entitled to judgment against executor, de bonis propriis. Fielden v. Fielden, 1 Sim. & S. 255.

In April, 1843, a creditor obtained a judgment by default against an executrix; a decree in a creditors' suit was obtained in April, 1844; and on the 25th May following, the judgment was set aside on the terms of the executrix pleading plene administravit. On the 3rd June, on the eve of trial, the executrix moved for an injunction, which the court granted, to stay execution only, and afterwards refused to permit the creditor to proceed against the executrix for the purpose of charging her personally. Kirby v. Barton, 8 Beav. 45.

If in an action by a bond creditor against the heir of an intestate, the latter plead a false plea, the court will, after a decree obtained in a suit, by another creditor, for the administration of the intestate's assets, restrain the plaintiff at law from taking out execution against the assets, but not from proceeding against the heir personally. Price v. Evans, 4 Sim. 514.

After a decree in a creditors' suit, the court will restrain a creditor of the testator from proceeding at law against the assets, but not from proceeding against the executors personally. Kent v. Pickering, 5 Sim. 569. S. P., Burles v. Popplewell, 10 Sim. 383. Powell v. Powell, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 501.

—— To restrain Proceedings of Creditors in Foreign Courts.]—The rule which prevents a creditor from proceeding with an action for the recovery of his debt after a decree in an administration suit, is applicable to the case of a creditor proceeding in a foreign court, and will render him liable to the costs of an application to restrain him after he has received due notice of the decree. Graham v. Maxwell, 1 Mac. & G. 71; 1 H. & Tw. 427; 18 L. J., Ch. 225; 13 Jur. 217. See further INTERNATIONAL LAW.

—— Obtained on Interlocutory Application.]—After a decree for an account against an executor, defendant may restrain a creditor from suing at law, on motion, and without filing an injunction bill, though until lately that remedy against a creditor was never granted, unless a bill for an injunction had been filed. The executor must pay the costs till notice of the decree; and he must make an affidavit as to funds in his hands. Paxton v. Douglas, 8 Ves. 520. And see Pepper v. Foster, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 384.

—— Other Cases.]—A creditor recovered judgment and sued out a writ of fi. fa. thereupon in the lifetime of his debtor, and placed the writ in the hands of the sheriff; on the day after, the debtor died; a decree was afterwards made in the suit of an equitable mortgagee of certain parts of the real and personal estate of the debtor, against his devisee and executor, for the sale of the mortgaged property, and if the proceeds of such sale should be insufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's debt then for an account and application of the general, personal, and real estate of the testator in a due course of administration; after this decree the judgment creditor levied under the fi. fa. on goods left by the debtor. The executor thereupon moved for an injunction to restrain execution, which the court refused on two grounds; first, because the decree for an account and administration of the general estate was not absolute, but was conditional on the mortgaged property proving insufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's demand; and secondly, because the judgment creditor acquired a right to the goods of the debtor by virtue of the writ of fi. fa. from the teste of the writ, and therefore paramount to the right of the executor. Ranken v. Harwood, 5 Hare, 215; 15 L. J., Ch. 446; 10 Jur. 794. Affirmed, 2 Ph. 22.

Creditor having been restrained from proceeding at law, on account of decree obtained, allowed to prosecute such where proceeding on decree delayed for some years. Powell v. Wallworth, 2 Madd. 183.

When the representative of an intestate is seeking to give preference by confessing judgments, the court will give the plaintiff leave to proceed at law to recover judgment with a cesset executio, and in the Court of Equity for a discovery and account of assets. Barker v. Dumaresque, 2 Atk. 119.

Liberty to proceed at law refused to creditor having priority to the plaintiff in the cause, if any creditor having priority to the applicant is a party to the cause, or has come in under the decree. Ball v. Hill, 2 Moll. 354.

A party employed the same solicitor to bring an action for an alleged debt, against the personal representative of an intestate, as another creditor had employed to obtain the usual decree in a creditors' suit against the same parties. The court held, that the party bringing the action must be considered as having received notice of such decree, and granted an injunction without costs to restrain him from proceeding with his action. Clough v. French, 6 Jur. 636.

Of Administration Suits.]—After a decree in a creditors' suit, the court will stop a creditor from proceeding in another suit for the recovery of a demand against the estate of a testator, if the object can be obtained in the first suit; but secus if the creditor would be unable to obtain relief in the first suit. Costerton v. Costerton, 2 Keen, 774; 7 L. J., Ch. 302.

A motion by consent in a creditors' suit, after decree, to stay the proceedings in the suit, refused. York v. White, 10 Jur. 168.

Where a debt is claimed or a demand made in a suit, and the defendant, admitting his liability, offers to pay the debt or comply with the demand, and to put the plaintiff in the same situation as he would have been in if the liability had been satisfied without suit, the court, on motion, will stay all further proceedings. Holden v. Kynaston, 2 Beav. 204; 9 L. J., Ch. 198.

Proceedings in a creditors' suit stayed as against some defendants, on payment of one of the plaintiff's debts, on which alone the defendants applying were liable, and under very special circumstances, without costs. Ib.

In a creditors' suit instituted by the plaintiff on behalf of himself and all other creditors, the defendant is entitled, on motion at any time before decree, to have the bill dismissed on payment of the demand of the plaintiff and his costs, as between party and party; but if there be other defendants, their costs must also be paid. Pemberton v. Topham, 1 Beav. 316; 2 Jur. 1009.

—— Satisfaction of Plaintiff's Claim—Infant Defendant.]—Where some of the defendants in an administration action offered to satisfy the whole of the plaintiff's claim and the costs of the action, the court refused to stay the proceedings unless the rights of an infant defendant interested in the suit were also provided for. Clegg v. Clegg, 17 L. R., Ir. 118.

—— Fund Transferred to Credit of fresh Suit.]—If a bill filed by a creditor is dismissed, and there is money in bank to the credit of the cause, it will be retained until a defendant, also a creditor, who is about to file a bill, can apply to have it transferred to the credit of his cause. Woods v. Creaghe, 1 Hog. 313.

—— Compromise—Fund in Court.]—It is competent to a creditor filing a bill on behalf of himself and all other the creditors of a testator, to compromise the suit and dismiss the bill; and in such a case, a fund brought into court by the executors will, with the consent of the executors, be paid to the plaintiffs. Wood v. Westall, Younge, 305.

—— Second Action with same Objects.]—A bill for an account of the personal estate of W. J., an intestate, was filed by the legal personal representative of E. B. against the personal representatives of the deceased administrators of W. J., alleging that the administrators of W. J. had got in the greater part of the estate, and that E. B. was the sole next of kin. The suit was revived in 1877 by M., a subsequent personal representative of E. B., against X. and Y., as representatives of one of the administrators, and Z., as representative of the others, and was ultimately dismissed in 1880 with costs as against all three defendants, on the ground that the title of E. B. as next of kin was not proved. After this M. took out administration de bonis non to W. J., and brought his action as such administrator against Z. for an account of the personal estate of W. J. received by the administrators whom Z. represented:—Held, that, although M. formerly sued as personal representative of E. B., and now sued as personal representative of W. J., the action was in substance a second proceeding for the same matter under the same alleged title, and that proceedings must be stayed until the costs of the old suit had been paid. Martin v. Beauchamp (Earl), 53 L. J., Ch. 1150; 25 Ch. D. 12; 49 L. T. 334; 32 W. R. 17.

Legatees and annuitants are bound by the proceedings in a suit for administration between the executors and residuary legatees and devisees, although there may be a question as to the debts being primarily charged on the real estate, and which may incidentally affect them. Therefore, after decree in such a suit, legatees cannot sustain an administration suit against the executors. Jennings v. Paterson, 15 Beav. 28.

Where an administration summons is heard and determined by the judge personally, the plaintiff cannot file a bill for the same object in another branch of the court of co-ordinate jurisdiction; but if he is dissatisfied he must resort to the appellate tribunal. Thompson v. Thompson, 8 L. T. 490; 11 W. R. 797.

After a distribution of assets under a decree ascertaining rights of legatees, advertisements for all persons interested to prove their claims before the master being previously published, a bill by a legatee against the representative of the executor dismissed. Farrell v. Smith, 2 Ball & B. 337.

Injunction against Representative—To restrain Proceedings at Law.]—The bill stated the plaintiff was legatee under a will of which the defendant was executor; that the usual decree for an account of the personal estate had been made, and the parties had been before the master, when the plaintiff was charged with several articles of the personal estate possessed by him; that the account between them was afterwards referred to an arbitrator, who found a small sum in favour of the plaintiffs, but never made an award; but after that the defendant, as executor, brought an action against the plaintiff for the effects of the testator so in his possession; and the bill prayed an injunction to restrain the defendant from proceeding at law; and that the value of the articles possessed by the plaintiff might be deducted out of the interest taken by him under the will. The court thought upon this case that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction till the master made his report: a demurrer, for want of equity, was, therefore, overruled. Milner v. Goolden, 1 Cox, 196.

Injunction granted upon motion to restrain, until the hearing of the cause, an action by an administrator to recover a debt which was formerly due to his intestate—upon affidavit that the intestate had requested the debtor to hold the sum due in trust for the plaintiff, and that the debtor had accepted the trust, and paid over a part of the fund to the plaintiff. M'Fadden v. Jenkins, 1 Hare, 458; 11 L. J., Ch. 281; 6 Jur. 501. Affirmed, 1 Ph. 153; 12 L. J., Ch. 146; 7 Jur. 27.

The court will not permit the executor, after the estate has been fully administered in the court, to prosecute an action without leave, against a party to the suit, for recovery of part of the testator's estate. Oldfield v. Cobbett, 6 Beav. 515.

A creditor of a testator filed a bill against the executor for administration, and obtained an injunction and receiver. The plaintiff was found a creditor, and the cause was heard on further directions, but the injunction and receiver were not continued. The executor afterwards brought an action at law against the plaintiff for moneys due to the testator. The court by injunction summarily restrained the proceeding. S. C., 5 Beav. 132.

Where an administrator of an intestate has joined in giving receipts for moneys effected on policies on the intestate's life, and signed a letter to the office, requiring the company to pay the amount to the party who had effected these insurances, as securities for moneys advanced by him to the intestate, the court will restrain an action commenced by the administrator for the recovery of these moneys so received. Andrewes v. Jones, 12 L. T. 229.

—— To restrain Suit in Equity.]—Motion by defendants to stay proceedings in a suit, upon certain terms, on the ground that the same questions were in issue in a suit instituted by them against the plaintiffs in Scotland, and which the court had refused to stay, refused, with costs. Stainton v. Carron Co., 21 Beav. 500.

A. proceeded against the executors of B. in Scotland, in a creditors' suit in equity by the executors. A.'s proceedings were restrained by injunction, but after three years' delay the order was reversed on appeal. In the meanwhile, the executors had instituted a suit here against A. on the same subject. It having been held, that A. had a right to proceed in Scotland, he moved to stay the executor's proceedings here until the question had been decided in Scotland. The motion was held irregular, and refused, with costs. Ib.

—— To restrain Receipt of Assets.]—The institution of a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court, for the purpose of recalling probate, is not a ground upon which alone this court will interfere to restrain the executor from receiving the assets. Where, however, the executor had agreed, through his proctor, that the validity of the testamentary paper by which he was appointed should be tried in the suit to recall probate, an order was made for an injunction and a receiver, and that order was affirmed on appeal. Watkins v. Brent, 1 Myl. & C. 97; 7 Sim. 512; 5 L. J., Ch. 49.

Where administration was granted by the sentence of the Ecclesiastical Court to A., as only next of kin of the intestate, in a suit in which B. also claimed to be the only next of kin, and that sentence was affirmed by the court of delegates on appeal, and B. filed a bill impeaching the pedigree of A., and to establish his own, the court would not, in such case, grant an injunction until answer, to prevent the administrator from possessing himself of the assets, he being, by the decree of the Ecclesiastical Court, both legally and equitably entitled thereto. Meath v. Gorman, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 304.

The pendency of a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court to have a probate or letters of administration recalled, is not of itself a sufficient ground to induce the court to grant an injunction and receiver against the personal representative. Connor v. Connor, 15 Sim. 598; 16 L. J., Ch. 371; 11 Jur. 662, n.

Where an insolvent executor is getting in the assets before probate, the court will restrain him, and direct the money to be paid into the bank. Smith v. Aykwell, 3 Atk. 566.

Injunction to restrain defendant, who was insolvent, from receiving testator's effects generally and from prosecuting actions at law for that purpose, granted under the circumstances before answer. Mansfield v. Shaw, 3 Madd. 100; 18 R. R. 201.

Wife who was an executrix, restrained from getting in the assets of a testator, her husband being in West Indies, and not amenable to the process of the Court of Chancery. Taylor v. Allen, 2 Atk. 213. And see Yetts v. Palmer, 11 W. R. 765.

Semble, that injunction restraining administrator from transferring intestate's stock into his own name, will, by equitable construction, operate to prevent his parting with any of intestate's outstanding estate, which has previously come into his hands. Scott v. Becher, 4 Price, 346; 18 R. R. 722.

—— To restrain sending Assets abroad.]—The court refused, at the instance of a creditor resident in England of a deceased trader in Madeira, to restrain the agent of the administratrix in England from sending over the intestate's money and effects to Madeira, the intestate's estate being the subject of a suit in Madeira. Wallace v. Campbell, 4 Y. & C. 167.

Injunction to restrain Executor from acting—Misappropriation of Assets—Bankruptcy.]—Where an executor has misappropriated the assets of his testator and become a bankrupt, the court has jurisdiction to restrain him from further acting as executor or interfering with the testator's estate. And where there is a co-executor willing to act it is not necessary to appoint a receiver. Bowen v. Phillips, 66 L. J., Ch. 165; [1897] 1 Ch. 174; 75 L. T. 628; 45 W. R. 286. See also RECEIVER, 6, col. 1694, ante.

Under Common Law Jurisdiction—Stay of Proceedings till Probate.]—Since the abolition of profert and oyer the court may, on proper cause being shewn, interfere under its common law jurisdiction in an action by an executor, to order a stay of proceedings till probate is taken out, and notice thereof given to the defendant. Webb v. Atkins, 14 C. B. 401; 2 C. L. R. 702; 23 L. J., C. P. 96; 2 W. R. 225.

Since Judicature Acts—Transfer from Queen's Bench Division.]—L.'s executors mortgaged part of their testator's property in fee to C., who subsequently granted a lease of it for fourteen years to R. and F. C. died, and his executrix served R. and F. with notice to pay rent to her, and, on their refusal, brought an action in the Common Pleas Division to gain possession of the premises under the covenants in the lease. The surviving executor of L. was let in to defend this action as landlord. He had previously commenced an action in the Chancery Division for the administration of L.'s estate. In this action the executor was plaintiff, and the beneficiaries under L.'s will defendants, and an inquiry had been directed as to C.'s mortgage debt. An order was obtained, on the part of the executor, staying proceedings in the action in the Common Pleas Division until after the hearing of the administration suit in the Chancery Division :—Held, that this order ought not to have been made. Crowle v. Russell, 39 L. T. 320.

Where an administration action is pending in the Chancery Division, the judge in whose court it is pending can order the transfer to himself of actions brought in other divisions against the executor if they are brought against him qua executor, but not otherwise. Chapman v. Mason, 40 L. T. 678.

In March a creditor of a testator recovered judgment in the Exchequer Division against the executor, and issued execution against him, under which the sheriff returned nulla bona. On 7th May the creditor issued a writ in a second action in the Exchequer Division against the executor personally. On 12th May an order was made in the Chancery Division for the administration of the testator's estate. On 20th May the creditor delivered a statement of claim alleging that the executor had committed a devastavit :—Held, on an application by the executor under Ord. LI. r. 2a, to transfer and stay this action, that, though by the words of the rule the executor was entitled to a transfer, still that he could not escape his liability (if any) by reason of an administration order having been made, and that the creditor was at liberty to pursue his remedies in the Chancery Division, just as he might have done in the Exchequer Division. Timms, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 831 ; 38 L. T. 679 ; 26 W. R. 692.

A creditor who has obtained judgment against the executor of his deceased debtor before a decree is made for the administration of the debtor's estate has priority over other creditors, and that priority is unaffected by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 46. But where a creditor had obtained in an action in the Exchequer Division an order nisi to sign judgment against the executrix of his debtor, and before judgment had been signed another creditor obtained in the Chancery Division a decree for the administration of the deceased debtor's estate, he was held to have no priority ; and the action in the Exchequer Division was transferred to the Chancery Division, and proceedings therein stayed upon motion made for that purpose. Stubbs, In re, Hanson v. Stubbs, 47 L. J., Ch. 671 ; 8 Ch. D. 154 ; 26 W. R. 736.

—— Staying Proceedings on County Court Judgment against Executor personally.]—A creditor of a deceased person sued the executrix in the county court and obtained judgment for his debt before judgment in an administration action. After judgment for administration and a receiver the creditor obtained from the county court judge an order to commit the executrix :—Held, that the creditor could not be restrained from enforcing his judgment against the executrix ; but that the proper course was to direct the receiver to pay the creditor his debt and costs out of the estate, reserving the question whether the payment should be allowed to the executrix. Womersley, In re, Etheridge v. Womersley, 54 L. J., Ch. 965 ; 29 Ch. D. 557 ; 53 L. T. 260 ; 33 W. R. 935.

Concurrent Actions—Stay.]—Where two suits are instituted for the administration of the same estate, and, on a decree being obtained in one of them, an application is made to stay proceedings in the other ; the question always is, whether the latter suit asks anything more than can be obtained in the former. Rigby v. Strangways, 2 Ph. 175 ; 10 Jur. 998. S. P., Gwevers v. Danby, 3 Ch. Rep. 216. Law v. Rigby, 4 Bro. C. C. 59. Anson v. Towgood, 6 Madd. 374. Pott v. Gallini, 1 Sim. & S. 206. Pickford v. Hunter, 5 Sim. 122. Jones v. Cooke, 11 L. J., Ch. 15. Belcher v. Belcher, 2 Dr. & Sm. 444 ; 12 L. T. 792 ; 13 W. R. 913. O'Keefe v. Holmes, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 111. Hoops v. Kingston (Earl), Fl. & K. 246.

Where a second suit for administration of a deceased person's estate is instituted after decree in a previous suit for objects which could have been well attained in the first suit, the bill in the second suit will be dismissed, notwithstanding it may contain allegations, such as fraud or the possession of real estate, which are not contained in the first bill. Menzies v. Connor, 3 Mac. & G. 648.

A creditors' bill was filed after notice of a decree in a simple administration suit by one of the next of kin of the intestate, but the decree was at that time imperfect in not containing the usual preliminary inquiries. The frame of the creditors' suit was also different in making the heir-at-law a party, and in containing charges as to real estate, and as to the destruction of documents. The creditors' suit having been brought to a hearing, the vice-chancellor made an order directing the plaintiff to pay a stated sum to the heir-at-law in lieu of costs, and ordered the administratrix to pay the plaintiff's costs of suit :—Held, on appeal, that inasmuch as the creditor might have obtained all the relief to which she was entitled in the former suit, the bill ought to have been dismissed with costs ; and that, under the circumstances, the appeal to the Lord Chancellor did not fall within the rule precluding an appeal for costs. Ib.

Two successive creditors' suits having been instituted against the same executrix, the latter suit was permitted to go on, notwithstanding a decree had been made in the former suit ; the decree having been obtained without sufficient proof of debt, and being also irregular in form. Reid v. Territt, 1 Coll. C. C. 1 ; 13 L. J., Ch. 146 ; 8 Jur. 484.

A creditors' suit stayed on the application of the executors, after a decree in a suit by residuary legatees for the administration of the same estate, notwithstanding there might be inquiries directed in the legatees' suit, which could not have been necessary in the creditors' suit, it being competent to the master to make a separate report, and thereby prevent the payment of the creditors from being delayed by the business of the ultimate administration of the estate. Golder v. Golder, 9 Hare, 276.

A creditors' bill was filed, which prayed also other relief. Soon after a purely creditors' suit was instituted by another party, and a decree obtained therein within seven days. The court stayed the first suit, so far only as it prayed an administration of the assets. Dryden v. Forster, 6 Beav. 146; 12 L. J., Ch. 189.

A decree for an account of the testator's estate, and for payment of his debts and legacies, having been pronounced but not drawn up in the Court of Chancery, a suit brought in the Court of Exchequer against the same defendants for a like purpose by a legatee's representative was stayed, until it was ascertained whether the plaintiff could avail himself of the decree in chancery. Moore v. Prior, 2 Y. & C. 375; 6 L. J., Ex. Eq. 74; 1 Jur. 512.

A bill was filed by a specialty creditor for the administration of an intestate's estate, praying also accounts relative to the carrying on of the intestate's business by his administratrix. Soon after, a purely creditors' suit was instituted by another party, and a decree obtained. The court refused to stay the proceedings in the first suit, holding that it embraced an object not provided for by the decree in the second suit. Underwood v. Jee, 1 Mac. & G. 276; 1 H. & Tw. 379; 19 L. J., Ch. 171. Affirming, 17 Sim. 119; 15 Jur. 99.

Before the decree in an ordinary administration suit was made, some of the defendants in it filed a second bill for the same purpose, charging the executors with breaches of trust, which, as they did not prove, they must pay so much of the costs of that suit as arose from the attempt to make a case against the executors. So much of the bill in the second suit as prayed for the usual accounts ought not to be dismissed, but the further prosecution of it stayed, and the residue of the costs of all parties to the second suit must be paid out of the testator's estate. Taylor v. Southgate, 4 Myl. & C. 203; 8 L. J., Ch. 137; 3 Jur. 214.

Where two suits for the administration of a testator's estate are proceeding at the same time, the court may stay proceedings in the second of such suits until further order, giving liberty to the parties to apply, and reserving the question of costs. Thwaites v. Foreman, 10 Jur. 483.

A residuary legatee, after mortgaging his share, and taking the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors' Act, obtained the usual order for administration on a summons, not disclosing these facts. The mortgagee afterwards brought them to the attention of the chief clerk, whereupon proceedings in the suit were stayed, and the mortgagee filed a bill for administration. An order was then obtained in the summons-suit, giving the conduct of it to another legatee, and making the provisional assignee, under the insolvency, a party. Notice of this order was given to the mortgagee, who nevertheless continued his own suit:—Held, that he ought not to have done so, and an order staying further proceedings in it was affirmed on appeal. Whittington v. Edwards, 3 De G. & J. 243; 7 W. R. 72.

When an order, under a summons to administer an estate, will effect all that can be directed by a decree in a prior suit instituted by bill or claim for the administration of the same estate, the court will, on motion, stay the proceedings in the second suit, on payment of the plaintiff's costs. Ritchie v. Humberstone, 22 L. J., Ch. 1006; 17 Jur. 756.

A common administration decree, under a summons at chambers, is no answer to a suit embracing matters which could not be included in such decree. Rump v. Greenhill, 20 Beav. 512; 24 L. J., Ch. 90; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 123; 3 W. R. 51.

On an application being made to stay a creditors' suit because of a decree obtained in an administration suit subsequently instituted by two of the executors against the third, as there was no evidence of the amount of assets received by the executors, and as it appeared that the creditor's case in the first depended on vouchers and documents in the hands of the executors, the court ordered the motion to stand over until the executors had put in their answer in that suit. Macrae v. Smith, 2 Kay & J. 411; 4 W. R. 472.

—— Oppressive Proceedings—Dismissal.]—A creditors' suit for the administration of the real and personal estate of a deceased testator, was in the list for hearing at the time of the institution of a suit by a legatee, who could have obtained substantial relief in the creditors' suit, in which shortly after a decree to account was pronounced. Subsequently, on the petition of a creditor, the greater part of the real estate of the testator was ordered by the Incumbered Estates Court to be sold. This court, being of opinion that the legatee's suit was oppressively and wantonly instituted, refused with costs a motion, under the stat. 12 & 13 Vict. c. 77, s. 42, on behalf of the legatee, to stay his own suit; and ordered, that if he did not file a replication within a short specified period, his bill should stand dismissed, as against one of the principal defendants, with costs, including the costs of a contemporaneous motion made on her behalf for its dismissal for want of prosecution. The construction of the 42nd section of the stat. 12 & 13 Vict. c. 77, adhered to, as laid down in Bernard v. Bond (1 Ir. Ch. R. 198), in reference to staying proceedings in this court, when lands, the subject of litigation here, have been ordered by the Incumbered Estates Court to be sold. Moneypenny v. Gibbing, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 201.

—— Sharp Practice—Stay.]—The rule that when two suits are instituted for administration of the same estate that shall be prosecuted in which the earlier decree has been obtained, does not apply where it has not been obtained fairly; and the court held this to have been the case where, on the same day of which notice had been given to an executor to appear to an administration summons, he appeared of his own accord, at an earlier hour, at the chambers of another judge, and consented to a decree for a summons then and not previously applied for by another plaintiff. Harris v. Gundy, 1 De G. F. & J. 13; 29 L. J., Ch. 38; 8 W. R. 32.

—— Stay on Terms.]—The common administration decree having been made in a suit by one of the next of kin, a second suit was instituted, six months after, by another next of kin, praying additional relief. The court stayed the second suit, on the defendant in the first undertaking not to object to any additions to the decree which the judge in chambers might think reasonable. Gwyer v. Peterson, 26 Beav. 83.

Where two suits are instituted for the administration of an estate, and a decree is made in one for ordinary administration, but in the other suit the prayer extends to other matters, the court will stay proceedings in the suit in which no decree has been made, on the undertaking of all parties in the other suit to introduce into their decree the extra matter prayed by that bill. Matthews v. Palmer, 11 W. R. 610.

Where a decree had been made in a creditors' suit to take the usual accounts of an intestate's estate a short time after the bill filed, and, as alleged, with a view to prevent another creditor who had also filed his bill for the same purpose, the court, on an application to stay the proceedings in the second suit, will give special directions that that part of the real estate which it was alleged the administratrix was about to dispose of should be sold in the usual way, and the proceeds brought into court to abide further directions with reference to the debt due to the second creditor. Lankester v. Wood, 14 L. T. 512.

—— Discovery.]—On an application being made to stay a creditors' suit, because of a decree obtained in an administration suit, subsequently instituted by two of the executors against the third, as there was no evidence of the amount of assets received by the executors, and as it appeared that the creditor's case in the first depended on vouchers and documents in the hands of the executors, the court ordered the motion to stand over until the executors had put in their answer in that suit. Macrae v. Smith, 2 Kay & J. 411; 4 W. R. 472.

Semble, that a creditor whose suit in equity is stayed, as well as a creditor who is restrained from prosecuting an action at law, is entitled to have a discovery of assets possessed by the executors, and payment of the amount into court. Ib.

—— Orders in both Actions.]—One report was directed to be made in two suits (a creditors' and legatees') for the administration of an estate. Budgen v. Sage, 3 Myl. & C. 683.

A residuary legatee filed a bill against the personal representatives of a testator for an account and payment. Before decree in that cause, a creditor of the testator, upon a bond, in respect of which no interest had been paid, nor acknowledgment of debt made for upwards of twenty years, filed a creditors' bill against the same representatives; and the defendants, by their answer to the second bill, admitted the existence of the bond debt. Afterwards, the plaintiff in the first cause obtained the common decree in a residuary legatees' suit, and the defendants thereupon moved for and obtained an order that all further proceedings in the second cause might be stayed. The Lord Chancellor, on appeal, discharged that order, and in the second cause made the common decree in a creditors' suit, and directed the report to be made in both causes. Ib.

Where there are two administration suits, in both of which there must be decrees, endeavours should be made so to manage matters as to direct those accounts and inquiries only by the second decree which were not embraced by the first decree. Smith v. Guy, 2 Coop. t. Cott. 289.

Where, by decrees in two suits, the same accounts are to be taken, and the decree in one suit gives the master liberty to adopt the account directed by the decree in the other suit; it seems expedient in general that the plaintiff in the former suits should be served with all warrants in the latter case which respect such accounts, and should have leave to attend the master. Ib.

Suggested objection to some suits instituted with the view only of protecting executors, that from the frame of them, the decree must make the taking of the accounts contingent upon the master finding that all persons belonging to a class are present; and consequently, that until the master has found that all the persons constituting the class are present, and has commenced, or is about to commence the taking of the accounts, a creditor proceeding at law cannot be stopped. Ib., 291.

A creditors' suit stayed on the application of the executors after a decree in a suit, by residuary legatees, for the administration of the same estate, notwithstanding there might be inquiries directed in the legatees' suit, which would not have been necessary in the creditors' suit, it being competent to the master to make a separate report, and thereby prevent the payment of the creditors from being delayed by the business of the ultimate administration of the estate. Golder v. Golder, 9 Hare, 276.

It is no objection to the hearing of a suit for a pecuniary legacy in which assets are administered, that a decree for the administration of the estate of the testator has been made at the suit of a residuary legatee, but quære, whether the court would direct the accounts of the same estate to be taken in both suits. Suisse v. Lowther (Lord), 2 Hare, 424; 7 Jur. 367.

A legatee, on a bill filed by him against the executor, is not entitled to the benefit of the proceedings had in a suit by creditors against the same executor. But the legatees' suit will be referred to the same master to whom the creditors' suit was referred, with liberty to him to use the proceedings had in that suit. Broad v. Beran, 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 69.

Two successive creditors' suits having been instituted against the same executive, the latter suit was permitted to go on, notwithstanding a decree had been made in the former suit; the decree having been obtained without sufficient proof of debt, and being also irregular in form. Reid v. Territt, 1 Coll. C. C. 1; 13 L. J., Ch. 146; 8 Jur. 484.

Where an executor filed a bill charging his co-executor with wilful default, and praying for administration, for an account, injunction, and receiver, and that the defendant might be discharged from the office of trustee; and the defendant took out an administration summons, the vice-chancellor having decided in chambers that the case was a proper one to be disposed of on the summons, the court refused to vary the order, notwithstanding that the suit and the summons were going on simultaneously. Piffard v. Vanrenen, 11 L. T. 766; 13 W. R. 425.

—— Immediate Decree.]—The court by consent made an immediate decree in a cause not in the paper for the administration of the real and personal estate of an intestate at the suit of a creditor, after a summons at chambers for the administration of the personal estate had been taken out by another creditor, which was returnable before the first day on which the cause could be heard as a short cause. Furze v. Hennet, 2 De G. & J. 125.

When a cause for the administration of the real and personal estate of a testator has been instituted by one creditor, and a summons for the administration of the personal estate only has been taken out by another creditor, which is returnable before the cause can be heard as a short cause, the court will, with the consent of all parties to the cause, make an immediate administration decree on motion, without requiring the cause to be in the paper, and heard as a short cause. Scaffold v. Hampton, 43 L. J., Ch. 137 ; 29 L. T. 575 ; 22 W. R. 182.

Semble, that the rule is the same even if the summons is for administration of the real as well as the personal estate. Ib.

The court by consent made an immediate decree in a cause not in the paper for the administration of the real and personal estate of a testator at the suit of a creditor, after a summons in chambers for the administration of the real and personal estate had been taken out by another creditor, which was returnable before the first day on which the cause could be heard as a short cause. White v. Lyons, 4 N. R. 221.

—— Application to Stay—To what Judge made.]—Where several suits for administration are attached to different courts, and a decree is made in one, an application to stay the other suits ought to be made in the court which has pronounced the decree. Ludbrooke v. Bleadon, 15 Beav. 457 ; 16 Jur. 851.

—— Transfer from one Judge to another.]—Two suits for the administration of the same estate having been instituted in different branches of the court, and a decree having been made in the latter of the suits, the proper course for a party wishing to stay proceedings in the other is to get it transferred to the judge who pronounced the decree, and to make an application in both suits before that judge. Dufford v. Arrowsmith, 7 De G. M. & G. 434.

Three creditors' suits had been instituted to administer the estate of the same testator ; two in the court of the Master of the Rolls, and the third in the court of Vice-Chancellor Kindersley. On an application to restrain the drawing up of an order made in the last cause, and for leave to transfer the same to the Rolls, leave was given, with the Vice-Chancellor's consent, to transfer the same. Penny v. Francis, 30 L. J., Ch. 185 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 248 ; 9 W. R. 8.

When two suits relating to the administration of the same estate are instituted in different branches of the court, and in one of these suits a decree has been obtained, the circumstances may be such as to render it proper that that suit should be transferred to the branch of the court where a decree has not been made. Corser v. Jones, 14 W. R. 704.

The rule, that where there are two suits for administration of an estate in different branches of the court, they shall both be prosecuted in that branch where a decree is first made, is subject to the qualification that the first decree is fairly obtained. Harris v. Gandy, 1 De G. F. & J. 13 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 38 ; 8 W. R. 32.

Two orders for administration having been obtained in different branches of the court, the court will order the administration to proceed in that branch of the court in which the order is in the most perfect state, notwithstanding such order may be posterior in date. Littlewood v. Collins, 8 L. T. 265 ; 11 W. R. 387.

The court will limit the cost of opposing such an application. Ib.

—— Consolidation.]—Where there are two suits for administration of the same estate, and a decree has been taken in one only, but the relief which can be obtained in that one is not so comprehensive as that which can be had in the other, the second suit will not be stayed, but both suits will be consolidated on such terms as the court shall think just. Hoskins v. Campbell, 2 Hem. & M. 43 ; 10 L. T. 93 ; 12 W. R. 546.

—— Conduct.]—When an executor and residuary legatee bring separate suits, and a decree is made in both suits, the proceedings in the executor's suit are stayed ; the principle of which is, that the residuary legatee has a greater interest in carrying on the suit so as to save expense than the executor. Kelk v. Archer, Archer v. Kelk, 16 Jur. 605.

Where several suits are instituted for the administration of a testator's estate, and a question arises as to their amalgamation and the conduct of the causes, the preference will be given to a residuary legatee, or other person who has an interest in the residue, in preference to a creditor. Penny v. Francis, 30 L. J., Ch. 185 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 248 ; 9 W. R. 8.

A creditor issued a writ for the administration of the personal estate of S., and subsequently obtained leave to amend his writ so as to include the real estate. Before any further steps were taken the executors of S. filed a writ and obtained a full administration decree, and then applied for the stay of proceedings in the creditors' action :—Held, that the creditors' action must be stayed, and that the plaintiff in the executors' action was entitled to the conduct of the administration. Smith, In re, McMurray v. Mathew, 33 L. T. 804.

There being two suits to take executors' accounts, the prosecution of first suit was, under circumstances, stayed, and prosecution of decree in second suit was given to plaintiff in the first suit. Hawkes v. Barrett, 5 Madd. 17.

Where there were two administration suits, and a motion for a receiver in each came on upon the same day, a receiver was appointed in both suits, and the carriage of the order was given to the plaintiffs by whom the first notice had been given. Hart v. Tulk, 6 Hare, 611.

Where a bill was filed for administration by a daughter against a widow as administratrix and only son, and the widow filed a second bill for the same object against the son, but did not make the daughter a party, the court, on the application of the daughter (the plaintiff in the first suit), gave her the conduct of proceedings in the second suit. Belcher v. Belcher, 2 Dr. & Sm. 444 ; 12 L. T. 792 ; 13 W. R. 913.

A plaintiff who files a bill for the administration of a testator's estate, charging the trustees and executors with breaches of trust, may bring his suit to a hearing notwithstanding that the ordinary administration decree has been obtained in a suit subsequently instituted, to which the plaintiff is not a party. If a second decree is made, both decrees ought to be prosecuted in the same branch of the court. Where a first suit is stayed by reason of a decree in a second suit, the plaintiff in the first suit will ordinarily have the carriage of the decree. Gambaco v. Cassavetti, L. R. 11 Eq. 439 ; 24 L. T. 770.

Where there was, first, an action by an equitable mortgagee to establish a charge ; and, secondly, a creditor's action for the administration of the estate in which the ordinary decree had been made, the court stayed further proceedings under the first action, but gave the conduct of the decree in the second action to the plaintiff in the first action. Matthews v. Matthews, 45 L. J., Ch. 711; 34 L. T. 718.

The general rule that where two actions have been commenced for the administration of the same estate the conduct of the proceedings will be given to the plaintiff in the first action, although the decree in the second has been obtained first, applies to actions commenced in the Palatine Court of Lancaster, as well as to those commenced in the High Court of Justice. In considering whether the rule ought to be applied the court will have regard to the special circumstances, and will take into account the amount of the interest of the plaintiff in the first action, and his object in bringing his action. The fact of a plaintiff being a stranger to the family who had bought up the reversionary interests of some of the residuary legatees:—Held, not a sufficient reason for not giving him the conduct of the proceedings, although his purchase of some of the shares was disputed on the ground of inadequacy of consideration and undue influence. Swire, In re, Mellor v. Swire, 21 Ch. D. 647; 46 L. T. 437; 30 W. R. 525—C. A.

Where three actions had been commenced for the administration of the same estate, the court (notwithstanding the general rule that the plaintiff in the first action is entitled to the conduct of the proceedings) ordered the three actions to be consolidated, and gave the conduct of the future proceedings in the consolidated causes to the plaintiff in the second action, on the ground that the parties thereto were the persons chiefly interested, by whom the costs would have to be borne, and consequently to whose advantage it would be to keep down the expenses. Prime's Estate, In re, 48 L. T. 208.

Two suits for the administration of one estate being instituted within five days of each other, and there being no evidence of unfitness on the part of either plaintiff, the court made a decree in both suits, leaving the question as to which should have the control of the proceedings to be decided with reference to the manner in which each party should conduct the inquiries in chambers. Nowall v. Pascoe, Thompson v. Pascoe, 31 L. J., Ch. 456; 10 W. R. 338.

—— Conduct in Discretion of Court.]—Two suits having been instituted for the administration of an estate, the first by the tenant for life, the second by the remainderman, the vice-chancellor, on a motion by the tenant for life that the two suits might be amalgamated, and that she might have the conduct of them, ordered that the second suit should proceed, and that the tenant for life should have the conduct of it. On appeal:—Held, that the conduct of the suit was a matter entirely within the discretion of the judge, and therefore the appeal was dismissed. Dowbiggin v. Trotter, 27 L. T. 731; 20 W. R. 1024—L.JJ.

When two creditors' suits have been instituted for the administration of the same estate, the question who is to have the conduct of the proceedings is purely a matter for the discretion of the judge, to be exercised in chambers; and in exercising his discretion the judge will have regard to whether the creditor, who has first obtained a decree, has conducted his suit with perfect fairness, and to the nature and amount of his interest in the estate. Harvey v. Coxwell, 32 L. T. 52.

A creditor took out a summons to administer the estate of a testator. The summons was dismissed by the chief clerk, as the will had not then been proved, but adjourned to be heard before the judge in chambers. After the will had been proved, another creditor filed a bill for the administration of the same estate, and obtained the usual decree. While the second suit was pending, the plaintiff in the summons (who had had no notice of the institution of the second suit) abandoned his adjourned summons, and took out a second summons for the administration of the estate. An order was then made, at chambers, staying all proceedings in the second summons, and giving the plaintiff in the summons the conduct of the second suit. The plaintiff in the suit now moved to discharge this order:—Held, that, as the plaintiff in the summons was the first in point of time, was the larger creditor, and had had no notice of the second suit, he must have the conduct of the proceedings. Ib.

—— Conduct where Proceedings Improper.]—The rule that when two suits are instituted for administration of the same estate that shall be prosecuted in which the earlier decree has been obtained, does not apply where it has not been obtained fairly; and the court held this to have been the case where, on the same day of which notice had been given to an executor to appear to an administration summons, he appeared of his own accord, at an earlier hour, at the chambers of another judge to a decree for a summons then and not previously applied for by another plaintiff. Harris v. Gandy, 1 De G. F. & J. 13; 29 L. J., Ch. 38; 8 W. R. 32.

A suit was instituted on the 16th October, on behalf of infants by their great-uncle, as their next friend, for the administration of the estates of their father and mother. On the 18th November a second suit was instituted on behalf of the same infants by a stranger, as their next friend, and a decree was obtained on the 21st, the solicitors for the plaintiffs in the second suit being the London agents of the solicitors of the defendant:—Held, that, in these circumstances, the institution of the second suit was improper, and that the conduct of it ought to be given to the next friend in the first suit. Frost v. Ward, 2 De G. J. & S. 70; 9 L. T. 268; 12 W. R. 285.

A creditor took out a summons for the administration of a testator's personal estate only, which was insufficient. On the day following the hearing of the summons, another creditor, appearing by the solicitors who appeared for the defendants to the summons, filed a bill for the administration of the personal estate, which bill he afterwards amended by making the heir-at-law a party, and praying for administration of both the real and personal estate, which together were sufficient. In the suit the same solicitors appeared for all parties. A decree having been obtained in the suit, the first creditor applied for leave to have the conduct of the cause:—Held, that the plaintiff in the suit could not retain the advantage which had been unfairly obtained by him, and that the plaintiff in the summons must have the conduct of the cause. Singleton v. Barrett, Barrett, Ex parte, 41 L. J., Ch. 103; L. R. 12 Eq. 479; 24 L. T. 454; 19 W. R. 871.

—— Priorities.]—A bill was filed by a creditor claiming in respect of an admitted breach of trust, against B. and the representatives of S. deceased, and it prayed that the accounts might be taken, and the real estate of S. sold and applied in paying the amount due to the plaintiff, and the other debts. A sum of money was paid into court in this suit, and a decree was made against the assets of S. only, and accounts and inquiries were directed. A creditors' suit was subsequently instituted against the representatives of S., and a common decree was made. The plaintiffs in the first suit claimed the fund in court in priority of the creditors in the second :—Held, however, that after payment of the costs of the first suit, it ought to be applied in a due course of administration towards payment of all the creditors of S. Smith v. Birch, 3 Beav. 10; 9 L. J., Ch. 349; 4 Jur. 670.

B. died equitably indebted to A. After B.'s death it was arranged between C., who was his executor and devisee, and A., that C., who admitted that he took under the devise real assets enough to pay B.'s debts, and that he was liable to pay A.'s claim out of them, should not be called upon for immediate payment of the principal, but should pay interest on it. A. afterwards filed a bill, to enforce payment either by C. or out of B.'s assets, and obtained a decree against C. personally for payment of the money due, which decree reserved further consideration, and liberty to apply, but did not give any remedy against the assets. A suit was subsequently instituted by a mortgagee, to whom C. had mortgaged one of the devised estates, and the estate was sold in this latter suit :—Held, that A. had not, by obtaining a personal decree against C., lost her right as a creditor against the assets of B., and that her claim against the surplus proceeds of the sale in the mortgagee's suit had priority over that of a judgment creditor of C., though the judgment was prior in time to the decree in A.'s suit. De Sorbein v. Bland, 2 De G. & J. 158; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 959.

Semble, if necessary, A. might in her own suit, under the reservation of further consideration and liberty to apply, have enforced her claim against B.'s assets. Ib.

—— Costs.]—Where, pending an administration suit, a suit is instituted by legatees, praying no further relief than might be had in the administration suit, the parties to the administration suit ought to apply to have the proceedings in the legatees' suit stayed; otherwise, the costs of the latter suit may be dealt with as costs in the former. Therry v. Henderson, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 481; 6 Jur. 386.

A creditors' suit against a personal representative for the administration of a testator's estate proceeded to replication, when a decree was obtained, in another creditors' suit, against the same personal representative for the same object. After the defendant had given the plaintiff in the first suit notice of the decree, the plaintiff threatened to proceed; and thereupon the defendant, upon a notice of motion, intituled only in the former cause, asked that the proceedings might be stayed. The court made an order in both suits granting the injunction, and giving the restrained plaintiff liberty to tax his costs of the first suit, and on the motion, and to go in and prove his debt and such costs in the second suit, but declined to direct that the costs should be paid out of the first assets. Ladbroke v. Sloane, 3 De G. & Sm. 291.

Legacy assigned upon certain trusts. Trustee, notwithstanding notice of former decree for administration of assets, files bill for payment of legacy. Court refused to assign legacy to him, he having acted improvidently, or to give him costs. And executors refused their costs, because they should have moved to stay proceedings, instead of answering trustee's bill. Packwood v. Maddison, 1 Sim. & S. 232; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 107.

A., B. and C., creditors of a testator, successively took out administration summonses, but an order having been made on A.'s summons, the others were not proceeded with. The defendant, the executor, who was the brother of C., paid off A. in full, and obtained an order to stay all proceedings in A.'s suit. On the same day C. took out another summons, in a different court, and obtained the usual order. B. afterwards obtained the carriage of the order made in A.'s suit, and C.'s suit was transferred to the same court :—Held, that all proceedings in C.'s suit ought to be stayed, and that he must pay the costs of the transfer, and of the application to stay proceedings. Salter v. Tildesley, 11 L. T. 759; 13 W. R. 376.

c. Parties.

Order XVI. relates to Parties.

Plaintiff—Representative Character of.]—The rule that, in order to entitle a party to sue in any court of this country, whether of law or of equity, in respect of the personal rights of a testator or of an intestate, he must appear to have obtained probate or letters of administration from the proper court in this country, is subject to this qualification, that he is suing in right of the deceased. Vanquelin v. Bouard, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 341; 33 L. J., C. P. 78; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 566; 9 L. T. 582; 12 W. R. 128.

If executors bring an action to recover back money paid by them by mistake on their testator's account, they must declare in their own right, and not as executors. Munt v. Stokes, 4 Term Rep. 561; 2 R. R. 459.

That an executor may sue in his representative character on a contract made with himself, when the money recovered would be assets is an established rule, and not to be disturbed. Heath v. Chilton, 12 M. & W. 632; 13 L. J., Ex. 225.

A person acting under a letter of attorney from administrators, may be sued by them in their own right as their bailiff or receiver, and they need not name themselves administrators. Hudson v. Hudson, 1 Atk. 462.

An administratrix, after the death of her intestate, paid a sum of money, through a misrepresentation, to her landlord, out of assets remaining in her hands, to which he was not entitled :—Held, that although it might have been a wrongful payment, yet that she was enabled to sue for its recovery in her representative character of administratrix, in an action for money had and received. Clark v. Hougham, 3 D. & R. 322; 2 B. & C. 149; 1 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 249.

A. made a promissory note, payable to B. or order. B. indorsed it, and gave it to C. to get discounted. C. went away, and shortly afterwards came back to B. with the money. The executors of C.'s father, of whom C. was one, brought an action on the note as executors :—Held, that as the executors produced the note on the trial as executors, they might recover on it, although there was no evidence to shew that C.'s father ever had the note in his lifetime. Godson v. Richards, 6 Car. & P. 188.

Writ Incorporated in Statement of Claim.]—When a plaintiff sues in a representative capacity, the statement of claim is to be read for the purposes of demurrer as if that fact was stated therein. Johnson v. Burges, 47 L. J., Ch. 552.

Joinder of Claims.]—Semble, that the provision of Ord. XVII. r. 5, of 1875, authorising the joinder of a claim by an executor with a claim by him personally, refers to a case where the plaintiff's personal claim is in respect of the assets of the testator as such. Ib. See now Ord. XVIII. r. 5, of 1883.

Action at Law—Joinder of Executors as Plaintiffs.]—Two or three co-executors may recover in ejectment on a demise in the names of both. Doe d. Stace v. Wheeler, 15 M. & W. 623; 16 L. J., Ex. 312.

That an executor may sue in his representative character on a contract made with himself, when the money recovered would be assets, is an established rule, and not to be disturbed. Heath v. Chilton, 12 M. & W. 632; 13 L. J., Ex. 225.

But where there were three executors, and two of them appointed a person to receive rents due to the testator's estate, after his death, and he was the agent of the two only :—Held, that the three executors could not adopt the employment and contract, simply because the money recoverable belonged to the estate, and were not entitled to recover in an action for money received by such person to their use as executors. Ib.

A., B. and C., executors of D., sold goods of their testator to E., the price to be paid to C., to be by him distributed among the creditors of D.; the three executors may, without a special count, maintain indebitatus assumpsit (or debt) against E. Pearson v. Pearson, 2 N. & M. 471; 5 B. & Ad. 859; 3 L. J., K. B. 62.

Where three executors ordered goods to be sold as the property of their testator, and afterwards sued the purchaser for the amount, without describing themselves as executors in the declaration, and without joining a fourth executor, who was named in the will :—Held, that the action was well brought, as the order for sale was given by the three alone, and as they did not act in their character of executors. Brassington v. Ault, 9 Moore, 340; 2 Bing. 177; 1 Car. & P. 302; 3 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 243; 27 R. R. 581.

One of two executors having alone proved the will, and received a sum due to the testator, which by such will was to be appropriated to the payment of specific legacies, and having afterwards lent it to a third person, who paid it over to A., who, on being applied to by the executor, acknowledged that he had received the money, but refused to pay it over to the executor :—Held, that both the executors might join in an action for money lent against A. Webster v. Spencer, 3 B. & Ald. 360; 22 R. R. 427.

Probate to one only is evidence of the title of all. Walters v. Pfeil, M. & M. 362.

Where a payee of a bill indorsed it to A. and B. as executors :—Held, that they might declare as such in an action against the acceptor. King v. Thom, 1 Term Rep. 487.

A. obtained from the Heralds' College a grant of arms, to be borne by him and the descendants of his brother. His brother had two sons, the elder of whom was heir-at-law of A., and the younger his executor with another person. A. bequeathed all his household goods and effects to his wife, and she took possession of the grant of arms :—Held, that the two nephews of A. had not such an exclusive interest in the grant of arms as to enable them to maintain detinue for it against the wife of A. Stubs v. Stubs, 1 H. & C. 257; 31 L. J., Ex. 510.

Semble, that even if the executors were entitled to the grant of arms, the court could not amend, so as to give judgment for the one plaintiff who was executor, since the other executor ought to have been joined. Ib.

—— Since Judicature Act—When entitled to continue Action.]—The original plaintiff had recovered a verdict in an action against the defendants for statutory fraud. Pending an appeal to the House of Lords the plaintiff died :—Held, that his administratrix was entitled to be joined as a party to the action under Ord. L. r. 4, of 1875. Twycross v. Grant, 48 L. J., C. P. 1; 4 C. P. D. 40; 39 L. T. 618; 27 W. R. 87.

—— Executors as Defendants.]—An executor cannot be sued as such for dividends received since the death of his testator, because they never formed any part of his estate. Parker v. Baylis, 2 Bos. & P. 73.

Where A. and B. being in partnership, A. signed an agreement on behalf of himself and B., and B. survived A. :—Held, that an action on the agreement lay against the executors of B. without joining those of A. Calder v. Rutherford, 3 Br. & B. 302; 7 Moore, 158.

An action cannot be maintained by a surviving co-executor in his own right against the surviving partner of a deceased co-executor, without stating himself to be such surviving co-executor in the declaration : where, therefore, the plaintiff and T. were appointed co-executors, and the latter, at the time of the death of the testator, was in co-partnership with the defendant, and died, leaving the plaintiff surviving; and T. had paid large sums belonging to the testator's estate into the partnership account, which were placed to the general credit of the estate of the testator : and the defendant and T. became insolvent, and none of the funds ever came to the plaintiff :—Held, that he could not recover from the defendant in an action for money had and received, commenced by him in his own right against the defendant in his own right, and not describing him as a surviving partner of T. Fitzgerald v. Boehm, 6 Moore, 332.

Quære, whether the service of a writ of summons, in which an executor is not described in his representative character, is notice to him of the commencement of an action against him in that character, so as to render him liable to a devastavit, if he pays a debt of an equal decree with that sued for, between the service of the writ of summons and the declaration. Rees v. Morgan, 3 N. & M. 205; 5 B. & Ad. 1035; 3 L. J., K. B. 102.

—— Since Judicature Act—Non-joinder.]—In an action against Y. and A., his wife, the claim alleged that W. owed the plaintiff 40*l.*, and that at his death he appointed by his will M. W. his residuary legatee; that M. W. died, having by her will appointed A., the female defendant, her residuary legatee; and that the residuary estate of W. had been assigned by his surviving executor to the defendants. The plaintiff claimed payment of 40*l.* from the defendants, but the surviving executor of W. was not made a party to the action:—Held, upon demurrer, that the claim disclosed a good cause of action; for even if the practice of the Court of Chancery would have required the surviving executor of W. to be joined as a defendant, the proper course (since the passing of the Judicature Acts, 1873, 1875) for the defendants to take, if they wished to bring him before the court, was to make him a party to the action under Rules of the Supreme Court, Ord. XVI. r. 17 of 1875. Hunter v. Young, 48 L. J., Ex. 689; 4 Ex. D. 256; 41 L. T. 142; 27 W. R. 637—C. A.

—— Executor both Plaintiff and Defendant.]—A party cannot be both plaintiff and defendant in an action; and therefore, where the plaintiff sued as executor, and the defendant pleaded that the promises in the declaration were made jointly with the plaintiff:—Held, a good plea in bar of the action. Moffat v. Van Mullingen, 2 Chit. 539; 2 Bos. & P. 124, n.; 5 R. R. 557.

Administration Action—In General.]—Creditor, filing a bill against executor, cannot make a debtor a party. Utterson v. Mair, 2 Ves. J. 95; 4 Bro. C. C. 270.

Creditors of A. cannot maintain a bill against the representatives of B. to part of the residue of whose estate A. is entitled. Elmslie v. M'Aulay, 3 Bro. C. C. 624.

Bill by creditors against an executrix for an account. Upon the hearing, the usual accounts were directed; but before they were taken, the creditors filed another bill against the executrix, and against debtors to the estate, stating insufficiency of assets, and charging collusion between the executrix and the debtors, but which was denied by the answer. Bill dismissed with costs, as it was only sustainable in case collusion had been proved; and if allowed, a bill might be filed by every single creditor against every individual debtor. Ib.

The general principle that a debtor to the estate cannot be made a defendant to a bill by a creditor or residuary legatee against the executor, unless there be collusion, insolvency, or some special case, is established by many decisions. Ib.

A creditor cannot in any case sue a debtor to the testator's estate without making the executor a party. Rumney v. Mead, Rep. t. Finch, 303. Griffith v. Bateman, id. 334.

A mere refusal by legal personal representatives to sue for the recovery of assets alleged to be outstanding is not sufficient to entitle a residuary legatee or next of kin to maintain an action against the alleged debtor to the estate and the legal personal representative for the recovery of such assets. Special circumstances must be shown as a ground for such an action. Yeatman v. Yeatman, 47 L. J., Ch. 6; 7 Ch. D. 210; 37 L. T. 374.

The circumstances which would suffice to induce the court to answer in the affirmative an inquiry whether proceedings ought to be instituted, will in general suffice to entitle a person beneficially interested to sue in his own name. Ib.

The personal representatives are the proper parties to sue to recover the assets, and parties interested in the estate will not be allowed to sue for that purpose unless it be satisfactorily shown that assets exist which might be recovered, and which, but for such suit, would probably be lost to the estate. Stainton v. Carron Co., 18 Beav. 146; 23 L. J., Ch. 299; 18 Jur. 137; 2 Eq. R. 466; 2 W. R. 176.

The rule as to joining the partner of the deceased with the personal representatives, in a suit for administration, without charging and proving collusion (if it can be supported in the absence of any additional special circumstances), does not apply to such a partnership as a joint-stock company. Ib.

After a decree for administration, a legatee cannot sue the debtors to recover the assets in the absence of any refusal or neglect of the personal representatives to do so. Ib.

After a decree for administration, a residuary legatee filed a bill against the executors and a company in which the testator was a large shareholder, and with which he had had extensive transactions, to recover the assets, relying on the fact that the executors were shareholders and officers of the company, and had interests which conflicted with their duty. A demurrer of the company was allowed, it not being shown that the executors intended to neglect the performance of the duties of their office. Ib.

If a testator, when he makes his will, is aware of the circumstances and position of his executors and trustees, the court will not lightly interfere with their discretion; and although the circumstance of an executor being an insolvent may be a reason for appointing a receiver, yet, if the testator was aware of his insolvency, the court will not, on that ground alone, take the property out of his hands. Ib.

A bill by creditors against beneficiaries for the administration of an intestate's estate, which does not allege insufficiency or collusive distribution of assets, is demurrable. Price v. Mayo, 28 L. T. 552; 21 W. R. 539.

Any person having an interest, no matter how small, in the taking of an account, may be properly made a party to a bill for an account. Smith v. Farr, 3 Y. & C. 328; 8 L. J., Ex. Eq. 46.

A suit cannot be maintained in this court by a party interested in the intestate's estate upon an administration bond, where no special reasons are shown why the proceeding is not taken in the name of the ordinary:—Held, also, that an order of the Ecclesiastical Court to attend with the bond in chancery as may be requisite and necessary for the furtherance of justice is not a sufficient reason. Bolton v. Powell, 14 Beav. 275; 16 Jur. 24.

—— Where there is Collusion between Executor and Debtor to Estate.]—A creditor or legatee may bring a bill against a legatee or debtor, if he make the executor a party, and charge collusion. Att.-Gen. v. Wynne, Mos. 126.

Though generally a bill by those interested in the personal estate, as creditors or next of kin, will not lie against a debtor to the estate; it will, under circumstances; as in this case, upon collusion with the representative; the defendant was not liable in the character of trustee and agent. Doran v. Simpson, 4 Ves. 651.

In the case of a creditor or next of kin, if they can state a case that the representative is colluding with the debtors to the estate, and diminishing the fund, they have a right upon that ground to make the debtor a party to obtain a discovery, and to prevent the payment of the money for a settlement of the account by collusion between the representative and the debtor. In this case a strong case of collusion was made out, and the debtor made a party. Ib.

Creditor permitted to sue debtor to estate upon collusion with executors. Benfield v. Solomons, 9 Ves. 86.

Semble, in all such cases as the present, it is very convenient to state the facts upon which the allegation of collusion is made. There is great inconvenience in joining issue on a general allegation, defendant not having a hint of any one fact from which it is to be inferred. Ib.

Devisees and legatees filed a bill against the trustees and executors of the will, and a mortgagee in possession of part of the estate, alleging that the trustees and executors colluding with the mortgagee, refused to make him account for the rents which he had received, or to redeem the mortgage, and praying for an account of the testator's assets, and that the mortgage might be redeemed. A demurrer by the mortgagee for multifariousness was allowed. A bill by a person beneficially interested in a testator's estate against the executors and a debtor to the estate cannot be sustained, although it alleges collusion between the co-defendants, unless it is confined to the recovery of the debt. Pearse v. Hewitt, 7 Sim. 471 ; 7 L. J., Ch. 286.

See, as to collusion between executor and debtor, Troughton v. Binkes, 6 Ves. 574 ; 5 R. R. 401. And see Alsager v. Rowley, 6 Ves. 748.

—— Against Surviving Partner.]—Residuary legatees may sustain a bill for an account against the executor and the surviving partner of the testator, though collusion between the executor and the surviving partner is neither charged nor proved. Bowsher v. Watkins, 1 Russ. & M. 277. But see Davies v. Davies, infra.

A bill filed by a creditor of a testator against the executor and certain persons who were in partnership with the executor alleged that the partnership claimed to be entitled to retain assets, which were in their hands, in satisfaction of a debt which they pretended was due to them from the testator ; but it did not charge in express terms that the executor was colluding with his co-partners : the creditor was held to have, under such circumstances, a right to sue all the partners, and a demand by the partners other than the executor was overruled. Gedge v. Traill, 1 Russ. & M. 281 ; 2 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. I.

The general rule of the court in administration suits is, that a creditor or legatee cannot make a debtor to the estate under administration a co-defendant with those who represent the estate, unless there has been collusion between the personal representative, bound to get in the estate and administer it, and the debtor to that estate, or where the deceased was partner with others, and the estate could not be ascertained without partnership accounts. Burrows v. Gore, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1245 ; 6 W. R. 699—H. L.

A bill was filed by residuary legatees against the executor and the surviving partner of the testator, for an account of the partnership transactions. It charged that an unfair valuation of the partnership stock had been made by a clerk of the surviving partner, and that there was no settled account with the defendant ; or that, if any, the same was fraudulent and collusive. The defendant, the surviving partner, pleaded a settled account with the executor to the whole bill, except such parts thereof as were comprised in his answer in support of the plea, and by which he denied any fraud or collusion whatever :—Held, that the defendant was not bound to set forth the settled account, or to aver that he had delivered up the vouchers to the executor, and that, though the charge of an unfair valuation of the partnership stock was not expressly denied by the answer, the plea did not therefore cover too much, as such valuation might have been admitted consistently with a just final account. Davies v. Davies, 2 Keen, 534 ; 1 Jur. 446.

The case of Bowsher v. Watkins (1 Russ. & M. 277) does not establish the general proposition that in every case a bill may be filed against any executor and the surviving partner of the testator, without charging and proving fraud and collusion between them. Ib.

—— Executor Insolvent.]—Suit by creditor against persons unaccountable to the estate allowed in special cases, as collusion between representatives, or their refusal, &c., to act. Burroughs v. Elton, 11 Ves. 29 ; 8 R. R. 79.

Where an executor has become bankrupt, or insolvent, so as not to have the means, or refuses to act, the court will permit a creditor to bring a bill for himself against persons accountable to the estate, and have administration. Ib.

In an administration suit by a legatee against the personal representative of an intestate, the plaintiff made defendant a third person, whose real estate had been charged under a power with a sum of money payable to the intestate, charging that the personal representative was insolvent, but not charging collusion with the debtor. The insolvency was denied by the answer of the personal representative, and not proved by the plaintiff :—Held, that the debtor was improperly made a party to the suit ; and the bill, as against him, was dismissed with costs. Philips v. Philips 6 Ir. Eq. R. 509.

A suit was instituted against A. and B., devisees of two incumbered estates. A larger portion of the incumbrances was paid out of A.'s estate than it was properly liable to. The decree directed special accounts, which were prosecuted to a draft report, finding 13,000*l.* due to A. out of B.'s estate. A. made his will, and, reciting this draft report, bequeathed an interest in the 13,000*l.* to the plaintiffs, and more to his executor. The plaintiffs filed a bill against B., and those claiming through him, and against the executor of A., praying the benefit of the former decree, and to prosecute the special accounts and be paid their legacy :—Held, that neither the specific nature of the legacy nor the character of the debt constituted any special case for taking the suit out of the common rule ; that a debtor to the estate cannot be sued by a legatee : and the suit, being to carry out a former decree, did not remove, but rather increased the objection. Neither the insolvency of the executor, if before his appointment as executor, nor his embarrassments, if removed before the commencement of the suit, nor the circumstance of the debtor evading process, and its being difficult to recover from him, if the executor had not refused to sue him, are grounds to warrant a legatee in suing a debtor to the estate. Wright v. Hamilton, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 119 ; 3 Jo. & Lat. 465.

—— One of two Executors a Surviving Partner.]—Where one of two executors was a partner with the testator, the residuary legatees may sustain a bill for an account of the partnership transactions against the executor, though collusion between them is neither charged nor proved. Cropper v. Knapman, 2 Y. & C. 338; 6 L. J., Ex. Eq. 9.

—— Against Executor de son tort.]—The widow of the testator employed A. to collect some of the debts due to the testator's estate, which A. accordingly collected and paid over to the widow, believing that she was the administratrix. The widow subsequently died without having obtained letters of administration:—Held, that A. was liable as executor de son tort to account to a party interested in the testator's estate, in a suit for that purpose, without any charge of collusion between such executor de son tort and the legal personal representative. Sharland v. Mildon, 5 Hare, 469; 15 L. J., Ch. 434; 10 Jur. 771.

—— Other Special Circumstances.]—Principle on which debtor to estate cannot be made defendant to bill by creditors, or residuary legatee against executor, unless collusion, &c., applies equally to the case of a creditor overpaid by the executor. Alsager v. Rowley, 6 Ves. 748.

The Lord Chancellor said it was very difficult to define what collusion is; it must depend on the circumstances; and where a creditor seeks to appropriate to himself the advantage arising from the too great facilities the executor may have given him to substantiate his demand, or too great readiness in admitting it, the case, as against a creditor, must be examined with very nice and critical attention before it can be said there is not collusion. Ib.

Although, as a rule, a debtor to the estate cannot be made a party to a bill against the executor, unless there be collusion or insolvency, there may be cases of exception; where a fund remained in court, being the surplus after satisfying a charge on the husband's estate, on which the wife had an equitable claim in respect of the husband's debts having been satisfied out of her estate, and both being dead, the executor of the wife refused to enforce her equity against the husband's estate:—Held, that a mortgagee and judgment creditor against her estate might maintain a suit against her executors and a party claiming under the husband against the fund in court for payment of the debts due from the wife. Lancaster v. Evors, 4 Beav. 158; 5 Jur. 525.

There may be circumstances under which the court will, at the suit of universal legatees under a will, direct an account against a debtor to the testator's estate, without collusion being established between the debtor and the personal representative, or any evidence of insolvency on the part of the latter, or of his refusal to sue the debtor, other than his omission to institute proceedings for a considerable period. Barker v. Birch, 1 De G. & Sm. 376; 11 Jur. 881.

—— By Executor against Single Creditor.]—An executor cannot maintain an action for administration against one creditor as sole defendant, even where, from the executor being the universal devisee and legatee, no next of kin or cestui que trust could become plaintiff or be named defendant. Buccle v. Atleo (2 Vern. 37) not followed. Mandeville v. Mandeville, 23 L. R., Ir. 339—C. A.

—— Relief against person having Liberty to attend — Delivery up of Title Deeds.]—The court has no jurisdiction in an ordinary administration action to make an order against a person who is not a party to the action but has obtained leave to attend the proceedings, for delivery up of title deeds relating to the estate. Parkes, In re, Simpson v. Parkes, 66 L. T. 151.

Administration Action—Who necessary to—Personal Representative.]—The Judicature Acts have made no change in the old rule that a decree for general administration cannot be made in the absence of a general representative of the estate. Groves v. Lane or Levi (16 Jur. 855, 1061; 1 W. R. 31) approved, and Davis v. Chanter (2 Ph. 545; 17 L. J., Ch. 297) explained. Dowdeswell v. Dowdeswell, 48 L. J., Ch. 23; 9 Ch. D. 294; 38 L. T. 828; 27 W. R. 241.

A claim filed for the administration of personal estate dismissed with costs, on the ground that there was no personal representative of the testator before the court, and that the claim erroneously stated that the defendant was the executor of the executrix of the testator, and sought relief against him in that capacity. Boulding v. Boulding, 16 Jur. 1154; 1 W. R. 49.

The legal personal representative of a testator is a necessary party to a suit for the administration of his real and personal estate. Rousell v. Morris, 43 L. J., Ch. 97; L. R. 17 Eq. 20; 29 L. T. 446; 22 W. R. 67.

An objection to a bill for the administration of the real estate only of a testator, and without the joinder of his legal personal representative, is valid, though not raised by the answer, and may be taken by way of demurrer ore tenus at the hearing. Ib.

Where such an objection is plain on the face of the bill, it is not the duty of the defendant to give notice to the plaintiff that he will avail himself of it, and he will be entitled to the costs of the day. Ib.

Not necessary to make any other than the executors parties to bill relative to the personal estate, since he sustains the person of the testator to defend the estate for himself, creditors and legatees. Peacock v. Monk, 1 Ves. Sen. 127.

A fund was alleged to have been carried in an administration suit, "to a separate account, entitled the general account." In another suit, to give effect to the assignment of a share of the fund:—Held, that the legal personal representative of the testator was a necessary party. Salmon v. Anderson, 9 Beav. 445.

On a demurrer to a bill seeking payment of a legacy out of assets come to the hands of the defendant, who was the husband of the sole executrix, deceased:—Held, that an allegation that all the testator's debts and the other legacies bequeathed by his will had been paid, and that there were assets ultra in the hands of the defendant to satisfy the plaintiff's demand, was not sufficient to dispense with the presence of a personal representative of the testator, the allegation being one which, even if admitted by the defendant, the court would not take his word for. Penny v. Watts, 2 Ph. 149; 16 L. J., Ch. 146.

No good cause of demurrer, that an executor is not a party when plaintiff alleges in his bill he knows not who is executor, and prays defendant may discover him. Bowyer v. Covert, 1 Vern. 95.

The heir of the obligor demurs, because his administrator was not made a party, and the demurrer was overruled, because he would not administer himself, and had opposed the plaintiff in taking out administration as a principal creditor. D'Arnada v. Whittingham, Mos. 84.

Where the bill contained a charge, "that A., the surviving executor of B., was long since dead, intestate; although plaintiff has made inquiry, he cannot now set forth the name of the person who, plaintiff is informed, administered to the said B. with his will annexed, since the death of said executors; and plaintiff has applied to the several confederates herein named for discovery of the name of such administrator, but which, although well known to them, they refuse to discover," demurrer, because B.'s personal representative (who was confessedly a necessary party) was not made a party to the bill, overruled, a sufficient excuse for not making him a party being suggested by the bill. Ryan v. Cambie, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 328.

It is not an objection at the hearing to the frame of a suit, that an administrator who is a necessary and not a formal party is brought before the court by a supplemental bill, to which the other defendants are not parties. Kebell v. Philpot, 7 L. J., Ch. 237; 2 Jur. 739.

—— Representative out of Jurisdiction.]—Two of the residuary legatees of a testator who died in India, filed a bill against the representative of a person who was named in the will as a trustee and executor, but never consented to act, but who was alleged in the bill to have in some manner acted in the trusts. One of the persons named in the will as executors, had proved the will in India, and was a party to the transactions by which the trust fund was wasted; and another of the persons so named proved the will in England, but both these parties were out of the jurisdiction. The bill prayed for a general account of the testator's personal estate, and for the appointment of new trustees:—Held, that the suit could not proceed in the absence of the personal representative of the testator; and that the third residuary legatee or his personal representative, and also the executor who proved in India, were also necessary parties. Lowry v. Fulton, 9 Sim. 104; 7 L. J., Ch. 158.

In a suit for administration against the administrator, with the will annexed, and the widow, to whom the assets had been assigned, such administrator was alleged and proved to be out of the jurisdiction:—Held, that the suit could not proceed in the absence of a legal personal representative. Donald v. Bather, 16 Beav. 26.

A testator dying in the Mauritius, appointed executors in that country, and left the residue of his property to his mother in England. The executors in the Mauritius transmitted the residue to England, but the mother of the testator having died, the amount was paid to her executors, who paid all her debts, exceeding the amount to which she became entitled from the testator's estate. The plaintiff was a creditor of the testator, and filed a claim to obtain payment of his debt, or to have the testator's estate administered:—Held, that the Mauritius executors were improperly made parties to this claim, and that the plaintiff could not have relief against the executors of the testator's mother without having a legal personal representative of the testator constituted, in this country, a party to the suit. Silver v. Stien, 21 L. J., Ch. 312. And see S. C., 1 Drew. 295.

A clear ascertained fund was remitted from abroad by an executor to a person in England, to distribute between the legatees. The court determined the rights of the legatees, without having a legal personal representative before the court, the consignee being a party to the suit. Arthur v. Hughes, 4 Beav. 506.

J. M., resident in America, directed his executor, Q., to convert his estate into cash, and divide it into two parts, and he gave three-fourths of one moiety to persons, of whom some resided in Ireland, in equal shares, and directed Q. to remit the amount to A. and B., persons resident in Ireland, to be by them paid to the legatees, and declared the remittance should be a full discharge to Q. as against the legatees. One of the legatees, having filed a bill against the personal representatives of A., alleging that Q. had remitted several sums on account of the residue of the testator's estate, and praying an account and payment:—Held, that Q. was not a necessary party. Lynch v. Musgrave, Hay. & J. 821.

—— Executor de son tort.]—To a suit by a creditor of an intestate, against an administrator de son tort, for an account and payment, it is necessary that a legal personal representative duly constituted should be a party. Creasor v. Robinson, 14 Beav. 589; 21 L. J., Ch. 64; 15 Jur. 1049.

In a suit for the administration of assets, it is not sufficient to bring an executor de son tort alone before the court. The legal personal representative must be a party. Shean v. Maher, 1 Jones, 440. S. P., McAllister v. McAllister, 11 L. R., Ir. 533.

Bill for account, receiver and injunction against an executor de son tort. Administration taken out by another person after bill filed:—Held, that the administrator might be properly made a party by amendment. Beardmore v. Gregory, 2 Hem. & M. 491; 34 L. J., Ch. 392; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 363; 12 L. T. 363; 13 W. R. 674.

An allegation that the defendant, being the person entitled to take out representation to a deceased party, refuses to apply for it, and impedes the plaintiff in procuring a grant of it to any other person, is not a sufficient answer to a demurrer founded on the absence of such representative; but secus, if the bill alleges that the grant of representation is actually in litigation in the Ecclesiastical Court. Penny v. Watts, 2 Ph. 149; 16 L. J., Ch. 146.

To a bill by a legatee for general administration against the defendant who, it was stated, had proved the will, and had possessed himself of the assets and made various payments, it was pleaded in bar to the whole bill that he had not proved the will, and was not the legal personal representative of the deceased:—Held, that the plea was a good one, and must be allowed, and without liberty to amend. Cury v. Hills, 42 L. J., Ch. 100; L. R. 15 Eq. 79; 28 L. T. 6; 21 W. R. 166.

A creditor of an intestate filed a plaint in a county court against the widow and two other persons for administration of the estate, and for an account against them as executors de son tort. On the plaint coming on for hearing they demurred to it ore tenus, on the ground that the legal personal representative was not before the court. The hearing was then adjourned, and shortly afterwards the plaintiff took out administration. On the case subsequently again coming on for hearing the county court judge dismissed the plaint so far as it sought relief against the defendants, but made a common administration decree, giving the plaintiff leave to amend the plaint by stating the grant of administration. On appeal :—Held, that a bill for an account against an executor de son tort was sustainable, notwithstanding the absence of the legal personal representative. Coote v. Whittington, 42 L. J., Ch. 846 ; L. R. 16 Eq. 534 ; 29 L. T. 206. S. P., Rayner v. Koehler, 41 L. J., Ch. 697 ; L. R. 14 Eq. 262 ; 27 L. T. 506 ; 20 W. R. 859.

The legal personal representative of a testator is a necessary party to a suit for the administration of his real and personal estate ; and if he is not a party, no decree can be made in such a suit, even although an executor de son tort and the trustees of the real estate are before the court. Coote v. Whittington, and Rayner v. Koehler, supra, dissented from. Rowsell v. Morris, 43 L. J., Ch. 97 ; L. R. 17 Eq. 20 ; 29 L. T. 446 ; 22 W. R. 67.

A creditor of a testator brought an action against the executors, who had not proved, but had got in part of the assets in Australia, alleging that they had paid some of the legacies, but refused to pay the funeral expenses and debts ; and also against other defendants, alleging that they had got in a portion of the assets in England, and that they threatened to dispose of such assets without regard to the debts. The plaintiff claimed, as against the executors, administration of the estate and payment of the debts ; and against the other defendants he claimed an injunction to restrain them from parting with the assets :—Held, that the executors were rightly sued, although they had not proved ; and that the other defendants were properly made parties as executors de son tort. Lovett, In re, Ambler v. Lindsay, 45 L. J., Ch. 768 ; 3 Ch. D. 198 ; 35 L. T. 93 ; 24 W. R. 982.

—— Co-executors.]—Bill for account cannot be filed against one co-executor only, either as a creditor or as residuary legatee. Scurry v. Morse, 9 Mod. 89.

All executors must sue and be sued, though one be an infant. Offley v. Jenney, 3 Ch. Rep. 92 ; Nel. 42.

It is sufficient to make those executors parties who have proved the will, and the other executors, if they have demands out of the estate, may come in as creditors before the master. Brown v. Pitman, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 75. And see Wankford v. Wankford, 1 Salk. 307. Cramer v. Morton, 2 Moll. 108.

Where one executor has alone proved, he may sue without making the other executors parties, although they have not renounced. Davies v. Williams, 1 Sim. 5 ; 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 210. S. P., Lynch v. Musgrave, Hay. & J. 821. But see Fergusson v. Fergusson, Hay. & J. 300. Houston v. O'Connor, Hay. & J. 718.

A testator appointed three executors, and made his executors and two other persons his residuary legatees. All the executors proved, and one of them filed a bill for the administration of the estate, and for a partition, to which another of the executors was made sole defendant. The remaining executor and also the other two residuary legatees were served with a copy of the decree :—Held, that the bill could not be sustained without making the remaining executor a defendant. Latch v. Latch, 44 L. J., Ch. 445 ; L. R. 10 Ch. 464.

A decree for an account cannot be made against an executor who is not a party to the suit. A decree so made was discharged, but with leave to amend. Ib.

An executor who has not proved the will is a proper party to an administration suit, provided he has acted as executor, though he may not have received anything as such. Vickers v. Bell, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 376 ; 10 L. T. 77 ; 12 W. R. 589.

A statement by him, in answer to an inquiry by a creditor that he is an executor, and that the will has been proved, will render him liable as an executor. Ib.

A defendant who in his answer says that he believes the testator to be incompetent, instead of saying that he was told that the testator was incompetent, but knew nothing about it, will be held to have insisted on that allegation as a defence to the suit ; and the allegation will be confirmatory evidence that he took upon himself the executorship. Ib.

A testator having named four persons to be his executors, two only proved the will, leave being given to the other two to come in and prove. One, a solicitor, who had neither renounced nor disclaimed, but who had stated himself to be acting as solicitor to the executors, was made a party to a creditor's suit. He disclaimed the trusts by his answer, and maintained that he was not a proper party :—Held, that if not a necessary, he was not an improper, party to the suit. S. C., 9 L. T. 600.

Where R. by his will directed his executors to invest 1,500*l.*, and to pay the interest to his wife during her life, and after her decease to divide the principal equally among his five children ; and the will was proved by one of the executors only, who possessed himself of the assets, and set apart the 1,500*l.*, and paid the interest to R.'s wife during her life ; and also made some payments to the children—in a suit by the representatives of R.'s children, for their respective shares of the 1,500*l.*, upwards of thirty years after their right accrued, praying that the executor might be declared to have been a trustee of the 1,500*l.* for R.'s children :—Held, that the executors of R.'s will, who did not prove, were not necessary parties. Daly v. Kirwan, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 156.

One devises that his executors should sell his land, and leaves two executors, one whereof dies, and the other renounces, and administration is granted to A., who brings a bill against the heir to compel a sale ; whether the renouncing executor, in whom the power of sale, collateral to the executorship, was vested, ought not to be made a party, quære. Yates v. Compton, 2 P. W. 308.

Where an executor in trust was outlawed, and a witness proved he had inquired after and could not find him :—Held, not necessary to make him a party. Heath v. Percival, 1 P. W. 684 ; 1 Stra. 403.

—— Personal Representative of a Representative.]—In an administration suit against a surviving executor, it is not necessary, in all cases, to bring before the court the representative of the deceased executor. Masters v. Barnes, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 616 ; 7 Jur. 1167.

A bill sought to charge the survivor of two executors with a loss occasioned by a breach of trust committed by both, and also asked a general account of the testator's estate :—Held, that the representatives of the deceased executor were necessary parties to the suit. Secus, if no general account had been prayed. Higgs v. Penn, 14 L. J., Ch. 326.

To bill by assignee of deceased executor and residuary legatee, against co-executor and residuary legatee, for moiety of residue, representative of deceased executor need not be party, except to dispute assignment. Blake v. Jones, 3 Anstr. 651.

Demurrer for want of parties, because plaintiff had only brought before the court the surviving executor, and not the personal representative of a deceased executor, and ore tenus, because bill to establish will stated testator to have been a bankrupt, and did not state he had obtained his certificate, overruled. Ryan v. Roche, 2 Moll. 437.

In a suit for an account of the assets of a deceased person, the personal representative of his former representative is properly joined as a co-defendant with his continuing or previous personal representative. Holland v. Prior, 1 Myl. & K. 237; Coop. t. Brough. 426.

R., by his will, directed his executors to invest 1,500*l*., and pay the interest to his wife during her life, and after her decease to divide the principal equally amongst his children; and M., one of the executors, alone proved the will. M. died, and by his own will appointed two executors, both of whom proved his will: one of them died, and subsequently all R.'s children, but one, instituted a suit for the recovery of their shares of the 1,500*l*., against the surviving executor of M.:—Held, that the personal representative of the deceased executor of M. was not a necessary party. Daly v. Kirwan, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 156. See also Popham v. Baldwin, 2 Jones, 320.

After a decree to account in a suit against B. and C. (the executors of A., in a suit for the administration of A.'s assets), B. died. It appeared that B. had received part of the assets of A., and it was alleged but not proved that he died insolvent:—Held, that the cause could not proceed until the representative of B. was brought before the court. M'Mahon v. O'Kelly, 5 Ir. Ch. R. 288.

One of two executors, who were stated to have possessed their testator's assets jointly, died before a suit was instituted for the administration of the testator's estate:—Held, that the representative of the deceased executor was not a necessary party. Clark v. Webb, 16 Sim. 161; 12 Jur. 615.

In a suit for an account of administration of personal estate of a testatrix, the personal representative of a deceased executor of the testatrix may be properly made a co-defendant with the surviving executor, only where it distinctly appears that the deceased executor possessed himself of assets; and from the statement in the bill, that the executors, A. and G., both proved the will, &c., but that G., who was dead, alone acted as executor, the court will not infer that G. possessed himself of assets, so as to justify the plaintiff in making his personal representative a co-defendant with the surviving executor. Cocking v. Golding, 4 Ir. Eq. R. 169.

A person acting in the management of assets, though there be an executor who afterwards proves the will, is liable as an executor de son tort, unless it clearly appears that he was only an agent; and when the evidence left this in doubt an inquiry on the subject was directed. An executrix and A. B., who was named an executor, acted and died without proving the will, which was proved by the surviving executor named in the will. The latter and A. B. afterwards obtained a release from the parties interested in the assets. In a suit to set it aside and for an account:—Held that the personal representative of the deceased executrix was a necessary party, especially as A. B. set up as a defence that he was only her agent. The cases in which the personal representative of a deceased executor may be dispensed with in suits against a surviving executor considered. Kelly v. Murphy, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 614.

Form of order for administration dispensing with the representatives of deceased executors and trustees as parties to the suit, although incapacitated persons were interested in the estate. Whittington v. Gooding, 10 Hare (App.) xxxiii.

The testator directed his two sons, who were also his executors, to carry on his trade with his general personal estate, for the benefit of themselves and the widow and sisters, which the sons did accordingly. One of the sons died intestate. A bill was then filed for an account against the surviving son, who continued to carry on the trade; but no letters of administration being taken out to the son who had died, there was no personal representative before the court. His eldest son and heir-at-law was, however, a party:—Held, that his legal personal representative was not a necessary party to the suit. Goddard v. Haslam, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 251; 3 W.R. 357.

When all the executors under a will act, and one dies, and the bill does not allege that he has accounted to the surviving executors for what he received, in a suit to administer the estate, in the absence of allegations of rendering any account by the deceased executor, or of receipt of assets by any of the executors, a common decree ordered without the representative of the deceased executor. Montgomery v. Floyd, 18 L. T. 847.

Where a bill was filed against an executor, seeking performance of the trusts of his testator's will, and administration of his estate, and the executor by his answer admitted a surplus of the testator's estate to be in his possession, and afterwards died before the cause came to a hearing:—Held, that the suit could not be revived against the administrator of the executor, but that there must be a representative of the original testator before the court. Barber v. Walker, 15 W. R. 728.

If a creditor's bill is filed against an administrator de bonis non, the suit is imperfect, unless the former administrator, or his personal representative, be made a party. Watson v. Ridge, 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 15.

A., being seised of lands, and indebted in judgment, died intestate, leaving a wife and son; the wife took out administration, and entered upon the lands as guardian, and dies, leaving B. her executor, who possesses her personal estate; the son dies, and his heir, the plaintiff, prays judgment to a bill for an account of the profits of the land: the administrator de bonis non of A. is a proper party. Bressenden v. Decreets, 2 Ch. Ca. 197.

Upon a bill against executors to have a testator's estate administered according to the trusts of the will, and impeaching certain accounts alleged to have been fraudulently settled between the defendants and a deceased co-executor, it appeared at the hearing that the personal representative of the deceased executor was not a defendant, and the decree then made therefore restricted the account to the receipts of the defendants, the surviving executors, and directed that the account settled with the deceased executor should not be disturbed. The same plaintiffs afterwards filed a bill purporting to be a supplemental bill, bringing before the court the personal representative of the deceased executor, and also the assignees of one of the surviving executors, who had become a bankrupt, and praying that the accounts and inquiries directed by the former decree might be prosecuted, and that an account might also be taken of the receipts of the deceased executor:—Held, on the demurrer of the assignees of the bankrupt executor, that the suit for the last-mentioned purpose, not being supplemental, was irregular. Wilson v. Todd, 1 Myl. & C. 42; 5 L. J., Ch. 9.

If, in a suit in which A., a creditor, and B., an administrator, are made co-plaintiffs, B. dies, after a decree for the administration of the personal estate, B.'s personal representatives ought, in the further prosecution of the suit, to be made parties in respect of B.'s possession of assets; but as they are accounting parties in respect of such possession, they must be made defendants, and not co-plaintiffs. Barnes v. Lever, 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 165.

The representatives of a deceased executor are not necessary parties to a suit by the survivor, for an account against an agent employed by the two jointly. Slater v. Wheeler, 9 Sim. 156; 2 Jur. 887.

—— Lunatic—Guardian ad litem.]—In a suit, commenced by summons, for the administration of the estate of an intestate, against the administratrix and her husband, the husband became lunatic, though not so found by inquisition, and the court on motion ex parte, supported by affidavit of fitness, appointed a guardian ad litem. Osbaldiston, In re, 1 Sm. & G. (App.) xii.

—— Suit for Interim Protection of Assets—Claim for Administration added.]—A bill filed for the protection of assets before administration granted, is demurrable for want of parties if it prays an account of the estate. Rawlings v. Lambert, 1 John. & H. 458. S. P., De Feuchères v. Dawes, 5 Beav. 110; 11 L. J., Ch. 394; 6 Jur. 594. Overington v. Ward, 34 Beav. 175.

—— Heir-at-Law.] — Though, at law, a specialty creditor may sue either the heir or executor, yet, in equity, he must make both parties. Madox v. Jackson, 3 Atk. 406. And see Plunket v. Penson, 2 Atk. 51.

To bill against executors of testator, on whose land annuities were charged, seeking arrears accrued due in life of testator, heir need not be party; but for arrears since testator's death, he must. Weston v. Bowes, 9 Mod. 309.

In a bill by creditor, under the Statute of Fraudulent Devises, against the assignee or devisee only, the heir-at-law is a necessary party; and for want of him the cause ordered to stand over. Warren v. Stawell, 2 Atk. 125.

If an action at law be brought, it must be both against the devisee and heir-at-law, and equity follows the law in this respect. Ib.

In a creditors' suit, since the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, making the real estate subject to the debts, it is not necessary to establish the will against the heir. Goodchild v. Terrett, 5 Beav. 398.

In a creditors' suit, instituted under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, the bill not praying the will to be established:—Held, that the heir was not a necessary party. Weeks v. Evans, 7 Sim. 546; 5 L. J., Ch. 16. S. P., Bridges v. Hinxman, 16 Sim. 71 (overruling Brown v. Weatherby, 12 Sim. 6). Burch v. Comey, 14 Jur. 1009. Shakels v. Richardson, 2 Coll. C. C. 31.

In a suit by persons interested under the will of a testator to administer his real and personal estate, it is not necessary to make the heir-at-law a party, or to prove the will. Marriott v. Marriott, 15 L. J., Ch. 422.

In a creditors' suit for the sale of the real estate; where there was no personalty, and the executors refused to prove the will, it was decided that the heir-at-law must be a party, and administration with the will annexed obtained, in order to shew a deficiency of assets. Fordham v. Rolfe, Tam. 1.

The inheritor is a proper party to a supplemental bill which is filed to have the benefit of a decree for sale against a person to whom he had, pendente lite, conveyed the legal estate in the lands by way of mortgage. Rutledge v. Rutledge, 3 Jo. & Lat. 307; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 84. And see Barron v. Barron, 3 Jo. & Lat. 320, n.

Real estate in India being made by statute personal assets for the payment of the debts of a deceased debtor, it is unnecessary to make the debtor's heir-at-law a party to a suit instituted for the administration of the assets. Story v. Fry, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 603; 11 L. J., Ch. 373; 6 Jur. 1029.

A testator directed his trustees to invest his personal estate, as soon after his death as a convenient purchase could be found, in real estate, and settle it according to certain limitations. These limitations having become exhausted before the personal estate had been invested:—Held, that the heir-at-law of the testator was not a necessary party to a suit to have the rights to the fund declared. Hereford v. Ravenhill, 1 Beav. 481.

Where a Scotch sequestration had issued against a testator's heir, and it was necessary in a suit to have the testator's real representative before the court, the trustee under the sequestration, who was named as a defendant to the suit, and stated to be out of the jurisdiction, was held to be a sufficient representative of the testator's real estate. Wilson v. Moore, 1 Myl. & K. 127.

The infant heir and only son of an intestate, was joined with his infant sisters, in a bill against the widow and administratrix of the intestate for an account of his real and personal estate, and for a guardian and maintenance:—Held, that the interests in the real and personal estate were distinct from each other, and a demurrer for multifariousness allowed. Dunn v. Dunn, 2 Sim. 329; 6 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 175. S. P., Maud v Ackom, 2 Sim. 331.

A legacy being charged on a mixed fund, and the bill containing an averment that the testator was not, so far as the plaintiffs were aware, seised of or entitled to any real estate at the time of his death:—Held, that though the averment was informal, it was sufficient to render it impossible for the defendants to object on demurrer that the heir-at-law or devisees were necessary parties. Beardmore v. Gregory, 6 N. R. 23.

—— Beneficiaries.] — One of two executors may sue the other executor for an account and payment of moneys owing by such other executor to the testator at the time of his death, and to such a suit the persons beneficially interested in the estate are not necessary parties. Peake v. Ledger, 8 Hare, 313.

One of three executors and trustees filed a claim to have the testator's real and personal estate administered, making his co-executors alone (not including any person beneficially interested) parties:—Held, that the suit was defective. Leslie v. Smith, 5 De G. & Sm. 78; 15 Jur. 1120.

Where an executor has not assented to a specific bequest, the persons beneficially entitled are not necessary parties to a suit relating to the property specifically bequeathed. Const v. Harris, Turn. & R. 514, 515; 24 R. R. 108.

Persons claiming specific portions of property in the possession of the deceased at his death, are not necessary parties to a suit for the administration of his estate. Barker v. Rogers, 7 Hare, 19.

Where the wife had a power of appointment over a sum to be raised out of the personal estate of her husband, and, if deficient, out of the realty; and upon his death an administration suit was brought against her, as the executrix, and the devisees of his real estate, pending which the wife died, having by her will appointed the fund (only in part raised and invested); a bill was afterwards filed against her representatives to revive the administration suit:—Held, that so far as the object of the suit was to make the appointed fund contributory to the husband's assets, the appointees were necessary parties; but as to the remainder of the fund they were not necessary parties; and they being very numerous, held that, as in the case of defendants to a suit, they might be represented by some on behalf of the rest. Milbank v. Collier, 1 Coll. C. C. 237.

In an action against an executor, the plaintiff, as administrator of W., deceased, who was tenant for life under the testator's will, claimed a declaration that a sum of money, which the defendant had raised for payment of debts by mortgage of part of the testator's estate, and had subsequently paid off out of income received by him during W.'s life, was payable out of the corpus of the mortgaged estate. The plaintiff also claimed repayment of the money, an account, and, if and so far as necessary, administration of the trusts of the will. The defence was that the defendant had acted on what he believed to be the true construction of the will, and that the question at issue was one of construction, which affected the estate of W. and the devisees in remainder, and ought not to be decided in the absence of the latter:—Held, that the remaindermen were not necessary parties. Ward, In re. Bemment v. Balls, 47 L. J., Ch. 781.

A defendant to a suit for the administration of an intestate's estate was entitled, in right of his wife, to a share of the intestate's estate. He had become insolvent. The administrator of the intestate received notice of an order from the Insolvent Court, requiring him to retain the money to which the husband was so entitled until further order; and he was ordered to shew cause why the money should not be paid over to the provisional assignee of the court:—Held, that the assignee was a necessary party to the suit. Whatford v. Moore, 17 L. J., Ch. 129; 12 Jur. 47.

In a case where the parties entitled in default of appointment under a settlement were not parties to the suit:—Held, that the court could make no effective decree in the suit to charge the fund under the settlement. Innes v. Sayer, 3 Mac. & G. 606; 21 L. J., Ch. 190; 16 Jur. 21. Affirming 7 Hare, 377; 18 L. J., Ch. 274; 13 Jur. 402.

It is perfectly settled, as a general rule, that a pecuniary legatee is not a necessary or proper party to a bill for an account of the personal estate. It is the duty of the executors to protect the estate against improper demands. But where a question directly occurred between the residuary legatee and a pecuniary legatee, which it was found impossible to determine in a general administration suit, and a suit was afterwards instituted by the residuary legatee against the pecuniary legatee, and the executor to determine it, a demurrer by the pecuniary legatee, on the ground that he had improperly been made a party, was, under the special circumstances, overruled. Hertford (Marquis) v. De Zichi (Countess), 9 Beav. 11; 15 L. J., Ch. 58.

Pecuniary legatees, whose legacies are given in terms so ambiguous as to require a construction in that respect to be put on the will, are not proper parties to a suit for the administration of the estate of the testator. Crackenthorp v. Jouning, 19 L. J., Ch. 133; 14 Jur. 360.

Where, in the administration of an estate, under a will, a question arises between specific or pecuniary legatees and the parties taking the residue as to what is comprised in a gift of a specific portion of the property, the specific or pecuniary legatees are not, therefore, necessary parties to a suit for the administration of the estate. Girdlestone v. Creed, 8 Hare, 208.

When a bill was filed by three children against their father's surviving partner and executor, charging him with wilful neglect and default, and praying for the administration of their father's estate; for an account of the partnership business; and for an injunction to restrain the defendant from dealing with the partnership property:—Held, that a demurrer on the ground that a fourth child (out of the jurisdiction) was not a party to the suit, and for multifariousness, must be overruled. Pointon v. Pointon, 25 L. T. 294.

Z. T. bequeathed certain leasehold property to which she became entitled by will to R. A., his executors, administrators and assigns absolutely during the residue of her term therein, subject to the payment of the rent and the performance of the covenants reserved and contained in the lease under which she held the premises; and as to her residuary personal estate, subject to the payment of her debts, funeral, testamentary and other expenses, she gave, devised and bequeathed the same to J. B., his executors, administrators and assigns absolutely. The lease of the premises bequeathed to R. A. contained a covenant by the lessor to repair, and at the time of testatrix's decease dilapidations had taken place:—Held, in this case, that R. A. was rightly made a party to a suit for the administration of the testatrix's estate; and his representative not having been served with the petition of rehearing on which the above decision was given, time was allowed her to present a petition of appeal to have the matter reheard. Hickling v. Boyer, 3 Mac. & G. 635; 21 L. J., Ch. 388; 16 Jur. 137.

A person to whom a legacy or an annuity is given to be paid out of the residue, after the death of the legatee for life of such residue, is not a necessary party to a suit for administration of the estate brought by legatees of aliquot shares of the ultimate residue. Fisk v. Norton, 2 Hare, 381.

Every legatee whose legacy is charged on real estate ought to be before the court. Morse v. Sadler, 1 Cox, 352. And see Bayly v. Cumming 10 Ir. Eq. R. 405.

At this day, demurrer would not be allowed because a legatee, having a legacy charged on the land, was not a party to the suit. Wallace v. Smith, Beat. 386. See Garrett v. Hayter, 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 197.

It is not a universal principle that all persons having equitable charges on land must be defendants to suits relating to it; there are many cases in which the court can sufficiently protect such interests without loading the estate by such defendants. Formerly, every legatee having a charge, was a necessary party to a suit for administering a real estate, but subsequently the practice was reformed. The reason of that alteration: the equitable charge of the legatee remains on the land till released; the will gives notice of it to every purchaser, who may prevent the purchase-money being paid out of court till all charges are released. Id. 385.

But see now R. S. C., Ord. XVI. r. 34.

If a person entitled to an annuity, payable out of the testator's personal estate and the proceeds of the sale of his real estate, files a bill for the administration of the whole of the testator's property, all the other annuitants and legatees must be made parties, notwithstanding the receipts of the trustees are made sufficient discharges. Miller v. Huddlestone, 13 Sim. 467; 7 Jur. 504.

Testator, having given the residue of his real and personal estate upon certain trusts, for the benefit of his children and their issue, in default of such issue gave several legacies:—Held, that the legacies were pecuniary, and that the legatees were not necessary parties to a suit for administering the estate. Pidgeley v. Rawling, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 552; 6 Jur. 335.

A married woman invested a sum of 525*l.* stock, out of moneys which she had as pin money, to her separate use, in the names of trustees, in confidence that the fund should be held by them in trust for such persons as she should direct or appoint. She afterwards made a will, giving the interest of the money she had in the stocks to her servant maid for life, and afterwards to the poor of certain parishes. The wife having died, administration, with the will of his deceased wife annexed, was granted to her husband. To a bill filed by the husband alone, as such administrator, against the surviving trustee of the stock, the defendant by her answer suggested that the legatees under the will were necessary parties; but the court, without requiring the legatees to be parties to the suit, ordered payment of the stock to the plaintiff, with costs. Musters v. Wright, 2 De G. & Sm. 777.

—— Residuary Legatees.]—In a bill against the executor either by creditors or legatees, it is not necessary to make the residuary legatee a party. Lawson v. Barker, 1 Bro. C. C. 303.

Residuary legatees not necessary parties to suit against executors. Brown v. Dowthwaite, 1 Madd. 446.

Some of the residuary legatees under a will may file a claim against the executors, without making the other residuary legatees parties; but the others ought to be summoned before the master. Watson v. Young, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 114; 15 Jur. 162.

A bill, having for its object, with other things, a general administration of the testator's estate, cannot proceed in the absence of the representative of a deceased unpaid residuary legatee. Lowry v. Fulton, 9 Sim. 104; 7 L. J., Ch. 158.

A. and B. having been executors, and A. having survived B., the representatives of A., many years after the testator's death, filed a bill against the representatives of B. to recover assets of the testator alleged to have been possessed by B. The bill did not state that any debts or legacies of the testator were unpaid, or that there was any residuary legatee, or the plaintiff or any other person was beneficially interested in the assets. There was, however, in fact, a residuary legatee, and the defendants, by their answer, objected that such legatee ought to have been made a party to the suit:—Held, that the objection was valid. Adams v. Barry, 2 Coll. C. C. 285.

Where a testator in his lifetime conveyed to trustees the mines and minerals under certain lands, upon trust for himself (the testator) for life, and after his death upon trust for sale, and out of the proceeds:—1st, to pay all his debts, so as to discharge his real and personal estate therefrom; 2ndly, to apply 3,000*l.* to the purposes of his will; and lastly, to divide the surplus amongst certain persons therein named; the persons to whom the surplus is thus given are proper parties to a creditors' suit seeking to follow the real as well as the personal estate of the testator; but the court may, in its discretion, make a decree for administration in their absence. Savage v. Lane, 6 Hare, 32; 17 L. J., Ch. 89; 11 Jur. 1053.

—— Appeal by Residuary Legatee.]—Where a person who claims as a creditor against a testator's estate has obtained an order for the administration of the estate against the executor, it is not open to the person entitled under the will to the residue of the estate to appeal against the order, as the residuary legatee could not be made a party to the suit, and there is no power to give to a person who could not be made a party to the action leave to appeal against the judgment. Youngs, In re, Doggett v. Revett, Vollum v. Revett, 30 Ch. D. 421; 53 L. T. 682; 33 W. R. 880—C. A.

—— Assignees of Business.]—Previously to the marriage of A. two settlements were executed whereby certain lands and moneys were conveyed and assigned on certain trusts. A. after his marriage became a partner in an iron business, under articles, giving the executor or administrator of a deceased partner the option of becoming a partner in the place of his testator or intestate. A. died intestate, and his widow and administratrix having elected to become a partner, assigned A.'s share to two persons on trust to pay his debts. A bill having been filed for the administration of his estate, and asking for the execution of the trusts of the two settlements, was demurred to by the assignees of A.'s share in the partnership who had been made defendants:—Held, that they were proper parties to the suit. Coates v. Legard, 44 L. J., Ch. 201; L. R. 19 Eq. 56; 31 L. T. 625; 23 W. R. 40.

—— Representative of Insolvent Party.]—An allegation in a bill that a person who would have been a necessary party was declared insolvent, and died without leaving any assets for payment of his debts, is sufficient to dispense with his representative being made a party. Seddon v. Connell, 10 Sim. 79; 9 L. J., Ch. 341.

—— Representative of Non-appearing Defendant.]—The personal representative of a deceased defendant, who had been served with copy-bill, but had not appeared, is a necessary party. Hardy v. Hull, 14 Sim. 21; 8 Jur. 607.

—— Agent.]—If one of two persons named trustees and executors, disclaims and renounces, and afterwards possesses himself of assets, as the agent of the other, who has accepted the trust and proved the will, he does not thereby become accountable as a trustee and executor, and ought not to be made a party to a suit for the administration of the estate. Dove v. Everard, 1 Russ. & M. 231 ; Taml. 376.

Trustees authorised to carry on a trade, permitted it to be carried on by agents :—Held, that the agents were not necessary parties to a bill for the administration of the estate. Ling v. Colman, 10 Beav. 370.

—— Other Persons.]—Some of the next of kin of an intestate filed a bill against the other next of kin, the administrators and the parties claiming to be heirs-at-law, stating that the intestate had entered into contracts for the sale of certain of his real estates, which contracts, at the time of his death, and still, were incomplete, but were valid contracts ; and further stating that the administrator and another of the next of kin, who claimed to be his co-heirs-at-law, had agreed that the proceeds of the estates, whether the contracts were or were not completed by the purchasers, should be treated and be divisible as personalty, and alleging that the administrator had ever since been in possession of such estates, and had received the rents, and praying an account of those receipts, and that the amount might be invested and secured for the benefit of the persons entitled. A demurrer by the administrator, on the ground that the purchasers were not made parties to the bill, was allowed. Lumsden v. Fraser, 1 Myl. & C. 589. Affirming 6 L. J., Ch. 81 ; 7 Sim. 555.

Where a legatee filed a bill for an account against the trustees of the testator's will, making an alleged purchaser of a part of the testator's estate a party, the bill alleging alternately that the sale by the trustees was a colourable and fictitious sale, or that if any such sale was made, the defendant (one of the trustees) was himself the real purchaser, and that such purchase by him, being a trustee, could not be sustained :—Held, on a demurrer by the alleged purchaser for multifariousness and want of equity, that he was wrongly made a party. Marshall v. Gilliard, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 483 ; 14 L. T. 618 ; 14 W. R. 830.

In a suit by plaintiffs for the administration of the estate of an intestate, they claimed to be the next of kin, as being the children of A. B., a sister of the intestate, but stated that A. B. had had other children, who, by reason of illegitimacy, had no interest. The administrator, by his answer, submitted that these other children ought to be made parties, but did not state that they had made a claim. The cause being set down for hearing, on an objection for want of parties, the objection was ordered to stand for the hearing. Pike v. Barber, 19 L. J., Ch. 373 ; 15 Jur. 277.

Though the person is come of age, during whose infancy the will appointed an executor dur. min., yet, if he has not collected in the whole estate, he must be brought before the court. Glass v. Oxenham, 2 Atk. 121. S. P., Attwood v. Hawkins, Rep. t. Finch 113.

A testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees on trust to sell, and to stand possessed of the proceeds, upon trust for three infant daughters ; and in the event of the death of all of them under twenty-one, or before marriage, in trust for those who, under the Statute of Distributions, would be entitled :—Held, in an administration suit by the infants by their next friend, the mother of the testator, and by her as co-plaintiff in her own right, that though she might be an unnecessary, she was not an improper party. Roberts v. Roberts, 2 Ph. 534 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 174 ; 12 Jur. 148.

When it is ascertained that there are prior judgment creditors who will not come in and prove their demands under a decree, they ought to be made parties to the suit by supplemental bill, that their rights may be bound by the decree for a sale. It is not the practice in Ireland to make subsequent judgment creditors parties to a bill for a sale. Johns v. French, 1 Hog, 450. And see Tyler v. Manson, 5 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 34.

When a defendant to a suit answers and then dies, it is irregular to reply to his answer without making his personal representatives parties. Deeks v. Stanhope, 2 Eq. Rep. 1268.

Where a plaintiff at his option may either file his bill against A. and B., or against A. alone, and he takes the former course, and B. afterwards dies, he cannot, at the hearing, by waiving relief against B.'s estate, proceed against A. alone, in the absence of B.'s representatives. London Gas Light Co. v. Spottiswoode, 14 Beav. 264.

—— Intervention of Party interested.] — Executors carried on the business of their testator after his death in partnership with other persons, but the firm ultimately became bankrupt. An action was commenced for the administration of the testator's estate, and at a later date a banking company, which had made advances to beneficiaries under the will and taken mortgages of their shares, applied by petition for leave to intervene in the action and obtain payment of their debt :—Held, that as the banking company were not creditors of the testator, they had taken the most convenient course in applying to intervene by petition. Dimmock, In re, Dimmock v. Dimmock, 52 L. T. 494.

A decree having been made for the administration of an estate, another suit was afterwards instituted against the executrix to establish an adverse claim against a portion of the assets. The executrix being abroad, and neglecting to defend the second suit, it was about to be taken pro confesso. The court gave leave to the plaintiff in the administration suit to intervene and defend the second suit on behalf of the estate, upon payment of costs and giving an indemnity. Olding v. Poulter, 23 Beav. 143.

Administration of Real Estate—Real Representative.] — A legal personal representative cannot alone institute a suit to administer the real estate of an intestate, for the purpose of having it applied towards the payment of his debts, under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104. Catley v. Sampson, 33 Beav. 561 ; 34 L. J., Ch. 96 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 993 ; 10 L. T. 519 ; 12 W. R. 927.

One seised of property in fee mortgaged it for a term, and afterwards died intestate and without heirs :—Held, that his administratrix could not maintain a suit to redeem the mortgage, for the purpose of making the property available for the payment of the intestate's debts. Ib.

—— Executrix of Executrix—Right to Sue in respect of.]—An executrix charged with the payment of an annuity to the testator's daughter's separate use, issuing out of real and personal estate, deposits the title deeds of a descended estate of which she and the executrix were co-heiresses, and a mortgage deed, with bankers for moneys advanced partly for the testator's estate and partly for herself, and joins in a promissory note to secure the sum borrowed. Upon her death, and an administration suit to administer both estates by an incumbrancer on the annuity, the executrix of the executrix files a bill for delivery up of the deeds. Four questions arose :—First, whether she could sue ; secondly, if so, whether as to realty ; thirdly, whether creditors could follow the deeds of a descended estate ; and fourthly, what part of the borrowed money was recoverable from the testatrix's estate :—Held, that under the new practice no bill being dismissible for misjoinder, and this case not extending to that point under the new practice, the plaintiff could sue ; and also as to real estate, in her representative character, and to carry out a decree. That the doctrine as to alienees of real estate did not apply to a deposit only ; and an inquiry directed as to the money borrowed. Declaration for delivery up of the deeds of the descended estate without prejudice to the right to the money. Carter v. Saunders, 2 Drew. 248 ; 2 W. R. 325.

—— Owner in Fee—Defeasible Interest.]—Where a person is seised of an estate in fee, defeasible by a conditional limitation, shifting use, or executory devise, the inheritance is not represented in this court merely by the person who has the defeasible estate. Goodess v. Williams, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 595 ; 7 Jur. 1123.

—— Receiver.]—A person appointed by will a receiver of the testator's real estates, with a salary, is a proper party to a suit for the administration of those estates. Consett v. Bell, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 569 ; 11 L. J., Ch. 401 ; 6 Jur. 869.

—— Heir and Next of Kin—Conversion.]—A question between the heir-at-law and next of kin as to conversion of real estate cannot be disposed of in a suit in which neither of those parties is plaintiff. Rigby v. Strangways, 2 Ph. 175 ; 10 Jur. 998.

—— Sale—Tenant in Tail.]—Tenant in tail coming into esse before the sale of real estate should be made a party, because he is interested in having the account correctly taken, but tenant in quasi tail of a chattel real need not be made a party to a bill for the administration of assets, under which there is had a sale of the chattel real, because it could be got at law, by proceeding against the executor. Clanmorris (Lord) v. Bingham, 1 Moll. 514.

Suit for Recovery of Assets.]—Bill by a creditor against B. for a discovery of the estate of H., supposed to be in his hands. Demurrer, for that no executor or administrator was a party, allowed. Conway v. Stroude, 2 Freem. 188.

A demurrer allowed to a bill brought against plaintiff, who was supposed to have some of the deceased's effects in his hands, because there was no executor or administrator party ; but if none administer, plaintiff as creditor may. Ib.

A bill is not demurrable because the legatees of a testator join with his executor in suing for a debt due to his estate. Rhodes v. Warburton, 6 Sim. 617.

Where representative is contesting in Spiritual Court, bill for discovery of assets, without making administrator a party, may be brought. Plunket v. Penson, 2 Atk. 51.

Plea that representatives of personal estate were not before court, allowed, though suspected to be for delay merely. Ib.

Administrator, though insolvent, is a necessary party to bill for discovery of assets. Ashurst v. Eyre, 2 Atk. 51.

If it becomes necessary in the course of an administration suit to take proceedings to set aside dealings with the testator, the executor, and not a beneficiary, is the proper person to take the necessary proceedings, unless he has been guilty of misconduct, or refuses to conduct them. Harrison v. Richards, L. R. 1 Ch. 473 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 871 ; 15 L. T. 137 ; 14 W. R. 823.

The executor, and not a legatee, is the proper person to sue for outstanding assets belonging to the testator's estate. Walker v. Walker, 25 L. T. 481 ; 20 W. R. 162.

When an executor refuses to file such a bill the proper course for a legatee is to apply for leave to sue in the executor's name, instead of filing an independent bill. Ib. S. P., Stainton v. Carron Co., 18 Beav. 146 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 299 ; 18 Jur. 137 ; 2 Eq. R. 466 ; 2 W. R. 176.

A., a creditor, and B., the administrator, with the will annexed of a testator, cannot join as co-plaintiffs in a bill against C., who holds part of the testator's assets. Barnes v. Lever, 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 165.

A. & Son were employed as the solicitors and agents of B., in the management of certain trust affairs relating to the estate of W., deceased. A bill being filed by B. against the representatives of A. deceased, alleging that no account had been rendered to him by A. & Son of their receipts and payments in respect of the trust affairs, and seeking to charge A.'s estate in respect thereof :—Held, that the representative of W. was not a necessary party to the suit. Bradstock v. Whatley, 7 Jur. 409.

Testator appointed persons residing in India and Scotland his executors. Will was not proved in England. Executors in India remitted sum of money to agents in England, and creditor of testator filed bill against agents, praying an account and payment in meanwhile of the money to the accountant-general. Demurrable because no personal representative of testator was made party. Semble. Lowe v. Fairlie, 2 Madd. 101.

Where a bill alleged that the defendant, who was the consignee of a testator in Jamaica, received various consignments, &c., and received and paid various sums of money, on account of the testator's estate, until his death, and that after the testator's death the defendant continued to receive consignments, &c., on account of the testator's executors or his estate, in the same manner as before :—Held, that this allegation was not sufficient to render the executor of the testator in Jamaica an accounting party, and that a demurrer for misjoinder might be sustained by such executor. Pringle v. Crooks, 3 Y. & C. 666 ; 9 L. J., Ex. Eq. 3 ; 3 Jur. 1074.

A sole surviving executrix, who was beneficially interested in a moiety of the estate, filed a bill against a person who had received part of that estate, and was abroad :—Held, that the representative of the party beneficially interested in the other moiety must be before the court. But the person who has obtained letters of administration to such party from the Prerogative

Court will be considered a sufficient representative, though it appears that the deceased left a will which has been proved in a foreign country. Price v. Dewhurst, 6 L. J., Ch. 226.

By a settlement dated the 19th April, 1815, made on the marriage of Sir J. W. with Miss J. D., certain personal property, consisting of money in the funds and money out on mortgage, &c. (all belonging to the lady), were settled to the general appointment, by deed, attested by two witnesses, of the lady herself, during the joint lives of herself and her husband, with his consent, and after his decease to her general appointment; and subject to this power, the trusts were for the lady for life, to her separate use but without any restraint on anticipation, with remainders over. The marriage took place, and in the same year Sir J. W. made his will, bequeathing and devising all his property, real and personal, to his wife, Lady W., and making her his sole executrix. The trustees of the settlement never acted in any way previous to the institution of this suit, and the funds were never transferred into their names, but continued standing in Lady W.'s name. After the marriage, Lady W., who resided with her husband at a distance from London, executed several powers of attorney, to enable her bankers in London to sell out various parts of the funds in settlement, which were sold out accordingly, and paid into Sir J. W.'s name. The bank powers of attorney required to be executed with the same ceremonies as were required by the marriage settlement to be observed in executing the power of appointment there. Various sums of mortgage-money, also in the settlement, were from time to time paid off, and the amounts paid in to his name, invested also in his name in the purchase of consols, and in this manner about 8,000*l.* worth of different stock was in 1821 standing in the name of Sir J. W., and all cheques for current expenses were drawn by Sir J. W., which, in accordance with Lady W.'s written request, were honoured by her London bankers out of her separate account. On the other hand, Sir J. W. suffered a legacy of 2,000*l.* to be received and placed to the separate account of his wife. In 1826, Sir J. W. purchased, at his wife's request, the estate of B., where he habitually resided with his wife. The purchase was taken in the name of Sir J. W. alone in fee. The tenure was customary freehold. Sir J. W. died in 1844 intestate, the will of 1815 not passing after purchased estate, and without any heir-at-law. The present bill was brought after his decease by the personal representative of the last surviving trustee of the settlement of 1815, against those claiming under the lord of the fee by escheat to establish a lien on the lands for the amount of the purchase-money. Lady W., surviving her husband, had formally exercised her power of appointment in favour of E., whom she also made her executrix. E. died, leaving B. her executor:—It was held that B. was a necessary party to the suit. Hughes v. Wells, 16 Jur. 927.

Action for Legacy or Share of Estate—Personal Representative.]—If the legatee of a term sue for it, he must make the executor a party; it is not sufficient to charge that he assents to the legacy. Moor v. Blagrave, 1 Ch. Ca. 277.

A. gave his real estate to B., and his personal to B. and C., his executors, who proved will and acted. B. dies. To bill brought for legacy, charged upon real and personal estate, B.'s executors are necessary parties. Williams v. Williams, 9 Mod. 299.

Legacy to A. at twenty-one. A. went abroad when a boy, and had not been since heard of, and if living must now be seventy-seven years of age. His personal representatives apply for payment of his legacy, with accumulations to them. Inquiry directed if living, and whether he ever attained twenty-one years. The representatives of the testator, who died seventy years ago, held not necessary parties. Hudson v. Twining, Tam. 315.

A. being entitled to a legacy of 5,000*l.*, the executor and residuary legatee misrepresented the amount to be 4,000*l.*, and for this sum the residuary legatee gave his bond to A. The executor having paid all the debts and other legacies, handed over all that remained to the residuary legatee, and which was more than sufficient to satisfy A.'s demand:—Held, that a bill might be sustained by A. against the residuary legatee and the representatives of the executor, for recovering the extra 1,000*l.* and interest, without making the representatives of the testator a party. Beasley v. Kenyon, 3 Beav. 544.

A. bequeathed a reversionary interest, expectant on his wife's death, in a sum of stock to B. B. bequeathed it to C., and C. bequeathed it to D., who, on the death of A.'s wife, filed a bill against the trustees, to have the stock transferred to him, alleging that the executors of A., and B., and C. had successively assented to the bequests:—Held, that the executors were not necessary parties. Smith v. Brookshank, 7 Sim. 18; 3 L. J., Ch. 226.

A suit was instituted by legatees whose interest (upon the happening of a contingency) might vest in the next of kin, against the executors alone. The next of kin were brought before the court by supplemental bill:—Held, that the executors were not improper parties to such supplemental bill. Parker v. Parker, 9 Beav. 144.

A party who files his bill to obtain the benefit of an interest accruing by intestacy, must not only make the personal representative of the intestate a party to the suit, but must charge that, in fact, there was a surplus of the intestate's estate, after payment of all debts and incumbrances. Stevens v. Frost, 2 Y. & C. 297; 6 L. J., Ex. Eq. 41.

Bill, by one of two next of kin, to recover from the executors of a testator funds as to which it was alleged that he died intestate, and which, in that case, they had erroneously applied. The defendants, by their answer, said that there was another person, a next of kin. After the cause was at issue, the plaintiff filed a supplemental bill against the other next of kin alone:—Held, that the defendants, the executors, ought to have an opportunity of stating upon the pleadings any case they might have as against the other next of kin, and that therefore the executors ought to be parties to the supplemental bill. Jones v. Howells, 2 Hare, 342; 12 L. J., Ch. 365. Affirmed, 15 L. J., Ch. 115.

Bill against two executors; one of them is attached for want of an answer, and discharged. The cause may be heard on supplemental bill against him taken pro confesso. Hughson v. Cookson, 3 Y. & C. 578; 8 L. J., Ex. Eq. 68.

A person entitled to a share of a sum of money, which is due as a debt from a testator, cannot maintain a bill for his own share, unless he sues on behalf of himself, and all other parties interested in the debt, or makes those other persons parties to the suit. Alexander v. Mullins, 2 Russ. & M. 568; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 3.

To an information on the behalf of a charity to discover the profits of lands, for the satisfaction of a legacy charged thereon, the executor must be a party. Att.-Gen. v. Twisden, Rep. t. Finch, 336.

—— Assignee of Legacy.]—The assignee of a legatee is a necessary party to a suit brought by the legatee for the recovery of the legacy, where the assignment took place before the institution of the suit. Campbell v. Dickens, 4 Y. & C. 17.

A suit was instituted to administer and ascertain the residue of an estate, and one of the residuary legatees, after the bill was filed, and before he was served with the subpœna to appear and answer, assigned his share. The assignee was held to be a necessary party to the suit. Humble v. Shore, 3 Hare, 119.

—— Devisees.]—Devise for seven years on condition that devisee should within the time pay devisor's debts, remainder to plaintiff at twenty-one. On a bill to compel payment of debts, or to be let into possession, other parties to whom the estate is devised until plaintiff attained twenty-one, are necessary parties. Pigg v. Coldwell, Rep. t. Finch, 278.

All residuary devisees must be parties. Parsons v. Neville, 3 Bro. C. C. 365.

But see now R. S. C., Ord. XVI. r. 35.

—— Co-Legatees.]—Where a legacy is given to two, one cannot sue alone for it. If the residue be given to divers, they must all be parties; but when legacies are given to divers persons, each alone may sue for his own legacy. Haycock v. Haycock, 2 Ch. Ca. 124.

In a suit for a legacy it is not necessary to make other legatees parties, although from a deficiency of assets all the legatees must abate. Att.-Gen. v. Ryder, 2 Ch. Ca. 178.

To a bill by a party entitled to a share of a legacy given in common, the co-legatees are not necessary parties. Hughson v. Cookson, 3 Y. & C. 578; 8 L. J., Ex. Eq. 68.

Where a legacy was given to a feme covert, "to her sole and separate use, and in case she died to be equally divided amongst her children"; and she died after the testator, and one of the children brought his bill against the executor to recover his share, the other children not being parties to the cause:—Held, that the plaintiff had a right to file this bill, and he was decreed his share accordingly. Turnley v. Kelly, Wallis, 311.

M., being the executor who proved R.'s will, &c., died, having by his own will appointed two executors, both of whom proved his will, and possessed themselves of his assets to an amount more than sufficient to pay all his debts. One of M.'s executors died, and the surviving executor admitted assets. In a suit by R.'s children for their shares of 1,500*l.*, bequeathed for division amongst them by R., against the surviving executor of M.:—Held, that in this suit all the children of R. entitled to the 1,500*l.* should have been before the court, and one of them having been left out, that the suit was defective. Daly v. Kirwan, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 156. See also Popham v. Baldwin, 2 Jones, 320.

Administrator of an executor, who was likewise a legatee by the will of the testator, exhibited his bill against the other executor. A demurrer, for that the defendant's brothers (also legatees, and charged by the bill as combining with the defendant), were not parties, was allowed. Galle v. Greenhill, Rep. t. Finch, 202.

Bill for an aliquot share of an ascertained fund:—Held, defective in point of parties for want of a representative of the person entitled to the other aliquot share. Hunt v. Peacock, 16 L. J., Ch. 497; 11 Jur. 555.

A testator having lent to B. 600*l.* on his promissory note, gave it with other property to trustees, his son-in-law being one, to pay the interest to his daughter for her life, for her separate use, with remainder to his son-in-law for his life, with remainder to their children equally. The son-in-law, who alone proved the will, was induced by B., in whose debt he was, to hand over the note to him. Within a day of the expiration of twenty years, the daughter and one of her children who had attained twenty-one filed a bill for the recovery of this sum. The bill was demurred to on the ground that the other children ought to have been made parties, that the Statute of Limitations was a bar, and that the bill did not allege that the legacies had been paid, or that the executor had assented. The demurrer was allowed as to want of parties and lapse of time, with liberty to amend; but the other grounds of demurrer were untenable. Rolfe v. Gregory, 31 L. J., Ch. 710; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 606; 7 L. T. 19; 10 W. R. 711.

—— Residuary Legatees.] — A pecuniary legacy to each of three children, and the residue to be equally divided among them; to a bill by one legatee for the pecuniary legacy, it is not necessary to make the others parties, but if the bill is for the residuary share, the others must be parties. Dunstall v. Rabbet, Rep. t. Finch, 243. And see Atwood v. Hawkins, Rep. t. Finch, 113.

In a suit for a moiety of a residue, the other persons interested must be before the court. Sherrit v. Birch, 3 Bro. C. C. 229.

Generally, a residuary legatee must bring before the court all persons interested in the residue; exception where not necessary or convenient. Cockburn v. Thompson, 16 Ves. 328. And see now R. S. C., Ord. XVI. r. 33.

Residuary legatee need not be a party to a bill for specific legacy. Wainwright v. Waterman, 1 Ves. J. 311.

One of a numerous class of residuary legatees permitted to sue on behalf, &c., in the absence of the greater portion of them. Harvey v. Harvey, 4 Beav. 215.

Some of the residuary legatees under a will may file a claim against the executors without making the other residuary legatees parties, but the others ought to be summoned before the master. Watson v. Young, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 114; 15 Jur. 162.

To a suit by three out of four residuary legatees to recover three-fourths of a sum of stock which the executors had omitted to get in, and which had been transferred to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, under the statute 56 Geo. 3, c. 60, the legatee entitled to the other fourth part of the stock is a necessary party. Hunt v. Peacock, 6 Hare, 361; 17 L. J., Ch. 163; 12 Jur. 154.

In a suit by the administratrix of a deceased child claiming, under a covenant by the father, an equal share with his other children of his real and personal estate, against his devisees and executors, and, for that purpose, praying that his residuary estate might be ascertained, the suit not being framed as a creditors' suit, the residuary legatees under the will of the father are necessary parties. Jones v. How, 7 Hare, 267; 17 L. J., Ch. 369; 12 Jur. 227.

Where a residuary legatee and next of kin had been served with a copy of the bill in a legatee's suit, and had neglected to enter an appearance within the proper time, leave to enter a common appearance was refused. Rigby v. Strangways, 10 Jur. 998.

In a case where the parties were very numerous, and the expenses of attending taking the accounts very great, an application, after decree, to exclude a number of parties interested in the residue from attending the taking such accounts, and the further proceedings, except at their own expense, was refused. Day v. Croft, 14 Beav. 29; 20 L. J., Ch. 423.

—— Next of Kin.]—Bill by a legatee wrongly described by the testator, for his legacy; one of the next of kin being a party, a decree was made without requiring the other next of kin, who were numerous, to be brought before the court. Bradwin v. Harpur, Ambl. 374.

Where property is bequeathed to A. for life, and after his decease to such persons as shall then be the testator's next of kin, upon a bill filed for the protection of the property, the next of kin of the testator living at the time of filing the bill must be made parties to the suit. Wardell v. Claxton, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 265. S. C., nom. Wardle v. Hargreaves, 11 L. J., Ch. 126; 6 Jur. 478.

In order to enable the court to adjudicate upon the right to a residue of personal estate as between the next of kin as a class and a party claiming under a will, it is not necessary that all the next of kin should be present, provided the court be satisfied that some of them are parties to the record. Caldecott v. Caldecott, Cr. & Ph. 103.

If in an administration suit instituted by the next of kin of a testator at his death, the question is whether the testator, by the words "my next of kin," meant his next of kin at his death or at a future period, not only the executor, but also the person or persons who may by possibility be the next of kin at that period, ought to be made defendants. Urquhart v. Urquhart, 13 Sim. 613; 8 Jur. 161.

Bill by parties claiming as next of kin against executors. Report that other persons not parties were the sole next of kin. Exceptions by the plaintiffs to the report. Objection that the plaintiffs, before the exceptions were argued, must make parties the persons found next of kin by the master overruled. Topham v. Lightbody, 4 Hare, 312; 9 Jur. 1055.

A testator gave his real estate to trustees upon trust to lay out the rents, during twenty-one years from his death, in the purchase of freehold or copyhold lands, and to convey them at the end of that time to the person then answering the description of the testator's heir. The personal estate was bequeathed to the same trustees, to lay out in land for the same purpose. In a suit instituted shortly after the testator's death, by a person claiming to be the heir-at-law, for the administration of the testator's estate, it was held that the next of kin were necessary parties. Ring v. Jarman, 15 Jur. 942.

The ultimate limitation in a marriage settlement of a fund belonging to the husband was "for the next of kin or personal representatives of the husband, in a due course of administration according to the Statute of Distributions." The husband left his wife surviving, and A. B., his next of kin, was a feme covert. In another suit the fund had been treated as part of the residuary estate of the husband, and had been ordered to be paid over to two charities, who were residuary legatees. A bill being filed by the representatives of A. B., the next of kin claiming the fund:—Held, that the next of kin of the wife of the settlor and the charities were necessary parties, but that the representatives of the deceased husband of A. B., who had administered to his wife, were not necessary parties to the suit. Kilner v. Leech, 7 Beav. 202.

The ultimate limitation of a legacy was to a party's "personal representatives or next of kin":—Held, that both classes must be made parties to a suit affecting the fund. Salmon v. Anderson, 9 Beav. 445.

Bill by four of the next of kin of an intestate, for the administration of his estate, on behalf of themselves and all others the next of kin. The bill alleged that the next of kin were very numerous, but no evidence of that fact was adduced. Upon an affidavit, under the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 35, that the next of kin were upwards of twenty in number, the court made the usual administration decree. Smith v. Leathart, 20 L. J., Ch. 202.

The heir-at-law of a testator, who was also a legatee under his will, filed a bill against the executors and trustees, which prayed for the execution of the trusts under the direction of the court, for a declaration of his rights and interests and of all other parties in the real and personal estate, for the usual account and for the general administration of the estate and for inquiries. The only defendants to the bill were the four executors and trustees of the will and J. S., an infant, to whom the real estate was devised in reversion expectant on a life estate. The bill alleged that several questions had arisen as to the rights of the parties and of the heir-at-law and next of kin; that it was believed that S. and C. were the testator's next to kin, and that it was intended to serve them with notice of any decree which might be made. But S. and C. were not made defendants. J. S. demurred on the ground of want of equity, and also that it appeared, from the plaintiff's own shewing, that the next of kin of the testator in the bill named were necessary parties, but yet that they were not made parties, nor any persons or person having a common interest with the next of kin; but the demurrer was overruled, with costs. Snepp v. Snepp, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 202; 6 W. R. 355.

And see now R. S. C., Ord. XVI. r. 33.

Action for Specific Performance—Contract to Purchase Land—Devisees.]—Suit for specific performance of contract to purchase freehold; defendant had paid several large sums on account of purchase-money, leaving a considerable portion still due; he died when cause was at issue, leaving real and personal estate to infant children. Plaintiff revived against executors only:—Held, that infant devisees were necessary parties. Suit ordered to stand over to amend, in that respect, by supplemental bill. Townsend v. Champernowne, 9 Price, 130; 23 R. R. 651.

—— Sale under Power in Mortgage.]—An equitable mortgagee, having taken from the administratrix of the mortgagor a legal mortgage containing a power of sale, and having filed his bill to enforce specific performance of a contract for sale under the power, the court declined to entertain the suit in the absence of the administratrix and the parties beneficially interested under the mortgagor. Sanders v. Richards, 2 Coll. C. C. 568.

Action for Breach of Trust—Representative of Co-Trustee.]—The representatives of a deceased trustee are necessary parties to a bill against the surviving trustees. Wilson v. Broughton, 7 L. J., Ch. 120.

Where the personal representative of one of several trustees, who had committed a joint breach of trust, was not before the court, a decree was pronounced upon an undertaking to make him a party. Att.-Gen. v. Newbury Corporation, C. P. Cooper, 72.

A testator devised his residuary real and personal estate to A. and B., on trusts in which B. was beneficially interested. B. received part of the assets, and died:—Held, that a bill could not be maintained by the surviving trustee against the representatives of B. alone to recover the trust fund received by him, but that the bill ought to seek the general administration of the testator's estate. Chancellor v. Morecraft, 11 Beav. 262; 17 L. J., Ch. 11.

A testator bequeathed to A. a legacy in trust for B., for life, with remainder to her children. A. and the three other executors transferred the legacy into the names of A. and B., and B. having survived A. sold it, and applied it to her own use. After B.'s death her child filed a bill against the representatives of A. alone, to make them responsible for the breach of trust:—Held, that the other executors and the representatives of B. were necessary parties. Perry v. Knott, 4 Beav. 179. But see S. C., 5 Beav. 293.

Action against Principal and Sureties.]—If a bill be brought against principal and one surety, and it is admitted that the other is dead insolvent, and there are no personal assets, his representatives need not be made parties. Madox v. Jackson, 3 Atk. 406. And see Angerstein v. Clark, 2 Dick. 738.

Suit by one surety against another for contribution; the representatives of another surety, who died insolvent, ought to be parties, sed quære. Hole v. Harrison, Rep. t. Finch, 15.

Where one of several sureties, defendants, who were jointly and severally bound, died before the final hearing, his representative was considered a necessary party, he having joined his co-sureties in paying a sum of money into court. But for this circumstance, quære. Berwick Corporation v. Murray, 26 L. J., Ch. 201; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1; 5 W. R. 208—L. C.

Foreclosure Action by one Executor the other having absconded.]—One of two executors lent money belonging to his testator's estate, on the security of a charge on real estate, and subsequently became bankrupt and absconded out of the jurisdiction, and it was not known where he was. His co-executor brought a foreclosure action against the borrower, alleging that he had borrowed the money knowing that it belonged to the estate, and that with that knowledge he had given the charge to the solicitors to the estate, one of whom was the absconding executor, and both of whom had left the country together. The absconding executor was not made a party:—Held, that the action was not bad for non-joinder of the absconding executor. Drage v. Hartopp, 54 L. J., Ch. 434; 28 Ch. D. 414; 51 L. T. 902; 33 W. R. 410.

Action by Heir against Widow—Legacy in Lieu of Dower.]—A suit by the heir against the widow to compel her to abide by her election, to take a legacy in lieu of dower, an account of the personal estate was decreed, and the plaintiff had leave to amend, by making the executor a party. Lesquire v. Lesquire, Rep. t. Finch, 134.

Information for Legacy Duty.]—In an information for the payment of legacy duty, whether all the executors living, and the representatives of such as may be dead, are necessary parties, quære. Att.-Gen. v. Hughes, 11 L. J., Ch. 329.

Other Suits.]—Bill stated that an estate purchased in defendant's name was so purchased in trust for plaintiff's ancestor, who paid the purchase-money, and prayed a reconveyance: demurrer, for that the executor of the ancestor was not a party, overruled. Astley v. Fountaine, Rep. t. Finch, 4.

Feme covert, by leave of her husband, took a bond in the name of her servant, but in trust for herself; her husband died, and obligor paid the money to his administrator; to a bill of interpleader against the servant and the feme, the administrator must be a party. Flavell v. Ball, Rep. t. Finch, 330.

A term for 1,000 years was granted, but conditioned to sink and be extinguished upon payment of an annuity for forty-two years. To a bill brought by the heir of the grantor against the heir of the grantee, after the expiration of the forty-two years, for a surrender of the residue of the term, the personal representatives of the grantor need not be parties. Bampfeild v. Vaughan, Rep. t. Finch, 104.

A. covenants for himself and his heirs, that a jointure shall remain to the uses of the settlement. The jointress brings a bill against the heir for a performance. The defendant demurs, for that the executor ought to be made a party, held good. Knight v. Knight, 3 P. W. 331.

The administrator of the executor of a surviving trustee of money charged on real estate:—Held, not to represent the trustee in a suit to raise the money, and a demurrer for want of parties allowed on that ground. Van Reitzenstein v. Magan, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 415.

Share of an intestate's personal estate was assigned to trustees in trust, for the appointees of husband and wife, and in default of appointment, in trust for them and the survivor. Husband and wife sold and assigned this share. Husband died and then wife, having bequeathed all her personal estate to the plaintiff. Husband's personal representative is not a necessary party to a bill by the legatee to set aside the sale. Dowlin v. Macdougall, 1 Sim. & S. 367. S. C., nom. Dowling v. ——, 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 169.

Petition to supersede, presented in the lifetime of the bankrupt, ordered to stand over, on his death, until his personal representatives, or those entitled to take out administration, were served. Leworthy, Ex parte, Roberts, In re, Mont. 54.

A creditors' suit was instituted by A., a specialty creditor, and B., a simple contract creditor, of a debtor deceased, and a decree made in it. A. died, and B. declined to go on with the suit. A supplemental suit was instituted by the representatives of A., to which B. was made a party, and the usual decree in a supplemental suit was made in it. B. afterwards died:—Held, that the representatives of B. were necessary parties to the suit. Williams v. Jones, 13 L. J., Ch. 64.

Where executor of wife has been obliged to pay creditor of wife; on bill for reimbursement against executor of husband, creditor need not be a party. Bertie v. Chesterfield (Lord), 9 Mod. 32.

J. K. bequeathed, amongst other property, a chattel real to his executors in trust, after payment of two legacies, for H. K. for life, remainder to J. H. B. absolutely. H. K. paid off the legacies and certain debts, and died intestate. His personal representative filed a bill against the executors to be repaid these sums out of the general assets of J. K., and for an account, but did not make J. H. B. a defendant by subpœna, but served him with the notice under the 15th General Order. A decree to account having been obtained, the plaintiff filed the present bill, charging that the general assets were deficient, and that the executors had, without consideration, given J. H. B. possession of the chattel real, and making him alone a defendant by subpœna, but serving the executors with the notice under the 15th General Order, and praying that the bill might be taken as an original bill in the nature of a supplemental bill in aid of the original decree, and for the same relief against J. H. B. in respect of the chattel real as was had against the executors in the original cause:—Held, that the bill was demurrable, the executors not having been made parties to it, semble, the relief sought by the two bills was inconsistent; one seeking relief against parties against whom the other waives all relief. Quære, is the service of notice under the 15th General Order a waiver of any right to seek relief against the party. Harpur v. Boyd, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 456.

Real estates were devised to A. for life, remainder to his sons in tail, remainder to B. for life, and powers were given to the tenants for life of jointuring and charging portions for younger children, and of limiting terms to secure them. The will also enabled H., who was the trustee and one of the executors, to enter the estates during minorities, and accumulate the rents which were to be applied in the purchase of land to be settled to the same uses. The personal estate was given to A. absolutely. During A.'s minority, H. entered and accumulated the rents. A., on his marriage, limited terms to trustees to secure a jointure and portion, and settled the residuary personalty, and died leaving a son. B. disputed the son's legitimacy, and took possession. A.'s wife and infant child filed a bill against B., H., and the trustees of the terms, alleging that the trustees of the terms refused to bring ejectment without the direction of the court, and praying for an account of the testator's personal estate, and to have it secured on the trusts of the settlement; for an account of the rents received by H. during the minority of A.; for an account of rents received by the defendants respectively since A.'s death; for a receiver; and for an injunction to restrain B. from receiving the rents; and for further relief. B. demurred for want of equity, multifariousness, and want of parties, and the demurrer was allowed by the Master of the Rolls on the first two grounds:—Held, that the demurrer was good for want of parties, for that the other executor was a necessary party to the account of the personal estate, and B., though not interested in the personal estate, had a right to require the suit to be properly constituted. Hamp v. Robinson, 3 De G. J. & S. 97.

In a suit to set aside conveyances of real and personal estate, on the ground of fraud, &c., the want of parties to represent the personal estate comprised in the impeached conveyances, was a fatal defect. Farmer v. Farmer, 1 H. L. Cas. 724.

To a bill filed by the heir to set aside a purchase from his ancestor on the ground of fraud, stating also that the purchase-money or alleged consideration was not paid, the personal representative of the ancestor having an interest in the question whether the contract is valid or not is a necessary party, and if such personal representative be brought before the court by supplemental bill the original defendant should be made a party to such a supplemental bill. Wilkinson v. Foukes, 9 Hare, 193.

A decree was made against A. B., setting aside as fraudulent a purchase by an agent from his principal; and a reconveyance, and the usual accounts of rents and purchase-money were directed, in which an allowance was to be made for substantial repairs and lasting improvements. A. B. sold and conveyed part of the property, pendente lite, and died before the accounts were completed; a supplemental bill was filed against the purchasers, and the heir and the personal representatives of A. B.; the bill charged that the purchasers, in case of eviction, claimed compensation out of the estate of A. B. The conveyances, pendente lite, being set aside:—Held, that the heir and personal representatives were proper parties to the supplemental bill. Trevelyan v. White, 1 Beav. 588.

An equitable mortgage having been made by deposit of a lease, the mortgagee discovered that the mortgagor had assigned the lease by voluntary settlement, in trust for his wife and children. On the death of the mortgagor, a bill was filed to have the settlement declared void as against the mortgagee, and the wife and children and trustee were made defendants:—Held, that the personal representatives of the settlor were not necessary parties to the suit. Bostock v. Shaw, 15 L. J., Ch. 257; 10 Jur. 107.

Executors of an insolvent lessee were necessary parties to bill against assignee of lessee's devisee for enforcing covenant to repair, &c. Sainstry v. Grammer, 2 Eq. Abr. 166.

Where a bill was filed against the devisee of of the lease, praying that the lease might be declared void, and the defendant insisted that if the lease was set aside the plaintiffs ought to repay the money expended by his devisor in the improvement of the premises; the executor of the devisor, who had assented to the devise of the lease, was not a necessary party to the suit. Malpas v. Ackland, 3 Russ. 273.

Merchants consigned goods to an agent, since dead, who pledged the bills of lading to his own brokers, to whom he was largely indebted on his private account. In an action by the merchants against the brokers for an account:—Held, that, in the absence of the representatives of the agent's estate, no account could be ordered. Kaltenbach v. Lewis, 45 L. T. 666; 30 W. R. 356.

An action was commenced to recover the sum due on a policy of life insurance, against the surviving director of the insurance company, who executed the policy. The defendant died pending the action. The insurance company filed their bill of interpleader against the plaintiff in the action, and other claimants under the policy:—Held, that the personal representative of the deceased defendant was a necessary party. Bignold v. Audland, 9 L. J., Ch. 266. And see S. C., 11 Sim. 23.

A judgment debtor, who was possessed of A. for a term, and seised of the lands of B., conveyed by two contemporaneous deeds the lands of A. and B., subject to terms for payment of his debts, to the use of himself for life, remainder to E. for life, remainder over, and the lands of X. to Z. and his heirs. Z. died, having devised the lands of X. to his wife, who afterwards married S. After the debtor's death, the judgment creditor proceeded by elegit against the lands of X.; and S. and his wife filed a bill for an injunction against him, and to carry the trusts of the deed into execution, but were ultimately bound to pay the amount due on the judgment. By the decree in the cause, it was ordered that C. should pay S. and wife the amount paid by them and interest, or, in default, that the lands of A. and B. should be sold for the terms, and that S. and wife should be paid the sum decreed to them. S. assigned the benefit of the decree to R., who filed a bill to carry the decree into execution:—Held, on demurrer, that the personal representative of C., who had died in the meantime, was not a necessary party to the latter bill, nor was it necessary to revive the former suit against him. Rowland v. M'Donnell, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 365.

A., seised in fee, agrees to demise certain lands to P. for three lives and thirty-one years, and covenants that P. shall quietly enjoy the same during the term demised, without the interruption of A., his heirs, or assigns. Subsequently, on his marriage, A. settles the lands on himself for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, reserving a power to make leases for three lives only, and covenants that the lands are free from all incumbrances. The settlement is registered before the agreement. A. makes a lease to P., pursuant to the agreement, and dies, having by his will bequeathed to B., the first tenant in tail, certain legacies, and gives the residue of his property to C. and D. The cestuis que vient in the lease die, and then B. brings an ejectment; P. files a bill for injunction, on the ground that the consequence of an eviction would be to give him a right to compensation, either out of the assets of A. received by B., or out of his assets generally, in which latter case the benefits intended by the testator for his residuary legatees would be defeated:—Held, that the plaintiff's right to the injunction upon the first ground depended upon B.'s having received assets to the value of the interest sought to be evicted, and, therefore, that the personal representative of A. was a necessary party, and that his right to relief upon the second ground was dependent upon the equities which the residuary legatees might have to restrain B. doing an act to their prejudice, which did not exist here, as the assets of A. were liable to make compensation for the breach of the covenant against incumbrances contained in the settlement. Semble, to a bill filed upon the latter ground, the residuary legatees would be necessary parties. Popham v. Baldwin, 2 Jones, 320.

Representation ad litem—Since 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 44—Dispensing with Legal Personal Representatives or Appointing Representatives ad litem.]—The appointment by the court of a person to represent the estate of a party deceased, under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 44, is a matter of discretion in each case. Tarratt v. Lloyd, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 371.

There being no personal representative of a person before the court, certain persons ordered to represent the estate for the purposes of the particular matter. Stewart's Trusts, In re, 22 L. J., Ch. 369; 16 Jur. 1063; 1 W. R. 17.

Appointment of representative of deceased defendant for purposes of the suit. Finch v. Southee, 1 W. R. 176.

Sect. 44 of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, is only intended to apply to cases where there is a difficulty in obtaining representation, owing to the insolvency of the deceased, or some such cause. Long v. Storie, Kay (App.), xii.

A motion upon notice, and an order thereupon, pursuant to the 44th section of the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, that a suit by creditors interested in the property comprised in a trust deed made for their benefit, might proceed against the trustees without a personal representative of the deceased debtor, the author of the trust, where no such representative existed, and the estate was insolvent. Chaffers v. Headlam, 9 Hare (App.), xlvi.

The court will not, under the 44th section of the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, dispense with the personal representative of a trustee, where such personal representative has necessarily active duties to perform in the execution of the trust. Fowler v. Bayldon, 9 Hare (App.), lxxviii.

Sect. 44 of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, does not apply to paying money out of court. Rawlin v. M'Mahon, 1 Drew. 225; 9 Hare (App.), lxxxii.

A personal representative of a deceased party, entitled to a small sum of money (28*l.*), not dispensed with, under the 44th section of the act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, by enabling the solicitors of the deceased party to receive such sum. Ib.

Sect. 44 of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, does not apply to the case where the estate to which it is desired to appoint a representative is the estate being administered by the court. Silver v. Stein, 1 Drew. 295; 9 Hare (App.), lxxxii.; 21 L. J., Ch. 312. S. P., Groves v. Lane, 16 Jur. 1061; 1 W. R. 31. S. C., nom. Groves v. Levi, 9 Hare (App.), xlvii., n. And see James v. Aston, 25 L. J., Ch. 343; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 224; 4 W. R. 401.

A mortgagee, having filed his claim against the heirs in gavelkind of the deceased mortgagor, who had died intestate, prayed a sale of the mortgaged premises, and the application of the proceeds, so far as it would extend in payment of his debt, and the administration of the personal estate and the other real estate of the debtor, for the benefit of the plaintiff and the other unsatisfied creditors, but there was no personal representative of the deceased mortgagor except an administrator ad litem:—The court held, that the suit could not proceed, under the 44th section of the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, in the absence of a personal representative of the intestate, where the object was to administer his estate; and that a testator or intestate, whose estate was to be administered, was not intended to be included in the words of the act, "any deceased person who was interested in the matters in question;" and that neither was the administrator ad litem a sufficient representative, where the object was not merely to bind, but to administer the estate. Groves v. Lane, 16 Jur. 1061 ; 1 W. R. 31.

A bill of foreclosure was filed by a sub-mortgagee ; the mortgagee had died, and his representative was not known :—Held, that the court could not, under s. 44 of the Chancery Amendment Act, direct the suit to proceed in the absence of a representative of the mortgagee, against whose estate a decree was asked. Bruiton v. Birch, 22 L. J., Ch. 911 ; 1 Eq. R. 136.

A surviving husband, having mortgaged the reversionary share of his deceased wife in personal estate, died. Upon the death of the tenant for life the mortgagee petitioned the court; and in the proceedings on the petition a person was appointed by order of the court to represent the estates of the husband and the wife, there being no legal personal representative of either. Upon evidence being produced that the commissioners of inland revenue would be willing to accept a sum equal to administration duty, as from an administrator of the wife, without the production of an actual grant of letters of administration, if succession duty was also paid ; and the petitioner being ready to satisfy these demands, the court dispensed with production of letters of administration. Ranking, In re, L. R. 6 Eq. 601.

After the hearing of a cause, but before the decree was entered, it was ascertained that one of the defendants had died abroad before the hearing :—Held, that under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, the court might direct the decree to be completed in the absence of the personal representative of such deceased party. Rucker v. Scholefield, 1 N. R. 180 ; 7 L. T. 348.

Where a personal representative of a testator is dead insolvent, there being no outstanding estate, s. 44 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, does not enable proceedings to be taken in his absence, but with the consent of all parties, including the heir-at-law, the court will authorise such proceedings under its general jurisdiction. Jones v. Foulkes, 10 W. R. 55.

A deceased defendant, whom the bill seeks to make primarily liable and accountable, is nevertheless a "deceased person who was interested in the matter in question" within 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 44 ; and accordingly, if he has no legal personal representative, the court may either proceed in the absence of any person representing his estate, or appoint some person to represent his estate for the purposes of the suit. Ashmall v. Wood, 25 L. J., Ch. 23 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1130 ; 4 W. R. 60, 110.

Abatement by death of the two defendants tenants in common : order to revive against the personal representative of the survivor of them only, the other defendant having left no personal representative. Attree v. Richardson, 17 W. R. 20.

Sect. 44 of the Chancery Amendment Act gives the court a discretionary power of proceeding with a suit in the absence of the personal representative of a deceased defendant, whose interests were identical with those of the plaintiff. Coæ v. Taylor, 22 L. J., Ch. 910 ; 1 Eq. R. 122 ; 1 W. R. 6.

Where a party defendant, being interested in a fund, the subject-matter of the suit, dies, the court will proceed without a representative, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 44. Ib.

Pending an action to make several defendants liable for a breach of trust, H. S., one of the defendants, died before decree, having made his will appointing executors, who had not proved the will. It appearing that the liability of the surviving defendants was the same as that of H. S., the court made an order that the suit should proceed in the absence of a personal representative of H. S. Hibernian Joint Stock Co. v. Fottrell, 13 L. R., Ir. 335.

One of two joint accounting parties died insolvent after the chief clerk's certificate finding the amount due from them had been settled, but before it was actually signed :—Held, that an order could be made under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 44, allowing the suit to proceed without a representative of the deceased, and that it was proper it should be made. Moore v. Morris, 41 L. J., Ch. 161 ; L. R. 13 Eq. 139.

Administration suit ordered to proceed in the absence of any personal representative of one of the executors of the testatrix in the cause, such executor having died intestate and insolvent, and attempts having been made to obtain representation to him. Band v. Randle, 2 Eq. R. 439 ; 2 W. R. 331.

After order in an administration claim dated April, 1852, one of the executors, defendants, who was also residuary legatee, died insolvent, never having proved nor possessed assets. His widow refused to take out administration, and his children could not be found. An order was made, under s. 44, on application ex parte, that the suit should proceed without making the representative of the deceased executor a party, and that the inquiries before the master should proceed as though such representative had been served with a writ of summons. Rogers v. Jones, 9 Hare (App.), xlvii., n. ; 16 Jur. 968 ; 1 W. R. 14.

On the refusal of next of kin to administer to a devisee's estate, the suit may proceed in the absence of representatives, under the 44th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86. Haw v. Vickers, 1 W. R. 242.

The personal representative of a cestui que trust, entitled to the trust fund in the event of the death of the children under twenty-one, dispensed with on a claim for the appointment of new trustees, the cestui que trust having died indebted, and with no other property. Magnay v. Davidson, 9 Hare (App.), lxxviii., lxxxii.

Upon a suit to wind up a partnership and for contribution, the representatives of a deceased partner cannot be dispensed with upon an allegation in the bill that the deceased partner had died insolvent, and had no personal representative. Coæ v. Stephens, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1144 ; 8 L. T. 721 ; 11 W. R. 929.

Where a plaintiff, beneficially interested in the subject-matter of an administration suit, and also next friend of infants plaintiffs therein, died after the ordinary administration decree, but before certificate, the court, upon being satisfied that the estate was insolvent, ordered the suit to be revived against the same defendant without making the personal representative of such deceased plaintiff a party. Leycester v. Norris, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1173 ; 11 L. T. 442 ; 13 W. R. 201.

Where an executor was made a party, and was before the court at the hearing, but having no interest, he took no part in the discussion, and had since died ; and at the hearing on further directions, his estate was not represented :—Held, that the case fell within s. 44 of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86. Bessant v. Noble, 26 L. J., Ch. 236.

In a suit for account against a trustee, the court, on the death (before replication or notice of motion for a decree) of a defendant who was a tenant for life of one share of the trust property, made an order ex parte, to continue the suit without any personal representative of the deceased. Twynam v. Porter, 21 L. T. 351.

A tenant for life, the sole plaintiff in an administration suit, died after the decree, an arrear of income remaining due to him. He left a will, appointing an executor; but the executor died without proving the will. The court, on the application of one of the defendants, made an order to revive the suit against the others, without any representative of the original plaintiff, but without prejudice to any application by a personal representative of the original plaintiff to intervene. Hayward v. Pile, 41 L. J., Ch. 778; L. R. 7 Ch. 634; 26 L. T. 900; 20 W. R. 736.

Declaration made on the question, whether children took per capita or per stirpes, in the absence of the personal representatives of some of the children who had died. Abrey v. Newman, 10 Hare (App.), lviii.; 22 L. J., Ch. 627; 17 Jur. 153.

At the hearing a cause was offered to stand over for want of parties, and the plaintiff was to amend his bill by adding the names of such parties or their legal personal representatives. One of them was dead, and had no legal personal representative. A motion by the plaintiff for liberty to proceed in the absence of such representative or for the appointment of a person to represent his estate was refused with costs. Williams v. Page, 27 Beav. 373.

Order made under s. 44 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, in a creditor's suit for the appointment of a person to represent the deceased debtor under an annuity deed, where there was no such representative, upon a motion supported by an affidavit that, after payment of incumbrances out of the proceeds of the sale, no surplus would be left, and upon notice being given to the debtor's next of kin who were entitled to take out administration. Davies v. Boulcott, 1 Dr. & Sm. 23; 8 W. R. 206.

Bill and interrogatories served on E., who took no notice of them. Bill consequently ordered to be taken pro confesso against him. Judgment drawn up accordingly. Upon attempting to serve E. with judgment, it was found that he was dead at date of the decree, leaving no legal representative. Ordered, that, upon filing an affidavit verifying the circumstances under which the application was made, E.'s widow be served with notice that within six weeks from the date of such service, the court would appoint a representative, and direct payment, unless in the meantime the widow appeared to contest. Alford v. Espinach, 36 L. T. 367.

A person interested in the matters in question in a suit having died without leaving any legal personal representative, his father refused to represent him for the purposes of the suit. Ordered that the father be served with notice of the application under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 44; and that if he did not consent to represent the deceased person, some one would be appointed to administer the estate. Whiteaves v. Melville, 5 W. R. 676.

Order made on the application of the sole defendant appointing a person to represent the estate of the plaintiff, who had died insolvent and apparently intestate, in order that the defendant might have an opportunity to move for dismissal of the action for want of prosecution. Wingrove v. Thompson, 11 Ch. D. 419; 27 W. R. 910.

Bill by landlord for specific performance of an agreement to take a lease entered into by four persons, all defendants to the bill, in joint tenancy. After the filing of the bill one of the proposed lessees died abroad, and, as alleged, intestate and insolvent. Letters were produced from the place of the alleged death, describing the circumstances of the decease, and the father and brothers deposed to their belief: and the father declined to take out administration on the ground of insolvency:—Held, that this was sufficient evidence to enable the court to act on it; and an order was made, that, the father appearing, and at bar declining to administer, some other person should be appointed to represent the sons' estate, under s. 44 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86. Turratt v. Lloyd, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 371

If a defendant, having an interest in the estate of a testator which is being administered, dies abroad, and his executors prove the will at the place of his death, but refuse to prove it in England, the court, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 16, will order a representative to be appointed, that the suit may be revived. Bliss v. Putnam, 29 Beav. 20; 30 L. J., Ch. 38; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 12.

Where the entire adverse interest is unrepresented by any party to the suit, the court will not appoint a person to represent that interest, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 44. Gibson v. Wills, 21 Beav. 620; 4 W. R. 499.

A vendor of shares in a company filed a bill against the executors in Scotland of the purchaser, who were also the residuary legatees, to set aside the sale. The testator was possessed of personal estate in England, but no administration had been taken out there. The bill prayed that the sale might be set aside, and that an account might be taken of the profits and bonuses received by the purchaser and the executors in respect of such shares, and payment by them of any excess over the amount of the purchase-money, and interest at 4*l.* per cent. The executors demurred, on the ground that there ought to be before the court a legal personal representative of the testator appointed in England; and the demurrer was allowed. Maclean v. Dawson, 27 Beav. 21, 369; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1091; 7 W. R. 354.

Held, also, that it was not a case in which the court could appoint a person to act as personal representative, under s. 44 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86. The plaintiff amended his bill, making an administrator ad litem in England a defendant, and treating the claim of the plaintiff as a specific lien upon the shares of the testator. The bill, as amended, also contained an allegation that the executors had received assets more than sufficient to answer all claims upon the estate of the testator, and prayed that they might be declared personally liable to pay what, on taking the accounts, might be found to be due to the plaintiff. A demurrer, on the ground that no legal personal representative of the testator, properly constituted in England, was before the court, was overruled. Ib. And see S. C., 1 Sw. & Tr. 425.

One creditor of a deceased debtor, by his bill, stated that the defendant was in possession of all the debtor's estate and effects, and acted as if he was the debtor's personal representative, and that the defendant alleged that he was entitled to the estate and effects under a deed of gift; and the bill prayed that the deed might be set aside against the creditors, and that, if necessary, the suit might be taken as a creditors' suit:—Held, on demurrer, that the suit must be taken as a creditors' suit; that a personal representative of the debtor was a necessary party; and that the suit being for the administration of the whole estate, the court would not nominate a representative. James v. Aston, 25 L. J., Ch. 343; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 224; 4 W. R. 401.

Form of order for administration, dispensing with the representatives of deceased executors and trustees as parties to the suit, when incapacitated persons are interested in the estate. Whittington v. Gooding, 10 Hare (App.), xxix.

Moneys found due to the estate of a deceased person will not be paid over to the representative appointed under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 44, but will be carried over to a separate account. Byam v. Sutton, 19 Beav. 646.

Note.—Sect. 44 of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, was repealed by 46 & 47 Vict. c. 49, and R. S. C. Ord. XVI. r. 46, is now substituted for it.

——Who Appointed.]—The person who would be appointed administrator ad litem, is the most proper person to be nominated under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 44, to represent a deceased party who has no personal representative. This enactment extends even to those cases where the party "interested" is sought to be made liable. Ely (Dean and Chapter) v. Gayford, 16 Beav. 561.

A defendant died, and a contest as to one of his testamentary papers prevented probate being granted. The court, on motion, appointed the executor named in his will to represent the deceased's estate in the cause under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 44. Hele v. Bexley (Lord), 15 Beav. 340.

Bill to recover a sum of money in respect of which one defendant was treated as primarily liable, and the other two defendants as secondarily liable only. The defendant alleged to be primarily liable, after having, by his answer, admitted his liability to answer the plaintiff's demand, died, leaving assets altogether inadequate to meet such demand, and having, by his will, appointed two persons to act as his executors, both of whom declined to prove the will. The plaintiff then moved, under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 44, that the court would direct the suit to be proceeded with in the absence of any person representing the estate of the deceased defendant, or appoint some person to represent such estate for all the purposes of the suit. The court held, that the deceased defendant was "a deceased person interested in the matters in question" within the meaning of the act, and under the circumstances, appointed the persons named in his will to represent his estate for the purposes of the suit, and intimated that they should be required by the plaintiff to put in an answer. Ashmall v. Wood, 25 L. J., Ch. 23; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1130; 4 W. R. 60, 110.

On a petition by the heir-at-law of one who was entitled, upon the death of the tenant for life, to lands which had been taken under the Manchester Improvement Act, for payment out of court of the purchase-money of such lands, the executors named in the will of the deceased party, but who had not proved the will, were, under the 44th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, appointed to represent his personal estate for the purposes of the proceeding. Cramer, Ex parte, 9 Hare (App.), xlvii., n.

Pending the taking of partnership accounts under a decree, one of the partners died. His will, by which he gave his estate to his widow and appointed her sole executrix, was in litigation in the Probate Court. The Court of Chancery declined, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 44, to appoint the widow to represent the estate in the suit, pending the litigation. Rowlands v. Evans, Williams v. Rowlands, 33 Beav. 202; 3 N. R. 233.

Appointment of the widow to represent the estate of her deceased husband, who had been entitled to a life interest in certain tithes, the subject of the suit, and had died intestate, where no letters of administration of such estate had been obtained. Ely (Dean and Chapter) v. Edwards, 10 Hare (App.), lxv.; 22 L. J., Ch. 630; 17 Jur. 219.

A foreclosure decree gave to seven persons, or any of them, the right to redeem within a certain time. Before that time arrived, one of the seven died, and there was some difficulty about obtaining administration to him. Letters of administration were at length granted by the Ecclesiastical Court to a creditor, but before the proceeding was perfected, another creditor entered a caveat. Long v. Storie, Kay (App.), xii.

The Court of Chancery made an order under s. 44 of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, appointing the former creditor to represent the estate of the deceased, after a week's notice given to the opposing creditor; or, if the former creditor should refuse to be such representative, then, upon evidence by affidavit of such refusal, appointing the other creditor such representative. Ib.

The question was between the children who survived and those who predeceased their parents. There had been two of the latter, but neither of their estates was represented in the suit. It was asked, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 44, that the surviving husband of one might represent the interests of the absent parties. The application was refused. Gibson v. Wills, 21 Beav. 620; 4 W. R. 499.

In a suit to administer the estate of A. and to take accounts of his business carried on after his decease by B. and C. his executors, who were also beneficially interested under the will, the court will, under the 44th section of the act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, appoint C. to represent the estate of B., where B. has made his will and appointed C. and R. (B's heir and a party to the suit) his executors, although B.'s will had not been proved, and although the suit may result in charging B.'s estate. Goddard v. Haslam, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 251; 3 W. R. 357.

A party went to Australia several years ago; but he had not been heard of since. Assuming that he were dead, but had survived the testator in the suit, there would be arrears of a fund in court to be paid to his personal representative, if appointed:—Held, that a person who was not interested in the subject-matter of the suit might be appointed administrator ad litem of the party. Mortimer v. Mortimer, 8 L. T. 487; 11 W. R. 740.

C. was, by H., who died in Calcutta, appointed his executor, and he there proved the will, but refused to take out administration to the testator in England. On motion, the court ordered that C. should be appointed to represent the estate of H., in order that the suit might be properly constituted. Sutherland v. De Virenne, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 301.

On the hearing of a petition relating to the disposition of a trust fund, it appeared that A. had an interest in it which might be asserted. A. died in the United States, having by his will appointed B. his executor, who proved the will there but not in this country. Counsel appeared for B. at the hearing. The court, at the hearing under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, appointed B.'s counsel to represent B.'s estate. Hewitson v. Todhunter, 22 L. J., Ch. 76; 1 W. R. 78.

Case in which the executors of a father, who survived and became the sole next of kin of his deceased children, may be appointed by the court, under the 44th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, to represent the estates of the deceased children for the purposes of the suit. Swallow v. Binns, 9 Hare (App.), xlvii.

A person cannot be appointed to represent an estate under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 44, without his consent. Prince of Wales Association Co. v. Palmer, 25 Beav. 605.

The court cannot, under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 44, appoint a person to represent the estate of a deceased person who is not willing to act. Hill v. Bonner, 26 Beav. 372.

Where a defendant to a bill which prayed relief against all the defendants jointly in respect of an alleged breach of trust as directors, died abroad, and the evidence showed that he was believed to have left a will, and to have named his widow executrix, but that she had not seen the will, and did not know its contents, and that his solicitors on the record had not been instructed since his death:—The court, on the application of the plaintiffs, made an order for the appointment of a person named by the plaintiffs, and consenting to act, to represent the deceased defendant for the purposes of the suit; unless within fourteen days after notice the solicitors and the widow, or one of them, should appear and elect to represent the estate, in which case both, or either, as the case might be, would be appointed. Joint Stock Discount Co. v. Brown, L. R. 8 Eq. 376; 20 L. T. 692.

—— Since 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 42, r. 9—Trustee representing Estate.]—The 9th rule of the 42nd section of the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, applies not only to administration suits, but to all suits where the interest of the cestui que trust is represented by, and his powers are vested in, the trustee. Fowler v. Bayldon, 9 Hare (App.), lxxviii.

An executrix directed to pay debts cannot be considered to represent third parties within the meaning of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 42. Bolton v. Stannard, 27 L. J., Ch. 845; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 576; 6 W. R. 570.

When a fund has been brought into court in an administration suit, the next of kin are properly represented after decree by the personal representative until the fund has been distributed. Micklethwait v. Winstanley, 5 N. R. 204.

Distinction as to the necessity of making persons beneficially interested in real estate parties in suits by mortgagees for foreclosure or sale of mortgaged estates, against the persons having the legal interest only, where such persons are executors of the mortgagor, and where they are merely trustees of settlements, of the mortgaged property. Hanman v. Riley, 9 Hare (App.), xl.

Note.—R. S. C. Ord. XVI. r. 8, is now substituted for s. 42, r. 9, of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86.

—— Rules of 26th June, 1876, Ord. XVI. r. 9a.]—When upon the construction of a will questions had arisen as to what classes of representatives of the testator were entitled, and great difficulty was foreseen in attempting to find the heir, who in the result might be held not entitled, the court made an order under Ord. XVI. r. 9a, appointing persons to represent the various classes of representatives of which some or one might be held to be entitled, before the questions of construction came on to be decided. Peppitt, In re, Chester v. Phillips, 46 L. J., Ch. 95; 4 Ch. D. 230; 35 L. T. 902; 25 W. R. 211. See now R. S. C. Ord. XVI. r. 32 (a).

—— Absent Parties—R. S. C. 1883, Ord. XVI.]—Persons interested in an estate the subject of an administration action to which they have not been made parties, and whose rights or interests may be affected by an order directing accounts and inquiries, are not bound by the proceedings under that order—at any rate where they ought to be served—unless they are served with notice of the order, or an order has been made appointing a member of their class to represent them in the action. The practice of the court as to binding absent parties in an administration action discussed. May v. Newton, 56 L. J., Ch. 313; 34 Ch. D. 347; 56 L. T. 140; 35 W. R. 363.

Adding Parties by Amendment—Before the Judicature Acts and Orders.]—Executor's name added in decree for account without putting off cause. Pitt v. Brewster, Dick. 37.

Where one of the defendants died after answer the court will not permit his devisee to be made a party by amendment. Listowell v. Callaghan, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 472.

To a bill filed for the purpose of obtaining the opinion of the court on a testator's will, more than thirty years after his decease, it was objected that there was no representative of the testator before the court:—Held, that such objection was a valid one; but the court permitted the plaintiff to take out letters of administration de bonis non with the testator's will annexed, and would not put the plaintiff to the expense of amending her bill. Nonnelay v. Balls, 6 Jur. 550.

The court will not decree a specialty debt to be paid out of the deceased's real estates, unless the creditor sues on behalf of himself and all other the specialty creditors; but leave will be given to amend the bill at the hearing. Johnson v. Compton, 4 Sim. 47.

After a decree in an administration suit, to which a creditor who had assigned his debt and the securities for it to trustees, was a party, but such assignees in trust were not parties, an order obtained by them from the vice-chancellor to substitute their name for his, and to have the benefit of all future proceedings, was discharged as irregular. Drever v. Mawdesley, 4 Myl. & C. 94.

An administrator who has become such since bill filed, may be made a party by amendment, notwithstanding the general rule, that a person who acquires a new right after the institution of a suit can be brought before the court only by a new bill. Beardmore v. Gregory, 2 Hem. & M. 491; 34 L. J., Ch. 392; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 363; 12 L. T. 363; 13 W. R. 674.

A bill was filed by A., a married woman, by her next friend, her husband, joining against an executor de son tort in respect of a legacy given to A. for her separate use. After the bill was filed, letters of administration were granted to S., and S. by amendment was made a defendant:—Held, that S. was properly made a party to the suit by amendment, the case of an administrator standing on a different footing from that of other persons who gain new rights after the institution of a suit. Ib.

Held, also, that the husband (he not setting up any claim adverse to his wife) might properly be joined as a co-plaintiff. Ib.

When a plaintiff filed her bill as being the legal personal representative of the person through whom she claimed title, and it was afterwards discovered that she was not the legal personal representative, though she was beneficially interested in a share of the subject-matter of the suit, which was a debt contracted upwards of fifty years before the bill was filed, leave was given, at the hearing of the cause, to add the legal personal representative as co-plaintiff; and the bill being amended by so doing, and by introducing sufficient statements to show the title of the new plaintiff, and also the beneficial interest of the original plaintiff:—Held, that such amendments were proper to be allowed in the discretion of the judge. Maughan v. Blake, 37 L. J., Ch. 109.

—— Since the Judicature Acts.]—When two actions had been consolidated, on an application by the plaintiff to add new defendants to the consolidated action before trial, and to make W., one of the present defendants, a party to the action in a representative character, the court, under the Judicature Act, Ord. XVI. rr. 14, 15, of 1875, ordered that the proposed new defendants should be added without service of any writ, and that W. be made a defendant in his representative character without any further indorsement on any writ, such order to take effect unless the new defendants and W. should respectively show cause to the contrary within eight days after service thereof. Wortley, In re, Culley v. Wortley, 46 L. J., Ch. 182; 4 Ch. D. 180; 25 W. R. 295. And see now R. S. C., 1883, Ord. XVI. rr. 12, 13.

When an action abates on the death of a defendant, on account of its being purely an action for damages occasioned by the defendant's fraud, so that it cannot be simply continued against the deceased defendant's personal representative, but the action is capable of being so stated by the introduction of amendments as to make a primâ facie case against the personal representative, leave may be given to amend the pleadings by the introduction of the necessary allegations, and an order may be made to add the personal representative, as a party. Ashley v. Taylor, 48 L. J., Ch. 406; 10 Ch. D. 768; 27 W. R. 228.

Both the necessary amendments and the addition of parties may be made by the same order; but the order should be made ex parte, and not upon notice to the person whom it is proposed to introduce into the action. Ib.

Revivor.]—Ord. XVII. now governs proceedings on change of parties during the pendency of a suit.

Ord. XLII. r. 23, now governs proceedings on death of parties after judgment.

—— Order Discretionary.]—It is in the discretion of the court whether it will allow an action which has become defective by the death of a party or otherwise to be revived. An administration suit in which a decree was made by the Court of Chancery in the year 1833, having become defective by the deaths of some parties and the bankruptcy of another, and no step having been taken in it for thirty-nine years, an order of revivor was allowed for the purpose of enabling a party to appeal from an order made in the year 1836 (in case the Court of Appeal should give leave to appeal), the court being of opinion that no person had altered his position, or incurred any liability, or suffered any loss on the faith of the order, from which it was desired to appeal. Curtis v. Sheffield, 51 L. J., Ch. 535; 20 Ch. D. 398; 46 L. T. 80.

—— Administrator de bonis non.]—Administrator obtains a decree, and dies. The administrator de bonis non may revive this decree within the equity of statute 30 Car. 2, c. 6. Owen v. Curzon, 2 Vern. 237.

Where a personal representative sues or is sued and dies, the administrator de bonis non may proceed or be proceeded against by bill of revivor, or by bill of revivor and supplement. But he is not bound so to frame his bill; he may at his election file an original bill. Therefore, where an administrator had obtained a decree declaring a judgment to be held on certain trusts, and the judgment was afterwards fraudulently assigned, and the administrator de bonis non filed a bill stating at length the proceedings in the original suit, making the assignee a party, and praying that he might be declared entitled to the benefit of the decree and accounts and inquiries thereby directed, and to an assignment of the judgment, or original relief if he was not entitled to the benefit of the said suit and decree, it was:—Held, on demurrer, that the bill being an original bill as to the assignee, the plaintiff could not have proceeded by bill of revivor; and although the bill might have been framed as a bill of revivor and supplement, as against the representative of the defendant in the original suit, it was sustainable as against him, either as an original bill, or as an original bill in the nature of a supplemental bill. Banfield v. O'Shaughnessy, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 63.

An administrator of an intestate died in 1817, indebted to a large amount in respect of his receipts as administrator, but leaving sufficient personal estate to pay the amount, and also leaving freehold estates. In the same year a suit was instituted for the administration of his personal estate, and in 1832 it appeared, from the report in that suit, that his personal estate had been misapplied, and that his executor had become bankrupt. Thereupon and in the same year 1832 an administratrix de bonis non of the intestate instituted a suit against the administrator's heir, and the sureties in the usual administration bond, and against the representatives of the archbishop (who had died), praying to have the benefit of the bond, and to charge by means of it the administrator's freehold estates. No decree was made in this suit, the plaintiff having married in 1838, and having died in 1847, without the suit having ever been revived. In 1848 another of the next of kin, who had been a defendant to the suit of 1832, took out administration de bonis non of the intestate, and filed a bill of revivor and supplement, claiming to have the benefit of the suit of 1832. Quære, whether the suit of 1832 was in its nature one which it was competent for the plaintiff in that of 1848 to revive:—Held, that the suit of 1832 must be considered as having been abandoned, and that the suit of 1848 must be considered an original suit, and, as such, barred by length of time and laches. Bolton v. Powell, 2 De G. M. & G. 1; 14 Beav. 275; 16 Jur. 24.

A. died, having made B. his executor, who, without proving A.'s will, possessed part of his assets. B. died, and made C. his executrix, who proved his will, and took out administration to A. A bill was filed against C. for an account of A.'s assets, possessed by her and by B. Afterwards C. died, having made D. her executor, and E. took out administration to A. Plaintiff filed a bill of revivor and supplement against D. and E., to which D. demurred, and the demurrer was allowed. Phelps v. Sproule, 4 Sim. 321.

—— Executor or Administrator.]—All the executors who prove the will must be parties to the suit; but others are not necessary parties, although they have not renounced. Where bill of revivor stated that the plaintiff was appointed executor, and in fact he and another were nominated, but he alone proved: Lord Chancellor, considering that to be a misstatement, and that the fact should have been stated exactly as it was, of the appointment of another executor who had not proved:—Held, that inasmuch as the court is never inclined to turn a party round upon a point of form, it might be set right at the hearing by a certificate of the proper officer, that in fact no other executor but the plaintiff had proved, which he directed accordingly. It is not, however, an answer to such an objection, that it should be taken to the bill of revivor. If plaintiff in revivor misstates a fact in his knowledge, it is not incumbent on the defendant so far to distrust that statement as to object to the common routine of revivor. Cramer v. Morton, 2 Moll. 108.

Pending an account directed by the decree, the accounting party died. An order was made, on motion to revive, against his executor, and that he might either admit assets or account for his testator's estate. Cartwright v. Shepheard, 20 Beav. 122.

Suit not revived against the administrator of a party named, who did not appear, nor was served with a subpœna, nor can the plaintiff have the benefit of former proceedings against such administrator. Asbee v. Shipley, 6 Madd. 296.

Upon the death of a defendant, her representatives were made parties to a bill of revivor. They pleaded that the testatrix had assigned pendente lite, and that they never had any interest in the subject-matter of the suit. The plea was allowed. Nutting v. Hebdin, 14 Beav. 11; 20 L. J., Ch. 555.

A bill of revivor against A. alleged that a defendant to the original bill had died, having by his will appointed B. executrix, and that she had taken on herself the execution of the will, and had possessed the assets, and taken on herself the administration thereof. It prayed revivor against her as such executrix; B. pleaded simply that she was not executrix. The plea was allowed. Cooke v. Gittings, 21 Beav. 497.

A man marries an administratrix; plaintiff obtains a decree against him and his wife for 1,500*l.*; she dies, plaintiff cannot proceed against the husband without reviving against the administrator of the wife. Jackson v. Rawlings, 2 Vern. 195.

—— Administrator, where no Surviving Cause of Action.]—When an action abates on the death of a defendant, on account of its being purely an action for damages occasioned by the defendant's fraud, so that it cannot be simply continued against the deceased defendant's personal representative, but the action is capable of being so stated by the introduction of amendments as to make a primâ facie case against the personal representative, leave may be given to amend the pleadings by the introduction of the necessary allegations, and an order may be made to add the personal representative as a party. Ashley v. Taylor, 48 L. J., Ch. 406; 10 Ch. D. 768; 27 W. R. 228.

Both the necessary amendments and the addition of parties may be made by the same order; but the order should be made ex parte, and not upon notice to the person whom it is proposed to introduce into the action. Ib.

—— Executor under later Will, discovered after Judgment.]—Benefit of decree made in a suit instituted by party claiming as personal representative under a former will, may be obtained by executor under a later will subsequently discovered, by bill in the nature of bill of revivor. Gough v. Latouche, 2 Moll. 406.

—— Heir.]—Heir and administrator of party intestate, must be parties to revive decree for payment of money, and for conveying of lands. Ferrers v. Cherry, 1 Eq. Abr. 3.

An administration suit—which had abated after decree by the death, intestate as to trust estates, of the sole plaintiff, the executor and devisee in trust of the testator in the cause—was revived on the application of the deceased plaintiff's executors, and two of his co-heiresses, the other co-heiress being already a party to the suit. Fane v. Richards, 1 N. R. 563.

Where a decree was made in an administration suit, containing a declaration which bound the heir-at-law of a testator, and it was found that at the date of the decree the heir was dead, an order of revivor was made against the representative of the heir. Fenton v. Hawkins, 4 N. R. 54.

—— Person served with Notice of Judgment.]—A person served with a notice of an administration judgment, and having obtained liberty to attend the proceedings under it, is in the same position as a party to the action, and is entitled to obtain an order of course to revive the action on the death of the sole plaintiff. Delaney v. Delaney (27 Sol. J. 418) distinguished. Dobson v. Faithwaite (30 Beav. 228) followed. Burstall v. Fearon, 53 L. J., Ch. 144; 24 Ch. D. 126; 31 W. R. 581.

In an administration suit by two residuary legatees, as co-plaintiffs, if one die before replication, the proper course is to mark him as dead, and when the cause comes into chambers, to serve his representatives with the decree. Hinde v. Morton, 5 N. R. 362.

—— Where Fund has been carried over.]—Where, upon an administration decree, funds had been ordered to be carried to the separate account of A., an infant, and upon his marriage the funds had been settled, with the approval of the court, as belonging to A. absolutely:—Held, that the parties beneficially interested were entitled to file an original bill for the purpose of obtaining a declaration of their rights, and that in such a case it would not have been proper to file a bill of revivor, the order to carry to a separate account not being equivalent to a decree finally determining the rights of the parties. Noble v. Stow, 29 Beav. 409; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1115; 7 W. R. 709.

—— In a Creditor's Action.]—Under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 52, an order to revive a creditors' suit may be made at the instance of a creditor to whom a debt is found due by the master. Lowes v. Lowes, 2 De G. M. & G. 784; 22 L. J., Ch. 179; 9 Hare (App.), lii., n.; 16 Jur. 991; 1 W. R. 27.

Where one of plaintiffs in creditors' suit dies, after decree, his personal representative has a right to revive. Burney v. Morgan, 1 Sim. & S. 358; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 228.

Creditor cannot sue on behalf of himself and others who have no common interest with him. Ib.

If creditor file a bill on behalf of himself and other creditors, and obtain decree and die, another creditor may obtain order to file supplemental bill, if representatives of first plaintiff do not revive within a limited time. Dixon v. Wyatt, 4 Madd. 392.

Upon the death of a plaintiff in a creditors' suit, the common order to revive was made in favour of another creditor, whose debt had been proved, and allowed by the chief clerk's certificate, although the certificate had not been signed. Inchley v. Allsop, 7 Jur. (N.S) 1181; 9 W. R. 649. S. P., Bell v. Bell, 33 L. J., Ch. 384; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 14; 9 L. T. 643; 12 W. R. 230.

An order of revivor made in a creditors' suit at the instance of another creditor to whom the conduct of the proceedings had been given. Scott v. Maxwell, 41 L. J., Ch. 600; 20 W. R. 763.

One of two creditors, plaintiffs in a creditors' suit upon an abatement by the death of an executor of the testator, obtained administration de bonis non to the estate of the testator, and leave was given to the other creditor to file a supplemental claim against him and the executors of the deceased executor, the case not being within the 52nd section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, which gives to the order on motion the effect of a supplemental decree. Tate v. Leithead, 9 Hare (App.), li.; 16 Jur. 964.

A creditors' bill is filed by A., on behalf of himself and other creditors, against B. and others. After decree the suit abated by the death of B. C., his executor, filed a bill of revivor on behalf, &c., and the suit was revived. A. afterwards filed other bills, and the proceedings before the master were attended by A., on behalf of the creditors at large:—Held, that C. was not, by the fact of filing the bill of revivor on behalf, &c., incapacitated from compromising for his own benefit a claim on the estate. Armstrong v. Storer, 9 Beav. 277.

—— Under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 52.]—Order on motion ex parte by the plaintiff to revive and carry on proceedings in an administration suit commenced by claim upon abatement by the death of the executor, under the 52nd section of the act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, upon allegation (without proof) of the facts constituting the abatement. Martin v. Hadlow, 9 Hare (App.), lii.; 16 Jur. 964. Like circumstances in a case where the suit was by bill: like order. Cox v. Taylor, 9 Hare (App.), lii., n.

Where in an administration suit a co-plaintiff died, who, it was alleged, had no interest in the estate, leave was given to revive the suit, without making her representatives parties thereto. Leycester v. Leycester. 5 N. R. 183.

Where an administration suit was instituted by one of two trustees, the other being one of the defendants, and after the hearing on further consideration the trustees were permitted by the court to retire from the trust, and new trustees were appointed; it was held, that under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 52, the suit might be revived at the instance of the new trustees, and that accounts directed against the old trustees might be continued against the new. Williams v. Jeffreys, 3 N. R. 458.

Where the plaintiff in a next-of-kin suit has been found to have no interest, the suit cannot be made perfect by a supplemental order under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 52. Lawrence v. Maule, 3 N. R. 239.

—— Effect of.]—Upon a bill in nature of bill of revivor against devisee, the devisee cannot dispute the justice or validity of decree. Minshull v. Mohun (Lord), 2 Vern. 672. Affirmed, 6 Bro. P. C. 32.

A devisee may bring original bill in nature of a bill of revivor, and shall have the same advantage of a decree as an heir or executor, and the defendant is not at liberty to make a new defence. Clare v. Wardell, 2 Vern. 548.

Where the testator had pleaded to a bill, and died before the plea was argued, the executor may plead de novo, for the first plea cannot be now argued. Micklethwaite v. Calverly, Cas. t. Talb. 3.

When, under order made in creditors' suit, leave is given to file supplemental bill by creditor, not party to original suit, on behalf of himself and other creditors, to have benefit of decree in that suit, plaintiff is entitled to the same decree, to have benefit of former proceedings, as representatives of the original plaintiffs would have been entitled on bill of revivor. Houlditch v. Donegall (Marquis), 1 Sim. & S. 491; 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 53.

The propriety of order which authorised creditor to file supplemental bill cannot be questioned at hearing of supplemental cause. Ib.

If a person interested under a will, files a bill for an account against the executors, not seeking to charge them for wilful default, and dies pending the suit, his personal representative cannot charge them by bill of revivor and supplement, if the acts complained of were known to the deceased plaintiff. Garrett v. Noble, 6 Sim. 504; 3 L. J., Ch. 159.

—— Proceedings by Defendant to obtain Revivor or Dismissal.]—Motion before decree, by the executor of a deceased defendant, that the plaintiff might revive the suit against him, or that the bill might be dismissed as against the deceased, granted. Burnell v. Wellington (Duke), 6 Sim. 461.

A suit had been instituted by the curator and committee of a lunatic (a foreigner), and on his behalf, against a party, who, upon the death of the lunatic, became his personal representative. A motion by the defendant, that the bill should be dismissed with costs, unless the plaintiff revived within a fortnight, was refused with costs. Toledo v. Vieta, 14 L. J., Ch. 345.

The plaintiff instituted a creditors' suit against the executor. The estate was accordingly administered, and a decree was made on further directions. The executor afterwards brought actions against the plaintiff, for debts alleged to be due from him to the testator, which the court restrained by injunction. The plaintiff having died, the defendant moved, that the suit might be revived by his representatives, or, in default, that the injunction might be dissolved. The proceeding was held irregular, and the motion was refused, with costs. Oldfield v. Cobbett, 20 Beav. 563.

d. ADMISSION OF ASSETS.

By Pleading.]—If an executor to an action on bond pleads payment, and omits to plead plene administravit, and a verdict is given against him on such plea, it operates as an admission of assets in an action founded on that judgment, suggesting a devastavit. Erving v. Peters, 3 Term Rep. 685; 1 R. R. 794. S. P., Palmer v. Waller, 1 M. & W. 689; 5 D. P. C. 172; 1 Tyr. & G. 1014; 5 L. J., Ex. 246.

In an action against an administrator, he, after obtaining time to plead, pleaded a judgment recovered since the commencement of the action, but did not aver that there were no assets ultra. The court gave leave to the plaintiff to sign judgment as for want of a plea; the defendant having, since the commencement of the action, admitted by the latter the possession of assets sufficient to cover the judgment, and also the plaintiff's demand. Roberts v. Wood, 3 D. P. C. 797.

An executor gives a creditor of the testator, who is suing him at law, a cognovit, with stay of execution: this is not an admission of assets. Stirling v. ——, 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 223.

Defendant held to admission of assets by answer. Roberts v. Roberts, Dick. 573.

An executor, charged with the receipt of rents, stated in the schedule to his examination that he had received in respect of rents, after deductions to a certain amount for bills due from the testator to the tenants, so much; the master charged the executor with the whole amount, including the alleged deductions:—Held, on exception, that although the executor had by this form of admission charged himself with the aggregate sum, yet, as the whole statement must be read, he had also discharged himself primâ facie, by the evidence which it contained of the repayment to the tenants, which repayment it was open to the other parties to impeach. Inge v. Kenny, 4 Hare, 452; 14 L. J., Ch. 325; 9 Jur. 344.

After the death of the testator, his executrix being sued by a creditor, entered into an arrangement with him, pursuant to which she gave a consent for judgment at law. The demand, which had been ascertained by the report of the master in an equity suit, was transferred to A., who paid off the creditor; and the executrix, in order to secure the debt, assigned her jointure to A., upon trust to pay himself the interest on the debt, and to pay the premiums on a policy of assurance effected in his name on the life of the executrix; and she covenanted that whichever of her sons (who were entitled to the real estate) should first come of age, should execute a mortgage of the real estate to A. for the amount of his demand. The personal assets of the testator never were sufficient to pay his debts. The policy was suffered to expire, and the mortgage was not executed. Upon a suit instituted by A. to raise the demand out of the real estates of the testator:—Held, that the effect of these transactions was not to discharge the real estate from the payment of A.'s demand, and that, under the circumstances, the consent for judgment and report was not admission of assets by the executrix. Purcell v. Blennerhassett, 3 Jo. & Lat. 24; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 103.

By letting Judgment go by Default.]—If an executor or an administrator confesses judgment, or suffers it to go by default against him, he thereby admits assets in his hands, and is estopped from saying the contrary in an action on such judgment, suggesting a devastavit. Skelton v. Hawling, 1 Wils. 258.

Judgment by default against an executor in respect of his testator's debt is an admission of assets, and binds the executor's own real and personal estate as fully as if it was his own debt. Higgins' Trusts, In re, 2 Giff. 562; 30 L. J., Ch. 405; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 403; 3 L. T. 803.

Therefore, where an executor allowed judgment to go by default in an action against him as executor:—Held, that the judgment creditor was entitled to priority over a subsequent judgment obtained against the executor for a personal debt of his own. Ib.

In an administration action notice of motion was served upon a defendant, an executor, for payment into court of money, part of the testator's estate, which it was shewn by affidavit that he had received. The defendant did not appear on the motion:—Held, that, the defendant not having disputed the affidavit, there was a sufficient admission that the money was in his hands, and that he must be ordered to pay it into court. Freeman v. Cox, 47 L. J., Ch. 560; 8 Ch. D. 148; 26 W. R. 689.

By Submission to Arbitration.]—A submission to an award by an administrator is not of itself an admission of assets. Pearson v. Henry, 5 Term Rep. 6; 2 R. R. 523. S. P., Joseph and Webster, In re, 1 Russ. & M. 496. Mocher v. Frazer, Beat. 578. See also Love v. Honeybourne, 4 D. & R. 814; 27 R. R. 517.

If an arbitrator, under a reference between A. and B., an administrator, awards that B. shall pay a certain sum as the amount of A.'s demand, B. cannot afterwards object that he had no assets. Worthington v. Barlow, 7 Term Rep. 453.

Obligor under bond conditioned for performance of award cannot plead plene administravit to an action on the bond, for, by submitting to the award, he has admitted assets. Barry v. Rush, 1 Term Rep. 691; 1 R. R. 360.

Submitting disputed accounts to arbitration, is of itself an admission by an executor that he has assets, unless he protests against its being so taken at the time. Riddle v. Sutton, 5 Bing. 200; 2 M. & P. 345; 7 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 60; 30 R. R. 569. S. P., Robson v. ——, 2 Rose, 50. See also Wansborough v. Dyer, 2 Chit. 40.

Where, upon matters being referred to arbitration by an order of the vice-chancellor, with a clause that, in case of the death of any of the parties, before making the award, the reference was not to abate, but their executors or administrators were to be considered and taken as parties to the order:—Held, that the executors of a party who died during the reference, and who were ordered by the award to pay a sum of money out of their testator's assets, were liable in assumpsit, although it was objected that the promise alleged to have been made by them was a personal promise, and for which no consideration was stated. Dowse v. Coxe, 3 Bing. 20; 10 Moore, 272; 3 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 127; 28 R. R. 565. And see Biddell v. Dowse, 6 B. & C. 255; 9 D. & R. 404; 28 R. R. 574.

Where a cause was referred, the costs being to abide the event, and the action was brought by an administrator, with counts in the declaration on promises to himself as administrator, and the arbitrator awarded that the plaintiff had no cause of action:—Held, that he was liable to an attachment for not paying the costs, and that the terms of submission could not be varied by affidavits shewing that it was not the intention to make him personally liable. Spivy v. Webster, 2 D. P. C. 46.

By Paying Probate Duty.]—A probate stamp is primâ facie evidence that an executor has received assets to the amount covered by the stamp. Foster v. Blakelock, 8 D. & R. 48; 5 B. & C. 328; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 170; 29 R. R. 258. And see Curtis v. Hunt, 1 Car. & P. 180.

Upon a plea of plene administravit, a probate stamp is presumptive evidence against an executor that he has assets to the amount which the stamp will cover, until the contrary is shewn. Ib.

Semble, per Parke and Littledale, that a probate stamp is not primâ facie evidence that an executor has received assets to the amount covered by the stamp. Steer v. Mills, 1 N. & M. 434; 4 B. & Ad. 657; 2 L. J., K. B. 106.

Upon an issue of plene administravit vel non, the stamp on the probate of the testator's will is admissible. Mann v. Lang, 3 A. & E. 699; 5 N. & M. 202; 1 H. & W. 441.

But it is not even primâ facie evidence of assets come to the hands of the executor. Ib.

The lapse of a long period of years would not make it such evidence. Ib.

Payment of probate duty is presumptive evidence of an admission, but not an absolute admission of assets to the extent covered by the amount of duty paid. Lazonby v. Rawson, 4 De G. M. & G. 556; 24 L. J., Ch. 482; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 289; 3 Eq. R. 89; 3 W. R. 34.

A testator directed that certain legacies should remain at interest in his business. His executor, who was his brother and partner, credited in his books the legatees, who were the executor's sons, and had access to his books, with the amounts of the legacies, and with interest upon them; but in a deed between the parties the accounts were recited to be settled. He returned to the stamp office the estimated value of the estate at an amount more than sufficient for payment of the legacies, and paid duty upon them, and upon a residue beyond:—Held, that those acts did not amount to a conclusive admission of assets. Hutton v. Rossiter, 7 De G. M. & G. 9; 24 L. J., Ch. 106; 3 W. R. 97.

—— To what Extent.]—In an answer to a plea of plene administravit, proof that the deceased's property was sworn under a certain sum, viz. between 2,000*l.* and 5,000*l.*, is primâ facie evidence of assets to the amount of the lesser sum. Curtis v. Hunt, 1 Car. & P. 180.

On proving a will, the executor need not, in the amount for which probate duty is paid, include debts due to the testator which are either desperate or doubtful, and the executor has a right to exercise his judgment fairly and bonâ fide, whether a debt is doubtful or bad. Moses v. Crafter, 4 Car. & P. 524.

A testator gave his leasehold estate, held for lives, to his son and his heirs, subject to an annuity of 100*l.* for his daughter for life, and charged with the payment after her death of 2,000*l.* to her children, and appointed his son executor. The testator died in 1807, and his son proved his will, and his personal estate, exclusive of the leaseholds, was sworn under 2,000*l.* In 1821 the son signed a document from the legacy duty office, professing to have retained the sum of 2,000*l.*, in respect of the legacy charged on the leaseholds, and on that document there was a formal receipt by the proper officer "for 20*l.* for duty on account of the personal estate within mentioned." The lives in the lease having expired, and the lessors having declined to renew, on a bill filed by a child of the testator's daughter, against the representatives of the son to have the 2,000*l.* secured:—Held, first, that the entire leasehold interest was chargeable with its payment at the testator's death; and, secondly, that the conduct of the son with respect to the payment of the legacy duty, fourteen years after the death of the testator, amounted to a sufficient admission of assets to answer the legacy of 2,000*l.* Lazonby v. Rawson, 4 De G. M. & G. 556; 24 L. J., Ch. 482; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 289; 3 Eq. R. 89; 3 W. R. 34.

Payment of probate duty is presumptive evidence of an admission, but not an absolute admission, of assets to the extent covered by the amount of duty paid. Ib.

By Acknowledgment.] — C. bequeathed a legacy of 150*l.* to S. H., and died in 1811. S. H. attained her majority, and married G. H. In 1825, the executors wrote and signed, as executors, an acknowledgment as follows: "We separately and jointly acknowledge we owe to G. H. 150*l.*, being a legacy left to his wife by C., and 50*l.* interest thereon":—Held, that this memorandum was an admission of assets by both the executors. Holland v. Clark, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 319; 7 Jur. 213.

Quære, whether an acknowledgment in writing by the executors that they owed the plaintiff 200*l.* for a legacy, and the interest thereon, is an admission of assets; it was held, that unless it did, it created no personal demand enforceable in equity against the executors, and that whether it did or no, it gave no right of action against them at law. S. C., 1 Y. & C. C. C. 151.

A memorandum by the executor, stating the amount of a certain proportion of the residue, which was divisible among the plaintiffs, who were infants at the date of the memorandum:—Held, to be an admission of assets, entitling the plaintiffs to interest on their shares, under the circumstances, beyond the time allowed by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 40. Dinsdale v. Dudding, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 265.

An executor believing that there would be assets sufficient to pay a legacy, became trustee in, and executed the marriage settlement of the legatee, in which it was recited that she was entitled to the legacy, and it was agreed that it should be assigned upon certain trusts. A suit was afterwards instituted for a breach of trust by the testator, which was still pending, and, if established, would exhaust the assets:—Held, that there was an admission of assets primâ facie binding on the executor, and he was ordered to lodge in court the amount of the legacy, without prejudice to the executor (who was the respondent), in the event of there being a decree against him in the suit for a breach of trust by his testator, taking such proceedings as he might be advised, to be relieved against the admission of assets. Chaigneau v. Bryan, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 251.

By Residuary Account.]—Admission of assets is merely a question of evidence, and an executor may bring evidence to shew that his admission was the result of a mistake in the account. But where an executor had passed his residuary account, stating that a legacy was "retained in trust" out of the residue:—Held, that he was not entitled to shew that he had since discovered that the account had proceeded on a mistake, and that there were not in fact assets for the legacy. Brewster v. Prior, 55 L. T. 771; 35 W. R. 251.

Although a residuary account signed by an executor is primâ facie evidence of receipt of the moneys credited in the account, it is evidence which is open to explanation, and the acknowledgment is not conclusive against him in favour of a debtor to the estate. Miller v. Douglas, 56 L. J., Ch. 91; 55 L. T. 583; 35 W. R. 122.

A testator gave pecuniary legacies to his widow and other persons, and to his younger children as they came of age or married, and gave and devised to his eldest son certain real estates, purporting to include in such gift and devise a colliery which was, in fact, in settlement, and the plant of the colliery, and charging them with the sum of 50,000*l.* to form part of his personal estate. Under the settlement the colliery, with other real estates, was subject to a charge of 20,000*l.* for portions of the younger children. The personal estate of the testator being insufficient to meet his liabilities and the legacies, an arrangement was made between the eldest son and the executors, and such of the parties interested as were then entitled to their legacies, whereby it was agreed that the eldest son electing to take under the will should take possession of the colliery and plant, and should provide the balance of the money necessary to pay off the legacies then payable, as well as those which should from time to time become due. Upon this basis certain of the legacies were paid in full, and the executors, having paid full duty upon all the legacies, passed their residuary account shewing all the legacies as paid in full. The eldest son subsequently failed to provide sufficient funds to meet all the legacies, and there were in fact insufficient assets to meet the whole of the testator's liabilities. One of the younger children, when he became entitled, claimed payment in full of his legacy from the executors, upon the ground of their having admitted a sufficiency of assets:—Held, that the executors could not be held bound by the admission of assets in their accounts, and that the legatee could not establish a personal claim against them. Morewood v. Currey, 28 W. R. 213.

By filing Inventory.]—An inventory exhibited in the Ecclesiastical Court by an executor, for the purpose of obtaining probate, is not generally primâ facie evidence of his having received assets. It has never any conclusive effect. Steer v. Mills, 4 B. & Ad. 657; 1 N. & M. 436; 2 L. J., K. B. 106.

By exhibiting an inventory an administrator admits assets; and therefore where a plaintiff gave in evidence the inventory exhibited by an administrator in the spiritual court, charging himself with effects to a certain amount, it was received as evidence of assets to the amount therein stated. Hickey v. Hayter, 1 Esp. 313; 6 Term Rep. 384; 3 R. R. 213.

After putting in an inventory, it is for the administrator to discharge himself of the items which it contains. Giles v. Dyson, 1 Stark. 32; 18 R. R. 743.

In an action against an administrator, who pleads plene administravit præter 367*l.*, and gives in evidence an inventory in the Ecclesiastical Court, in which he stated that 232*l.*, part of the whole sum, was the amount of certain debts due to the deceased, supposed to be recoverable:—Held, that such debts might be considered as separate debts, and as such counted as assets in the administrator's hands. Young v. Corderoy, 3 Moore, 66. S. C., 8 Taunt. 734; 21 R. R. 523.

By paying Interest.]—Payment of interest for a legacy by an executor from time to time, shall be evidence of assets; not so of a single instance of payment of interest. Clergymen's Sons v. Swainson, 1 Ves. Sen. 75.

Payment by an executor of interest on a legacy is primâ facie an admission of assets. Parry v. Huddleton, 18 Jur. 992.

So, payment of interest by an executor, commencing six years after the testator's death, and continuing seven years, is such an admission of assets as to make the executor personally liable. Att.-Gen. v. Chapman, 3 Beav. 255; 10 L. J., Ch. 90.

Executors having for about three years paid interest on the plaintiff's legacies, the court, at the first hearing, directed accounts, with the view of determining, from the state of the assets, the liability of the executors to pay the legacies. The court, on further directions, refused to hold that by payment of interest the executors had admitted assets, such a conclusion being wholly at variance with all that had been previously done in the suit, and declined to charge them. Rowley v. Adams, 7 Beav. 395; 8 Jur. 994.

Evidence of admission of assets by payment of interest on a legacy. Att.-Gen. v. Higham, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 634.

Leasehold property was charged with two demonstrative legacies, being a fixed sum, to the executrix, and another fixed sum, the estimated remainder of its value, to a legatee, who had also the option of purchasing at the estimated value. The property was held of an ecclesiastical corporation for forty years, renewable every fourteenth year, and the executrix twice renewed the term out of her own money, but at the end of thirty years, she declined to renew a third time. The executrix, on passing the residuary account, had valued the leasehold property at the price fixed by her testatrix; upon this statement, a very small general residue appeared. The legatee, who was also tenant of the property, did not exercise the option of purchasing, but he retained the interest on his legacy, and paid the balance of rent, which did not keep down the interest on her legacy to the executrix. On a suit by the legatee:—Held, that there was an admission that the particular property, not the general assets, was sufficient for payment of the legacy, and that the executrix was not personally liable; but that, by the course of her conduct for thirty years, she had lost her priority. Severs v. Severs, 1 Sm. & G. 400; 17 Jur. 706; 1 W. R. 320.

A. and B. were partners. A. by his will gave C. and D. 5,000*l.* each, and sums to others, who, as well as D., were infants, and directed that the same should remain in the business, and interest be paid thereon. A. by his will appointed B., and three others, his executors, and died. B. continued the business, and transferred into his books the amount at which he estimated the estate to an account called "The account of the executors of A."; and in the same books opened accounts with C. and with D., in which he credited them respectively with their legacies and interest thereon from time to time. B. paid the legacy duty on C.'s and D.'s legacies, and paid legacy duty on the estimated value of A.'s residuary estate. B. died, and a suit was instituted to administer his estate, and C. and D. claimed to be creditors thereon in respect of their legacies, and one of the vice-chancellors decided in their favour:—Held, upon appeal, that the transactions of B. were not an admission of assets of A., and that as the suit was for the administration of the executor's, and not of the testator's estate, all that the court would do, was to direct the reservation of such dividends as are reserved in cases of claims, leaving C. and D. to take any steps in respect of the administration of the estate of A., and in respect of the dealings of B. therewith. Hutton v. Rossiter, 7 De G. M. & G. 9; 24 L. J., Ch. 106; 3 W. R. 97.

—— Payment of Interest to Tenant for Life.]—Payment by the executor of the interest of a legacy to the tenant for life under the will is not conclusive as an admission of assets by the executor, but such payment may be explained as having been made by mistake or for other reasons, and in that case the usual account of assets may be directed at the suit of parties interested in the estate. Postlethwaite v. Mounsey, 6 Hare, 33, n.

In January, 1863, P., the executor, wrote to the tenant for life under a will as follows: "In answer to your letter in reference to the trust moneys in which you have a life interest and the family of the late Mr. Payne the ultimate benefit, I beg to say that the money is placed out on different mortgage securities with moneys of my own, realising as much interest as possible. Had it not been for your sake the money should have been placed in the government stocks years ago." From 1854 down to the time of his death in 1874 P. regularly paid to the tenant for life 28*l.* a year by equal quarterly payments of 7*l.* each. In the year 1868 P. passed his residuary account, shewing no assets:—Held, that the letter of January, 1863, and the quarterly payments regularly made by P. both before and after writing that letter, were, under the circumstances, such an admission of assets as to make his estate personally liable. Payne v. Tanner, 55 L. J., Ch. 611; 55 L. T. 258; 34 W. R. 714.

By Payment of Legacy.]—Admission of assets to one legatee is such to all. Cook v. Martyn, 2 Atk. 3.

Executor not having exhibited an inventory, and having paid all legacies but one, is a sufficient foundation to charge him with assets as to that legacy, though not positively conclusive: an inventory solemnly exhibited not conclusive on executor, if there has been a variation of circumstances. Orr v. Kaines, 2 Ves. Sen. 194.

The court will not view the principle of payment of one legacy being an admission of assets for every other legatee as a hard and fast rule, but will, according to the tendency of modern decisions, examine the facts of the case fairly and justly, so as not to subject executors to liabilities which they have never contemplated. Morewood v. Currey, 28 W. R. 213.

Part payment of a legacy on account not an admission of assets to pay in full. Smith v. Stothard, 1 Jur. 540.

Payment of a legacy on an erroneous construction of the will, not malâ fide, not an admission of assets on the true construction. Clark v. Bates, 2 De G. & Sm. 203; 12 Jur. 597.

Annuities given by a will were regularly paid by the executors for six years, and irregular payments, on account, were made by them for the next four years. Semble, that this of itself would be an admission of assets. Payne v. Little, 22 Beav. 69.

The admission of an executor by his answer in a creditors' suit, that he had paid certain legacies bequeathed by the testator, is not an admission of assets entitling the plaintiff to a decree against the executor for payment of his debt without taking the account, when the bill does not specifically charge the defendant with having made himself personally liable, but prays that an account may be taken and the estate administered in a due course of administration. Whether such admission of the payment of legacies by the executor is a conclusive admission of assets in any case, quære. Savage v. Lane, 6 Hare, 32; 17 L. J., Ch. 89; 11 Jur. 1053.

Where an executor made payments from time to time on account of a legacy and interest, but did not pass the account at the legacy office until nine years after the death, when there appeared a considerable surplus:—Held, to amount to such an admission of assets as to enable the legatee to obtain a decree for immediate payment, without previously taking an account of the testator's estate. Whittle v. Henning, 2 Beav. 396.

Held, that an entry by the executors in partnership books of the amount of a legacy to the credit of the legatees, was a sufficient admission of assets. Townend v. Townend, 1 Giff. 201; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 506; 7 W. R. 529.

—— Payment of Legacy by Executor out of his own Money.]—The payment of one legacy by executors, not as such, but out of their own moneys, is not an admission of assets for the payment of others. Cadbury v. Smith, L. R. 9 Eq. 37; 24 L. T. 52; 18 W. R. 105.

Where one of two executors, who were also residuary legatees, died, a payment by his representatives to the survivor out of the deceased executor's estate, in satisfaction of the surviving executor's claim as such residuary legatee:—Held, not to be an admission of assets for the payment of the other legacies under the will. Ib.

W. gave his real and personal estate to trustees to convert the same and pay the income to A. for her life, and after her decease to pay the capital as she should appoint. She by her will, in exercise of her power, appointed the property to her executors (who were also the trustees of the will of W. and her own residuary legatees), upon trust to pay certain charitable legacies, including 1,000*l.* to a hospital. This legacy was not paid, and thirty years after the decease of A. a bill was filed against the surviving executor and the representatives of one who had died, for its payment:—Held, that, as in the judgment of the court there had been no admission of assets for the payment of the legacy, and no trust had been created, and no sum set apart for the payment of the legacy, the claim was barred by the Statute of Limitations. Ib.

By Payment to Executorship Account at Bank.]—The circumstance that moneys were paid in by an executor to his bankers, and placed to the executorship account, is primâ facie evidence that those moneys were in the executor's own hands as assets of the estate. Crossdail v. Phillips, 5 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 52.

By Will.]—A., by will, gave money upon mortgage to a charity in Ireland, the wife, by her will, affirming that bequest:—Held to be an admission of assets of the testator, and therefore good though out of land. Campbell v. Radnor (Earl), 1 Bro. C. C. 271.

By filing Bill.]—An executor filing a bill against agents of his testator is liable for the balance and costs only to the amount of assets, the institution of the suit not being an admission of assets. Mocher v. Frazer, Beat. 578.

Of a Receiver.]—In 1812 the executors of a receiver applied to pass his accounts, and pay in the balance; this was ordered, but payment was not made. In 1841 they were ordered to pay in the balance without interest, and it was held that they could not object the want of assets. Gurden v. Badcock, 6 Beav. 157; 12 L. J., Ch. 62.

Admission of assets to answer rents by the executor of a receiver, makes him liable to interest if made. Foster v. Foster, 2 Bro. C. C. 616.

By one Executor.]—Several executors, and some admit assets, yet an account decreed against the rest. Norton v. Turvill, 2 P. W. 145.

By Married Executrix.]—Executrix marries, and her husband and she admit assets in answer to a bill filed against them. The assets become a debt of the husband in respect of this admission, and may be proved under a commission of bankruptcy issued against him. M'Williams, In re, 1 Sch. & Lef. 173.

Whether binding on Heir.]—Where money is sought to be followed into land, the admission by the personal representative of party laying it out will not bind the heir, but it will be ground of inquiry. Lane v. Dighton, Ambl. 413.

Waiver.]—An admission of assets, by the executor's answer, is waived by the plaintiff's going on to an account of assets, and procuring a receiver to be appointed. Wall v. Bushby, 1 Bro. C. C. 484.

Retractation.]—Though the court is not strict in holding executors who have acted fairly to an admission of assets, yet in this case circumstances tending to shew that the defendant had admitted assets several years before, and he having obtained a release which the court held to be fraudulent, a personal decree was made against him for the legacy and interest with costs. Horsley v. Chaloner, 2 Ves. Sen. 83.

Admission of assets not to be retracted, except on clear mistake. Drewry v. Thacker, 3 Swan. 548; 19 R. R. 274.

Where in an examination put in by two co-executors it was stated that their receipts had been joint, but it appeared, by affidavit, that that statement was made through mistake and inadvertence, and that one of the executors had, in fact, received nothing, liberty was given to him to put in a supplemental examination to correct the mistake. Hewes v. Hewes, 4 Sim. 1.

A court of equity does not bind executors by an admission of assets, if new claims on the estate afterwards arise. Payne v. Little, 22 Beav. 69.

Decree on Admissions.]—An admission of assets for the payment of a legacy is an admission of assets for the purposes of the suit, and extends to costs, if the court thinks fit to give them. Philanthropic Society v. Hobson, 2 Myl. & K. 357; 3 L. J., Ch. 97.

—— Of Stock in names of Executors.]—Admission that there is standing in the names of the executors upon the trusts of the will, a considerable sum in the 3 per cents., and offering an appropriation, was held sufficient to entitle the plaintiff, a contingent legatee, to move for that purpose, and by consent the order was made as upon admission of assets sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's demand, to transfer, &c. Pullen v. Smith, 5 Ves. 21.

Admission of assets prevents the necessity of setting forth the accounts. Ib.

—— For Payment of Legacies.]—A decree for payment of legacies was made against an executor, without reference to the state of the assets, upon the ground of his having, by his acts and admissions, rendered himself personally liable for the payment. Barnard v. Pumfrett, 5 Myl. & C. 63.

An executor denied assets, but his answer disclosed a personal liability for payment of the plaintiff's legacies. The court made an order for immediate payment, without directing the accounts to be taken. Rogers v. Soutten, 2 Keen, 598; C. P. Cooper, 96; 7 L. J., Ch. 118.

Decree in a legatee's suit, on admission of assets, without taking the accounts. Gordon v. Scott, 3 Hare, 459, n. See also 8 Jur. 894, and Say v. Creed, 3 Hare, 459.

An executor, in a suit for the arrears of an annuity under a will, disputing the title of the plaintiff to the annuity as a question of law, but admitting assets sufficient to pay funeral and testamentary expenses and legacies, may be decreed to pay the costs of the suit in addition to the arrears, and is not entitled to a decree for an account of the assets prior to any decree being made for costs. Roch v. Callen, 6 Hare, 531; 17 L. J., Ch. 144; 12 Jur. 112.

—— For Payment of Residue.]—If the executors and trustees of a will file a bill for the purpose of having the rights of the defendants in the residue ascertained, without either praying that the accounts of the personal estate may be taken, or offering to account for it, but admitting that there is a residue, the court will declare the rights of the defendants in the residue, without directing the accounts of the personal estate to be taken, although the defendants apply at the hearing to have the accounts taken. Blathwayt v. Taylor, 11 Sim. 455.

Circumstances under which a decree may be made against executors, for payment of the ascertained residue, without directing an account. Lincoln v. Wright, 4 Beav. 427; 10 L. J., Ch. 331

—— For Payment of Debt.]—In a suit by a creditor on behalf of himself and all other creditors, if the debt of the plaintiff be admitted or proved, and the executor or administrator admits assets, the plaintiff is entitled at the hearing to an immediate decree for payment, and not to a mere decree for an account. Woodgate v. Field, 2 Hare, 211; 11 L. J., Ch. 321; 6 Jur. 871.

—— For Payment of Dividends—Fund in Court.]—Order for payment of the dividends of a fund in court to the executors, for distribution amongst the parties interested before the accounts of the estate were taken, the executors admitting assets of the testator for all purposes. Shewell v. Shewell, 2 Hare, 154; 12 L. J., Ch. 250.

—— New Decree taken for Account—Account shewing Deficiency—Liability of Executor.]—Under an order of reference to take an account of assets, the master having reported that there were assets sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's legacy, although assets to an amount sufficient to satisfy the trusts of the will were not shewn by the accounts, the master grounding his general finding upon the evidence of the defendant's admission of assets, by his answer, upon which a personal decree against him had been made, but which the plaintiff had been advised to abandon and take a new decree for an account of assets under the circumstances, with the view to the more effectual relief:—Held, that the report was right, this being an inference directly arising from, although not strictly within the terms of the reference, and the master not being so purely ministerial as to be precluded from drawing such inferences, but on the contrary bound to do so. Even if matter so reported beyond the terms of the order was surplusage, that is not a ground of exception, it not being the course to send back the report to the master to expunge a few unnecessary words. In the present case the executor having, by admitting assets, prevented the account being taken at the proper time, was ordered to pay the costs of the suit, being precluded thereafter from alleging or relying on a deficiency to the prejudice of the plaintiff; Lord Chancellor observing that the proper course would have been to let the personal decree stand, and come for ancillary order to discover and attach such of the assets as remained in specie, if the personal decree could not be made available. M'Carthy v. M'Carthy, 1 Moll. 186.

—— Against Executor of Executor.]—By admitting assets, the executor of an executor renders himself liable to the same decree as the executor himself, if living, would have been liable to in respect of the personal estate of the original testator. Davenport v. Stafford, 2 De G. M. & G. 901.

—— Jurisdiction in Bankruptcy.]—The court sitting in bankruptcy, has no jurisdiction to order the personal representative of a deceased assignee to account for the personal estate of the bankrupt in his hands. Crowe, Ex parte, Mont. & McAr. 281.

The Lord Chancellor thought that an admission of assets on the part of the representative would make no difference. Ib.

Other Matters.]—A. S., the sole executrix and tenant for life, died, having 12,500*l.* of the assets in her hands. Her executors admitted assets:—Held, that in the absence of any further proof, they were not liable for interest. Davenport v. Stafford, 14 Beav. 319.

Executors, having admitted assets in an administration suit by legatees whose legacies are charged on real estate, are not bound to set forth a list of documents relating to the real estate of the testator. Forbes v. Tanner, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 455; 11 W. R. 414.

In a creditors' suit for the administration of the assets of an intestate, who had joined in a bond as a surety, the bond creditor, being aware of the suit, omitted to prove till the time limited by the advertisements for creditors to come in had expired; a decree on further directions had been made; the administratrix had admitted assets, and the principal debtor in the bond had become bankrupt:—Held, that he might still be let in upon terms, the fund remaining undistributed. Brown v. Lake, 1 De G. & Sm. 144.

An admission of assets by the administratrix, embodied in an order made on a petition in the cause, qualified by a declaration in a subsequent order. Ib.

An executor, dealing with money in his hands, is bound to ear-mark it, but if he cannot answer as to the state of it, the court has no power to act as upon an admission. Freeman v. Fairlie, 3 Mer. 40; 17 R. R. 7.

e. Plea of Plene Administravit.

Proof on Plea of Plene Administravit.]—In an action against an executor, the only plea being plene administravit, the plaintiff must begin, and give some evidence of assets, and cannot in reply call general evidence in proof of assets. Webster v. Blackman, 2 F. & F. 490.

It is a question for the jury, whether an executor has committed a devastavit by swearing the property above its value, and so incurring a greater stamp duty than he would otherwise have to pay, seeing that an executor is bound to act promptly, and therefore is not to be held to too close a search for the testator's property. Jackson v. Bowley, Car. & M. 97.

In an action against an executor on plene administravit, the plaintiff is bound to shew affirmatively that the executor had goods of the testator in his hands unadministered; and though the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict, if he can prove any property unadministered, yet the measure of the damages is not the amount of his debt, but so much as he can shew to remain in the hands of the executor. Ib.

On a plea of plene administravit, it was proved on the part of the plaintiff, that at the time of the death of the intestate there were crops on his farm; but that there had been an auction on the premises about a month before, at which these crops were put up for sale :—Held, that as the crops remained on the premises at the time of the death of the intestate, it lay on the administrator to shew that these crops had not come to his hands. Stroud v. Dandridge, 1 Car. & K. 445.

On a plea of plene administravit, it appeared that the intestate, six months before his death, had assigned all his effects to trustees by deed, for the benefit of such of his creditors as should execute the deed of assignment. The deed was executed by himself and the trustees, but not by any other creditor :—Held, that the administrator might give in evidence advertisements published soon after the execution of the deed, stating where it lay for execution by the creditors, and calling a meeting of creditors as to the sale of the effects, and also a resolution of that meeting that the effects should be sold, as this evidence went to shew that the deed was acted upon, and was a bonâ fide and not a fraudulent deed. Ib.

On a plea of plene administravit, proof of an admission by the executor that the debt was just, and should be paid as soon as he could, is not evidence to charge him with assets. Hindsley v. Russell, 12 East, 232 ; 11 R. R. 373.

The question of assets or no assets in the hands of an executor is settled by the judgment given on a plea of plene administravit ; and no evidence can be given of assets after the writ sued out. Mara v. Quin, 6 Term Rep. 1.

In an action against an executor, issue was taken upon a plea of no assets and plene administravit, and replication of assets in hand. The evidence was, that the testator, twelve months before his death, purchased twelve chairs, which were seen in his house shortly before his death :—Held, in the absence of any proof that the goods were lost, primâ facie evidence of assets. Britton v. Jones, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 676 ; 4 Scott, 393 ; 3 Hodges, 32.

—— As to Part only.]—In an action against several executors, who severed in their pleadings, one pleaded plene administravit, except as to 865*l.*, for which judgment was accordingly signed, and upon which an action, suggesting a devastavit, was afterwards brought against him : —Held, that the production of the judgment, and of a fi. fa. thereon, under which goods of the testator of the value of 482*l.* only were seized, was sufficient evidence of a devastavit as to the residue. Cooper v. Taylor, 6 Man. & G. 989 ; 7 Scott (N.R.) 950 ; 13 L. J., C. P. 92 ; 8 Jur. 450.

—— Action brought Fifteen Years after Testator's Death.]—An executor, after payment of all the debts of which he had notice, invested certain parts of the residue of the testator's personal estate remaining in his hands, in the funds, in his own name, received the dividends and paid them over to the legatees in satisfaction of their legacies given by the will :—Held, that the executor could not sustain a plea of plene administravit to an action brought against him, fifteen years after the testator's death, for a specialty debt of the testator, of which he had no notice. Smith v. Day, 2 M. & W. 684 ; M. & H. 185 ; 6 L. J., Ex. 219.

—— Payment of Interest on Bond.]—If payment, by an executor, of interest on a bond due from his testator is not conclusive evidence of assets, "it eases the creditor from proving assets, and throws the onus on the other side." Cleverley v. Brett, 5 Term Rep. 8, n. ; 2 R. R. 525, n.

How Defence of Plene Administravit can be rebutted.]—Where an executor pleads plene administravit, and shews payments by him to the extent of the assets proved by the plaintiff to have come to his hands, the plaintiff may shew in answer that the funds so applied did not come to the defendant as executor, but were handed to him in trust to pay the testator's debts, and were not part of the assets at first proved to have come to his hands. Marston v. Downes, 1 A. & E. 31 ; 3 N. & M. 861 ; 6 Car. & P. 381 ; 3 L. J., K. B. 158.

When some Executors have Assets and some have not.]—On a plea by several executors that they have fully administered, if some are shewn to have assets in their hands, and the others not, the latter are entitled to a verdict. Parsons v. Hancock, M. & M. 330 ; 31 R. R. 733.

Effect of Plea.]—Plene administravit and no assets at the time of the exhibiting of the bill, pleaded after the 2 Will. 4, c. 39, was held after verdict to refer to the commencement of the suit, and not to the filing of the declaration. Rees v. Morgan, 3 N. & M. 205 ; 5 B. & Ad. 1035 ; 3 L. J., K. B. 102.

If an executor pleads plene administravit, he is only liable to the amount of assets in his hands. Harrison v. Beccles, 3 Term Rep. 688, n. ; 1 R. R. 797.

If an executor or an administrator pleads plene administravit præter a certain sum, and afterwards to another action brought in the same term pleads also plene administravit præter the same sum, and as to that sum that he had confessed in the other action, such plea is a good bar. Waters v. Ogden, 2 Dougl. 452.

Where an executor pleads the general issue and plene administravit, and the former plea is found against him, and the latter for him, he is entitled to the postea. Cockson v. Drinkwater, 3 Dougl. 239.

Plea amounting to Plene Administravit.]—An executrix pleaded that she had not, nor at the commencement of the action nor since, had any goods, which were of the testator at the time of his decease, in her hands to be administered ; and the plaintiff replied that the defendant before and at the time of the commencement of the action had divers goods of the testator to be administered ; upon which issue was joined. At the trial, the plaintiff having shewn that the defendant received certain assets, the defendant proved payment to a greater amount, and a verdict was found in her favour :—Held, first, that the evidence of payment was properly received ; and, secondly, that the plaintiff was not entitled to judgment non obstante veredicto, upon the ground that the introductory part of the plea did not state that the executrix had fully administered the testator's goods. Reeves v. Ward, 2 Scott, 390 ; 2 Bing. (N.C.) 235 ; 1 Hodges, 300 ; 5 L. J., C. P. 67.

Evidence.]—Declaration on a judgment recovered in a court baron of a manor, for debt and damages, to be levied of the goods and chattels of G., deceased, in the hands of the defendant as administrator. Averment, that a writ of levari facias issued, to which there was a return of nulla bona. Suggestion of devastavit. Plea, first, that the plaintiff did not recover against the defendant; secondly, inducement of plene administravit, and traverse of the devastavit. Verdict for the plaintiff, and final judgment entered for debt and costs:—Held, that evidence of the goods of the deceased having been duly administered was inadmissible. Dawson v. Gregory, 7 Q. B., 756; 14 L. J., Q. B. 286; 9 Jur. 688.

On a special plea of plene administravit, if assets are proved in the hands of the executor, he may give evidence of the payment of other debts with those assets, previously to the action brought. Smedley v. Hill, 2 W. Bl. 1105.

Interrogatories.]—In an action against a surviving trustee and the executors of a deceased trustee for alleged breaches of trust, the executors pleaded plene administravit, and the plaintiffs having thereupon administered interrogatories, seeking for particulars of their testator's real and personal estate, and their administration of it, the executors' answer was merely a repetition of their defence:—Held, insufficient, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to a further and more specific answer. St. George v. St. George, 19 L. R., Ir. 225.

By Executor de son tort.]—Plene administravit by an executor de son tort is no defence, either legal or equitable, in bar of an action of trover, trespass, or for money received, at the suit of the personal representatives of the deceased. Elworthy v. Sanford, 3 H. & C. 330; 34 L. J., Ex. 42; 10 L. T. 654; 12 W. R. 1008.

f. OTHER PLEAS.

Plea of Ne unques executor.]—An executor may plead ne unques executor and plene administravit. Tyson v. Kendall, 19 L. J., Q. B. 434; 14 Jur. 1044.

Action against an administratrix with the will annexed, upon promises by the testator. A plea that she is not, nor ever has been, administratrix, is to be taken as merely denying that she ever was administratrix, or liable as such. Scott v. Wedlake, 7 Q. B. 766; 14 L. J., Q. B. 359; 9 Jur. 1114—Ex. Ch.

A plea by one of two, charged as executors, that the other is not an executor, is bad. Atkins v. Humphrey, 3 D. & L. 612; 2 C. B. 654; 15 L. J., C. P. 120.

Under a plea of not guilty, an executor cannot be called upon to shew that the testator is dead, unless there is a plea of ne unques executor. Loyd v. Finlayson, 2 Esp. 564.

In an action against several, as executors, who have pleaded ne unques executors, the plaintiff may have a verdict against the real executor, on counts laying promises by the testator, and the others must be discharged. Griffiths v. Franklin, M. & M. 146.

An administrator, who has been compelled to pay an annuity for which his intestate was liable, may recover on a plea of ne unques administrator against a party who has covenanted to indemnify the intestate against such payment, though such claim of indemnity has not been taken into account in the amount of the stamp on the letters of administration. Carr v. Roberts, 1 M. & Rob. 45.

A plaintiff sued as executor, and in his declaration made profert of the letters testamentary, which stated, "whereby it appears to the court that the plaintiff is executor." The defendant did not crave oyer, but pleaded that the plaintiff never was, nor is, executor in manner and form, as alleged. The plaintiff replied that he was and continued to be executor, in manner and form, &c.:—Held, that the plaintiff might recover on this issue, although he had not taken probate till some months after the declaration. Thompson v. Reynolds, 3 Car. & P. 123.

—— In Equity.]—Where a plaintiff sues an executor, but the probate is insufficiently stamped, the defendant, if he pleads to the bill, ought not to state matters affirmatively, in order to shew the insufficiency of the stamp, but ought to plead simply that the plaintiff is not executor. Roberts v. Madocks, 16 Sim. 55; 17 L. J., Ch. 38; 11 Jur. 638.

Plaintiff sued as administrator, defendant pleaded that plaintiff was not administrator, but did not deny by answer the usual charge as to documents:—Held, that the plea was not bad on that account. Fry v. Richardson, 10 Sim. 475; 9 L. J., Ch. 171. S. P., Hill v. Neale, 5 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 144.

To a bill by a legatee for general administration against the defendant who, it was stated, had proved the will, and had possessed himself of the assets and made various payments, it was pleaded in bar to the whole bill that he had not proved the will, and was not the legal personal representative of the deceased:—Held, that the plea was a good one, and must be allowed, and without liberty to amend. Cary v. Hills, 42 L. J., Ch. 100; L. R. 15 Eq. 79; 28 L. T. 6; 21 W. R. 166.

An executor who has not proved his testator's will may be made a party to a suit in equity, provided he has acted as executor, and it is not necessary in order to maintain the bill against him, to prove that he has actually received money in the character of an executor. Vickers v. Bell, 4 De G. J. & S. 274.

Circumstances under which a person named as an executor in a will was held to have so acted as to render himself liable to account as executor, and pay costs as having joined in a vexatious defence. Ib.

An executor who has not proved his testator's will, but has received assets, may be made a defendant to an action by a creditor to the extent of the assets he has received. Ambler v. Lindsay, 45 L. J., Ch. 768; 3 Ch. D. 198; 35 L. T. 93; 24 W. R. 982.

A plea of non administravit is not a sufficient answer to bill, charging that the defendant, as executor, has possessed himself of a part of the estate. Hinde v. Skelton, 2 Hem. & M. 690; 6 N. R. 22; 34 L. J., Ch. 378; 13 W. R. 675.

To a bill charging that the defendant had been appointed executor, had duly proved the will, was the sole legal personal representative of A. (the testator), and as such executor had possessed himself of real and personal estate of A., more than sufficient to answer the claim of the plaintiff against A.'s estate, the defendant put in a plea denying that he had proved the will or had ever administered the goods of A., as such executor as in the bill in that behalf mentioned:—Held, that the allegation of possession of the assets of A. was not covered by the averment in the plea, that the defendant had never, as such executor, administered, and plea overruled as insufficient. Ib.

A bill for the administration of an estate alleged that a defendant was the executor of the will, that he had proved the will and received assets; the defendant pleaded that he was not executor, without answering the other allegations: plea overruled, with costs. Jones v. Williams, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1068; 11 L. T. 264; 13 W. R. 1.

The will in this case had been proved by the defendants after bill filed, and the date of the probate was introduced by amendment. Plea to the original and amended bill was filed, that, at the time the original bill was filed, the defendants had not proved the will or possessed themselves of property, overruled. Haynes v. Barton, 13 Jur. 480.

The administration of devised realty does not generally depend upon probate of the will; and therefore a plea by a devisee of real estate, who was also an executor of the will, that he had not proved, and could not prove, the will, was ordered to stand for an answer. Tempest v. Camoys (Lord), 35 Beav. 201; 14 L. T. 8; 14 W. R. 326.

Plea of Judgment recovered.]—If to an action brought by a creditor of a testator, the executrix pleads judgments recovered, and no assets beyond; to which the plaintiff replies per fraudem generally; it is not conclusive evidence of fraud, that the judgments as pleaded were confessed for more than the just debts; but the executrix may shew that they were entered up by mistake for more than was due, and that that was made known to the plaintiff before the action was brought. Pease v. Naylor, 5 Term Rep. 80.

Where a plaintiff recovered judgment against a testator in his lifetime, and afterwards had judgment of execution against the executors in scire facias, upon which judgment he sued the executors, suggesting a devastavit:—Held, that the executors being fixed conclusively with assets by such latter judgment, the issue, upon non detinet, lay upon them to prove the due administration of such assets, otherwise the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Hope v. Bague, 2 East, 2.

A judgment confessed by an executrix to a creditor of the testator, as well for his own debt as in trust for the debts of many of the creditors, cannot be pleaded in bar to an action brought against her by another creditor of the testator. Tolput v. Wells, 1 M. & S. 395; 14 R. R. 466.

A plea of judgment recovered on a simple contract, pleaded by an administrator to an action on a bond, must aver that such recovery was had before notice of the bond debt. Sawyer v. Mercer, 1 Term Rep. 600.

To an action against an executor for goods sold to the testator, he, at Nisi Prius, pleaded a plea puis darrein continuance of judgment recovered in a plea of debt on the simple contract of the testator, commenced since the present action:—Held, first, that it was no answer to this plea, that the judgment pleaded was in a plea of debt on the testator's simple contract; and secondly, that the plea was not invalidated by his having suffered judgment to pass against him voluntarily. Prince v. Nicholson, 1 Marsh. 280; 5 Taunt. 665; 15 R. R. 612.

Action against executrices, for work and labour done for the testator. Plea, that a judgment had been obtained against the testator in his lifetime, and that they had fully administered except as to chattels of small value, not sufficient to satisfy the judgment. Replication, that the testator paid a large sum in satisfaction and discharge of the debt recovered, and of the judgment; and that the executrices, deceitfully and with intention to defraud the plaintiff of his damages, have deferred and still do defer procuring acknowledgment or satisfaction to be entered up of the debt, or to be released therefrom, and still permit the judgment thereon to remain in full force. A rejoinder, traversing the payment of the sum in satisfaction and discharge of the debt recovered, and of the judgment, was held bad on demurrer; for the material fact to be traversed was the keeping on foot the judgment by fraud; whereas the payment in satisfaction was immaterial and not traversable, being mere inducement. Jones v. Roberts, 4 Tyr. 48; 2 C. & M. 219; 2 D. P. C. 374; 3 L. J., Ex. 46.

Plea of non est factum.]—If an executor pleads non est factum to a bond, and not plene administravit likewise, he cannot, after verdict, take advantage of what might have been pleaded to the action. The plea of non est factum only, is an admission of assets, and held the same as in a case of a judgment by default against an executor. Ramsden v. Jackson, 1 Atk. 294.

Other Pleas.]—To an action against an executrix, she pleaded that the testator became bound to A. in 2,800*l.*, conditioned to indemnify him against another bond for 800*l.*, which A. had executed jointly with the testator to B., but for the proper debt of the testator; that the 800*l.* became due in the testator's lifetime, and was still unpaid; that upon the testator's death the indemnity bond became forfeited, and the money therein contained was still unpaid; and that the defendant had administered all, except so much as would satisfy the indemnity bond; this was held a good plea. Cox v. Joseph, 5 Term Rep. 307.

A. died beyond the sea, and made a nuncupative will; B. took administration here, and brought his bill for a discovery of the supposed intestate's personal estate; the defendant pleaded the will, and that he was executor, and that A. left no assets but what were beyond seas; plea allowed. Jauncy v. Sealey, 1 Vern. 397.

Bill by a creditor of an intestate, for 100*l.* on note, charging that the administratrix promised to pay as soon as she could get in effects. Plea the Statute of Limitations, and that she made no promise to pay. This is too general, for she should have pleaded she made no promise to pay out of assets. Anon., 3 Atk. 71.

To a bill filed by a residuary legatee against an alleged debtor to the estate for an account, alleging as ground of equity that the executors had refused to call the debtor to account, and that he was the solicitor of the executors, but not expressly charging a collusion, a plea was put in denying the refusal of the executors, setting out a letter from them to show that they had not refused, and averring no collusion:—Held, that the averments did not overrule the plea, nor raise any new issue, and that the plea was good. Saunders v. Druce, 3 Drew. 140; 24 L. J., Ch. 593; 3 W. R. 301.

Executor, having paid legacies, stands in a situation in which (at least for the security of the fund) it is not competent to him to allege that debts are unpaid. Freeman v. Fairlie, 3 Mer. 35; 17 R. R. 7.

Plea, by an executor, who has proved a will,

"that the testator was at the date of his will, and also at the time of his death, domiciled in France, and that all the bequests of personal estate affected to be made by it, are by the laws of that country null and void," is a good plea in bar to a suit by a legatee under the will for payment of his legacy, and for administration of the personal estate of the testator. Campbell v. Beaufoy, Johns. 320; 28 L. J., Ch. 645; 7 W. R. 513.

Such a plea, though it puts two facts in issue, is not double, since neither fact taken would be a complete bar to the suit. Ib.

A testator bequeathed to his executors his business premises, fixtures, plant, &c., on trust to permit his son to carry on the business and occupy the premises, and use the plant for that purpose, "upon the terms and conditions" of his paying the testator's daughter, R., an annuity, payable weekly. The executor instituted a suit against the son, and other beneficiaries under the will for the administration of the estate. Pending this suit R. filed her bill against the son, alleging that her annuity had not been paid, and praying, first, a declaration of her being entitled to the annuity; secondly, an account of the amount due in respect thereof; thirdly, payment; fourthly, an account of the profits of the business; fifthly, a declaration that the annuity was a charge on the business premises and effects; sixthly, a receiver; seventhly, sale or mortgage; eighthly, general accounts and inquiries: ninthly, payment of costs; and tenthly, general relief. The defendant demurred as to so much of the bill "as seeks that an account may be taken as prayed by the first paragraph," and to the relief prayed by the third and following paragraphs of the bill on the grounds of the pendency of the executor's suit, want of equity, and want of parties, and as to the remainder of the bill he answered. By his answer he claimed to be entitled, under the will, to the sole beneficial interest in the premises:—Held, that the court would look at the answer filed with the demurrer to see whether the defendant had confessed an equity, that whether the demurrer was taken to apply to the first or second paragraph of the prayer of the bill relief must follow, that since the plaintiff's was a personal demand against the son, the executor was not a necessary party to her suit, and that since, in the executor's suit, full justice could not be done to the plaintiff, she could sustain this bill. The demurrer was accordingly overruled. Rees v. Engelback, 40 L. J., Ch. 382; L. R. 12 Eq. 225; 24 L. T. 417; 19 W. R. 809.

In an action by an executor upon a promissory note payable to his testator, the defendant pleaded that the testator bequeathed to C. the note, not to be sued upon or made available until he became of age, and that before that time C. was convicted of felony:—Held, that the plea was bad; because, first, the property in the note did not vest in C. under 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 3; and, secondly, the conviction of C. did not divest the legal interest in the note out of the executor, though he became trustee of the proceeds for the crown. Bishop v. Curtis, 18 Q. B. 878; 21 L. J., Q. B. 391; 17 Jur. 23.

Action by executors, for work and labour of their testator, money paid by him, and on an account stated with him, for work and labour and money paid by the executors, and on an account stated with them as executors. A plea that the testator, in consideration of the defendant consenting to act on a provisional committee for a projected railway, agreed to indemnify him from any charges on account of the railway, and the work was done and money paid by the testator, and the account stated with him in respect of the same, in surveying the line, and that the work was done and money paid by the executors in and about surveying the line, and the account was stated with them in respect of the same work; that all the causes of action accrued after the promise to indemnify, and that the defendant made the promises, only in his character of member of the committee, that the railway was abandoned, and the work and payments became of no value, and all sums recovered from the defendant in respect thereof would be lost to the defendant, and he would be damnified to that extent, is a good plea for avoiding circuity of action to both counts, since the defendant, on the facts alleged, was entitled to recover, from the testator in his life or from his representatives, as much as they would recover from him. Connop v. Levy, 5 Railw. Cas. 124; 11 Q. B. 769; 17 L. J., Q. B. 125; 12 Jur. 306.

Another plea, alleging that the testator, in his lifetime, caused the defendant to enter into his promises by fraud, is a good plea, not only to the first count, but also to the second, since, if he was induced by the testator's fraud to make the original contract with him, the same fraud procured the implied promise to the executors for the work they had done, and money they had paid in pursuance of that contract. Ib.

Replication.]—In an action by an executor upon a bond given to his testator, a demurrer to a replication traversing a payment, alleged in the plea to have been made to a party stated to have been a co-executor with the plaintiff, but not shewn to be alive, on the ground that the plaintiff has omitted to describe himself as surviving executor, is a frivolous demurrer. Tuckey v. Hawkins, 4 C. B. 655.

Detention of Testator's Goods—Counterclaim.]—In an action by an executor for the detention of goods of his testator taken possession of after the testator's death, the defendant may counterclaim for the funeral expenses of the testator paid by him, and also for a debt due to him from the testator before his death. Watkin v. Newcomen, 1 Cab. & E. 113.

g. Statute of Limitations.

When it may be pleaded at Law—Against Personal Representative.]—An executor cannot bring an action after the time limited by the Statute of Limitations has expired, even though he brings it within a reasonable time, unless his testator commenced an action before the time expired, and the action has abated by the act of God. Penny v. Brice, 18 C. B. (N.S.) 393; 11 L. T. 632; 13 W. R. 342.

Where a person dies abroad to whom a right of action has accrued during his residence there, and he never returned to this country after the accrual thereof, his executors may sue for it, although more than six years have elapsed since it accrued. Townsend v. Deacon, 3 Ex. 706; 6 D. & L. 659; 18 L. J., Ex. 298; 13 Jur. 366.

In 1833 the plaintiff married, at which time his wife was the holder of a promissory note made by the defendant, and which had been given to her whilst sole. In 1834 the plaintiff's wife died after giving birth to a child. It was then agreed between the plaintiff (who claimed the note as the representative of his late wife) and the defendant, that the latter should maintain the child, and that in consideration thereof the defendant should receive the rents of certain cottages which had been the property of the plaintiff's wife, and that he should also retain the interest to become payable on the note. In 1839 the defendant signed an indorsement on the note, to the effect that all the interest upon the note was then paid. The defendant continued to maintain the child till the time of its death in 1848. In 1853 letters of administration were granted to the plaintiff, and subsequently in the same year the plaintiff brought an action on the note:—Held, per Alderson, B., Platt, B., and Martin, B. (dubitante Parke, B.), that the agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant, that the future maintenance of the child should be taken in part of the interest on the note, and which had been acted upon within six years before action brought, was a sufficient payment of interest within the proviso of the 2nd section of 9 Geo. 4, c. 14. Bodger v. Arch, 10 Ex. 333; 2 C. L. R. 1491; 24 L. J., Ex. 19.

—— By Personal Representative.]—Where an action by a creditor against his debtor, commenced within six years, abates by reason of the death of the debtor, the reasonable time allowed for commencing a fresh action against the personal representatives of the debtor, in order to prevent the operation of the Statute of Limitations, dates from the granting of the letters of administration; and the right of the creditor in this respect is not affected by delay on the part of the next-of-kin of the debtor in obtaining administration. Curlewis v. Mornington (Earl), 7 El. & Bl. 283; 26 L. J., Q. B. 181; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 660; 5 W. R. 266. Affirmed, 27 L. J., Q. B. 439; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1102; 6 W. R. 682—Ex. Ch.

To a plea of the Statute of Limitations to an action against an executor for goods sold and delivered, and for money lent to his testator, the plaintiff replied, on equitable grounds, that the causes of action accrued within six years before the death of the testator, who by his will devised lands to the executor, and bequeathed to him the residue of his personal estate, upon trust to sell and convert the same into money, and thereout pay his debts and legacies, and to hold the residue in trust for the plaintiff and his other children equally, and averring that the moneys realised were sufficient to pay all debts and legacies:—Held, that the executor was entitled to judgment. Gulliver v. Gulliver, 1 H. & N. 174; 25 L. J., Ex. 341; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1051; 4 W. R. 653. And see JOINT AND SEVERAL AUTHORITY, I. a. 3, col. 1234, ante.

In Equity.]—Plea of Statute of Limitations, by an executor, the testator having died in 1786, the probate not taken till 1802 allowed, the allegation of the bill upon a fair construction being, that the defendant had possessed the personal estate, and therefore might have been sued as executor de son tort previously to 1792. Webster v. Webster, 10 Ves. 93. The Statute of Limitations does not run in equity against the right of an executor, or of an executor of an executor, to have his accounts taken and his liability as an accounting party defined by inquiries under the direction of the court. Smith v. O'Grady, 7 Moore P. C. (N.S.) 106; 39 L. J., P. C. 63; L. R. 3 P. C. 311; 23 L. T. 476; 19 W. R. 22.

The Statute of Limitations does not run in equity against the right of an executor, or of an executor of an executor, to sue the persons beneficially interested in the estate for recovery of payments made in excess of assets in hand. Ib.

An executor coming to the court after twelve years' delay, asking to have the accounts of his estate taken, is not disentitled. Ib.

A person bequeathed all his real and personal estate in Jamaica, after payment of debts and legacies, to his grandchildren, to be apportioned when they should attain twenty-one, and appointed R. executor of his will and guardian in respect of his real estate. The testator died in 1832, and R. entered into possession of the real and personal estate. R. died in 1850, and appointed S. his executor. The grandchildren attained their majority in 1865, and in that year S. filed a petition praying that an account might be taken of the real and personal estate of the testator:—Held, that he was entitled, notwithstanding the delay, as a matter of right to have an account taken of the personal estate of the testator, and inasmuch as R. had been appointed guardian in respect of the real estate, and had entered into possession of the same, accounts should also be taken of the rents and profits of the real estate of the testator. Ib.

—— Fund in Court, Claim against.]—A remainderman paid with his own money, after he had come into possession, interest which had accrued, during the preceding estate for life, upon charges affecting the inheritance:—Held, first, that his executors were entitled, in 1870 (as against the personal representative of the tenant for life), to be recouped out of a fund in court, the produce of rents of the life estate brought in, in 1815, by a receiver appointed in an incumbrancer's suit instituted against the tenant for life. Howlin v. Sheppard, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 38. Affirmed, Ib., 497.

Held, secondly, that the fund having remained in court, during the whole period from 1815 to 1870, in usum jus habentium, the claim of H.'s executor was not barred. Ib.

—— Effect of Bill.]—A bill filed not on behalf of all creditors of a testator against his personal representative does not keep alive against him the demand of specialty creditors, and a demand in such a case held barred by lapse of time. Busby v. Seymour, 1 Jo. & Lat. 527; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 433.

—— Interest.]—Equitable charge on real estates is not barred by length of time without demand, though considerable, and though at length brought forward under circumstances not favourable yet not equivalent to or affording presumption of release. Account of interest against tenant for life decreed and not limited to six years. Stackhouse v. Barnston, 10 Ves. 453.

Advertisement for Creditors.]—An executor's advertisement to creditors to send in an account of their claims for examination does not amount to a promise sufficient to revive a statute-barred debt. Scott v. Jones, 4 Cl. & F. 382; 7 L. J. Ch. 242.

—— Notice by Creditors.]—Notice by a creditor of his claim in answer to advertisement by an executor under 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 29, does not prevent the Statute of Limitations from running. Stephens, In re, Warburton v. Stephens, 59 L. J., Ch. 109; 43 Ch. D. 39; 61 L. T. 609.

Debt barred in England by Statute of Limitations — Scotch Judgment — Registration in England.]—Where a creditor, whose claim had been disallowed as barred by the Statute of Limitations in an administration action in England, obtained a decree for the amount of his claim and costs in a Scotch action and registered such decree in the Queen's Bench Division, the assets in the administration being still unadministered:—Held, that the Scotch judgment when registered was a new cause of action, and, such cause of action not being barred by the Statute of Limitations and not having been adjudicated upon, the judgment creditor, though not entitled to issue execution against the assets, was of course entitled to be admitted to prove for his debt in the administration. Phosphate Sewage Co. v. Molleson (4 App. Cas. 801) distinguished. Low, In re, Bland v. Low, 63 L. J., Ch. 60; [1894] 1 Ch. 147; 7 R. 346; 70 L. T. 57—C. A.

Statutory Bar to Actions for Recovery of Personal Estate of Intestate.]—The operation of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 13, is retrospective, so that the limitation of twenty years "next after a present right to receive the same shall have accrued" thereby imposed (in analogy to 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 40) upon claims to recover personal estate of "any person dying intestate, possessed by the legal personal representative of such intestate," is not confined to the case of persons dying intestate after the 31st December, 1860, the time fixed by the section for commencement of the operation of the enactment. Accordingly, a claim by next of kin for general administration of the estate of an intestate who died in 1848 was barred at the end of twenty-one years from that date; and leave to revive an administration suit relating to the same estate in which no proceeding had been taken since the decree in 1855 was refused. But with respect to assets of the intestate not received by the administrator until 1870 (more than twenty years after the death, and within twenty years before the issue of the writ) the claim of the next of kin to administration, limited to such assets, was not barred; there being no "present right to receive" on the part of the next of kin until the assets had been actually recovered by the administrator. Johnson, In re, Sly v. Blake, 29 Ch. D. 964; 52 L. T. 682; 33 W. R. 502.

—— Part Payment.]—Part payment by the administrator out of a particular asset which has so fallen in will not revive the right to sue for general administration which was at the time of payment barred by statute. Ib.

Summons—Right of Residuary Legatee to set up Statute of Limitations.] — Upon the hearing of an originating summons, taken out by the executor, under Ord. LV. r. 3, to determine whether a defendant is a creditor or not, it is competent for the residuary legatee, also a defendant, to set up the objection of the Statute of Limitations, notwithstanding the refusal of the executor to interfere. Wenham, In re, Hunt v. Wenham, 61 L. J., Ch. 565; [1892] 3 Ch. 59; 67 L. T. 648; 40 W. R. 636.

Action against Deceased—Death before Service—Fresh Action against Executors.]—A writ was issued, but before it was served the defendant died. Within a year from the proof of the will by the executors of the deceased, a fresh writ was issued against them for the same cause of action. In the meanwhile the statutory limitation had expired:—Held, that the executors could not rely on the Statute of Limitations as a defence to the action. Swindell v. Bulkeley, 56 L. J., Q. B. 613; 18 Q. B. D. 250; 56 L. T. 38; 35 W. R. 189—C. A.

h. JUDGMENT AND SUBSEQUENT PROCEEDINGS.

1. At Common Law.

Effect of, against Executor — Generally.]—The testator's effects cannot be taken in execution for the executor's debt. M'Leod v. Drummond, 17 Ves. 168; 11 R. R. 41.

On a personal demand against an executor, there can be no judgment de bonis testatoris. Hawkes v. Saunders, Cowp. 289.

—— Suggestion of Devastavit.]—Where judgment is obtained against an executor, in an action on the bond of his testator, execution cannot be issued in the first instance against the goods of the executor, although he has been guilty of a devastavit, and has no goods of the testator in his hands; but an action must first be brought suggesting a devastavit. Ward v. Thomas, 2 D. P. C. 87; 1 C. & M. 532; 2 L. J., Ex. 217.

If an executor pleads to an action, and does not plead plene administravit, the judgment against him is evidence of a devastavit, and if, after the production of such judgment upon a scire fieri inquiry, the sheriff returns nulla bona testatoris, the court will quash the return and award a new scire fieri inquiry. Palmer v. Waller, 1 M. & W. 689; 5 D. P. C. 172; 1 Tyr. & G. 1014; 5 L. J., Ex. 246.

In an action upon a judgment by default against an executor, suggesting a devastavit, the plaintiff gave in evidence the record in the original action, and a testatum fi. fa. with the sheriff's return that he had caused to be levied the costs de bonis propriis of the defendant, and that he had no goods or chattels of the testator in his hands to be administered:—Held, that this was primâ facie evidence of a devastavit. Leonard v. Simpson, 2 Scott, 335; 2 Bing. (N.C.) 176; 1 Hodges, 251; 4 L. J., C. P. 302.

Of Assets quando acciderint.]—The judgment of assets quando acciderint embraces, not only the assets received by an executor after that judgment is signed, but also such assets as came into or ought to be, in his hands between issuing the writ, or the plea, and the judgment, in the due course of administration. Smith v. Tateham, 2 Ex. 205; 5 D. & L. 732; 17 L. J., Ex. 198.

By taking a judgment of future assets quando acciderint, a plaintiff admits that the executor has fully administered to that time. Taylor v. Holman, Bull. N. P. 169.

Where judgment has been given for the defendant on demurrer to a plea, the court will not, in a subsequent term, set aside that judgment, and suffer the plaintiff to reply, by confessing the matters contained in the plea, and taking judgment of assets quando acciderint. Prince v.

Nicholson, 1 Marsh. 401 ; 6 Taunt. 45 ; 15 R. R. 612.

In an action upon an obligation against the executors of an executrix, they pleaded fully administered, except goods to the value of 10*l.*: the plaintiff replied, and prayed judgment as to the 10*l.*; and further said, that, on the day of suing forth the original writ the executors had goods of the testator to the value of the residue of the debt over and above the 10*l.* This was held to be a good replication, though it was objected that the plaintiff ought to have accepted the 10*l.*, and prayed judgment for the same, and of assets in futuro quando acciderint, or ought to have replied singly, that the executors had assets in their hands ultra the 10*l.*, and to have gone to issue thereupon. Lockyer v. Coward, 3 Wils. 52.

In an action against an administratrix, commenced by a specially indorsed writ, the defendant shewed that she was entitled to plead plene administravit, but did not dispute that there were outstanding assets of the deceased. Leave was given to mark judgment of assets quando acciderint. Form of order. Findlater v. Tuohy, 16 L. R., Ir. 474.

Where an executrix successfully raises the defence of plene administravit, on a motion for judgment, such executrix is entitled to costs of the motion and action against plaintiff; but the plaintiff is entitled to judgment against assets quando for his debt, with the costs of action and motion, also against assets quando. Millar v. Keane, 24 L. R., Ir. 49. S. P., Cockle v. Treacy, [1896] 2 Ir. R. 267.—C. A.

2. In Equity.

Form and Contents — Since 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104.]—Form of decree in a creditors' suit since the act rendering real estates liable for simple contract debts. Dawson v. Dawson, C. P. Cooper, 476.

—— On a Decree for Sale.]—Decree for sale: directions are to pay creditors' whole demands, according to nature and priority. Rowe v. Bant, Dick. 151.

—— Where Assets are Admitted.]—In a suit by a creditor on behalf of himself and all other creditors, if the debt of the plaintiff be admitted or proved, and the executor or administrator admits assets, the plaintiff is entitled at the hearing to an immediate decree for payment, and not to a mere decree for an account. Woodyate v. Field, 2 Hare, 211 ; 11 L. J., Ch. 321 ; 6 Jur. 871.

—— Account — Direction as to Items to be Included.]—In a suit by residuary legatees of A., against the personal representatives of B., who was the executor of A., for payment of a debt due from B. to A., the amount of which was not admitted, and also for an account of the personal estate of A.; praying also, unless assets were admitted, an account of the personal estate of B., and that being insufficient seeking to charge his real estate :—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to a declaration, that a particular debt or sum constituted an item in the account to be taken, but that evidence tending to shew that the defendant should be charged with such particular debt or sum was admissible. Tomlin v. Tomlin, 1 Hare, 236.

—— Direction to make all just Allowances—Legacies, Payments for.]—Under a decree for an account, and applying personal estate in payment of debts and funeral expenses, and directing the clear surplus to be paid over, making to the parties all just allowances, the master ought to allow payment in discharge of legacies. Nightingale v. Lawson, 1 Cox, 23.

—— Special Directions — Evidence Faulty.]—Where a testator directed his farming business to be carried on by his executors after his decease, and they accordingly carried on the same, and made numerous payments to servants for wages, and expended moneys in the purchase of live stock, seeds, and other agricultural produce for the use of the farm for which receipts in writing were rarely given, the court directed it to be made part of the decree, that as regarded any evidence of such payments the executors were to be at liberty to apply to the court, and the master to be at liberty to state circumstances specially. Skipworth v. Skipworth, 9 L. J., Ch. 182.

Where, in an administration suit, it is referred to the master to take an account of the debts, &c., and claims are made against the estate of such a nature that the master cannot conveniently dispose of them, application must be made to the court, which will either give special directions to the master to proceed, or direct a suit, action, or such other proceeding as the exigency of the case may require. Lockhart v. Hardy, 5 Beav. 305.

—— Insolvent Estate—Judicature Act, 1875, s. 10.]—In a creditors' administration action, when there is any probability that the estate of the deceased person will prove insufficient for the payment in full of his debts and liabilities, there should be inserted in the judgment a provision to the effect that if the estate is insufficient, the rules in bankruptcy are to apply, following the terms of s. 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875. Hildick, In re, Hipkins v. Hildick, 44 L. T. 547 ; 29 W. R. 733.

It is unnecessary to include in the judgment upon a creditors' administration action the statutory direction that in case the estate shall prove insolvent the rules with respect to the estates of persons adjudged bankrupt shall prevail and be observed. Murray, In re, Woods v. Greenwell, 45 L. T. 707 ; 30 W. R. 283.

—— Infant.]—Laches not to be imputed to creditors, under a devise for debts, as to an individual devisee, to prevent or limit the account of rents and profits, even against an infant heir. Kidney v. Coussmaker, 12 Ves. 136.

Where, after a decree and order on further directions in a creditors' suit, there was discovered an infant tenant in tail, born before the bill filed, and he had been made a party :—Held, that the accounts were to be taken afresh as against him, with liberty to the master to adopt any before taken, if beneficial to the infant. The court will not order, as against an infant real estate to be sold, until the accounts have been taken and the cause heard for further directions. Baillie v. Jackson, 10 Sim. 167.

—— Married Woman—Separate Estate.]—The proper form of a decree against the separate estate of a married woman, in a suit by a holder of her written engagement on behalf of himself and all other creditors, for payment of their debts out of the real estate, was an inquiry what debts there were to be paid under the provisions of the will; and that the plaintiff must therefore prove his debt over again before the master. Owens v. Dickenson, Cr. & Ph. 48; 4 Jur. 1151. And see S. C., 3 Beav. 48.

—— Absent Parties.]—In an administration suit by a single plaintiff, where an inquiry was directed in the decree as to the persons entitled to the residue, and the master made a report finding a great number of persons, nephews and nieces, and descendants of nephews and nieces, answering the descriptions in the testator's will, and consisting in part of married women and infants, and persons out of the jurisdiction, the court declared the rights of the parties, without a supplemental bill being filed to bring them before the court. Form of the order as made. Williamson v. Parker, 5 De G. & Sm. 419.

The legatees of two-sixths of a residuary fund being out of the jurisdiction, the court made the declaration of right with respect to the other four-sixth parts only. Morley v. Rennoldson, 2 Hare, 570; 12 L. J., Ch. 372; 7 Jur. 938.

A testator gave the residue of his real and personal estate to five persons in equal shares, and appointed three of the five his executors. All three proved the will. One of the executors then filed a bill for administration and partition against another of the executors, not making the third executor a party. On this bill an administration decree was made, and the third executor and the other residuary legatees were served with the decree. The third executor refused to come in under the decree and account, and the other residuary legatees appealed from the decree on the ground that the decree could not be properly made in the absence of the third executor. The court considered there was great difficulty in making a decree against a person, who ought to be an accounting party, in his absence, and the plaintiff's counsel, at the suggestion of the court, consented to have the decree quashed, with liberty to amend the bill by adding the third executor as a defendant. Latch v. Latch, 44 L. J., Ch. 445; L. R. 10 Ch. 464; 23 W. R. 686. And see PARTIES XIII. c. 1, col. 1737, ante.

After a decree made in an administration suit, in which one executor was defendant, another executor returned from abroad and proved the will:—Held, that he might be made a defendant by supplemental order. Guthrie v. Walrond, 29 L. T. 377; 22 W. R. 723.

In a creditors' suit, seeking to charge the real and personal estate of the testator, where the debt of the plaintiff was admitted by the executors and trustees, and by such of the parties beneficially entitled as were sui juris, but one defendant was a married woman, and another an infant, a decree for account was made without evidence of the debt, liberty being given to plaintiff to prove it before the master. Two of the defendants were alleged, and in like manner admitted, to be out of the jurisdiction; but the fact was not proved. Liberty was given, under the decree, to exhibit interrogatories for that purpose. Hughes v. Eades, 1 Hare, 486; 11 L. J., Ch. 297; 6 Jur. 255.

—— Annuity—Abatement.]—Form of decree where an annuity abates by reason of deficiency of assets. Amount of abated valuation ordered to be paid to representatives of deceased annuitant. Long v. Hughes, 1 De G. & Sm. 364.

—— Declarations of Right—Tacking.]—If a testator entitled to real and personal estate dies indebted upon mortgage and by simple contract, and a suit is instituted for the administration of his estate, declarations of rights to tack simple contract debts to securities will not be made before the accounts of the testator's estate are taken. Chester v. Rolfe, 25 L. J., Ch. 247.

—— Demand for Unliquidated Damages—Proper Directions.]—Under a decree to take an account of the testator's debts, and to compute interest on such of his debts as carried interest, the master has not jurisdiction to allow a compensation to a party for unliquidated damages on a breach of covenant; but, upon an application to the court, proper directions will be given for the investigation of such a claim. Cox v. King, 9 Beav. 530; 10 Jur. 236.

Under a decree to take an account of the assets of a deceased person, and for the administration thereof, a demand for unliquidated damages may be proved and reported; the preferable mode of ascertaining the amount of which is by an issue to be directed for that purpose; but they may be ascertained by the officer by the examination of witnesses upon interrogatories. England v. Donnellan, Jones & C. 270.

—— Respecting Outstanding Personal Estate.]—In a creditors' suit, the court will not direct the personal representative how to act with reference to the outstanding personal estate of the debtor. Jameson v. Farrer, 2 Jones, 634.

In an administration suit a child of the testator, and a party to the suit, was a debtor to the estate. In such a case the proper course is to order him to pay the debt into court immediately. If he were a stranger to the record, an inquiry would be directed. Walker v. Simpson, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 675.

Inquiries directed in Suit.—Evidence.]—The court will not compel a witness on an inquiry in an administration suit to give information which might be used in a pending action by the administrator against him, there being power to obtain discovery in the action. Venables v. Schweitzer, 42 L. J., Ch. 389; L. R. 16 Eq. 76; 28 L. T. 462; 21 W. R. 505.

—— Class Inquiries.] — Where plaintiffs claim as a class, the regular practice at the hearing is to direct an inquiry, whether the plaintiffs are the parties entitled. Brown v. Clark, 1 Jur. 838.

Inquiry as to number of children, where they are described as a class. Raikes v. Ward, 5 Jur. 1008.

Where a testator has left his residuary estate to a number of persons by various class descriptions, the more convenient course in an ordinary administration action is to insert in the judgment a general inquiry as to who are entitled to the estate, and in what shares and proportions, instead of putting in numerous inquiries as to the various classes. Fooks, In re, Brown v. Stone, 30 W. R. 923.

A testator directed his debts to be paid, and appointed executors in England, and other executors in Italy, directing the English executors to transmit the residue to the Italian executors, and bequeathing such residue amongst classes of persons alleged to reside in Italy:—Held, that the sum to be paid over being the residue after payment of debts, the Italian executors must be regarded as simply trustees of that fund, and not as executors holding it charged with debts; and that, therefore, inquiries must be directed to ascertain the persons beneficially entitled to the fund under the bequest. Weatherby v. St. Giorgio, 2 Hare, 624; 12 L. J., Ch. 412; 7 Jur. 717.

—— Proof by Affidavit.]—A class of children being interested, the court, instead of directing the preliminary class inquiry, received the affidavit of the parents proving the class, and then allowed the cause to be heard. Bush v. Watkins, 14 Beav. 33.

—— Legatee.]—Legacy, upon condition that the legatee "shall change the course of life he has too long followed, and give up all low company, and frequenting public-houses," &c.: the condition is such as a court will carry into effect; and the evidence not being conclusive, an inquiry was directed, following the words of the will. Tattersall v. Howell, 2 Mer. 26.

Legacy to A., in case he should come to England and claim within three years; if not, gift over to B. B. cannot claim without reference to ascertain if A. has been in England. Burgess v. Robinson, 1 Madd. 172.

Court always sends case to master to inquire what testator meant, as well where there is misdescription of fund, as of legatee. Evans v. Tripp, 6 Madd. 91.

A bill was filed for payment of a legacy, but it appeared from the answer that the plaintiff did not correctly answer the description of the legatee contained in the will. The court refused to direct a preliminary inquiry under the fifth Order of 9th May, 1839. Wilson v. Applegarth, 10 Sim. 657.

Legacy to A. at twenty-one. A. went abroad when a boy, and had not been since heard of, and if living must now be seventy-seven years old. His personal representatives apply for payment of his legacy, with accumulations, to them. Inquiry directed if living, and whether he ever attained twenty-one years. The representatives of the testator, who died seventy years ago, held not necessary parties. Hudson v. Twining, Tam. 315.

A legacy having been given to a legatee in a name which she had for many years assumed, the court will direct an inquiry who was the person meant. Neathway v. Ham, Tam. 316.

—— Heir-at-Law.]—The form of minutes asking for an inquiry as to the heir-at-law is, "Let an inquiry be made who was the heir-at-law of the testator (or intestate) at the time of his death, and whether such heir is living or dead, and if dead who, by devise, descent, or otherwise, is now entitled to such real estate (if any) of the testator (or intestate) as descended to such heir-at-law." Openshaw v. Davies, 22 W. R. 680.

Under a direction, in a decree or order, to inquire who is the heir-at-law of a deceased person, it is not the practice to inquire who is the customary heir, although it appears that the deceased was entitled to land of copyhold tenure. Freeman v. Roberts, 10 L. J., Ch. 315.

A testator gave personal estate to his own right heirs as personæ designatæ. The plaintiff claimed through the testator's next of kin, and alleged that there was no heir, and therefore the fund was not disposed of. On the hearing of the cause, the defendants adduced evidence showing that the testator left some heir-at-law, but the plaintiff did not adduce any evidence:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled as of right to an enquiry whether there was any heir, with a view to a declaration in his favour, in case it was found that there was no heir; and the bill was dismissed with costs. De Beauvoir v. Benyon, 35 L. J., Ch. 278; L. R. 1 Ch. 212; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 239; 14 L. T. 89; 14 W. R. 324.

—— Next of kin.]—The plaintiffs, claiming to be next of kin of the testatrix, filed their bill against the executors in respect of legacies which had failed; the executors answered, but did not admit that the plaintiffs were such next of kin; the plaintiffs moved, under the fifth Order of the 9th of May, 1839, for a reference to inquire who were the next of kin of the testatrix; motion refused. Topham v. Lightbody, 1 Hare, 289.

A preliminary inquiry under the fifth General Order of May, 1839, as to who was next of kin, was refused, where the plaintiff sued in his right of next of kin; but it was denied by the answer that he filled that character. Kinshela v. Lee, 7 Beav. 300.

Where a bill was filed by parties claiming as next of kin of a testator, a native of France, resident in England, to set aside a deed by which they had been fraudulently induced to give up a portion of the testator's estate in favour of the executor, a preliminary inquiry was directed as to the domicil of the testator, and whether plaintiffs were next of kin, &c. Chameaux v. Riley, 2 Jur. 1081.

Four persons, on behalf of themselves and all others the next of kin (who were alleged to be fifty in number), filed a bill for the administration of the estate. At the hearing it was proposed to take an inquiry as to the next of kin. The court directed an affidavit to be made that the next of kin exceeded twenty in number. Leathart v. Thorne, 15 Jur. 162, 762.

—— Other Relationship.]—The bill stated that some of the plaintiffs were children of another plaintiff, and that they and certain defendants were the only children of the marriage. The answers did not deny the statement, but merely stated that the defendants did not know whether these were all the children, and did not raise any objection for want of parties on this ground. There was no evidence of the relationship between the plaintiffs:—Held, at the hearing, that a case was made for inquiry as to this, and for payment into court of the trust fund. Fowler v. Reynal, 2 De G. & Sm. 749; 15 Jur. 649, 650, n. Affirmed, 3 Macn. & G. 500; 21 L. J., Ch. 121; 15 Jur. 1019.

—— As to Legitimacy.]—Bequests to the children of A., described spinsters, and nothing on the face of the will showing that illegitimate children were intended. Inquiry, whether she left illegitimate children, refused. Osmond v. Tindall, 5 Ves. (2nd edition) 534, e.

On a bill by the next of kin of a testator for an account, where a question was raised whether the plaintiff was illegitimate, Lord Eldon directed an issue to try the fact upon an interlocutory application. Golden v. Ulyate, 5 Jur. 169.

—— As to Capacity.]—In a suit to administer the estate of a testator, a devisee infant being incapable of managing his affairs, a motion made for a decree under the 16th section of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, for a reference to chambers to inquire into the devisee's state of mind:—Motion refused, and no order made. Costs reserved. Adams v. Smyth, 1 W. R. 475.

Where the answer of an executrix alleged a release to have been executed by the plaintiff, a legatee, and that he had then stated that he was of age; but contained admissions from which his minority at the time might be inferred:—Held, that such admissions did not entitle the plaintiff to an inquiry, whether he was a minor at the date of the transaction. Wright v. Snowe, 2 De G. & Sm. 321.

—— Devastavits.]—On a bill filed against an executor, seeking to charge him in respect of devastavits committed by his co-executor who had died, the defendant, by his answer, denied that he had ever interfered in the testator's affairs in the lifetime of his co-executor, and it was admitted that he had not proved the will till the death of that executor:—Held, nevertheless, upon the evidence of two witnesses speaking to different facts, but corroborated by circumstances, more especially by the fact of a composition-deed having been executed by the surviving executor with the executor of the deceased, that there was sufficient ground for inquiring into the acts of the surviving executor, The court accordingly directed special inquiries on the subject. James v. Frearson, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 370.

—— Respecting Breaches of Trust.]—Where, in a suit for the administration of the estate of a deceased trustee, which was instituted by persons claiming to be his creditors by virtue of a breach of trust, against his executor and devisee in trust subject to the payment of debts, and the persons beneficially interested under his will, and in which the executor and devisee in trust by his answer admitted his testator's breach of trust, but the person beneficially interested by their answer denied it, and in which no evidence was entered into on the part of the plaintiffs, the court made the common administration decree in a creditor's suit, but without any special direction for inquiry respecting the breach of trust. Teague v. Fisher, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1037; 3 W. R. 587.

—— Prices of Stocks.]—Trustees and executors under the will of a testator, who had directed them to invest a share of his residuary estate, either in the public funds or on mortgage, at 5 per cent., having admitted, by their answer, that they had from time to time balances in their hands, and it being proved, that many years after the death of the testator, they had not invested the share, either in the funds, or on mortgage, inquiries will be directed at the original hearing concerning the balances retained by them, and the prices of 3 per cent. stock at the several times when such balances were in their hands. Hockley v. Bantock, 1 Russ. 141; 25 R. R. 16.

—— Propriety of taking Proceedings.]—Inquiries as to the propriety of the proceedings proposed to be taken for the beneficial management and realisation of the estate of a testator or intestate, will not be directed in a creditors' suit. Collinson v. Ballard, 2 Hare, 119.

—— Legality of Consideration for an Annuity.]—In a case of competition between creditors and an annuitant on the legality of the consideration of whose annuity there was some doubt, an inquiry by master into the consideration was properly directed. Hunt v. Maunsell, 1 Dow, 211; 14 R. R. 49.

—— Agreement for a Settlement.]—Where an inquiry as to personal estate was directed in a suit, commenced by administration summons, and a question arose, in the course of such inquiry, whether there was a binding agreement for a settlement, which it became necessary to determine, in order to ascertain what the personal estate consisted of, and the chief clerk determined that question, and this finding was objected to as being ultra vires:—Held, that the chief clerk had power to decide the question, it being necessary to do so to carry out the inquiry. Wadham v. Rigg, 2 Dr. & Sm. 78; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 206; 6 L. T. 180; 10 W. R. 365.

—— Propriety of Expenditure.]—On a reference to the master to inquire, whether certain expenditure, not authorised by a will, had been properly made, he is to consider the case without reference to the question of authority. Umbleby v. Kirk, C. P. Cooper, 254. And see Pelley v. Bascombe, 4 Giff. 390; 33 L. J., Ch. 100; and on appeal, 34 L. J., Ch. 233; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 52; 13 W. R. 306—L.JJ.

When loans are made to an executor upon his personal security, without any security or contract for a security upon the assets being made at the time, and afterwards a security on the assets is given, the court will not assume that the loan was for the purposes of the administration of the estate, but will direct an inquiry whether it was so applied. Miles v. Durnford, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 234. Affirmed, 2 De G. M. & G. 641; 21 L. J., Ch. 667.

—— Material Facts not Stated in Claim.]—Where, by the decree upon the claim of a legatee, it would be necessary to take the accounts of a trade carried on by persons who were not parties to the claim,—of the assets by which it was alleged that the trade had been carried on,—and of the allowances which should be made in remuneration of the persons employed in it who were not parties to the claim, and the claim contained no statement of the facts upon which such accounts and inquiries might depend, the court refused to direct inquiries into the facts necessary to be shown in order to sustain the claim, but dismissed the claim without costs, and without prejudice to a bill. Penny v. Penny, 9 Hare, 39; 20 L. J., Ch. 339; 15 Jur. 445.

—— Liberty to Prosecute — Delay.]—The court refused upon petition or motion to prosecute an inquiry directed by a decree many years ago, but never pursued; the party applying, being born some years after the decree, only two months old at the date of the general report, and made a party some years afterwards, but several years before the application. Shipbrooke (Lord) v. Hinchinbrooke (Lord), 13 Ves. 387.

—— Incumbrancer's Suit—Solicitor's Lien on Deeds.]—Form of inquiry in an incumbrancers' suit, where the deeds are in possession of a solicitor, a defendant, who claims a lien for costs, which is disputed. Walcott v. Graves, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 396.

Further Consideration—Where it is desired to obtain Personal Judgment—Notice.]—When notice of an administration judgment has been served on parties interested, and afterwards, on further consideration, it is desired to obtain a personal order against them, they should be served with notice of the action having been set down for further consideration, even though they have not obtained an order to attend the proceedings. Rees, In re, Rees v. George, 49 L. J., Ch. 568 ; 15 Ch. D. 490.

—— Liability of Executors determined on.]—A bill was filed against executors, and at the hearing the accounts were directed to be taken, and the parties to be ascertained :—Held, that the liability of the executors could be properly determined at the hearing on further directions. Pattenden v. Hobson, 22 L. J., Ch. 697 ; 17 Jur. 406 ; 1 W. R. 282.

An executrix and tenant for life unnecessarily and improperly sold out a sum of stock ; a common decree for an account was made against her representatives :—Held, that her estate was liable to replace the stock and dividends, and that relief might be had on further directions, though the particular matter was not charged by the bill. Davenport v. Stafford, 14 Beav. 319.

—— Distribution of small Fund.]—In a creditors' suit for the administration of the estate of a testator it appeared, from the master's report, that there were forty-eight creditors, that many of the debts were for small amounts, and that the fund distributable among them was small and insufficient to pay the debts in full. Upon the cause coming on for directions, the court, on the request of the counsel for the defendants, the executors, made an order for the ratable apportionment of the fund among the creditors, on the amounts apportioned being verified by the joint affidavit of the plaintiff and one of the defendants, the executors ; and that the sums apportioned under 10*l.* should be paid to the plaintiff's solicitor on his undertaking to pay the same to the creditors respectively. Form of such order. Bear v. Smith, 5 De G. & Sm. 92 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 176 ; 16 Jur. 708.

In a suit by an executor to administer his testator's estates where the fund to be administered was divisible in equal shares among many persons ascertained by the master, the court ordered the apportionment to be made by affidavit at the hearing. Where the share of a married woman was subject to payment of costs unascertained, which might be expected to reduce it to 200*l.* or less, the court, to save further expense, ordered it to be paid to the husband, and dispensed with any examination as to the consent of the wife. Roberts v. Collett, 1 Sm. & G. 138.

—— Further Accounts and Inquiries.]—Upon further directions under the usual decree, for an account against an administratrix, an inquiry as to balances in her hands from time to time, with a computation of interest thereon, prayed by petition upon affidavits of her conduct, before the master, by attempting to support her charge by forgery, &c., was granted. Parnell v. Price, 14 Ves. 502.

In a suit instituted by residuary legatees under a will against A. and B., the executors (B. having become bankrupt, and at the time of his bankruptcy being largely indebted to the testator's estate), the ordinary decree only was made at the hearing of the cause, no distinct case of malversation having been adduced against A. ; and the master, by his report, charged B. alone with the receipt of the testator's estate. The court, on further directions, on the application of the plaintiffs, declined to direct an inquiry as to the balances of the testator's estate retained in B.'s hands from time to time, for the purpose of enabling the plaintiffs to establish a case of liability against A. in respect of such balances. Terrell v. Matthews, 11 L. J., Ch. 31 ; 5 Jur. 1074.

Where, after an order had been made for the administration of assets, a summons was taken out for the purpose of obtaining an inquiry, to be added to the order, as to whether a trustee had granted leases of the testator's estates, in accordance with the trusts of the will, and other inquiries, the court held, that under the 20th order of October, 1832, it was not necessary that the suitor who suggested an additional inquiry should fortify the summons by evidence in a formal way, to be met by evidence against the matter sought by the summons, but that inasmuch as without formal pleadings a suitor might have an estate administered upon any reasonable suggestion which would justify the inquiry, or any fact reasonably apparent, without the expense of formal evidence, and of discussing the same, the judge had ample power to direct any further accounts and inquiries which might seem to be necessary, where it was suggested that the leasehold estates had been let at rents less than those taken in the testator's lifetime : —Held, that the better course would have been, not to have had a discussion upon affidavits or evidence as to whether there should be any further inquiry, but that the court should have called upon the trustee to give an account of the circumstances attending the granting the leases. Mutter v. Hudson, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 34.

After several references to the master, and after the cause had been argued and judgment given on further directions, the court refused to stay the distribution of the fund, and direct a further reference with respect to a new case, as against certain creditors, which case it did not appear that the parties might not have previously brought forward, and which was not proved by the evidence adduced. Philips v. Philips, 3 Hare, 301 ; 13 L. J., Ch. 445.

—— What Evidence Admissible.]—An action was brought by the beneficiaries under the will of a testator against the trustees thereof to administer the estate of the testator. The action was heard as a short cause, when the usual judgment was made directing accounts and inquiries, and the further consideration was adjourned. The judgment contained no special reservation as to costs. When the action came on upon further consideration, the plaintiffs desired to read an affidavit which contained charges against the defendants. The charges related for the most part to the conduct of the defendants between judgment and further consideration, and partly also to the conduct of the defendants before action brought. The object of the affidavit was to make the defendants liable to pay the costs of the action, or some part thereof, occasioned by reason of the acts complained of in the affidavit and otherwise appearing by the evidence in the action. The defendants objected to this affidavit being read, contending that the court had no jurisdiction to admit it:—Held, that as to the conduct of the defendants between judgment and further consideration, the plaintiffs were entitled to read an affidavit, but that as to the conduct of the defendants before action, no affidavit could be read. Semble, that if persons who had been served with the judgment desired to read on the further consideration an affidavit as to conduct of the defendants before action, they would be entitled to do so. Revill, In re, Leigh v. Rumney, 55 L. T. 542.

Under Ord. XXXVII. r. 1, the court may in an administration action, and after the chief clerk has made his certificate, receive, if it thinks fit, fresh affidavit evidence on further consideration. May v. Newton, 56 L. J., Ch. 313; 34 Ch. D. 347; 56 L. T. 140; 35 W. R. 363.

Where it is sought, either to make executors and trustees pay costs, or to deprive them of their costs upon allegations of vexatious and harassing conduct before the chief clerk in chambers, the court will not allow an affidavit to be read going into the details of such misconduct. Pierce v. Hammond, 12 W. R. 686.

Supplemental Bill after Decree under the old practice.]—A testator, who died in 1767, directed his estates to be converted and invested, and he gave the same to his wife for life, remainder to his daughter, with remainder to the plaintiffs. The executors neglected to convert some leaseholds, and permitted the successive tenants for life to enjoy the same until their expiration. After their deaths, the plaintiffs filed their bill against the representatives of the executors for a general account. The executors, who had no personal knowledge of the matter, represented the residue to consist of a sum in the funds, and they, by their answer, amongst other papers, admitted the leases to be in their possession. At the hearing the plaintiffs waived the accounts, and took the money in the funds. They afterwards discovered the breach of trust in respect of the leaseholds and filed a supplemental bill to obtain relief in respect thereof. The court, notwithstanding the former decree, decided in their favour, but without costs. Mehrtens v. Andrews, 3 Beav. 72.

Where a bill was filed by a legatee against executors, seeking to charge them with a sum which they might have received but for their wilful default, and an administration decree had already been made in a suit by the executors, to which the present plaintiff was a party, under which the usual accounts and inquiries were directed:—Held, that it was a supplemental bill, in the nature of a bill of review, which could not be filed without the leave of the court. Harvey v. Bradley, L. R. 4 Eq. 13.

A defendant to an administration suit instituted by executors can allege by his answer, and prove by evidence, a case of wilful default against the executors, when the necessary inquiries and directions will be added to the decree, without a cross bill being filed. Ib.

A common administration decree having been made, and an infant interested in the estate some years afterwards having presented a petition by her next friend for leave to file a supplemental bill, with the object of charging a trustee of the estate with a breach of trust, which she alleged had been discovered since the date of the decree, the court granted leave accordingly, without requiring an affidavit by the next friend that the alleged breach of trust could not with reasonable diligence have been discovered at the date of the decree. Hoghton, In re, Hoghton v. Fiddey, 43 L. J., Ch. 758; L. R. 18 Eq. 573; 22 W. R. 854.

Residuary legatees filed a bill against the executor, charging him with wilful default, for which some grounds appeared by his answer. No evidence was entered into, and the common accounts were directed. The widow, who was a defendant, and was interested in the estate, afterwards filed a supplemental bill, without leave, to charge the executor with wilful default:—Held, that the proceeding was regular, and a decree was made, supplemental to the former proceedings. Berrow v. Morris, 10 Beav. 437; 16 L. J., Ch. 506; 11 Jur. 790.

A supplemental bill was filed by some of the cestuis que trustent under a will, against the remaining cestuis que trustent, and the trustees and executors, stating that the original bill had been filed by all the cestuis que trustent against the trustees and executors, for the establishment of the will and the administration of the testator's real and personal estate; that a decree in the nature of the usual administration decree had been made therein; that circumstances had arisen which rendered it inconvenient that the plaintiffs to the supplemental bill should be represented by the same solicitors as the remaining cestuis que trustent; that it was, under the circumstances, impossible that the original suit should go on; and praying that the suit might be prosecuted between the parties thereto in the same manner as it was carried on by the parties to the original suit. Demurrer by the cestuis que trustent. Demurrer allowed. Peareth v. Peareth, Johns. 58; 28 L. J., Ch. 118; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 60; 7 W. R. 84.

Supplemental Judgment—Infant.]—The birth of one of a class, entitled as such, after the institution of a suit, is within the fifty-second section of the Chancery Improvement Act, and justifies an order for the usual supplemental decree. Fullerton v. Martin, 1 Drew. 238; 1 W. R. 378.

The 52nd section of the Chancery Practice Amendment Act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, providing that on a suit becoming defective by reason of transmission of interest, an order to the effect of the usual supplemental decree may be obtained as of course, upon an allegation of the transmission of interest, applies to cases where the rights of the plaintiff are affected by a settlement executed after the institution of the suit. Atkinson v. Parker, 2 De G. M. & G. 221; 22 L. J., Ch. 20; 16 Jur. 1005; 1 W. R. 43.

A decree was made in the absence of an infant who was interested; nothing having as yet been done under it, and it appearing to be for her benefit, the court made a supplemental order, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 52, to carry on the decree. Jebb v. Tugwell, 20 Beav. 461; 24 L. J., Ch. 670.

Examination pro interesse suo.]—Where the claim of the next of kin is raised on the record, and one person in that character is a party, other persons found by the master to be next of kin may be heard by the court, though not parties to the suit; but where the claim is not raised on the record, and none of the next of kin are in that character parties to the cause, there must be a supplemental bill to bring them before the court. Waite v. Temple, 1 Sim. & S. 319.

Omissions from Judgment—How rectified.]—Omission in decree, if perfectly of course, supplied on motion with notice; in this instance the common direction to examine all parties upon interrogatories being omitted, an order was made that master should be at liberty to examine, &c. Wallis v. Thomas, 7 Ves. 292.

So also, in the usual decree upon creditors' bill against executors, the direction for account of personal estate. Pickard v. Mattheson, 7 Ves. 293.

Effect of Judgment.]—A decree directing the trusts of a will to be carried into execution, does not imply that all the trusts are valid. Gooch v. Gooch, 3 De G. M. & G. 366; 22 L. J., Ch. 1089.

In an administration suit, a fund was directed to be paid to a married woman for life for her sole and separate use. When the order was made, the court had not determined any question with respect to the interest, which by the terms of the will was not for her sole or separate use: —Held, that the language of the decree was simply inaccurate, and not binding as a declaration of her interest. Moore v. Walter, 8 L. T. 448.

—— How far binding.]—A party who comes in in a creditors' suit, intrusting the management of the suit to the plaintiff, must upon an application to review the proceeding, stand in the place of the plaintiff, and, in the absence of fraud, be bound by his knowledge. Gwynne v. Edwards, 9 Beav. 22; 15 L. J., Ch. 84.

Where, in a creditors' suit, one of the defendants, a creditor, permitted the bill to be taken as confessed against him, and did not file a charge under the decree to account in the master's office:—Held, that he was bound by the declaration as to priorities in the final decree. Murtagh v. Tisdall, Fl. & K. 20; 3 Ir. Eq. R. 85.

Every party in a cause which is stopped is presumed to have notice of the decree to account made in the cause which occasioned the order. Moore v. Berry, 2 Moll. 384.

Though the distribution of an intestate's estate, under a decree of the court, among persons found to be the next of kin, does not conclude the rights of persons who may have an equal or paramount title, yet the court will not assist other next of kin who, with full notice of the proceedings in the suit wherein the fund was distributed, have neglected to prosecute their claims. Sawyer v. Birchmore, 1 Keen, 391. Reversed, Ib., 825; 2 Myl. & C. 611; 6 L. J., Ch. 277, on ground that notice of proceedings was not conclusively proved.

After a decree had been enrolled, declaring A. entitled to a particular fund, as next of kin to a testator, a stranger to the suit presented a petition to be allowed to come in and prove his claim to be entitled to the fund, instead of A.:—Held, that even if the petitioner could show such a case as would insure his succeeding, the court had no power to disturb the decree, and the petitioner could only establish his rights by filing a bill for that purpose. Bauer v. Mitford, 29 L. J., Ch. 268. And see S. C., 9 W. R. 135.

—— Erroneous—Appeal.]—To impeach a decree, directing a distribution of assets by an executor as erroneous, the parties interested must come in due time. O'Brien v. Grierson, 2 Ball & B. 336.

The representatives of a party who was held to be rightly made a party to a suit as legatee of leaseholds, not having been served with a petition of rehearing, on which a decree was made, affecting the party, time was allowed to present a petition of appeal to have the matters reheard. Hickling v. Boyer, 3 Mac. & G. 635; 21 L. J., Ch. 388; 16 Jur. 137.

—— Right of Action against Party inducing Error.]—A defendant in an administration suit made an inaccurate statement in his answer as to the number of a class of beneficiaries, and an order was made on further consideration that the fund in court should be divided among the class in the proportion in which it would have been divisible if the statement had been correct:—Held, that the person aggrieved by the error could not maintain an action against the defendant who had made the mistake. Laing v. Harle, 34 L. T. 728; 24 W. R. 728.

When a party to a suit has made a misrepresentation in his pleadings as to the number of a class, and the fund has been distributed by the court in accordance with that misrepresentation, the court will not assume that the mistake was due to this misrepresentation, as it is itself responsible for the making of due inquiries; and will not, therefore, hold the party making the misrepresentation liable for more than what he has himself received in excess of his proper share. Ib.

—— Power to litigate matters dehors the Suit.]—Under the usual decree against an executor to account, the master is not at liberty to investigate a disputed account arising out of partnership transactions between the testator and executor, the latter swearing that the balance is in his favour; but under such circumstances, the plaintiff may have relief by supplemental bills, without exhibiting an interrogatory in the original suit for the examination of the executor. Cropper v. Knapman, 2 Y. & C. 338; 6 L. J., Ex. Eq. 9.

The court will not, on the motion of a creditor coming in under a decree directing a sale of lands devised for payment of debts, set aside a lease obtained pendente lite from the devisee under the will, with a leasing power. Moore v. M'Namara, 2 Ball & B. 186; 12 R. R. 73. See Walker v. Smallwood, Ambl. 676.

A bill having been filed in 1802, by one of the legatees to carry the trusts of the will into execution, and for an account of the assets:—Held, that a party to that suit might raise the question whether a renewal of a lease belonging to the estate was a graft on the original lease in the master's office, although not put in issue in the pleadings. Jackson v. Welsh, Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 346.

—— Power to make Order where consequential on Judgment.]—A testator gave his property after the death of his wife to trustees, in trust to pay the interests and profits to his two daughters J. and E. to their separate use, with a direction to pay to and supply for the benefit of A., the son of E., 200*l.* annually when he attained the age of twenty-one years; and before that period such part of the 200*l.* bequeathed to him as might be judged proper; he then gave his daughters power to dispose of the principal by will to their children or grandchildren respectively, "except that proportion of principal given to E. and from which the interest is to arise, to my grandson, namely 4,000*l.*, which sum shall be my grandson's property"; and in case either of the daughters died without issue, he limited her share of the fund over to the other daughter, her children, or grandchildren. The executrix, having in mistake made payments to A. in respect of his annuity for two years before he attained twenty-one, was entitled to retain them out of the future payments of the annuity. An order authorising her to retain them, and made upon petition after the decree had been passed and entered, is regular. Livesey v. Livesey, 3 Russ. 287. Reversed in part, Ib., 542; 6 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 13; 7 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 120.

—— Certificate—Inquiry as to Debts—Purchase of Debts by Plaintiff's Solicitor.]—The solicitor to the plaintiff in a creditors' action bought up debts; the estate was insolvent:—Held, that the question whether the solicitor was trustee for the creditors of any profit on the purchase could not be raised by the certificate of the chief clerk, in the absence of any direction on the subject in the order under which the certificate was made. Tillet, In re, Field v. Lydall, 55 L. J., Ch. 841; 32 Ch. D. 639; 54 L. T. 604; 35 W. R. 6.

For Account—Interrogatories under Common Decree before Judicature Acts.] — In a creditors' suit against executors and infant devisees, a decree directing accounts of the personal estate and debts, with liberty to exhibit interrogatories to prove the will, was made on the admission of the debts by the executors. Nash v. Benton, C. P. Cooper, 192.

The examination of an executor, under the usual decree for an account, ought to contain an interrogatory, whether he is indebted to the testator, the debt from himself being assets; liberty was therefore given, upon the suggestion of co-defendants, legatees, without affidavit, to exhibit an interrogatory for that purpose, not to go into an account, which must be the subject of a distinct bill. Simmons v. Gutteridge, 13 Ves. 262.

If, in a creditors' suit, a decree is made in the usual form, no special interrogatory for the examination of the defendants ought to be allowed, although a case for directing special inquiries is made on the record. Moore v. Langford, 6 Sim. 323; 4 L. J., Ch. 228.

A bond, given by a testator to his daughter, was assigned by her and her husband to trustees for the daughter and children. The husband and wife subsequently assigned it to A. B. to secure a debt. After the testator's death, his executor, without notice, as he alleged, of the first assignment, paid to A. B. the amount of the debt. A decree was made for taking the usual accounts of the testator's estate, and the trustees claimed the amount of the bond; but the master being of opinion that, as the matters stood, the payment of the executor to A. B. was good, an application was made to the court by the wife and children (defendants in the cause) for liberty to examine the executor as to the fact of notice, but it was refused with costs. Ford v. Bryant, 9 Beav. 410; 15 L. J., Ch. 261; 10 Jur. 484.

Under the usual decree in a creditors' suit, the master allowed an interrogatory to be exhibited for the examination of the administratrix, which was in very special terms, containing inquiries not suggested by the pleadings as to moneys which she had not received, and why the same had not been received. The interrogatory was disallowed. Hopkinson v. Bagster, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 13; 5 Jur. 1033.

Under a common decree against an executor to take the accounts, the executor was interrogated as to two specified sums, and he fully answered. A new set of interrogatories were exhibited with a view of throwing discredit on this answer:—Held, that the master was wrong in allowing them. Suckermore v. Dimes, 9 Beav. 518.

Under the usual decree against an executor to account, the master is not at liberty to investigate a disputed account, arising out of partnership transactions between the testator and executor, the latter swearing that the balance is in his favour; but, under such circumstances, the plaintiff may have relief by supplemental bill, without exhibiting an interrogatory in the original suit for the examination of the executor. Cropper v. Knapman, 2 Y. & C. 338; 6 L. J., Ex. Eq. 9.

In a creditors' suit against the administrator of a deceased intestate, a decree was made in the usual form. The defendant's discharge, in which he claimed a right to retain certain moneys of the intestate come to his hands as administrator, was allowed by the master. Subsequently, the master declined to review the discharge, but, by his certificate, allowed certain special interrogatories exhibited by the plaintiff for the examination of the defendant, in respect to his right of retainer:—Held, on exceptions taken by the defendant to the master's certificate, that the interrogatories ought not to have been allowed. Thompson v. Cooper, 8 Jur. 164.

In a suit for the administration of assets, the examination of the executors (defendants) to interrogatories exhibited by plaintiff, a co-executor, under a decree for an account, is taken for the benefit of all parties; and therefore the other defendants, creditors and legatees may take copies. Dyott v. Anderton, 3 Ves. & B. 176.

Account on the footing of wilful Default.]—The general rule is, that if the question of wilful default be not raised by the pleadings, it cannot be raised either at the original hearing or on further directions, but where the pleadings do raise the point, it is the duty of the plaintiff, if he can make a case for it, to get a declaration by the decree, or, if he cannot make a case for an immediate decree, to get an inquiry of such a character that on the result of it the court may, on further directions, make a declaration. But if the point is raised in the pleadings, and the court, by its decree, passes it by, and neither makes any declaration nor directs an inquiry, it must be taken that the court did not mean to give any such relief. Jones v. Morrall, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 241; 21 L. J., Ch. 630.

In an administration suit, the pleadings raised questions of wilful default, and liability to pay interest on balances in hand against executors; but the decree taken at the original hearing neither contained any declaration against the executors nor any inquiries as to wilful default, but was merely a decree for the common account of what had been received:—Held, that the court could not, on further directions, make any decree for wilful default; but that the question of interest on balances in hand was still open, inasmuch as, although there was no declaration at the hearing, yet, applying the above rule, there was that which was the first step towards it, a direction to take the common account of what had been received, which, if properly answered by the master, ought to show what personal estate had been received from time to time, and then the court might, on further directions, either make an immediate declaration, or direct further inquiry. Ib.

A case was alleged on the pleading to charge executors for what they might but for their wilful default, &c., have received: at the hearing the common accounts only were directed against them. The case coming on for further directions, on the master's report:—Held, that the executors could not be charged as for their wilful default, &c., and that no inquiry could then be directed on the subject, although the master's report laid a foundation for such an inquiry. Garland v. Littlewood, 1 Beav. 527; 8 L. J., Ch. 369.

When, in a bill for administration of assets, it is sought to make the personal representative chargeable for default, the plaintiff, in order to entitle himself to the special direction (without which the master cannot travel out of the ordinary account of receipts and payments to inquire touching default), ought to make a primâ facie case of default; the giving the special direction raising an inference that loss has accrued by the neglect of the defendant. Sandford v. Seymour, 1 Moll. 181.

In a suit for an account of an intestate's personal estate, the bill sought to charge the administrator with wilful default, and contained charges to that effect. The decree directed only the ordinary accounts:—Held, that nevertheless the court would direct an inquiry as to wilful default, if on the master's report there appeared facts to warrant it. Cuffe v. Cuffe, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 469.

A plaintiff in an administration suit, upon a reference for taking the accounts, cannot include an inquiry as to wilful neglect and default, unless there is a specific charge to that effect in the bill. The general charge of neglect and default is not sufficient. Sawyer v. Mills, 20 L. J., Ch. 80.

Proof of improper expenditure of money by executors will not support a decree against them for an account on the footing of wilful neglect or default. Smith v. Chambers, 2 Ph. 221; 16 L. J., Ch. 291; 11 Jur. 359.

—— Proceedings for, founded on Master's Report — Where maintainable.]—The general rule is, that to ground a direction to charge an executor for default, not only must the fact be put in issue, but some case be made by evidence to shew the fact is probable and the inquiry proper. But if that has not been done, and no direction is originally given, yet it appears, from the facts stated in the report, that the testator's estate might have been made available with reasonable diligence on the part of the executor, the court will apply itself to that on further directions, but it must point the further inquiry to specific items. Travers v. Townsend, 1 Moll. 496.

A bill was filed against trustees, praying that the amount of the trust fund which the trustees "had, or but for their wilful neglect or default might have, received, might be ascertained." At the hearing the bill was dismissed as against one trustee, and the amount and particulars of the trust fund were directed to be ascertained. Nothing was said about wilful default, nor did the trustee ask that the bill might be dismissed as to wilful default. The master made his report, which stated certain facts, and referred to certain documents, from which it was alleged that it would appear that there had been wilful default. At the hearing upon further directions, a decree was made, referring it to the master to inquire whether the trustee "could, with due diligence and without wilful neglect or default, have received" more than a particular stated fund, but, upon appeal, it was held, that the direction as to wilful default should be struck out of the decree. Coope v. Carter, 2 De G. M. & G. 292; 21 L. J., Ch. 570.

As a general rule, in order to obtain a direction for inquiring as to wilful default against an executor or trustee, the bill must allege a case, pray for it, and one case at least must be proved; and, semble, that if from admission or proof, a suspicion arises whether wilful default has or has not been committed, and it appears likely that further evidence can be obtained, the court ought to direct an inquiry, short of directing wilful default, but in such a way as to call the defendant's attention to it, with the view to ground thereon a new order at a future stage, directing an inquiry as to wilful default. Ib.

In order to obtain an inquiry, with a view to a decree for wilful default at a future stage of the suit, the plaintiff must rest upon one or more specific charges. Massey v. Massey, 2 John. & H. 728; 32 L. J., Ch. 13; 7 L. T. 311; 11 W. R. 19.

The observations in Coope v. Carter (2 De G. M. & G. 298) were not meant to let in general allegations of default, but to meet the case of specific allegations imperfectly proved at the hearing. Therefore, where a widow and executrix, who was empowered by will to carry on testator's trade, did so for a short time, and her co-executors, in answer to an allegation that the book debts had not been got in, stated that the widow had got in some, that they believed the rest were bad, but that they had taken no steps themselves to recover any:—Held, that a sufficient case was not made to justify any inquiry as to wilful default. Ib.

Shortly after a testator's death in 1825, an inventory and appraisement were made by his executors, or one of them, of all and singular the goods and chattels, rights and credits of the testator, shewing that the same were of the value of 28,665*l.* odd. Upon a bill filed in 1856 for an account, and for an inquiry as to wilful neglect and default, in case the estimated amount had not been realised, the defendants failed, as to a large portion of the estimated amount, to shew that it had been realised:—Held, nevertheless, that the plaintiff was not entitled at the hearing either to any inquiry expressly directed to wilful neglect or default, or even to a preliminary order of the kind indicated in Coope v. Carter (2 De G. M. & G. 297), viz. an inquiry short of wilful neglect and default, but upon which a new order, expressly so directed, might be founded at a future stage; the court being of opinion, first, that upon the pleadings the fact of wilful neglect and default could not be treated as an issue between the parties; and, secondly, that, even if it could be so treated, there was no evidence upon it. Sleight v. Lawson, 3 Kay & J. 292; 26 L. J., Ch. 553; 5 W. R. 589.

Semble, in an administration action under the Judicature Act, an order charging an executor with wilful default may, in a proper case, be made at any time during the progress of the action. Job v. Job, 6 Ch. D. 562; 26 W. R. 206.

Where a plaintiff has obtained a common administration judgment against a defendant, he cannot maintain a subsequent action against the same defendant charging him with wilful default in the administration of the same estate, unless he has obtained the leave of the court to bring such action. The practice in this respect has not been altered or varied by the Judicature Acts or the rules thereunder. Laming v. Gee, 48 L. J., Ch. 196; 10 Ch. D. 715; 40 L. T. 33; 27 W. R. 227.

In an administration action by a residuary legatee, an order for accounts and inquiries on the footing of wilful default may be made, not only at the hearing, but at any subsequent time, e.g. at the hearing on further consideration, if wilful default was charged by the pleadings. In an administration action brought against the executor and trustees of a will by the residuary legatee thereunder, who was also the specific devisee of certain real estate, wilful default was charged by the plaintiff in his statement of claim, and denied by the defendants in their statement of defence, but the administration judgment was not taken on that footing. The plaintiff sought in chambers to surcharge the defendants with certain sums in respect of wilful default, and evidence was tendered on both sides, but without result, owing to the form of the judgment. On the further consideration of the action:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to obtain relief on the footing of wilful default at that stage in the action, notwithstanding that the original judgment had not been taken on that footing, since the point had been distinctly raised by the pleadings, and the defendants could not say that they had had insufficient notice of the charge. Symons, In re, Luke v. Tonkin, 52 L. J., Ch. 709; 21 Ch. D. 757; 46 L. T. 684; 30 W. R. 874.

Where in an administration action against executors misconduct by them was alleged, and special declarations and accounts claimed; at the trial the court refused to reserve the question of the plaintiff's right to special relief. Armitage, In re, Smith v. Armitage, 52 L. J., Ch. 711; 24 Ch. D. 727; 49 L. T. 236; 32 W. R. 88.

—— Not in Proceedings originated by Summons.]—The only administration decree which can be obtained upon summons in chambers, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 45, is the usual decree to make an executor or administrator account for the personal estate which he may have received. Partington v. Reynolds, 4 Drew. 253; 27 L. J., Ch. 505; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 200; 6 W. R. 388.

The court cannot, in any stage of a suit, engraft upon such a decree, whether made upon bill or upon claim, or upon summons in chambers, a decree to make an executor or administrator account for what he might, without his wilful neglect or default, have received; a decree of this nature being totally different in its principle from the usual decree. Ib.

In taking the accounts under the usual order obtained on summons, an executor and trustee can only be charged with money actually received by him, and not with money which he might have received but for his wilful neglect or default. Blakeley v. Blakeley, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 368; 3 W. R. 288. But see Brooker v. Brooker, 3 Sm. & G. 475; 26 L. J., Ch. 411; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 381; 5 W. R. 382. S. P., Fryer, In re, 26 L. J., Ch. 398; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 485; 5 W. R. 552: Hengler, In re, W. N. 1893, p. 37.

—— After Common Decree in Suit by another.]—A creditor, who makes out a primâ facie case of misconduct in trustees, is entitled to a decree that they shall account for whatever they might have received without their wilful default or neglect; though, in a prior suit instituted by another creditor, and conducted without collusion, a common decree for an account has been previously made against them. Shepherd v. Towgood, Turn. & R. 379.

—— Amendment Charging.]—After the ordinary decree in a suit against trustees, agents or executors, in which wilful default has not been charged or proved, the court will not give leave to amend or bring a supplemental action charging such default, where the plaintiff had knowledge, or the means of knowledge, of the circumstances on which he proposed to rely, as acts of wilful default. Blount v. O'Connor, 17 L. R., Ir. 620.

—— In Respect of what Matters.]—When a case is made out of a debt having been lost to a testator's estate, it is the constant practice of the court to direct an inquiry whether such debt has been lost by the wilful default of the executors. Rowley v. Adams, 5 Jur. 906.

Shares held by a testator as mortgagee, were proved to have been transferred after the testator's death, but they were not accounted for by the executors, and it was certain that the surviving trustee had not received anything in respect of them. The court, in an administration suit, refused to make the shares an item in the account, as a charge of wilful default could not be introduced into it. Shuttleworth v. Bristo, 9 L. T. 317; 12 W. R. 40.

Executors who had retained the assets in their hands for seven years uninvested, there being no debts, ordered to pay the costs (to the hearing) of a legatee's suit to administer the estate. Tickner v. Smith, 3 Sm. & G. 42; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 990; 3 W. R. 224.

Semble, in an administration suit by legatees against executors, alleging that the legacies ought long since to have been paid, and seeking to charge the defendant with the costs, the plaintiffs may adduce evidence of wilful default, though not specifically charged by the bill. Ib.

General allegations of wilful neglect in a petition against a land agent, though supported by specific evidence of neglect in particular cases, are not sufficient to entitle the petitioner to an inquiry respecting wilful neglect. Bond v. M'Watty, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 174.

Form of Lease — Approval — Certificate of Counsel.]—In an administration suit, the court, upon the certificate of counsel, will authorise a lease, without reference back to the master to settle it. Day v. Croft, 14 Beav. 219.

Other Matters.]—After a decree had been made on the construction of a will and for the administration of the testator's estate in accordance therewith, a will of later date was found duly executed and almost an exact counterpart of the earlier will. Questions having arisen as to the effect of the new will on certain legacies, named in both wills, which by the decree had been held to be superseded, the court, on the application of the trustees, directed an inquiry as to who were the persons interested in setting up the alleged new will, and that notice should be given to such persons that, unless they within a limited time, took steps to recall the existing probate, and to prove the new will, the court would proceed to administer the estate on the will as proved. Harrison v. Every, 34 L. T. 238.

On the motion of defendant before answer, it was ordered that reference be made to master to ascertain debt, &c., claimed by bill, which was to be paid by a given day and suit to be stayed, and if not paid, plaintiff's costs given him, and to be at liberty to proceed in the cause. Boys v. Ford, 4 Madd. 40.

Where, in a decree in a residuary legatee's administration suit, an inquiry was directed, under the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, whether the testator's estates were charged with any debts by way of mortgage, such inquiry was directed to be without prejudice to any question on the construction of the will. Moore v. Moore, 9 W. R. 825.

i. LIABILITY FOR COSTS.

1. At Common Law.

a. When Suing in Representative Character.

Since Judicature Acts and Orders.]—Under and subject to the provisions of O. LXV. all costs are in the discretion of the court.

Before Judicature Acts—Discretion of Court as to.]—The court has no jurisdiction to relieve an executor plaintiff from costs to which he was liable before 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 31. Ashton v. Poynter, 5 Tyr. 322; 1 C. M. & R. 738; 3 D. P. C. 465; 1 Gale, 57; 4 L. J., Ex. 71.

Where an executor seeks to be relieved from costs under the discretionary power of the court, the application should be made before taxation; otherwise, if it is granted, it will be on payment of the costs of the application. Ib.

Executors declared in one count on a contract by the defendant with their testator, and in another on a contract by the defendant with them to pay money due to the plaintiffs as executors on an account stated between them, with a promise to pay them as executors, and a verdict was found for the defendant:—Held, that he was entitled to his costs of the last count under 23 Hen. 8, c. 15, and that the court has no power to interfere under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 31, in favour of the executors. Ib.

The discretion as to costs in actions by executors, given by the court or a judge, is not to be governed by the fact of the action having been properly brought, but it must be shewn that the plaintiff was induced to bring it by something like fraud or misrepresentation on the part of the defendant. The mere fact that the defendant when applied to refuses to state the ground of his resistance of the claim, will not suffice. Southgate v. Crowley, 1 Scott, 374; 1 Bing. (N.C.) 519; 1 Hodges, 1; 3 D. P. C. 386; 4 L. J., C. P. 102.

The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 31, as to payment of costs by executors and administrators, in actions brought by them, was held (Littledale, J., dissentiente) to apply to actions tried after the passing of the act, whether commenced before or not; although the cause had been made a remanet before the passing of the act. Freeman v. Mayes, 3 N. & M. 883; 1 A. & E. 338.

—— Right to—Depends on Conduct of Defendant.]—The court will not relieve an executor or an administrator from costs, unless there has been some misconduct on the part of the defendant, which led the plaintiff to proceed with the action, or unless some other very peculiar ground is laid for the interference of the court. It is not enough that the action was brought bonâ fide; that the plaintiff had apparent reasonable grounds for suing, and that he was taken by surprise by the defence. Godson v. Freeman, 2 C. M. & R. 585; 4 D. P. C. 543; 1 Gale, 329; 1 Tyr. & G. 35; 5 L. J., Ex. 41.

In order to induce the court to exempt an executor, who has failed in an action brought by him in that character, from costs, it is not sufficient that the action has been brought bonâ fide, under counsel's advice, and that it has been defeated on a difficult point of law, unless there is improper conduct on the part of the defendant. Unnecessary prolixity in the pleadings is not such conduct; nor is the omitting to give the executor information which might have prevented his proceeding with the action, if he did not apply for the information. Farley v. Briant, 3 A. & E. 839; 1 H. & W. 775; 5 N. & M. 42; 4 L. J., K. B. 246.

On an application to exempt executors from costs, the court will look not so much as to whether they have proceeded bonâ fide in the action, and with a fair and reasonable belief as to the justice of their claim, as to whether the defendant has been guilty of any misrepresentation or deception to induce them to bring their action. Birkhead v. North, 2 B. C. Rep. 9; 4 D. & L. 732; 16 L. J., Q. B. 284; 11 Jur. 436.

Mere silence by a defendant, as to the nature of his defence, is not sufficient ground for such an application, although it may have induced the executor to proceed with the action. Ib.

In order to exempt an administrator who has failed in an action, from payment of costs, it is not enough that the defendant, being in possession of evidence which he knows will defeat the plaintiff's case at the trial, or may prevent him from bringing the action, does not volunteer a disclosure of it. But if the administrator applies to the defendant for information, the result of which may decide the case, the defendant is guilty of misconduct if by suppression or concealment or miscolouring he leads him astray, and induces him to continue his action. In this latter case, if he fails in the action, the administrator will be exempt from payment of costs. Redmayne v. Moon, 25 L. J., Q. B. 311; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 691.

—— Decision of Judge or Court final.]—An order to exempt an executor from costs after a verdict for the defendant, is a matter within the discretion either of a single judge or of the whole court; and if a single judge has made an order, such order cannot be reviewed, the decision, either of the whole court or of a single judge, being final. Maddocks v. Phillips, 5 N. & M. 370; 1 H. & W. 251; 3 A. & E. 198.

—— Illegality of Contract of Testator.]—In an action by an administratrix, on a bond given to her intestate, a verdict having been found for the defendant, on the ground of an illegality in the contract upon which the bond had been given, and which illegality was fully disclosed by the plea, the court refused to exempt the plaintiff from costs. Prole v. Wiggins, 3 Scott, 607; 2 Hodges, 204; 2 Bing. (N.C.) 230; 6 L. J., C. P. 2.

—— Executors defeated on collateral Ground.]—The defendant effected a policy of insurance on the life and for the benefit of G., and, on his death, received the sum insured. The executors of G. sought to recover this sum in an action for money had and received by the defendant to their use as executors, and were nonsuited on a ground collateral to the merits of the cause :—The court ordered the judgment of nonsuit to be entered up with costs against the executors. Lysons v. Barrow, 4 M. & Scott, 463 ; 10 Bing. 563 ; 2 D. P. C. 807 ; 3 L. J., C. P. 192.

—— Account stated with Executors.]—Upon a declaration containing an account stated with the plaintiffs as executors, though it also contains counts on promises to the testator, the defendant is, in case of a nonsuit, entitled to costs as of course. Spence v. Albert, 4 N. & M. 385 ; 2 A. & E. 785 ; 1 H. & W. 7 ; 4 L. J., K. B. 97.

—— Executors guilty of Laches.]—Where an executor has commenced an action, without using due diligence to ascertain that he can proceed with a reasonable prospect of success, or is guilty of any laches, so as to cause unnecessary expense or vexation to the defendant, the court will not exempt him from costs. Wilkinson v. Edwards, 1 Scott, 173 ; 1 Bing. (N.C.) 301 ; 3 D. P. C. 137 ; 4 L. J., C. P. 6.

An administrator arrested the defendant on a bond given to the intestate more than twenty years before his death, and no interest had been paid upon it. The defendant pleaded his discharge under the Insolvent Act, and the verdict was found in his favour. It appeared that the plaintiff had knowledge that the defendant had applied for his discharge before the action was brought :—Held, that the administrator was not entitled to be relieved from the payment of costs to the defendant. Engler v. Twysden, 2 Bing. (N.C.) 263 ; 2 Scott, 427 ; 4 D. P. C. 330 ; 1 Hodges, 303 ; 5 L. J., C. P. 1.

—— Continuing Action, Costs of—Execution for.]—A widow, who had remained for two years in possession of premises held by her late husband as tenant from year to year, afterwards obtained administration to him ; and, having continued by suggestion an action brought by him in his lifetime for trespass to the premises, was nonsuited, and judgment was entered against her de bonis propriis :—Held, that the interest in the premises was not liable to be seized in execution and sold for the costs of the nonsuit. Williams v. Hepenstal, Ir. R. 7 C. L. 514 ; 22 W. R. 412.

—— Other Cases.]—Where a defendant pleaded the general plea of bankruptcy, to an action brought by an executor or an administrator, and obtained a verdict, the plaintiff was not liable to costs under 5 Geo. 2, c. 30, s. 7. Martin v. Norfolk, 1 H. Bl. 528.

Where an executor was nonsuited upon evidence being given at the trial that the supposed testator was still alive, the court refused to allow costs to the defendant, it appearing from affidavits on both sides to be still at least doubtful whether the supposed testator was living or not. Zachariah v. Page, 1 B. & Ald. 386.

A plaintiff suing as executor, having been appointed under a former will, which the testator had afterwards revoked, and having surreptitiously obtained a probate of the first will, which was soon after annulled by the Ecclesiastical Court, who also revoked the probate, but not till after the action had been commenced against the defendant, who was the executor of the last will, was held liable to the costs of the cause. Shaw v. Mansfield, 7 Price, 709.

An executor suing in his representative character upon a contract made with his testator, was liable to costs upon a judgment as in case of a nonsuit, where such costs had been occasioned by his wilful default. Woolley v. Sloper, 3 M. & Scott, 248 ; 9 Bing. 754 ; 2 D. P. C. 208.

b. When Defendant.

Plea of Plene Administravit—Succeeding on.]—An administrator who pleads the general issue and plene administravit, and succeeds on the latter plea, is entitled to the general costs of the cause. Iggulden v. Terson, 2 D. P. C. 277 ; 4 Tyr. 309.

Where executors pleaded non assumpserunt, and the Statute of Limitations, and plene administraverunt, and the two first issues were found for the plaintiff, and the last for the defendants, the defendants having established an absolute bar, were entitled to the postea and the general costs. Ragg v. Wells, 8 Taunt. 129.

Where an executrix pleaded non assumpsit, ne unques executrix, and plene administravit, and the issues on the first two pleas were found for the plaintiff, and on the last for the defendant :—Held, that the last plea being a complete answer to the action, the defendant was entitled to the general costs of the trial. Edwards v. Bethel, 1 B. & Ald. 254.

An executor having pleaded non assumpsit, as well as plene administravit, and plene administravit præter, &c., and thereby forced the plaintiff to go to trial, the plaintiff obtaining a verdict on the non assumpsit, and being entitled to judgment of assets quando acciderint, is entitled to the general costs of the trial, though the issue of plene administravit was found for the defendant. Hindsley v. Russell, 12 East, 232 ; 11 R. R. 373.

Upon the pleas of non assumpsit and plene administravit, the plaintiff joined issue, and omitted to pray judgment of assets quando ; the first issue being found for the plaintiff and the second for the defendant, the defendant is entitled to the postea and general costs. Hogg v. Graham, 4 Taunt. 135

On a plea of plene administravit præter, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment of assets in futuro for debt and costs. Cox v. Peacock, 2 Scott, 125 ; 4 D. P. C. 134 ; 1 Hodges, 272.

Where an executor is sued in respect of a claim against his testator's estate for damages for misrepresentation and breach of warranty, and denies the cause of action, at the same time pleading plene administravit præter, he is liable for costs de bonis propriis, if he fail upon the general issue, notwithstanding that he succeeds upon the plea of plene administravit præter. Squire v. Arnison, 1 Cab. & E. 365 ; 48 J. P. 758.

And see Gorton v. Gregory, 3 B. & S. 90 ; 31 L. J., Q. B. 302 ; 6 L. T. 656 ; 10 W. R. 713—Ex. Ch.

False Pleas.]—A bankrupt executor, pleading a false plea, after commission, is liable to costs. Howard v. Jemmett, 3 Burr. 1368 ; 1 W. Bl. 400.

Judgment of Assets Quando.]—Upon a judgment of assets quando acciderint, on a plea by an executor of a judgment outstanding and plene administravit, the plaintiff is entitled to costs de bonis testatoris. Anon., 1 Chit. 629, n.

A plaintiff who takes judgment of assets quando upon plene administravit, and obtains a verdict on non assumpsit of the testator, is entitled to judgment for the costs de bonis testatoris, et si non, de bonis propriis. Marshall v. Wilder, 4 Man. & Ry. 607 ; 9 B. & C. 665 ; 7 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 325.

Where an executor successfully raises the defence of plene administravit on a motion for judgment, he is, apart from misconduct, entitled to costs of the motion and action against the plaintiff; but the plaintiff is entitled to judgment against assets quando for his debt, with the costs of action and motion, also against assets quando. Cockle v. Treacy, [1896] 2 Ir. R. 267—C. A. S. P., Millar v. Keane, 24 L. R. Ir. 49.

Discontinuance by Plaintiff.]—Where an administratrix has been made a defendant in an action commenced against the intestate, by a suggestion under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 138, and has pleaded to the suggestion, the court will not allow the plaintiff to discontinue without payment of all the costs of the cause. Benge v. Swaine or Page, 15 C. B. 784; 2 C. L. R. 1382; 23 L. J., C. P. 182.

Costs of Adjournment—Death of Defendant—Liability of Executrix.]—The trial of a cause at an assize was postponed by an order of nisi prius, on payment by the defendant of the costs of the day, to be taxed. The defendant died before any verdict in the cause and before the order of nisi prius was made a rule of court. The suit having abated (17 Car. 2, c. 8, s. 1), the court discharged a rule calling on the defendant's executrix to shew cause why the costs should not be taxed; the remedy for recovering the costs under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 18, not being clear as against an executrix. Hill v. Brown, 16 M. & W. 796.

Other Cases.]—An executor having pleaded non assumpsit, and a specialty debt sufficient to cover the assets, may be permitted to withdraw the first plea, on payment of the costs occasioned only by that plea. Dearne v. Grimp, 2 W. Bl. 1275.

Executors were liable to costs in error in cases where they would be liable in the original action. Williams v. Riley, 1 H. Bl. 566.

2. In Probate Court.

Of Maintaining Will.]—Executors took legacies under the will of their testator, which also gave them the residue. The will was disputed by the next of kin, but was established, except the residuary clause. In an administration suit the executors were allowed all costs of proving the will, including costs ordered by the house of lords to be paid to the next of kin. Fulton v. Andrew, 46 L. J., Ch. 131; 24 W. R. 979.

A testator by his will gave 2,000*l.* to be equally divided among certain legatees, and the residue of his estate to his executrix. The will was proved, but an action to set aside probate was shortly afterwards commenced in the probate division against the executrix by certain of the legatees, who were also next of kin of the testator, some of the plaintiffs being married women, suing without their husbands. Judgment, with costs of that action, was entered for the executrix on February 7th, 1879, and on March 1st, 1879, an action to administer the testator's estate was commenced in the chancery division by some of the plaintiffs in the probate action and some legatees, the husbands of the married women being now joined as plaintiffs against the executrix as defendant. The executrix thereupon paid the 2,000*l.* (less duty) into court, under an order which provided against its being paid out without notice. The probate division made an order on August 1st, 1879, directing the plaintiffs in the probate action to pay the specified taxed costs thereof to the solicitors of the executrix, and the executrix thereupon obtained a charging order in the administration action against the share in the fund in court of one party only, not being one of the married women. All the shares in question had been assigned or incumbered before the date of judgment in the probate action:—Held, that the costs of the probate action were expenses of administration caused by the acts and conduct of the legatees, and proper to be deducted from the legacies themselves, and to be considered a charge upon them as against assignees, incumbrancers and husbands taking in right of their wives. Knapman, In re, Knapman v. Wreford, 50 L. J., Ch. 629; 18 Ch. D. 300; 45 L. T. 102—C. A.

Held, further, that the executrix had not, by payment into court of the specific fund, resigned any claim she might have against it for expenses of administration, and she was entitled, in priority to all parties claiming, to set off against such share therein, and to be paid the proportionate share of the taxed costs of the probate action. Ib.

Held, also, that the costs of the administration as between party and party were, under the circumstances, properly chargeable on the residuary estate. Ib.

—— Whether Testamentary Expenses.]—A testatrix, by her will, after making various specific devises of her real estate and giving certain legacies, charged her real estate, in exoneration of her personal estate, with the payment of her debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and the legacies which she gave. The will was disputed in the probate division by, amongst other persons, her co-heiresses-at-law. The action in that division was compromised, and the will proved in solemn form, it being provided in the agreement for the compromise that the costs of that action should be paid out of the estate in accordance with the rules and practice of the court. The question arose whether the costs incurred by the co-heiresses in that action were testamentary expenses, so as to be payable out of the real estate under the charge of those expenses upon the real estate made by the will:—Held, that such costs were testamentary expenses, inasmuch as they were incurred in establishing the will, and that they were therefore payable out of the real estate. Brown v. Burdett, 53 L. J., Ch. 56; 48 L. T. 753; 31 W. R. 854.

Probate and Administration Actions—Plaintiff's Costs.]—An action was brought in the probate division by an executor to propound a will. The court pronounced in favour of the validity of the will, and ordered the defendant to pay the costs, which he failed to do. Subsequently a creditor brought an action for the administration of the testator's real and personal estate, to which the executor was made a defendant. It then appeared that the testator had left no personal estate, but only real estate, which was insufficient to satisfy the creditors in full:—Held, that the executor was not entitled to be paid his costs incurred in the probate action in priority to the debts; but that the estate was distributable in paying (1) the executor's costs in the administration action as between solicitor and client; (2) the plaintiff's costs in that action as between solicitor and client; and (3) the debts. Pearce, In re, McLean v. Smith, 56 L. T. 228; 35 W. R. 358.

Where, in a probate suit, the costs of either party are ordered to be paid out of the assets, and subsequently an administration suit is instituted and the estate proves deficient, the probate costs have priority next after the costs of administration suit and before the debts of the deceased. Kelly v. Kelly, 21 L. R. Ir. 243.

A testator by his will made several specific legal devises of real estate, of which one was to J., one of his executors, and another was to L. He devised the remainder of his real estates, and bequeathed his personal estate to trustees, upon trust for sale and conversion, and to stand possessed of the proceeds upon trust, after payment of his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, to pay certain pecuniary legacies, and he gave the residue of the trust moneys unto and equally between his paternal next of kin. J. alone proved the will. The estates devised to J. and L. had, under the provisions of a settlement, been respectively liable to have two sums of 3,000*l.* and 1,200*l.* respectively raised out of them. The right to those sums had become vested in the testator. An action to administer the testator's estate was brought by W., one of the residuary legatees, against J. and L., the only question in dispute being whether the two sums of 3,000*l.* and 1,200*l.* were raisable as part of the testator's personal estate. It was held that they were not raisable, but that they had become merged in the estates on which they were respectively charged. The result of this decision was, that the personal estate was deficient. An action had been previously brought in the probate division, by W. and another residuary legatee, against J., impeaching the validity of the testator's will. The court pronounced for the validity of the will, but ordered that the costs of all parties to the action should be paid out of the personal estate. On the further consideration of the administration action:—Held, that the personal estate and the proceeds of the sale of the residuary real estate must be applied in paying: (1) the costs, as between solicitor and client, of the executor, and his costs, charges and expenses properly incurred (including his cost of the probate action); (2) the costs, as between party and party, of the plaintiff, and of the defendant L. ratably; and that, there being a deficiency, the costs of the action (so far as not provided for) must be borne by the specifically devised real estates ratably, according to their respective values at the time of the testator's death. But, that there was no jurisdiction to charge the costs of the probate action (other than the executor's costs) on the real estate. The above order was made, though some of the specific devisees were not before the court. But, whether the order could be enforced against the absent specific devisees, quære. Price, In re, Williams v. Jenkins, 55 L. J., Ch. 501; 31 Ch. D. 485; 54 L. T. 416; 34 W. R. 291.

—— Realty and Personalty.]—In administration proceedings in the chancery division the court will only under special circumstances order that the costs of a probate action shall fall on the realty. An order of the probate division directing that the costs of a party to proceedings before it shall be paid imports that they shall be paid out of the personalty. Shaw, In re, Bridger v. Shaw, 64 L. J., Ch. 47; [1894] 3 Ch. 615; 8 R. 555; 71 L. T. 515; 43 W. R. 159. And see Price, In re, Williams v. Jenkins, supra.

—— Priority.]—Costs of litigation in the ecclesiastical court for determining what is the testator's will, although ordered by the ecclesiastical court to be paid out of the estate, are postponed to the costs of administration in this court. Major v. Major, 2 Drew. 281; 23 L. J., Ch. 718; 2 Eq. Rep. 155; 2 W. R. 382.

One of the creditors of a testator cited the executrix in the probate division to prove the will, and an order was made that she should prove it within a time limited, and that, in default of her doing so, administration should be granted to the creditor. The executrix proved the will, and another friendly creditor then commenced an action in the chancery division against her to administer the estate, and the ordinary administration decree was made. Afterwards the creditor who had issued the citation obtained in the probate division an order that his costs of the proceedings there should be paid out of the estate in priority to other claims:—Held, that the costs of the administration action must be paid in priority to the costs in the probate division. Mayhew, In re, Rowles v. Mayhew, 46 L. J., Ch. 552; 5 Ch. D. 596; 37 L. T. 48; 25 W. R. 521.

3. In Equity.

a. Of Administration Action.

When given to Plaintiff on Dismissal of Bill.]—Cases in which costs may be given to a plaintiff out of an estate, notwithstanding the dismissal of the bill. Westcott v. Culliford, 3 Hare, 274; 13 L. J., Ch. 136; 8 Jur. 166.

If through the exertions of a plaintiff the court is enabled to distribute a fund, or make a declaration of rights necessary for an administration, there, although the plaintiff may fail in his claim, the court will not permit the other parties to carry off the fruit of his exertions without defraying his costs out of the fund. Wedgwood v. Adams, 8 Beav. 103.

In a suit to obtain the decision of the court on a very doubtful will, the plaintiff turned out to have no interest. The court, upon making a declaration of rights, ordered the costs of all parties out of the fund. Thomason v. Moses, 5 Beav. 77; 6 Jur. 403.

A bill in an administration suit raised a question regarding a will, upon the decision of which depended the plaintiff's title to any interest in the deceased's estate. The decision being against his taking any interest, the bill was dismissed with costs. Anderson v. Anderson, 41 L. J., Ch. 247; L. R. 13 Eq. 381; 26 L. T. 12; 20 W. R. 313.

Costs out of an estate directed to be paid to the plaintiff, who wholly failed in her suit, the trustee, who was a defendant, having asked for a declaration as to the construction of the will. Merlin v. Blagrave, 25 Beav. 125.

Although the court decides against the plaintiff in a suit relating to the construction of a will, it may order the costs of all parties to be paid out of the estate. Lee v. Delane, 4 De G. & Sm. 1; 14 Jur. 861.

A suit by a party in the character of a creditor under a covenant, against the executors of the covenantor, for payment of the claim out of the assets, and for the application of the estate, in the event of assets not being admitted, in a due course of administration, in payment of the claim:—Held, not to fall within the class of cases in which costs may be given to a plaintiff out of the estate, notwithstanding the dismissal of the bill. Jones v. How, 7 Hare, 267; 19 L. J., Ch. 324; 14 Jur. 145.

When letters of administration are revoked the administrator will not get his costs of an administration suit instituted by him with knowledge that another person claimed to administer. Houseman v. Houseman, 1 Ch. D. 535; 34 L. T. 633; 24 W. R. 592—C.A.

A plaintiff in an administration suit was a specific devisee, and also claimed to be a creditor of the testator. His title as devisee was admitted, but he failed to establish his claim as a creditor:—Held, that he must pay the costs of his unsuccessful attempt to establish his claim as a creditor. Lancefield v. Iggulden, 44 L. J., Ch. 203; L. R. 10 Ch. 136; 31 L. T. 813; 23 W. R. 223.

Out of what Fund—When out of Estate.]—In an administration action no costs ought to be given out of the estate, except for those proceedings that are in their origin directed with some show of reason and a proper foundation, for the benefit of the estate, or which have in their result conduced to the benefit thereof. Croggan v. Allen, 22 Ch. D. 101; 47 L. T. 437; 31 W. R. 319. S. P., Bartlett v. Wood, 30 L. J., Ch. 614; 4 L. T. 692; 9 W. R. 817.

A tenant for life under a will, who had duly received the income of the estate, and whose solicitors had expressed themselves satisfied with the accounts down to the date of a certain arrangement made with consent of the tenant for life as to the mode of paying the income, commenced an action for the administration of the estate, and insisted on the trustees furnishing an account of the income, which, in consequence of the arrangement, they could only do by obtaining a copy of the plaintiff's banking account, and verifying it:—Held, that the plaintiff must have no costs of the action, and must pay the cost of rendering the income account. Ib.

—— Taxation—Delay.]—The court will not permit the costs occasioned by improper litigation, or by negligent conduct of administration proceedings, to be paid out of an estate under its care. The amount of costs allowed by a taxing master as between the client and his solicitor is not conclusive of the amount which the court will allow out of the estate. Brown v. Burdett 40 Ch. D. 244; 60 L. T. 520; 37 W. R. 533—C. A.

An administration action, which was commenced in May, 1875, came on in November, 1887, upon second further consideration. The judge finding that the costs would probably amount to nearly the whole value of the estate, and believing that there had been unreasonable delay in the conduct of the proceedings, directed the taxing master under Ord. LXV. r. 11, to inquire and report as to the delay and the costs occasioned thereby. The taxing master reported that there had been great delay in the suit caused by the conduct of the solicitor for the plaintiff, and disallowed considerable sums from the costs as between the various solicitors and their clients. The judge ordered that only a portion of the costs allowed by the taxing master to the several parties, including the costs of the plaintiff, who was a trustee, should be paid out of the estate; and the court of appeal affirmed this decision. Ib.

The court, in the exercise of its discretion as to costs under Ord. LXV. r. 1, will order the plaintiff—if an infant, then the next friend—to pay the costs of any unnecessary or improper administration proceedings. Blake, In re, Jones v. Blake, 54 L. J., Ch. 880; 29 Ch. D. 913; 53 L. T. 302; 33 W. R. 886—C. A.

—— Where Two Suits.]—In a decree in a second suit only, it is improper to order the costs of that suit to be paid out of funds in a former suit, and that, too, without regard to the costs in a former suit, which constituted the first lien and claim on those funds. Taylor v. Southgate, 4 Myl. & C. 203; 8 L. J., Ch. 137; 3 Jur. 214.

—— Where Will is Ambiguous.]—Whenever a testator has expressed himself so ambiguously as to create such a difficulty as to his meaning, as to make it necessary to come into a court of equity, his general assets must bear the costs. Where a bill is brought to secure and have the benefit of a contingent interest devised over, the costs shall be paid out of the assets of the testator, who, by his will, has occasioned the difficulty. Studholme v. Hodgson, 3 P. W. 308. Baugh v. Reed, Id. 195; 1 Ves. J. 257. Att.-Gen. v. Hurst, 2 Cox, 365. S. C., nom. Att.-Gen. v. Winchelsea, 3 Bro. C. C. 380. And it makes no difference that the doubt was introduced by the parol evidence for the defendant. Nourse v. Finch, 1 Ves. J. 362. S. P., Joliffe v. East, 3 Bro. C. C. 25. Barrington v. Tristram, 6 Ves. 345; 5 R. R. 322. Wilson v. Brownsmith, 9 Ves. 108. Pearson v. Pearson, 1 Sch. & Lef. 12; 9 R. R. 1. Charitable Donations Commissioners v. Cotter, 1 Dr. & War. 498. Miller v. Rowan, 5 Cl. & F. 99.

Costs, the difficulty having been caused by the testator, directed to come out of the estate. Murton v. Markby, 18 Beav. 196.

The costs of a bill filed to determine the rights of the plaintiff under a will of difficult construction, and to which a demurrer was allowed, given out of the testator's estate. Evans v. Rosser, 3 N. R. 685.

Where litigation is occasioned by the ambiguity of a will, the costs of all parties shall come out of the testator's general personal estate. Lamphier v. Despard, 1 Con. & L. 200. And see S. C., 2 Dr. & War. 59; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 334.

Costs of a suit occasioned by the ambiguity of a will, though the suit is confined to a particular fund, come out of the general estate. Ruddock v. Poole, 1 Jur. 980.

Costs of all necessary parties to an administration suit occasioned by a question on a will, come out of the general assets, and cannot be thrown on a particular fund, though the only difficulty arises between the parties interested in that fund, and there is no question as to the rest of the assets. Williams v. Armstrong, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 356.

In a suit to obtain the decision of the court on a very doubtful will, the plaintiff turned out to have no interest. The court, upon making a declaration of rights, ordered the costs of all parties out of the fund. Thomason v. Moses, 5 Beav. 77 ; 6 Jur. 403.

A bill in an administration suit raised a question regarding a will, upon the decision of which depended the plaintiff's title to any interest in the estate. The decision being against his taking any interest, the bill was dismissed with costs. Anderson v. Anderson, 41 L. J., Ch. 247 ; L. R. 13 Eq. 381 ; 26 L. T. 12 ; 20 W. R. 313.

The court of exchequer, on an information filed by the attorney-general for legacy duty, had held that L. took an estate tail. On a bill to carry into effect the trusts of the will, the vice-chancellor held that L. took a life estate only. The vice-chancellor's decision was affirmed ; but as the testator had himself created the difficulty, the costs were ordered to come out of the estate. East v. Twyford, 3 H. L. Cas. 517.

B., by will, devised a piece of land in N. to S. By the same will he gave a large sum of money to the trustees of his will (S. being one) to erect almshouses and found a charity, "if any person should within twelve months after his decease, at his or her expense, purchase or give a suitable piece of land in N. aforesaid as a site." Within the twelve months S. conveyed the piece of land so devised to him to four trustees, upon trust to apply it to the purposes directed in the will of B. In case his wishes should not be fulfilled, the testator gave the same sum to the trustees of St. George's Hospital :—Held, that the first bequest was not void, but as there was no question of construction occasioned by the obscurity of the will itself, the costs were ordered to come out of the fund bequeathed. Philpott v. St. George's Hospital, 6 H. L. Cas. 338 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1269 ; 5 W. R. 845. Reversing 21 Beav. 134.

Where the testator has created such a difficulty that the estate cannot be administered without coming to the court, his estate bears the costs ; but where a claim is made which prevents the executors acting, and which turns out unfounded, the party making the claim must bear the costs. Cherry v. Mott, 5 L. J., Ch. 65.

Costs of plaintiffs in unsuccessful suit relating to construction of ambiguous will, ordered to be paid out of the estate in question. Ryall v. Hannam, 16 L. J., Ch. 491 ; 11 Jur. 76. S. P., Cooper v. Pitcher, 4 Hare, 485.

Where a bill is filed in consequence of a difficulty arising upon a will, under which the adverse parties claim, the court, in dismissing it, will not give costs. Graham v. Thynne, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 407.

If a bill for the payment of a legacy be dismissed, plaintiff will not be entitled to his costs out of the estate, though there be ambiguity in the will. Lister v. Sherringham, 1 Newland's Chancery Practice, 397.

In a suit for administering a testator's estate, a legacy was claimed by two legatees adversely to each other :—Held, that as the question arose on the testator's will, the costs must be borne by his estate and not by the legacy. Wilson v. Squire, 13 Sim. 212 ; 12 L. J., Ch. 139.

A testator bequeathed certain legacies to the children of A. ; A. had no legitimate but three illegitimate children, who claimed the legacies ; the executors took out an originating summons to have the question decided :—Held, that the costs of the proceedings must be borne by the residuary estate. Haseldine, In re, Grange v. Sturdy, 31 Ch. D. 511 ; 54 L. T. 322 ; 34 W. R. 327 ; 50 J. P. 390—C. A.

The plaintiff having filed a bill against the remainderman, the court gave no costs to anybody, so far as the suit related to the construction of the will of the party creating the entail ; but gave the remainderman the costs of the residue of the suit against the plaintiff. Flood v. Digby, 2 Jones, 582.

A plaintiff litigating a question depending upon the construction of a doubtful instrument not being a will, if the construction be decided against him, must pay the costs of the suit. Patching v. Dubbins, Kay, 1 ; 17 Jur. 1113.

In a suit between claimants under a will and an inconsistent deed, executed by the testator, the costs are not to be paid out of the assets on the ground that the difficulty was created by the testator, but are subject to the ordinary rule in adverse suits. Irwin v. Rogers, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 159.

The rule that the costs arising from difficulties of construction fall on the residuary estate, does not apply to an unappointed portion of a fund. Trollope v. Routledge, 1 De G. & Sm. 662 ; 11 Jur. 1002.

A will purported to be, but was not, in exercise of a power of appointment ; the fund purported to be appointed, except so much as passed as separate estate, fell into the general residue : —Held, that the fund which passed by the will was liable to the costs of letters of administration with the will annexed. Wilson, In re, Menteath v. Campbell, 26 W. R. 848.

The costs of an appeal to the house of lords upon the construction of a will were ordered to come out of the estate ; but the trustee having unnecessarily printed certain documents for the hearing of the appeal, the costs of such printing were disallowed. Prendergast v. Prendergast, 3 H. L. Cas. 195 ; 14 Jur. 989.

Where the parties claiming under a will had acquiesced for nine years in a particular construction of the will, and one of them filed a bill to have it construed by the court, the court refused to allow him his costs out of the estate, although the question was considered sufficiently doubtful to justify the application. Yockney v. Hansard, 8 Jur. 822.

—— Where Action for Administration of Real and Personal Estate.]—It is the now settled practice of the chancery division that the costs of an administration action so far as they have been increased by the administration of the real estate are to be borne by that real estate. Middleton, In re, Thompson v. Harris, 51 L. J., Ch. 273 ; 19 Ch. D. 552 ; 46 L. T. 359 ; 30 W. R. 293—C. A. And see Sanders v. Miller, 25 Beav. 154.

An action was brought by the heir-at-law of a testatrix who had given by will certain legacies, but had died intestate as to her real estate and residuary personalty, for the administration of her real and personal estate :—Held, by Fry, J., that the entire costs of the action were payable primarily out of the residuary personal estate. But held, by the court of appeal, that the costs of the action, so far as they had been increased by the administration of the real estate, must be borne by the real estate. Ib.

When an estate is sufficient the plaintiff does not necessarily get his costs in priority to the defendants. Semble. Ib.

Where an action is brought for the administration of real and personal estate, the general costs of administration must be borne by the personal estate, and any additional costs caused by administering the real estate must be borne by the real estate; and it is the duty of the judge, not the taxing master, to apportion the costs between the realty and personalty. Patching v. Barnett, 51 L. J., Ch. 74; 45 L. T. 292—C. A.

—— Of Sale of Realty.]—Costs incurred in selling real estate in an administration suit before decree charged on such real estate, and not on the personal estate. Barnewell v. Iremonger, 1 Dr. & Sm. 255; 3 L. T. 462; 9 W. R. 88.

When it is ordered that real estates which are charged with incumbrances shall contribute ratably to the payment of costs, such estates must be valued for the purposes of such contribution at the net values, after payment of incumbrances. Ib.

—— Where Action not Confined to Administration of Estate.]—Trust moneys were lent on mortgage to the tenant for life. On his death a suit was instituted mainly for the administration of his estate, and also the realisation of the mortgage, and involving the execution of the trusts of the settlement:—Held, that the costs ought to be paid as of an administration suit out of the assets; but that the costs ought, so far as they had been increased by its being a suit for the execution of the trusts of the settlement, to be borne by the settlement fund. Irby v. Irby, 24 Beav. 525.

—— Where Fund Provided for Testamentary Expenses.]—A testator devised part of his real estate in trust for sale to pay his debts, "and the costs and charges of providing and attending the execution of his will, and the several trusts therein contained":—Held, that the costs of an administration suit were charged upon this estate. Alsop v. Bell, 24 Beav. 451.

A direction in a will to pay debts, testamentary and legal expenses, includes the costs of an administration suit. Coventry v. Coventry, 2 Dr. & Sm. 470; 13 L. T. 83; 13 W. R. 985.

The expression "testamentary and other expenses under this my will":—Held, to include the costs of a suit to administer the estate. Webb v. Beaucoisin, 31 Beav. 573.

A testator directed that a specific fund given to trustees should be liable and applicable by the trustees to and in the payment of his debts, testamentary and other expenses, and legacies under his will. There was a residuary gift of all his property, subject to the provisions in his will named:—Held, that the costs of an administration suit were included under the words "other expenses under the will," and that they were payable out of the specific trust fund, to the exoneration of the general personal estate. S. C., 2 John. & H. 194; 32 L. J., Ch. 217; 11 W. R. 132.

A direction by a testator that his "testamentary expenses" shall be paid out of certain specified property includes the costs of a suit for the administration of his estate. Gray v. Warner, Biel, In re (L. R. 16 Eq. 577), distinguished. Harloe v. Harloe, 44 L. J., Ch. 512; L. R. 20 Eq. 471; 33 L. T. 247; 23 W. R. 789.

A testator directed by his will that his "testamentary expenses" should be paid out of a specified part of his estate:—Held, that the costs of a suit to administer the estate were included under "testamentary expenses." Penny v. Penny, 48 L. J., Ch. 691; 11 Ch. D. 440; 40 L. T. 393.

A testatrix had by her will created two residues of her estate, the one impure and the other pure personalty. Bequests to charities were made out of the pure personalty, and her debts and funeral and testamentary expenses were directed to be paid out of the impure personalty. The person interested in the pure personalty, subject to the charitable gifts, brought an action against the executor and trustees for the administration of the estate, and prayed that the costs thereof should be paid out of the impure personalty:—Held, that the action had been properly brought, and that by virtue of the will the costs of the action were payable out of the impure personalty. "Testamentary expenses" include the cost of such a reasonable and proper administration suit as would, in the absence of any direction by the testator, have been ordered to be paid out of the general residue. Young, In re, Young v. Dolman, 44 L. T. 499.

Contra, Browne v. Groombridge, 4 Madd. 495; 20 R. R. 326. Stringer v. Harper, 26 Beav. 585; 28 L. J., Ch. 643; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 401. Gilbertson v. Gilbertson, 34 Beav. 354; 12 L. T. 876; 13 W. R. 765. Mulock v. Mulock, 20 W. R. 696. Linley v. Taylor, 1 Giff. 69; 28 L. J., Ch. 686; 7 W. R. 639. Lees v. Lees, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 259. M'Cormick v. Patten, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 295.

Semble, it would be the duty of the court to deprive any plaintiff of the costs of an improper administration suit, notwithstanding there being a direction in the will that costs are to be paid out of a particular fund. Ib.

A testatrix, by her will, after making various specific devises of her real estate, and giving certain legacies, charged her real estate in exoneration of her personal estate, with the payment of her debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and the legacies which she gave. The will was disputed in the probate division by, amongst other persons, her co-heiresses-at-law. The action in that division was compromised, and the will proved in solemn form, it being provided in the agreement for the compromise that the costs of that action should be paid out of the estate in accordance with the rules and practice of the court. The question arose whether the costs incurred by the co-heiresses in that action were testamentary expenses, so as to be payable out of the real estate under the charge of those expenses upon the real estate made by the will:—Held, that such costs were testamentary expenses, inasmuch as they were incurred in establishing the will, and that they were therefore payable out of the real estate. Brown v. Burdett, 53 L. J., Ch. 56; 48 L. T. 753; 31 W. R. 854.

A testator gave the residue of his personal estate, which consisted of both pure and impure personalty, to trustees to sell and convert into money, and out of the proceeds and out of his ready money to pay his debts, funeral expenses, and legacies, and to pay the income to his wife for life, and after her death to raise sufficient to purchase certain life annuities. He then gave some pecuniary legacies, including a legacy of 100*l.*, to a charity school, and bequeathed all the residue of his personal estate to three charities in equal shares, and directed that the three last-mentioned bequests should be paid and satisfied out of such part of his personal estate as could be lawfully applied to the payment thereof, and which should be reserved by his trustees for that purpose :—Held, that the costs of the suit were included under testamentary expenses, and must be paid primarily out of the impure personalty. Miles v. Harrison, L. R. 9 Ch. 316; 22 W. R. 441.

A testator directed that his business should be carried on for the benefit of his widow or until her second marriage, with powers to the trustees to carry on the same; and "to increase or abridge his business, and his capital, stock, and implements therein," and generally to act "as most advantageous and mostly for the benefit of the persons claiming under his will." He also directed that all his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and the "costs, charges and expenses of carrying into effect the trusts of his will," should be paid out of the capital of the business :—Held, that the debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and the costs of suit, should be borne out of the capital of such business. Dixon v. Dutfield, 5 L. T. 741.

A testator devised his freehold farm, called W., upon certain trusts, and bequeathed his leasehold farm at H. upon trusts for sale and payment thereout of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, in exoneration of his general personal estate; and subject thereto, in trust for the trustees (who were also his executors) beneficially. There was a general residuary gift, subject only to the payment of such of the testator's debts as the proceeds of the leaseholds at H. should be insufficient to pay :—Held, that the costs of suits to determine whether certain leasehold land was comprised in the devise of W., the bequest of H., or the gift of the residue, were properly payable out of the proceeds of H. Morrell v. Fisher, 4 De G. & Sm. 422.

B. bequeathed 1,000*l.* to E. (a natural son of her sister deceased, and one of her executors), and legacies to other persons. By codicil she, after stating that her intention was to give to W., the other executor, the residue of her estate, after payment of the legacies, free of all deductions in respect of probate duty or on any other account, declared that all the legatees should contribute ratably towards the payment of her funeral and testamentary expenses in exoneration of the residue :—Held, that the costs of the suit for the administration of her estate must be paid out of the residue. Gray v. Warner, Biel, In re, L. R. 16 Eq. 577.

A testatrix gave the residue of her estate and effects, whatsoever and wheresoever, after conversion into money, to the trustees of a charity, and declared that the legacies which might savour of charitable gifts should, if necessary, be paid and discharged out of such parts of her personal estate as might be lawfully applied for the purpose, "in which event my real estate, if any, shall be first charged with and be liable to the payment of my debts and legacies not savouring of charitable gifts." She never had any real estate, but left leasehold property and pure personalty :—Held, that there was a sufficient direction to exonerate the pure personalty from payment of the debts and legacies, but that, testamentary expenses not being mentioned, the cost of administration must be borne ratably by the pure and impure personalty. Fitzgerald, In re, Adolph v. Dolman, 26 W. R. 53.

T. directed "all his just debts and funeral and testamentary expenses to be paid by his executors out of such part of his estate as could not by law be bequeathed for charitable purposes," and then devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate which he could not bequeath for charitable purposes to legatees, and bequeathed all that could be lawfully bequeathed for charitable purposes to a charity :—Held, that the charity was not relieved from the costs of a suit in which a question was raised as to whether a certain part of the property, from its nature, was bequeathable to the charity or not, and that the costs must be apportioned between the two funds. Linley v. Taylor, 1 Giff. 69; 28 L. J. Ch. 686; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 701; 7 W. R. 639.

A testator gave the residue of his estate to his trustees upon trust for sale and conversion; and directed that out of the proceeds they should pay his "testamentary expenses," debts and legacies. By a codicil he bequeathed 4,000*l.* to his trustees upon trust (after the death of his son W.) for the benefit of "the two children of his said son W. by his late wife." At the date of the codicil there were living four children of W. by his late wife, two sons and two daughters, all of them infants out of the jurisdiction :—Held, that the costs of an action brought by the trustees to determine which of the children were entitled to the legacy must be paid out of the residuary estate and not out of the legacy. Groom, In re, Booty v. Groom, 66 L. J., Ch. 778; [1897] 2 Ch. 407; 77 L. T. 154. And see (e), col. 1887, post.

A testatrix created a fund upon trust for payment thereout of her funeral and testamentary expenses, debts and legacies, and bequeathed the surplus to W. After payment of the expenses, debts and legacies, there remained a surplus, which would be liable to the costs of an administration action if instituted. No such action seemed probable :—Held, that the trustees should retain the surplus for a year from the testatrix's death, and then pay it over to W. Cope, In re, 36 L. T. 437.

—— Costs of Administration of Real Estate not Testamentary Expense.]—Where a testator directs his executor to pay his "testamentary expenses," the term includes the costs of an action for administration of the personal, but not of the real, estate. Patching v. Barnett, 51 L. J., Ch. 74; 45 L. T. 292—C. A.

Notwithstanding a direction in the will as to the fund for payment of testamentary expenses, where the costs of administration are increased by the administration of real estate, such increased costs must be borne by the real estate. Capland, In re, Mitchell v. Bain, 44 W. R. 94.

—— Liabilities of different Parts of General Residue.]—A testator bequeathed a sum of consols and the residue of his personal estate to trustees to hold in equal fifth shares on certain trusts :—Held, that the costs of the suit for the administration of the estate were payable out of the general personal estate, and not primarily out of one of the fifth shares which had lapsed. Fenton v. Wills, 47 L. J., Ch. 191; 7 Ch. D. 33; 37 L. T. 373; 26 W. R. 139.

A testatrix, after directing payment of her just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, gave her residuary and personal estate amongst four persons by name, one of whom died in her lifetime:—Held, that the lapsed share was not primarily liable for the costs of an administration suit, but that the costs must be paid before the residue was divided. Trethewy v. Helyar, 46 L. J., Ch. 125; 4 Ch. D. 53.

A testatrix, by will made in 1855, gave to A. the residue of her estate up to the end of 1855; and gave all accumulations from that date to B. She died in 1869. She left no real estate; A. died in her lifetime. In the course of a suit to administer her estate, the respective amounts of her residue at the end of 1855, and at the time of her death, and the difference between these two amounts, being the amount of the accumulations fund, had been ascertained. All her debts had been paid out of the amount of her residue at the end of 1855:—Held, that the gift of the accumulations fund was a pecuniary legacy, and not a gift of residue; and that, therefore, there being only one residuary gift, which lapsed, the costs of the suit must be borne entirely by the next of kin, in exoneration of the accumulations fund. Gowan v. Broughton, 44 L. J., Ch. 275; L. R. 19 Eq. 77; 31 L. T. 533; 23 W. R. 332.

The cases in which a lapsed share of real or personal estate will be the primary fund for payment of costs of administration, discussed. Jones, In re, Jones v. Calcss, 10 Ch. D. 40; 39 L. T. 287; 27 W. R. 108.

A. devised his real estate to a brother who predeceased him, and bequeathed his personal estate upon trust, after payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, for his nephews and nieces:—Held, that the expenses of administration must fall on the personal estate. Ib. And see Scott v. Cumberland, L. R. 18 Eq. 578; 31 L. T. 26; 22 W. R. 840.

Semble, the rule laid down in Gowan v. Broughton (L. R. 19 Eq. 77) is merely that lapse of the residue does not exonerate it from the expenses of administration. Ib.

In an administration suit, in which the validity of charitable gifts and the question of conversion between the heir and next of kin were the points in dispute, it was held, that the different parts of the property must bear pro ratâ the costs of the suit. Johnson v. Woods, 2 Beav. 409; 9 L. J., Ch. 244.

A gift of a share of real and personal residue to a charity having failed except as to pure personalty:—Held, that the costs of an administration suit ought nevertheless to be borne by the general estate. Blann v. Bell, 47 L. J., Ch. 120; 7 Ch. D. 382; 31 L. T. 533.

A testator by his will directed his executors to pay so much of his residuary personal estate as they could by law dispose of for charitable purposes, to the "Lincoln Penitent Female Home," and made no further disposition of such residuary estate:—Held, that the cost of a suit to administer the estate ought to be paid out of the residuary personal estate, inapplicable by law to the payment of the legacy to the charity, and consequently undisposed of by the will. Taylor v. Mogg, 27 L. J., Ch. 816; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 137.

A testatrix, after bequeathing specific legacies, gave the residue of her estate to charitable purposes, and directed the charitable bequests to be paid out of the property by law applicable:—Held, that the costs must be paid out of the residue. Llewellyn v. Rose. 17 W. R. 984.

Costs of administration suit payable pro ratâ out of a raised fund composed of realty and personalty. Hopkinson v. Ellis, 10 Beav. 169; 16 L. J., Ch. 59.

The costs of an action for executing the trusts of a will which bequeaths realty and personalty together as a mixed fund by a disposition that fails as to part, are borne ratably by the part effectually given and that which lapses, and this notwithstanding that the whole may be vested in trustees. Luckcraft v. Pridham, 48 L. J., Ch. 636.

A suit to administer an estate having been rendered necessary by the form of the will of the testator, who had blended his real and personal estates into one common fund, the costs were directed to be paid pro ratâ, by the heir and personal representatives, out of accumulations devolving on them in consequence of the directions of the testator to accumulate having partially exceeded the limits prescribed by the Thellusson Act. Eyre v. Marsden, 2 Keen, 564; 7 L. J., Ch. 220; 2 Jur. 583. Reversed on this point, 4 Myl. & C. 231; 3 Jur. 450.

Where an intestacy as to part of the personal estate arising from the intention of the testator being defeated by the happening of some event, or the operation of law, the part so falling to the next of kin shall, in this hands, be subject to no more liability as to costs than it would have been subject to if the gift had taken effect. S. C., 4 Myl. & C. 246.

A fund arisen from accumulations of a testator's estate, made after the period prescribed by the Thellusson Act, was claimed by the residuary legatees and by the next of kin adversely to each other. The court decided in favour of the next of kin, and ordered the costs of suit to be paid out of the fund composed of the capital of the residue and lawful accumulations, and out of the fund in dispute pro ratâ. Elborne v. Goode, 14 Sim. 165; 13 L. J., Ch. 394; 8 Jur. 1001.

—— Liabilities of Descended and Devised Realty.]—In an administration suit by one of a class interested in a specific devise, the only disputed question being among those interested in this devise, the costs, so far as they related to the real estate, were thrown upon the heir, who was made a defendant in respect of a void charitable devise of other specified land which had descended on him. Saunders v. Miller, 6 W. R. 454.

An estate was devised for sale, and a portion undisposed of descended on the heir:—Held, that the costs of a suit to administer the real estate fell on the devisees and heir pari passu. Maddison v. Pye, 32 Beav. 658.

When, in a suit for general administration, it was found upon the usual accounts and inquiries that there was no personalty, and that there were no debts, but questions had arisen in the suit as between devisees inter se, and the heir-at-law:—Held, that the administration being for the benefit of all parties, the costs of the suit must be borne by the descended and devised estates pro ratâ, including some portions of the estates as to which no question had arisen in the suit. Bagot v. Legge, 2 Dr. & Sm. 259; 34 L. J., Ch. 156; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1092; 11 L. T. 263; 13 W. R. 1.

A testator devised the whole of his real estate specifically to trustees upon certain trusts, the will containing no residuary devise. Some of the gifts of the realty were held void for uncertainty, and lapsed to the heir-at-law. The personal estate was insufficient to pay the debts:—Held, that the costs of administering the estate must, as between the heir-at-law and the

In a suit to administer specifically devised real estate a question was raised as to whether certain land was comprised in the devise or passed to the heir-at-law. It was held to be comprised in the devise, but there were other lands which descended:—Held, that the costs of the suit could not be thrown on the descended estates in exoneration of the devised estates, since the descended estates were not being administered in the suit; but the heir-at-law might be ordered to pay a proportional amount of the costs of the suit, corresponding to the value of the descended estates. Hardwick v. Hardwick, 42 L. J., Ch. 636; L. R. 16 Eq. 168; 21 W. R. 719.

As between the heir-at-law and specific devisees, real estate descended is the primary fund for payment of costs, whether such real estate is real estate undisposed of at the date of the will, or real estate, which, in the event, becomes undisposed of. Scott v. Cumberland, L. R. 18 Eq. 578; 31 L. T. 26; 22 W. R. 840.

Specific and residuary devisees must contribute ratably to the payment of such part of the costs of an administration suit as the personal estate is insufficient to satisfy. Jackson v. Pease, L. R. 19 Eq. 96; 23 W. R. 43.

Real estate which had descended to a testator's heir-at-law, not because it was not originally disposed of by the will, but by reason of a subsequent forfeiture by the devisee under the provisions of the will:—Held, not liable to pay the costs of an action to administer the testator's estate in priority to specifically devised and bequeathed freehold and leasehold estate. Scott v. Cumberland (L. R. 18 Eq. 578), Gowan v. Broughton (L. R. 19 Eq. 77), and Row v. Row (L. R. 7 Eq. 414), distinguished. Hurst v. Hurst, 54 L. J., Ch. 190; 28 Ch. D. 159; 33 W. R. 473.

—— Rents and Profits of Realty.]—Costs of an administration suit directed to be paid out of the rents and profits of the real estate. Biggar v. Eastwood, 15 L. R. Ir. 219.

—— Liabilities of Legatees inter se.]—Cost of general administration should not, in favour of legatees, be thrown upon descended realty, but such costs only as are incident to the administration of the realty. Harrison v. Harrison, 42 L. J., Ch. 495; L. R. 8 Ch. 342; 28 L. T. 545; 21 W. R. 164.

It is still the rule in administering assets that when the residuary personal estate is insufficient to pay the costs of a suit, the deficiency must be made up by the pecuniary legatees in priority to the residuary devisees. Tomkins v. Colthurst, 1 Ch. D. 626; 33 L. T. 591; 24 W. R. 267.

The costs of a suit for administration:—Held, there being no other assets, to be payable out of the specific legacies pari passu. Bristow v. Bristow, 5 Beav. 289.

Apportionment of costs between shares of younger children. Crone v. Odell, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 12.

Accounts of personal estate not specifically bequeathed had been directed in an administration suit. Ultimately, the costs of all parties, as between solicitor and client, were paid out of a specific legacy in the absence of the specific legatee. In a subsequent suit, instituted by the specific legatee for her legacy, liberty was given to her to surcharge and falsify the accounts, and the plaintiff's costs were directed to be allowed as between party and party. Walrond v. Walrond, 29 Beav. 586.

In a suit occasioned by a bequest, involving a secret trust, of leasehold and personal estate, and in which it is declared that the leaseholds belonged to the crown, the costs must be paid ratably out of the leaseholds and personalty. Johnstone v. Hamilton, 14 L. T. 282.

A direction that legatees shall contribute, in exoneration of residue, to the payment of testamentary expenses, does not apply to costs of an administration suit. Biel, In re, Gray v. Warner, 42 L. J., Ch. 556; L. R. 16 Eq. 577; 28 L. T. 835; 21 W. R. 808.

Where a testator gave the income of all his residuary realty to A. for life, and after specific devises of part of his estate to other persons, ultimately gave the residue of his realty to A. absolutely:—Held, that the life interest of A. was applicable for costs before the property specifically devised. Hibon v. Hibon, 32 L. J., Ch. 374; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 511; 8 L. T. 195; 11 W. R 455.

—— No Personal Estate.]—Where, in a creditor's action to administer real and personal estate, it is found, upon taking the accounts, that the deceased had not any personal estate, the personal representative having appeared and been declared entitled to costs, the plaintiff is entitled to have those costs, along with his own, paid out of the real estate. Barry v. Quinlan, 21 L. R. Ir. 11.

Set-off.]—In a suit for the administration of assets, a debtor to the estate, who is entitled to have his costs of suit out of the fund, will not be allowed to receive payment of them while his debt continues unsatisfied, but the costs due to him will be set off pro tanto against the debt due from him. Harmer v. Harris, 1 Russ. 155; 25 R. R. 20.

—— Insolvent Legatee Debtor to Estate.]—By the decree, sums due from a legatee were ordered to be set off against her share of the testator's estate, and her costs were ordered to be paid to her solicitor. It being found that the claims against her exceeded her portion of the estate, and the legatee being insolvent, an application was made by motion that the costs ordered to be paid to her solicitor might be carried to the credit of her account. The court stayed the payment of the costs for a month, in order that the matter might be set right. Nicholson v. Norton, 7 Beav. 67; 13 L. J., Ch. 140.

—— Insolvent Executor Debtor to Estate.]—In an administration or creditors' suit against an executor becoming bankrupt or insolvent, and who is at the same time indebted to the estate of his testator, the costs of the executor incurred before his bankruptcy or insolvency will be set off against his debts; and the costs of the same executor, incurred in the proper performance of the duties of his trust after the bankruptcy or insolvency, will be allowed off the estate. Samuels v. Jones, 2 Hare, 246; 12 L. J., Ch. 496; 7 Jur. 845.

—— Debt Payable in Futuro.]—Executor held entitled to immediate payment of his costs of an administration suit, though, by the master's report, he was found to be indebted to the testator's estate to an amount exceeding the costs, upon security payable on a future day. Stephens v. Pillen, 17 L. J., Ch. 214; 12 Jur. 282.

—— For Costs of Unsuccessful Motion.]—In an administration suit a decree was made against a defendant, and he was ordered to pay the costs. He changed his solicitor, and subsequently a motion by the plaintiff for leave to issue an attachment for disobedience to the decree and order was refused with costs:—Held, that the plaintiff had a right to set off. Roberts v. Buée, 47 L. J., Ch. 414; 8 Ch. D. 198; 26 W. R. 393.

—— For Costs of Probate Action.]—Legatees, who were also next of kin of the testator, brought an action against the executor, seeking a revocation of the probate, but failed, and were ordered to pay the executor's costs of the action. While the action was pending, some of the plaintiffs assigned and others mortgaged their shares, whether under the will or on an intestacy. Afterwards the legatees commenced an action against the executor in the chancery division for the administration of the estate:—Held, that the executor was entitled to set off the costs in the probate suit against the legacies, notwithstanding the assignments and incumbrances. Knapman, In re, Knapman v. Wreford, 50 L. J., Ch. 629; 18 Ch. D. 300; 45 L. T. 102; 30 W. R. 395—C. A.

Application to stay Payment out of Court for—Summons to review Taxation.]—A motion was made by a plaintiff for an order to stay payment out of court of a sum payable under an order of the court to the defendant's solicitors as taxed costs until a pending summons by the defendant to review taxation should be disposed of. The grounds of the motion were the defendant's impecuniosity and also the absence of any liability on the defendant's part to her solicitors for any further sum than taxed costs. The motion was refused, as being an unprecedented attempt to extend the practice as to requiring security to be given for costs. Barber, In re, Burgess v. Vinnicome, 55 L. J., Ch. 624; 54 L. T. 728; 34 W. R. 578.

Priority of Payment.]—In a creditor's suit, bringing the heir-at-law and also the devisee of the debtor before the court, as well as his personal representative, if the fund is not sufficient for the payment of the taxed costs of all the parties, all must abate proportionably. Torey v. ——, 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 46.

Order of priority of payments of costs, in a cause properly instituted for administration of assets, plaintiff to have his costs in the first instance. Heir-at-law, devisees, and trustee of the real estate to have their costs against plaintiff; he to have them over against the fund, and the other defendants to have their costs out of the fund, in the same order with their respective demands. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 1 Moll. 535.

By the decree on further directions in a creditor's suit the costs of all parties were directed to be taxed as between solicitor and client, and paid out of a fund in court. The fund proving insufficient to pay the costs, the defendants, the heir and administrator of the debtor, petitioned to be paid their costs in the first instance; but the court directed the funds to be divided amongst all the parties in proportion to their costs. Swale v. Milner, 6 Sim. 572.

It is not the invariable rule either that plaintiff's costs in a creditor's suit are to be the first payment out of the fund brought in, or that they are to abide the order and degree of plaintiff's demand. Egan v. Baldwin, 1 Moll. 539.

A married woman being entitled to a share of a residue for her life, with remainder to her children who were infants, a bill was filed by her and her husband and their children, by their father as their next friend, against the executor and the co-residuary legatees for the administration and distribution of the testator's estate. When the executor put in his answer, a balance was due from him, and he paid it into court. Afterwards he paid the whole of testator's debts remaining unsatisfied, some of them before and the rest after the usual decree, whereby a balance greater than the fund in court became due to him, and the master so found. After the report had been absolutely confirmed the husband died, and the widow having declined to take any step towards the further prosecution of the suit, the executor filed a supplemental bill, praying to have the fund in court, exempt from all costs, paid to him, in part of the balance found due by the master. The court ordered the executor's costs of both suits, as between solicitor and client, to be first paid out of the fund; then the costs of the defendants, the co-residuary legatees, of both suits; and, lastly, the costs of the widow and children of the supplementary suit, but not of the original suit. Jackson v. Woolley, 12 Sim. 12; 10 L. J., Ch. 197.

Where, in a suit by legatees against an executor, he was ordered to pay in the funds in his hands, which funds, together with the sums in court, were insufficient for the payment of all the costs, on a petition for a ratable division of them:—Held, that the executor was entitled to priority only for such portion of the bill as was exclusively his, and that as to a part in which he had joined with other defendants he was only entitled to an apportionment. Blenkinsop v. Foster, 3 Y. & C. 207; 8 L. J., Ex. Eq. 8.

It was also held, that the plaintiff, although he might have been the means of increasing the fund, was not entitled to priority over the other parties in the same interest. Ib.

A testator empowered his trustees to charge his estate for certain purposes, and he devised it on trusts for A. and B. The charge was raised, and became vested in A., who filed a bill to raise the charge, and to ascertain the rights of the parties in the surplus:—Held, that A.'s costs of suit had priority over those of B. Howard v. Prince, 13 Beav. 72.

In an administration suit by a simple contract creditor (whose debt was also secured by an equitable mortgage, which proved insufficient), the assets of the testator, being insufficient for payment of his debts and the costs of the suit, were applied (subject to a retainer by the executors of any debt due to them from the testator) in payment of the costs, first, of the executors (as between solicitor and client); secondly, of the plaintiff; thirdly, of the other defendants (devisees of the mortgaged estate); and fourthly, of the debts, including any balance due to the plaintiff. Tipping v. Power, 1 Hare, 405; 11 L. J., Ch. 257; 6 Jur. 434.

In a bill by a legatee for the administration of an estate, it was probable that the assets would not even be sufficient to pay the costs:—Held, that the costs were payable in the following order: first, the costs of the legal personal representatives as between solicitor and client; secondly, the costs and expenses of the plaintiff in selling and getting in the estate, and the costs of the heir in executing deeds; and thirdly, the other costs of all parties as between party and party, pari passu. Wetenhall v. Davis or Dennis, 33 Beav. 285; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1216; 9 L. T. 361; 12 W. R. 66.

In an administration suit instituted by a creditor who was mortgagee of certain real estate of the testator, an order was made directing the sale of the mortgaged estate, and out of the proceeds the plaintiff's mortgage and the testator's debts were paid. The remaining assets being insufficient to pay all the costs:—Held, that the costs, charges, and expenses of the executor must be paid in priority to the plaintiff's costs of sale. Harrison v. Spensley, 42 L. J., Ch. 21; L. R. 15 Eq. 16; 27 L. T. 600; 21 W. R. 95.

The conduct of proceedings in an action for the administration of a testator's estate was given to the B. company, who were creditors. The company, with leave of the judge, took out a summons to compel a firm of solicitors to refund money which they had received out of the estate for costs. The summons was dismissed, and the company was ordered to pay the costs of the firm. The company was afterwards wound up by the court, and could not pay anything. All the costs of the administration action had been paid, except the costs in respect of the summons. There remained to the credit of the action a sum not sufficient to pay either the costs of the company or the costs of the firm in relation to the summons:—Held, that the firm of solicitors to whom the company had been ordered to pay the costs had a better equity, and that the fund must be paid to the solicitors, and not to the liquidator of the company. Blundell, In re, Blundell v. Blundell, 59 L. J., Ch. 269; 44 Ch. D. 1; 62 L. T. 620; 38 W. R. 707—C. A.

Concurrent Suits.] — Where, pending an administration, such a suit is instituted by legatees, praying no further relief than might be had in the administration suit, the parties to the administration suit ought to apply to have the proceedings in the legatees' suit stayed; otherwise the costs of the latter suit may be dealt with as costs in the former. Therry v. Henderson, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 481; 6 Jur. 386.

Where a decree had been obtained in chancery for the general administration of a testator's assets, a bill previously filed in this court by an annuitant under the will against the executors was dismissed; and as the annuitant's bill had been filed with undue haste, she was not allowed the costs of the application to stay proceedings, although she was allowed her costs up to the time of notice of the decree. Hayward v. Constable, 2 Y. & C. 43.

A claim being filed by A., as next of kin, for the administration of an estate in which infants were interested, another claim was filed by the mother of the infants for the same purpose; on reference to the master to inquire which should proceed, he reported in favour of the mother:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to costs of filing the original claim, and no costs subsequent to the filing of second claim. Oppenheim v. Henry, 1 W. R. 126.

Four suits were consolidated, and the conduct given to the plaintiff in one of them, who was a devisee and legatee:—Held, that he was entitled to his extra costs, which he had properly incurred in the prosecution of the decree. Lockhart v. Hardy, 10 Beav. 292.

Where a second suit for administration of a deceased person's estate was instituted after decree in a previous suit for objects which could have been well attained in the first suit, and a decree had been pronounced dealing with the costs of the second suit on a wrong principle, an appeal for costs only was held not within the rule which prohibits such appeals. Menzies v. Connor, 3 Mac. & G. 648.

In a creditors' suit, the plaintiff moved, after decree, to restrain proceedings in another suit for administration of the debtor's estate. The registrar's statement of the practice as to costs in such cases. West v. Swinburne, 19 L. J., Ch. 81; 14 Jur. 360.

Pending a litigation in the ecclesiastical court as to the validity of a will, a creditor filed a bill for a receiver, &c. The alleged will being held invalid, an administrator was appointed, whereupon another creditor filed a cross suit and rapidly obtained a decree. The plaintiff in the first suit was declared entitled to his costs out of the estate. Frowd v. Baker, 4 Beav. 76.

W. filed a creditor's bill to administer C.'s estate. An administration decree having shortly afterwards been made in a second suit, an order was made staying proceedings in the first suit, and directing W.'s costs to be taxed, and to be paid by the executrix out of the assets. An order on further consideration was made in the second suit, ordering payment, first, of the costs of the executrix and then of the plaintiff, but not providing for W.'s costs. W. then applied by summons for an order for payment of his costs of the first suit. He was offered an order for payment of them pari passu with the costs of the plaintiff, but declined it, upon which his application was refused. W. then appealed:—Held, that the order for payment of W.'s costs by the executrix out of the assets did not give them priority over the costs of the second suit; and that, as W. had refused to accept an order giving him all he was entitled to, his appeal must be dismissed. Clark, In re, Cumberland v. Clark, L. R. 4 Ch. 412; 17 W. R. 524.

Where an order is made for staying one of two suits which are instituted by different creditors against the executor of a deceased debtor for the administration of his estate, the form of order as to the payment of the costs of the plaintiff in the suit which is stayed is, that the executor shall pay them if he have assets in hand, but if he have not, then that the plaintiff shall add them to his debt, and prove for his debt and the amount of his costs in the other suit. Canham v. Neale, 26 Beav. 266; 28 L. J., Ch. 69; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 52.

—— Suit as to Personalty—Second Suit as to Realty.]—Two administration suits having been instituted to obtain the decision of the court upon the construction of a will, one as to the testator's real, and the other as to his personal estate:—Held, that the costs of both must be borne by the personal estate in the first instance. Pickford v. Brown, 2 Kay & J. 426; 25 L. J., Ch. 702; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 781; 4 W. R. 473.

—— Breach of Trust charged in one Suit.]—There were two suits brought against the representatives of a testator, one a creditors' suit, and the other for a breach of trust. The accounts were taken in the first suit, and the debts, &c., ascertained, but the assets were insufficient to pay the debts in full, if the plaintiff in the second suit succeeded. The second cause not having been heard, the court ordered a part of the assets to be set apart to answer the claims of the plaintiff in the second suit, with the costs; and the residue was apportioned and paid to the creditors in the first suit. Illingworth v. Nelson, 7 L. J., Ch. 163; 2 Keen, 776, n. And see Swan v. Nelson, 2 Keen, 776, n.

A suit was instituted against the representatives of a testator in respect of a breach of trust, and a decree was afterwards made in a creditors' suit against the same representatives, and an account of the debts, &c., was directed to be taken. The plaintiff, in the first suit, established his claim, so far as he could, in the creditors' suit, and afterwards brought on the first suit for hearing, when, there appearing a deficiency of assets, he waived further relief, and took the securities on which the trust fund had been improperly invested:—Held, that the plaintiff in the first suit was entitled to his costs out of the assets in the second. Costerton v. Costerton, 2 Keen, 774; 7 L. J., Ch. 302.

A bill was filed by persons interested as residuary legatees under a will against the executors and the other persons having interests, praying the usual accounts and the administration of the estate. The executors put in their answer, not however setting out the accounts which the bill asked. Afterwards, under an arrangement to which all parties consented, the executors verified their accounts by affidavit, and the sums thereby appearing to be in their hands were paid into court in the cause. Two of the defendants then filed a second bill against the executors and against all the other parties to the former suit, and thereby, in addition to the relief prayed by the first bill, sought to charge the executors personally, on the ground of fraud and breach of trust. In May, 1835, a decree by consent was made in the first suit by which all the accounts and inquiries usual in an administration suit were directed. The plaintiffs in the second suit afterwards brought on their suit to a hearing, but wholly abandoned the case of alleged fraud and breach of trust; and a decree was made dismissing their bill, but directing that their costs, up to the date of the decree in the first suit, should be taxed and paid out of the fund in court in the first suit. Upon appeal, this decree was varied by directing that so much of the second bill as sought to charge the executors personally be dismissed with costs, and that the plaintiffs pay to all the defendants so much of the costs of the rest of the suit as had arisen since the decree in the first suit, and that the residue of the costs of all parties be taxed, with a declaration that the same ought to be paid out of the estate; any of the parties to be at liberty to apply in the first suit relative thereto, and all proceedings in the second suit to be stayed. Taylor v. Southgate, 4 Myl. & C. 203; 8 L. J., Ch. 137; 3 Jur. 214.

Of Inquiries—Generally.]—Mere liberty to attend the proceedings under an administration judgment does not entitle the parties having the liberty to the costs of their attendance in chambers as a matter of course. In order to entitle such parties to such costs, the order giving the liberty to attend should expressly provide that they are to be entitled thereto. Day v. Batty, 21 Ch. D. 830.

To entitle a person interested in an administration action to the costs of attending proceedings in chambers under the decree, he must attend by special leave of the judge; and if he attends under the common order of course and without special leave, he may be ordered to pay, in addition to his own costs, the extra costs occasioned by his attendance. Sharp v. Lush, 48 L. J., Ch. 231; 10 Ch. D. 468; 27 W. R. 528.

Practice as to the mode of taking accounts in administration actions stated. Ib.

Costs of parties originally brought before the court by the executor, but declared by the decree to be unnecessary parties, but who, nevertheless, remained before the court and attended the inquiries, ordered to be paid out of the parties' own share. Girdleston v. Creed, 1 W. R. 228.

—— Inquiry as to Heir.]—In an administration action an inquiry was ordered as to who was the heir of the testator. The chief clerk found that R. K. was the heir, but that, in default of heirs on the paternal side, the heir-at-law was J. S. P. J. S. P. took out a summons to vary the certificate, and the court held that the claimant R. K. had not proved his relationship to the testator. The unsuccessful claimant asked for costs:—Held, that there was no general rule entitling a claimant coming in on an inquiry in chambers in an administration action, and failing, to have his costs out of the estate. The rule is correctly stated in Seton on Decrees, 4th edit., vol. 1, part 1, pp. 66 and 67: "A claimant failing in chambers to make out his claim may be ordered to pay costs":—Held also, that the decision of the court depended upon the special circumstances of each case; that in this case R. K. had not proved that the hearsay evidence upon which he relied was that of a person a member of the family; that the justice of the case would be met by not giving the claimant any costs of the inquiry in chambers, and ordering him to pay the costs of the adjournment into court. Knight, In re, Knight v. Gardner, 57 L. T. 238.

—— Next of Kin.]—General rule is, that next of kin going before master to establish their claims pay costs; but if afterwards they are permitted to mix in cause, as if they had been parties, they are entitled to costs. Waite v. Waite, 6 Madd. 110.

In a suit for the administration of the estate of a person who died partially intestate, certain persons, not parties to the suit, who proved themselves next of kin before the master, were allowed their costs of so doing out of the estate of the deceased. Buckwell v. Paget, 2 Jur. 699.

In a suit for the distribution of an intestate's estate, certain persons, not parties to the suit, proved themselves to be next of kin before the master:—Held, that they were entitled to be paid the costs of so doing out of the intestate's estate. Bennett v. Wood, 7 Sim. 522; 6 L. J., Ch. 330.

Where, in a suit for administration of the estate of an intestate, persons not made parties went in before the master, and established their title as next of kin, but no supplemental bill was filed, but they appeared at the hearing:—Held, that they were entitled to stand on the same footing as to costs as if they had been made parties. Hutchinson v. Freeman, 4 Myl. & C. 409; 10 L. J., Ch. 3, n.; 3 Jur. 694. S. P., Shuttleworth

v. Howarth, 4 Myl. & C. 492 ; 10 L. J., Ch. 2 ; 5 Jur. 2.

Costs allowed to a party who filed a bill claiming as next of kin, upon which an inquiry was directed as to who were next of kin, but who failed to prove her title, and a supplemental suit for the administration was necessary ; it being more beneficial to have that inquiry in a suit where parties claimed as next of kin than by a mere advertisement. Taylor v. Haygarth, 8 Jur. 135.

The plaintiffs, stating themselves and some of the defendants to be next of kin, filed a bill for the administration of a testator's estate. Their claim was displaced upon inquiries directed by the court ; and other persons, not parties to the cause, established their right, and became entitled to a large residue. The case being one of great difficulty and doubt, and an investigation being absolutely necessary for the administration of the estate, the plaintiffs and the defendants were allowed their costs out of the fund. Johnston v. Todd, 8 Beav. 489.

A testator devised his real estates to a trustee for a term of one thousand years, to raise by sale or mortgage 2,000*l.*, to be equally divided amongst such of his next of kin, both maternal and paternal, as should be living at the time of his death :—Held, that the parties entitled to the 2,000*l.*, as next of kin of the testator, were entitled to have the costs of making out their title before the master raised out of his estate, and that the costs did not fall on the fund. Dugdale v. Dugdale, 12 Beav. 247 ; 19 L. J., Ch. 42 ; 14 Jur. 234.

Executor having three guineas per annum for collecting rents, a trustee as to the residue of personal estate, and not having brought an action to recover a bond debt, was charged therewith ; having put the next of kin to prove the relationship, ordered to pay the costs of taking the accounts. Lowson v. Copeland, 2 Bro. C. C. 156.

The deceased had, by a writing purporting to be a codicil, given a legacy to a party, but no will could be found, nor was any executor appointed by the codicil ; the next of kin having been ascertained by the master, were held entitled, upon entering into recognisances for refunding in case of a will being found, to receive the residue ; and certain persons who proved themselves to be next of kin, although not parties to the suit, were allowed the costs of doing so. Bakewell v. Tugart, 3 Y. & C. 173 ; 2 Jur. 699.

A testator bequeathed his residuary personal estate amongst six persons equally. Three of the residuary legatees predeceased the testator, and their shares lapsed :—Held, that the costs of ascertaining the next of kin of the testator entitled to the lapsed shares ought to be paid out of the general residuary estate, and not out of the lapsed shares. Giles, In re, 55 L. J., Ch. 695 ; 55 L. T. 51 ; 34 W. R. 712.

—— Legatees.]—Legacy to such person of the name of M. as should, within a certain time, prove his relationship to testator. Such a person established a claim in the master's office, and he was held entitled to all his costs out of the general assets (the executors admitting assets), except those of making out his pedigree. Wallis v. Williams, Beames on Costs, 338.

The costs incurred by a legatee who has instituted an administration suit in attending before the master, by counsel, in support of his state of facts :—Held, not to be within the 120th Order of May, 1845, as incurred upon a question relating to title. Wroughton v. Colquhoun, 1 De G. & Sm. 357.

A. filed her bill for payment of a particular legacy given her by the will of B., and also for payment to her, as one of the next of kin of B., of one-third part of B.'s residuary personal estate, against the three executors of B., and the husbands of two of them, who were married women, and who were two of B.'s next of kin. The defendants by their answer disputed the legitimacy of A., although she was described in the testator's will as his granddaughter. On a reference directed, A.'s legitimacy was proved. A., by her will, did not specifically pray for payment of interest on her share of the testator's residuary estate, nor did she ask for any inquiry as to the interest due to her thereon, until after two separate references had been directed to the master :—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to have her costs, relating to the inquiry into her legitimacy, paid personally by the defendants ; that she was not entitled, on the cause coming on for the third time, to any inquiry as to the amount of interest due to her on her share of the residuary personal estate, and that there could be no contribution as between co-defendants with respect to the receipts by them of the testator's estate, the same being matter proper for a distinct suit. Green v. Challenor, 9 L. J., Ch. 183.

After a verdict, on an issue directed, found against the legitimacy of a person claiming a legacy as a legitimate child, the court refused costs against him, as he had always borne the name of the family, and been received in it. Forbes v. Taylor, 1 Ves. J. 99.

—— Class Inquiries.] — Where a testator charges his estate with a specific bequest in favour of a particular class, e.g., "the grandchildren of A.," the money will be raised at the cost of the general estate ; but the costs incurred by persons claiming to compose such class, in substantiating their claim, must come out of the fund specifically bequeathed. Boycott v. Newman, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 702 ; 4 W. R. 707.

Where a testator gave his residuary estate, both real and personal, upon trust to be divided in certain proportions among certain classes of persons, although some of the classes turned out to be much more numerous than others, it was held that the cost of establishing the claims of the individuals composing the different classes were not to be paid exclusively out of the portions payable to such classes respectively, but that the costs of all the persons who established their claims as falling within the several classes were to be paid indiscriminately out of the residuary fund before any apportionment of it took place. Shuttleworth v. Howarth, Cr. & Ph. 228 ; 5 Jur. 499.

A residue being given to a class of persons, and it being referred to the master to ascertain who belonged to that class, a person, whom the master has admitted as one of the class, may obtain an order to attend the proceedings at the expense of the estate, if one solicitor acts in the suit both for plaintiff and defendant, and also for persons claiming to be interested in the residue. Anon., 5 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 104.

Real estates were devised in trust to raise a legacy for a class of next of kin. The legacy was raised and carried to a separate account in the suit, and afterwards costs were incurred in ascertaining the class in the master's office. Upon petition of the legatees, such costs were held to be a charge on the estate, and were ordered to be raised. Dugdale v. Dugdale, 12 Beav. 247; 19 L. J., Ch. 42; 14 Jur. 234.

When there is a gift of residue to be divided among certain persons and classes of persons, the costs of ascertaining of whom such classes consist are payable out of the whole residue before the same is divided. Reere, In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 412; 4 Ch. D. 841; 36 L. T. 906; 25 W. R. 628.

—— As to Incumbrances.]—If in an administration suit an inquiry is directed in chambers as to incumbrances by persons interested under the will, the costs of such inquiry must be treated as part of the general costs of the suit, and be paid out of the estate. Gee v. Mahood, 23 W. R. 71.

—— Payment into Court.]—Executors by payment into court under the Trustee Relief Act of a sum of money bequeathed to a class, or by any other severance of the legacy, cannot relieve the residue in their hands from bearing the costs of and incident to an inquiry for the purpose of ascertaining who are the persons entitled to take. Trick's Trusts, In re (L. R. 5 Ch. 170), and Birkett, In re (9 Ch. D. 576), followed. Gibbons, In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 911; 36 Ch. D. 486; 58 L. T. 8; 36 W. R. 180.

—— Inquiries Unnecessary and Improper.]—The plaintiff was the sole executor and trustee of the will of George Dale, a grocer. The property had been realised in the action, and the total amount of the proceeds was about 370*l.* The testator died in 1878, having by his will left all his property upon trust for his wife during widowhood, with power to carry on the business, and on her death or marriage upon trust for sale, the residue to be divided among his children, and the issue then living of any deceased. On the 30th May, 1879, the writ was issued in this action. In April, 1880, the statement of claim was delivered, in which the number and names of the testator's children were stated, the only reason given for the action being that difficulties had arisen in the administration of the trust. The widow and Joseph Dale, an adult son, were the defendants. On the 17th November, 1880, the plaintiff applied for and obtained an order for accounts and inquiries. The certificate was not made until the 5th June, 1889:—Held, that many of the inquiries, particularly that concerning the children, were unnecessary and improper:—Held, however, that, the suit being instituted and the order for accounts and inquiries made before the General Orders of 1883 came into operation, the trustee, under the old practice, was not so much to blame as to be ordered to pay the costs; that it was a case to which the new rule, Ord. LXV., r. 38, of the Rules of Court, 1883, applied. Dale, In re, Stubbs v. Dale, 62 L. T. 28.

A testator left his property to his wife for life, his business to be carried on for the support of her and his children, charged with debts. There was no personalty, the trustees disclaimed, and a bill was filed by one child, a legatee, for the administration of the estate, alleging an improper carrying on of the business, and asking an account and receiver. On the question of costs:—Held, that, this court being put in the place of trustees, the inquiry as to the business was necessary, and no costs could be reserved, but must be paid as usual. Cooper v. Cooper, 1 W. R. 501.

—— Other Cases.]—Several defendants entitled to a fund in equal shares; and long inquiries being necessary as to one share only, the costs were apportioned. Baseri v. Serra, 14 Ves. 313.

A testator having, by his will, directed his executors to transfer 500*l.*, part of his residuary estate, to H. N., and made a specific disposition of the other parts, and having afterwards drawn a pen through the name of H. N., and by a codicil declared that he razed her name out of his will with his own hand, the 500*l.* belongs as undisposed of to his next of kin. The costs of ascertaining the right to that sum paid thereout in exemption of the general residue. Skrymsher v. Northcote, 1 Swanst. 566; 1 Wils. 248; 18 R. R. 142.

The testator having directed the expenses of investing all accumulations to be paid out of the fund bequeathed to grandchildren, the lord chancellor would not cast the costs of the suit upon the excess of accumulations beyond the legal period, and which would go to the heir-at-law or next of kin; and varied the decree below therefore by directing the costs of the suit, except as to the inquiries and proceedings incident to the excess of accumulations, to be paid out of the general estate, and the costs of such inquiry apportioned pro ratâ between the funds of the heir and next of kin: under such circumstances, costs would be a proper subject of appeal. Eyre v. Marsden, 4 Myl. & C. 231; 3 Jur. 450. Reversing on this point 2 Keen, 564; 7 L. J., Ch. 220.

A plaintiff deprived of the conduct of an administration suit, who attended the taking of the accounts in chambers, is not entitled to his costs. Armstrong v. Armstrong, L. R. 12 Eq. 614.

Separate Sets of Costs — Assignee in Bankruptcy.]—A party entitled to a share of a residue became bankrupt:—Held, that he and his assignees were entitled only to one set of costs between them. Garey v. Whittingham, 5 Beav. 268; 11 L. J., Ch. 334; 5 Jur. 545.

In a bill filed by a married woman to administer the estate of a testator, and to establish her equity to a settlement to which her husband and his assignees in bankruptcy were made defendants, the court held the husband was entitled to his costs, but refused to give the assignees their costs. Rotherham v. Battson, 2 Sm. & G. (App.) viii.

The plaintiff in an administration suit, one of the executors and residuary legatees, being insolvent, his assignees in insolvency had been made defendants to the suit:—Held, that the plaintiff and the assignees were entitled to separate costs. Chilwell v. Hocknell, 2 Eq. Rep. 1160; 2 W. R. 630.

—— Incumbrancers.]—Where one of a class of persons interested in a testator's residuary personal estate files a bill for its administration, the general costs of the suit are to be satisfied out of the fund generally; but where some of the parties beneficially interested have incumbered or absolutely assigned their portions of the fund, the costs of the assignors only will be allowed, the same to be paid to their assignees respectively, and the rest of the costs incurred by the assignees.

must be satisfied out of the assigned shares respectively. Greedy v. Lavender, 11 Beav. 417; 18 L. J., Ch. 62.

Where shares of parties beneficially interested under a will have been incumbered, one set of costs is allowed in respect of each share, but without deducting the additional expense incurred by reason of the incumbrances. Greedy v. Lavender (11 Beav. 417) not followed. Coates v. Coates, 3 N. R. 355. And see Remnant v. Hood, 27 Beav. 613, infra.

—— Parties in same Interest.]—Parties in the same interest with the plaintiff, and not joining as co-plaintiffs, are not entitled to the costs of a suit which, as to their interests, is successful. Trustees neglecting their trust not entitled to their costs. England v. Downs, 6 Beav. 279.

Where several parties in the same interest have liberty to attend the proceedings in an administration suit, they should not appear separately; and if they do, only one set of costs will be allowed. Stevenson v. Abington, 8 L. T. 719; 11 W. R. 936.

The court does not compel persons who have different shares in an estate to appear by the same solicitor because their interests as regards their opposition to the claim of the plaintiff are identical. Remnant v. Hood, 27 Beav. 613.

Therefore, the bill being dismissed with costs, each of such persons gets his separate costs; but a trustee and his cestui que trust get but one set of costs between them; and so the person entitled to a share and all his incumbrancers have but one set of costs, which is payable to the first incumbrancer. Ib.

In an administration suit by the heir, being one of the next of kin of a testator, other persons claiming as next of kin, but appearing in separate classes by several solicitors, were not allowed separate costs out of the general estate beyond the costs of proving their respective titles. Hubbard v. Latham, 35 L. J., Ch. 402; 14 L. T. 616; 14 W. R. 553.

In an administration suit by a residuary legatee, other residuary legatees served with notice of the decree, and having liberty to attend the proceedings, will not be allowed their costs of attending the taking of the accounts in chambers, unless the plaintiff and the accounting defendant employ the same solicitor, and in that case will be allowed one set of costs between them. Taylor, In re, Daubney v. Leake, 35 Beav. 311; 35 L. J., Ch. 347; L. R. 1 Eq. 495; 14 W. R. 413.

A fund was left to M. for life, and then to C. and S. equally between them, or the survivor, unless either should die leaving children, in which case his share was to go to his children. C. died first, leaving no children. S. died, leaving three, and M. died afterwards, the court holding that the children of S., who all appeared separately and argued on the petition, took nothing:—Held, that, it being a case for costs, each interest was entitled to one set of costs. Larkin, In re, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 229.

But one of these three children being a married woman, whose husband had become bankrupt, and she and her husband's assignees appearing by different counsel in order to argue, if it arose, her equity to a settlement:—Held, that there could be but one set of costs allowed in respect of her share, and that the husband's assignees, and not the wife, were entitled to that set of costs. Ib.

In an administration suit W., an executor, severed from his co-executors, and appeared by a separate solicitor and counsel throughout the proceedings. The testator had given his executors power to carry on his business, and W.'s co-executors had, in spite of his remonstrances, carried on the business at a loss. The chief clerk, by his certificate, found that no profits had arisen from the testator's business since his death, and that another of the co-executors was largely indebted to the estate:—Held, that W., who had died pendente lite, was justified in severing from his co-executors, and that his legal personal representatives were entitled to a separate set of costs. Meldrum v. Hayes, 21 W. R. 746.

Residuary legatees not parties to the record, but having by leave of the court attended in chambers, are entitled to one set of costs amongst them. Lewis v. Matthews, 38 L. J., Ch. 510; L. R. 8 Eq. 277; 17 W. R. 841.

Blended Estates.]—Costs where two estates, those of the testator and the executor, are administered in the same suit. Culsha v. Cheese, 7 Hare, 246.

Where the estates of two testators have been blended so as to create confusion, the executor of an executor shall be excused costs, though it appeared he had assets enough to pay the plaintiff's debt. Sandys v. Watson, 2 Atk. 80.

The costs of proceedings to administer two separate estates which have been dealt with as one fund must be borne by the two estates in equal shares, notwithstanding the estates are unequal. Dean v. Morris, 5 W. R. 345.

On Proof of Debts or Claims—Since Judicature Acts and Orders.]—Ord. LV., r. 58, gives a creditor the costs of establishing his debt in chambers.

—— Before Judicature Acts.]—If a prior creditor, not a party in the cause, requires a reference to ascertain what is due to him, and an order on the receiver to pay him the amount when ascertained by the master, the costs of the motion and reference must in general be paid by the applicant. Wilmot v. Smith, 2 Hog. 149.]

Where creditors merely come into the office to prove their demands, they are not allowed the costs of the hearing afterwards, as it is a mere voluntary act their coming into court; otherwise where a question arises, and it is necessary to bring them to the final hearing. Madden v. O'Callaghan, 2 Moll. 522.

Extra costs occasioned by a mistake of the Master allowed to a creditor proving his debt against a lunatic's estate. Buckle, In re, 1 Russ. & M. 360.

A creditor who proves his demand under a decree for the administration of assets will not be heard upon the final hearing of the cause to ask for costs incurred by him in the office in reducing the plaintiff's demand, there being no special case made for that purpose by the report. Loughny v. Dillon, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 55.

The 49th Order of August, 1841, giving costs to creditors who prove their debts before the master, does not affect the costs to which the plaintiffs in the cause are entitled. Flintoff v. Haynes, 4 Hare, 309.

Claim by a creditor in an administration suit to prove the penalty of a bond, as damages for the non-performance of a contract. The master reported the claim. On exceptions, the court gave the creditor liberty to bring an action on the bond. The action was brought, and the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff (the creditor), with but nominal damages. The court, upon this result, refused the creditor the costs of making the claim before the master and the costs of the action, but gave him the costs of the exceptions. Morgan v. Elstob, 4 Hare, 477. And see King v. King, 12 W. R. 1095.

A person claiming to be a creditor under a decree to administer the testator's estate, having failed to establish his debt, after a long and expensive examination of witnesses, was ordered to pay the cost of the proceedings. Hatch v. Searles, 2 Sm. & G. 147; 23 L. J., Ch. 467; 2 W. R. 242.

Where a creditor takes in a claim under a decree in an administration suit, and fails in substantiating it, and large costs are incurred in opposing it, although an appeal is pending, the court will, on motion, order the creditor to pay such costs, including the costs of the motion. Colyer v. Colyer, 10 W. R. 748.

Where there is a deficiency of assets, the costs of creditors of proving their debts are not payable in the first instance, but are added to their debts and apportioned with them. Morshead v. Reynolds, 21 Beav. 638.

In an administration suit, a creditor's claim was admitted as a claim only by the master's report, to which the creditor did not except. Shortly afterwards the result of a suit tended to establish his debt. After more than a year the creditor petitioned to be admitted as a creditor against the estate:—Held, that he might be admitted without being charged with the cost, which had not been increased by the delay. Lee v. Flood, 2 Sm. & G. 250.

An alleged creditor carried in a claim, in an administration suit, for a debt alleged to be due from the testator. The claim having been disallowed, the claimant was ordered to pay the costs of the proceedings. Yeomans v. Raynes, 24 Beav. 127.

Proof for calls. Petitioners entitled to their costs. Wentworth v. Chevell, 5 W. R. 743.

Three guineas is a proper sum to allow to each successful claimant to a fund in court for the costs of establishing his claim. Waterton or Waterlow v. Burt, 39 L. J., Ch. 425; 18 W. R. 683.

Raising by Sale or Mortgage.]—"Costs to be paid out of estate;" no subpœna lies against defendant, but part of estate to be sold. Cannon v. Beely, Dick. 115; Beames on Costs (App.), vii.

Where costs are decreed to all parties out of a real estate, though one of them die before taxation, the costs are a lien upon the estate, and the heir-at-law of the deceased party is entitled; and there being nothing in the decree executory, there is no occasion to revive. Blower v. Morrets, Dick, 254; 3 Atk. 772.

Real estates were devised in trust to raise a legacy for a class of next of kin. The legacy was raised and carried to a separate account in the suit and afterwards costs were incurred in ascertaining the class in the master's office. Upon petition of the legatees, such costs were held to be a charge on the estate, and were ordered to be raised. Dugdale v. Dugdale, 12 Beav. 247; 19 L. J., Ch. 42; 14 Jur. 234.

In a suit to ascertain the construction of a will of real estate, and to carry the trusts thereof into execution, the court has power, if necessary, to direct a sale or mortgage of a sufficient part of the property for the purpose of raising the taxed costs of the suit, although some of the plaintiffs are infants. Mandeno v. Mandeno, Kay (App.), ii.

Sect. 55 of the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, gives power to direct a sale before the hearing in those cases only in which the court could, under the old practice, have given such direction at the hearing. Ib.

The court has no discretion to order a sale for payment of costs of an estate the subject of an administration suit, devised in undivided shares to several parties, if one of the persons interested is sui juris, does not consent to the sale, and offers to pay his own share of the costs. Lees v. Lees, 42 L. J., Ch. 319; L. R. 15 Eq. 151; 27 L. T. 743; 21 W. R. 215.

Interest on.]—The rule that interest on costs in an administration action ordered to be raised out of a fund is not recoverable except by express provision to that effect contained in the order is not affected by the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, General Order VII., nor by the Rules of Supreme Court, 1883, Ord. XLI., r. 3, and XLII., r. 16. Marsden's Estate, In re, Withington v. Neumann, 58 L. J., Ch. 260; 40 Ch. D. 475; 60 L. T. 696; 37 W. R. 525.

Scale.]—The costs of an administration suit are taxable on the higher or lower scale according as the actual amount of the estate to be administered is, at the time of the institution of the suit, above or below 1,000*l.* Judd v. Plumm, 29 Beav. 21; 30 L. J., Ch. 94; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 12; 9 W. R. 27.

Where an estate, which is being administered, is above 1,000*l.* at the time of the institution of the suit, but is subsequently reduced below that amount, the higher scale of fees is applicable. Reece's Estate, In re, Gould v. Gould, 35 L. J., Ch. 794; L. R. 2 Eq. 609; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 614; 14 L. T. 881; 14 W. R. 1008.

In administration actions, where the gross value of the estate to be administered amounts to 1,000*l.* at the time of the institution of the action, the higher scale of costs applies; and in estimating such value where the estate to be administered comprises an equity of redemption, the value of the equity of redemption only, and not of the entire mortgaged estate, is to be regarded. If, however, in such a case the equity of redemption has been valued at the time of the institution of the action at such a sum as, with the rest of the estate to be administered, amounts to 1,000*l.* or upwards, but it afterwards turns out, on a sale by the mortgagees, that the proceeds of such sale, together with the rest of the estate to be administered, amount to less than 1,000*l.*, the lower scale applies. Sanderson, In re, 7 Ch. D. 176; 38 L. T. 379; 26 W. R. 309.

A husband devised his wife's freehold to the wife for life, remainder in fee to the plaintiff. The wife received other considerable benefits under the will. She elected to assert her rights over the freehold, and sold it, upon which the plaintiff brought an action and recovered, under the equitable rule of compensation, the value of the freehold so sold. The action sought administration of the testator's estate and also of the estate of the wife, who had since died. The costs were taxed by the master on the lower scale. The plaintiff appealed to the judge:—Held, that this was not an action assigned to the chancery division, as it might have been brought anywhere, being substantially an action for the recovery of land or damages; that it was only accidentally an administration action; and that even if the plaintiff had obtained an administration decree, which he did not, as the estate did not exceed 1,000*l.* in value, the costs ought to be taxed on the lower scale. Rogers v. Jones, 7 Ch. D. 345; 38 L. T. 17.

Of Appeal.]—An appeal on the construction of a will, if unsuccessful, will in general be dismissed with costs. Clark v. Henry, L. R. 6 Ch. 885.

The rule that costs should follow the event of an appeal does not hold in an appeal properly brought in a suit which is necessary for the administration of the estate. In such a case, costs will be given out of the estate. Maxwell v. Maxwell, 39 L. J., Ch. 698; L. R. 4 H. L. 506; 23 L. T. 325; 19 W. R. 15.

—— Security for—Set-off.]—In an administration action P. was found to be heir-at-law. K., who claimed to be heir, appealed against this decision. P. then died, and K. revived against H., his executor and devisee in trust. H. applied for security for the costs of the appeal on the ground of K.'s proved insolvency. K. resisted on the ground that P. had been ordered to pay to him the costs of a previous appeal, which were of sufficient amount to be a security:—Held, that if P. had been the respondent this would have been a sufficient answer, but that H., being only a representative, was entitled to be indemnified, and that security must be given. Knight, In re, Knight v. Gardner, 38 Ch. D. 108; 58 L. T. 699—C. A.

b. Of Executor or Administrator.

In General.]—It is not an invariable rule, that an administrator should be allowed costs at all events. Wilkins v. Hunt, 2 Atk. 151.

Executors usually are to be exempt from paying costs, even though great difficulties and delay have been occasioned by them, for the court will overlook these circumstances if it can. Hall v. Hallett, 1 Cox, 141; 1 R. R. 3.

The only way in which executors can obtain complete exoneration is by passing their accounts in a court of equity, and the court is consequently anxious not to deter them from so doing by visiting them with costs. Low v. Carter, 1 Beav. 426.

It is a general rule that an executor is entitled to costs as far as goes to the taking the account. Newton v. Bennett, 1 Bro. C. C. 362.

Though an administrator is entitled to his costs up to the account, the subsequent costs will be reserved if his conduct be such as to induce the court to do so. Landen v. Green, Barnard, 389.

An executor ordered to pay a fund into court does not thereby lose his lien thereon for his costs. Blenkinsop v. Foster, 3 Y. & C. 207; 8 L. J., Ex. Eq. 8.

The administrator ad litem gets his costs, although no personal estate, but an executor volunteering to take out probate must abide by the personal estate, and cannot get costs out of the real in default of personal assets. Nash v. Dillon, 1 Moll. 236.

As to costs of executor where account formerly rendered is found to be correct. Hubbard v. Child, 14 Jur. 544.

—— As between Solicitor and Client.]—One of two executors and trustees commenced an action against the other for the administration of the estate, and a decree was made. There was no allegation of any misconduct on the part of the defendant. On the action coming on for further consideration, Kay, J., gave the plaintiff his costs as between solicitor and client, but gave the defendant costs only as between party and party, holding that two sets of costs as between solicitor and client ought not to be allowed to the trustees:—Held, on appeal, that a trustee is entitled to costs as between solicitor and client in an administration action, unless a case of misconduct is made out against him, and that the defendant must have costs as between solicitor and client. Love, In re, Hill v. Spurgeon, 54 L. J., Ch. 816; 29 Ch. D. 348; 52 L. T. 398; 33 W. R. 449—C. A.

Security for.]—Executors and administrators must give security for costs like other persons. Shaw v. Dempsey, Sau. & Sc. 628.

A plaintiff suing as executor, and residing out of the jurisdiction, may be compelled to give security for costs. Cathcart v. Hewson, Hayes, 173.

Where Plaintiff.]—Executor plaintiff cannot be distinguished in respect to costs from the party represented. Westly v. Williamson, 2 Moll. 458.

Bill by an administrator; defendant demurs, and the demurrer is allowed. Bill dismissed with costs, and so said to be the constant course in equity. Frazer v. Moore, Bunb. 63.

When letters of administration are revoked the administrator will not get his costs of an administration suit instituted by him with knowledge that another person claimed to administer. Houseman v. Houseman, 1 Ch. D. 535; 34 L. T. 633; 24 W. R. 592—C. A.

Executors who instituted an improper suit for the administration of the personal estate of a testator were refused any costs out of that estate. Richards v. Att.-Gen. Jamaica, 13 Jur. 197.

It would be the duty of the court to deprive any plaintiff of the costs of an improper administration suit, notwithstanding there being a direction in the will that costs are to be paid out of a particular fund. Semble. Young, In re, Young v. Dolman, 44 L. T. 499.

A., on death-bed, desires executor not to trouble B. for bond debt; executor puts bond in suit; bond ordered to be delivered up to be cancelled, and costs of law and equity paid by executor; but reversed as to costs. Wekett v. Raby, 2 Bro. P. C. 386.

A testator lent a son 100*l.*, for which the son gave him a promissory note. The testator by his will, executed some years before the loan, gave the son a legacy of 100*l.* The son having denied the debt, the executrix brought an action on the note, whereupon the son filed a bill, praying a declaration that the 100*l.* was not a debt, and that the note should be given up to be cancelled, and a declaration that he was entitled to his legacy. A verdict having been given for the amount of the 100*l.* due on the note, the court dismissed the bill, directing the son, the plaintiff, to pay the executrix so much of the costs of the suit as were occasioned by his denying that he was indebted to the testator. Woods v. Woods, 12 Jur. 994.

The plaintiff, as administrator of a deceased party, instituted a suit for discovery of assets, whereupon a will, which had been suppressed, was produced, and the administration revoked:—Held, that the costs claimed by the plaintiff were incurred by him, not merely in his private right as a party in another cause, but in his official character of administrator; and as the grant of administration to him, though voidable, was not void, and conferred on him during its continuance the right of a lawful administrator, he was entitled to be paid out of the personal estate of the deceased, the expenses properly incurred in the duties of the office:—Held, secondly that as the demurrer as to costs was overruled, the plaintiff was entitled to the costs of the hearing. Howlett v. Lambert, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 254.

An executor finds certain promissory notes in his testator's handwriting, and demands payment, but is met with a receipt in writing, signed by the testator. The notes are made the subject of bequest in the will to the maker, and the executor upon the advice of counsel, brings an action and files a bill:—Held, that he was entitled to retain the costs of such action and suit out of the estate. Foster v. Dawber, 6 W. R. 47.

The executors of a solicitor held entitled to the costs of a suit, instituted by them to raise the amount of certain judgments given for untaxed bills of costs, on account of the dealings between the conusor of these judgments and his devisee with the conusee; though more than one-sixth was struck off one of the bills on taxation, and though the defendant had offered to submit the matters in dispute to arbitration, and to pay whatever might be found due after the bills of costs had been taxed and all proper credits allowed. Humfrey v. Gurley, 1 Dr. & Wal. 183.

An executor was allowed, under the circumstances, the costs of a cross cause for administration of the estate instituted by him against his cestui que trust. Nelson v. Duncombe, 9 Beav. 211; 15 L. J., Ch. 296; 10 Jur. 399.

—— Continuing Proceedings instituted by Deceased.]—Executors, by reviving, rendered themselves liable to costs from the commencement, on dismissal of bill. Lyon v. M'Kenna, 2 Moll. 460.

An executor, after a bill filed by his testator had been dismissed with costs, revived the suit, alleging that he had intended to appeal. The executor was ordered to pay the costs of the suit. Horlock v. Priestley, 8 Sim. 621.

An order under the modern practice, allowing an executor to continue the proceedings in an action instituted by his testator, which order has been obtained by him after a judgment in favour of his testator, and after notice of an appeal against that judgment, is equivalent to the old order for revivor, and subjects him to the same liabilities. He becomes in effect a substantive party to the suit, and is personally liable for costs. Boynton v. Boynton, 4 App. Cas., 733; 41 L. T. 450; 27 W. R. 825—H. L.

Where Defendant.]—The rule, in relation to costs, to be paid by an executor defendant, is the same in equity as at law. Jefferies v. Harrison, 1 Atk. 468.

Where a debt of a testator is recovered against an executor at law, costs are given de bonis propriis; but in equity it is discretionary whether the executor shall pay costs or not. Uvedale v. Uvedale, 3 Atk. 119.

Bill for an account against an administrator; the Master reported assets sufficient in defendant's hands. Costs given generally against defendant, and not out of assets: as at law, when defendant pleads plene administravit, judgment is given de bonis propriis si non, &c. Davy v. Seys, Mos. 204. S. P., Prissick v. Vigures, Colles, P. C. 346.

Where an executor had spent more about the legatee than the amount of the legacy, the court thought it too hard to give costs against him, though there was a decree for the payment of the legacy. Davies v. Austen, 1 Ves. J. 247.

Where a plaintiff brings before the court, as a defendant, a party who had been named executor, but had refused to act, and states the fact upon his bill, such defendant is entitled, as against the plaintiff, to the costs of an answer in the nature of disclaimer. Weldon v. Weldon, 1 Dr. & Wal. 379.

An executor who ought to have been a co-plaintiff was made a defendant, and Lord Chancellor for some time doubted whether he was entitled to his costs, but at length ordered them to be paid to him. Blount v. Burrow, 3 Bro. C. C. 90.

Where an executor institutes a suit properly, and a co-executor refusing to join in it is made a defendant, this co-executor will not be allowed his costs. Collyer v. Dudley, Turn. & R. 421; 2 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 15.

Where the same solicitor acts for an executor and the other co-defendants, the estate will be charged, in respect of the executor's costs only, with that proportion of the sum due to the solicitor from his clients which the executor, as between himself and the co-defendants, ought to bear. Harmer v. Harris, 1 Russ. 155; 25 R. R. 20.

Proceedings were stayed as against the legal personal representative. A petition having been presented, professing to deal with funds standing to the general credit of the cause, he was served therewith, and with a notice not to appear:—Held, nevertheless, that he was entitled to his costs of appearance. Rowley v. Adams, 16 Beav. 312.

Plaintiff's demand in a suit for the administration of assets, being on foot of costs untaxed, but the bill delivered agreeably to the statute 2 Geo. 2, c. 23, the decree directed the costs to be taxed to ascertain what was due to the plaintiff; the administratrix being held not to be concluded, so as to establish as the debt due the full amount of the bills delivered. The general submission to pay the costs when taxed in such case, is out of assets, but a personal undertaking was required of her to pay the expenses of taxation, if less than a sixth was reduced. Hartford v. Humphreys, 1 Moll. 142.

A suit was instituted by a next friend, on behalf of infants interested in the administration of a testator's estate, for the purpose of setting aside an agreement which had been entered into by the executors and trustees for the disposal of the testator's business, and the bill contained charges of gross misconduct against T., one of the trustees and executors. T. defended the suit, and the bill was dismissed with costs, the court being of opinion that the agreement was for the benefit of the estate, and that the charges against T. were unfounded. The next friend being insolvent, T. applied in a suit for the administration of the testator's estate to be allowed his costs out of the estate, but they were refused, on the ground that he had not previously obtained leave to defend. But, on appeal, the decision was reversed and the costs were allowed. Walters v. Woodbridge, 47 L. J., Ch. 516; 7 Ch. D. 504; 38 L. T. 83; 26 W. R. 469—C. A.

A bill by residuary legatees prayed an account against the defendants, the executors, on the footing of wilful neglect and default, but made no case of misconduct against them, except that they had improperly defended an action in which they had failed, and the costs of which they claimed to retain out of the estate. The court, at the hearing, although of opinion that the action ought not to have been defended, gave the defendants their costs of the depositions which had been taken relative to that subject, on the ground that, having no connection with a case of wilful neglect and default, it was not a proper matter to be put in issue at that stage of the suit. Smith v. Chambers, 2 Ph. 221; 16 L. J., Ch. 291; 11 Jur. 359.

Executors not allowed the costs of an action which had been successfully brought against them by a surgeon for medicine and medical attendance furnished to the testator. Chambers v. Smith, 2 Coll. C. C. 742.

An action was brought against the executor and trustee of a will by the beneficiaries, in which they alleged he had committed certain breaches of trust, and claiming the administration of the estate, the appointment of a new trustee, and of a receiver. At the trial an order was made by consent by which certain inquiries, consisting of the common administration inquiries and others with reference to the alleged breaches of trust, were referred to an official referee. The referee reported altogether in favour of the defendant, and the cause came on for further consideration:—Held, that the plaintiff must pay all the costs of the action up to and including the hearing on further consideration, except such costs as would have been incurred in obtaining a simple administration judgment. Brook, In re, Sykes v. Brook, 50 L. J., Ch. 744; 45 L. T. 172; 29 W. R. 821.

T. K. having in 1846 died intestate, letters of administration were, upon the assumption that he had left no next of kin, granted to A. B., the solicitor of the treasury, on behalf of the Crown. In 1853 these letters were revoked, and administration was thereupon granted to M. K., who had been pronounced to be one of the next of kin of T. K. On claim by M. K. against A. B. for the payment to her of the proceeds of the estate and effects received by A. B.:—Held, that A. B. was not entitled to retain the costs occasioned in opposing M. K.'s title to the property. Kane v. Reynolds, 23 L. J., Ch. 638; 18 Jur. 1010; 2 Eq. R. 672; 2 W. R. 541.

An order to tax the costs of an executor in a suit, including any costs, charges and expenses properly incurred by him in the execution of the trusts of the will, does not include the costs of his defence to other suits instituted against him as executor. Payne v. Little, 27 Beav. 83.

Under an order in an administration suit to tax the costs of executors, including any costs, charges and expenses properly incurred by them as executors not being costs in the cause, their costs of litigation, though unsuccessful, in other suits in their fiduciary character, may be allowed; and the omission of any directions in those other suits respecting the executors' costs, is not equivalent to a refusal of them out of a testator's estate. Graham v. Wickham, 2 De G. J. & S. 497; 34 L. J., Ch. 220; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 168; 12 L. T. 39; 13 W. R. 396.

An order on further consideration having been made in an administration suit containing the usual direction for taking and paying costs, charges and expenses, properly incurred, of the executors, the executors claimed, under the head of costs, charges and expenses, the costs incurred by them since the decree in the administration suit, in unsuccessfully defending a suit in which a decree had been made against them without saying anything as to their costs. A motion for a direction to the Master to review his certificate disallowing these costs having been refused, on the ground that they had been adjudicated upon in the suit in which they had been incurred:—Held, on appeal, that the motion ought not to have been disposed of on that ground, but that the question whether the costs were costs, charges, or expenses properly incurred ought to have been entered into. Ib.

After an ordinary decree in a creditors' suit had been made at the Rolls against executor as, bill was filed, in the court of one of the vice-chancellors, against the executors, and against a former partner of their testator, to establish a claim arising out of a misrepresentation made by the testator and his co-partner, in respect of which the plaintiff had already recovered at law against the surviving partner. The executors, without applying for directions in the administration suit, defended this new suit, and a decree for an account, without costs, was ultimately made against their testator's estate:—Held, that having regard to the previous proceedings at law, the executors ought not to be allowed the costs of defending the second suit down to the hearing. Ib.

Held, also, it appearing that a claim had been carried in, in the first suit, by the plaintiff in the second suit, but adjourned until after the decision in the second suit, that they ought to be allowed their costs of the second suit subsequent to the decree. Ib.

Held, that the question, whether they were to be allowed their costs, was not decided by the order in the second suit. Ib.

Held, that such costs might be taxed under a decree in the creditors' suit, directing taxation of costs, and costs, charges and expenses properly incurred. Ib.

Where an administration suit is pending, and another suit is instituted against the executors of the testator in the former suit, it is the practice, if they are entitled to their costs of the latter suit, to direct in that, that they shall be allowed to prove in the administration suit for such costs, as part of their discharge. S. C., 11 L. T. 438.

A defendant, having died after appearance but before answer, was struck out of the bill with costs by side bar rule, and his administrator was made a party by amendment:—Held, the administrator was entitled to the costs incurred by the deceased defendant. Short v. Carroll, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 468.

Priority.]—In a creditors' suit for the administration of assets, the executor of the deceased is entitled to his costs, although the estate prove insufficient to pay the debts; the rule of costs according to priorities does not apply to such a case. Harwood v. Bland, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 11. But see Adair v. Shaw, 1 Sch. & Lef. 280.

Notwithstanding an order on further direction in a creditors' suit that the costs of all parties should be taxed as between solicitor and client, and paid out of a fund in court—the fund proving insufficient to pay all the costs—the court ordered the costs of the executors to be paid in the first.

place. Gaunt v. Taylor, 2 Hare, 413. Contra, Swale v. Milner, 6 Sim. 572.

When the fund is deficient, the executors' costs of an administration suit are paid thereout in priority of those of the other parties. Tanner v. Dancey, 9 Beav. 339.

Where, upon a bill filed by a simple contract creditor, the only specialty creditor is restrained by injunction from proceeding in his action at law, and it turns out, upon the Master's report, that the assets are insufficient to pay the specialty creditors, the executor will have his costs out of the assets. Young v. Everest, 1 Russ. & M. 426.

Where, in a creditors' suit, the assets prove insufficient for the payment of the costs of all parties, the executors are entitled to be paid in priority, notwithstanding they have voluntarily confessed judgments, and thus denuded themselves of the assets. Sanderson v. Stoddart, 32 Beav. 155; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1216; 7 L. T. 662; 11 W. R. 275.

In a suit by a mortgage creditor for administration, where the mortgaged estate had been sold by consent of the plaintiff and the debts paid, and the remaining assets were insufficient to pay the costs:—Held, that the executors were entitled to their costs, charges and expenses in priority to the plaintiff's costs of sale. Spensley, In re, Spensley v. Harrison, 42 L. J., Ch. 21; L. R. 15 Eq. 16; 27 L. T. 600; 21 W. R. 95.

An equitable mortgagee by deposit of title deeds filed a bill, praying for an account and payment of what was due upon his security; for a sale of the premises in default of payment, and payment out of the proceeds of sale; and for payment of any balance which might remain due out of the general assets of the mortgagor; and that, so far as was necessary for this purpose, the estate of the mortgagor might be administered. On the decree a sale was directed, but no bidding was made, and the mortgagee offered himself to buy the premises if he was allowed to retain his principal, interest and costs, the surplus to be paid by him into court. The estate was insolvent, and a question having arisen between the mortgagee and the administrator of the mortgagor as to whether the costs of the former as mortgagee were to be paid in priority to the costs of the latter, Wood, V.-C., decided (1 John. & H. 126; 29 L. J., Ch. 548; 2 L. T. 565; 8 W. R. 302) that the mortgagee was entitled to the priority he claimed. The administrator having appealed, the court made an order (but by the consent of the parties) that the sale to the mortgagee should be confirmed, that he should be allowed to deduct from the purchase-money the principal and interest due to him on his mortgage, and that the balance of the purchase-money after these deductions should be paid into court, but without prejudice to any question as to the costs of the parties. Tuckley v. Thompson, 3 L. T. 257.

In a legatees' suit, where the assets prove insufficient for the payment of debts, the plaintiff, and the other parties, with the exception of the legal personal representative, are entitled to the costs of suit as between party and party only, and the plaintiff is not entitled to any priority in respect thereof. But the plaintiff is entitled to the costs, as between solicitor and client, of getting in and realising the estate, and in priority to all other parties, except the legal personal representative. Wettenhall v. Davis or Dennis, 33 Beav. 285; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1216; 9 L. T. 361; 12 W. R. 66.

A married woman being entitled to a share of a residue for her life, with remainder to her children who were infants, a bill was filed by her and her husband, and their children, by their father as their next friend, against the executor and the residuary legatees for the administration and distribution of the testator's estate. When the executor put in his answer, a balance was due from him, and he paid it into court. Afterwards he paid the whole of the testator's debts remaining unsatisfied, some of them before and the rest after the usual decree, whereby a balance greater than the fund in court became due to him, and the Master so found. After the report had been absolutely confirmed the husband died, and the widow having declined to take any steps towards the further prosecution of the suit, the executor filed a supplemental bill, praying to have the fund in court, exempt from all costs, paid to him in part of the balance found due by the Master. The court ordered the executor's costs of both suits, as between solicitor and client, to be first paid out of the fund; then the costs of the defendants, the co-residuary legatees, of both suits; and lastly, the costs of the widow and children, of the supplementary suit, but not of the original suit. Jackson v. Woolley, 12 Sim. 12; 10 L. J., Ch. 197.

A husband, whose wife was the executrix and residuary legatee of her father, opened an account at his banker's in the name of his wife as such executrix. He afterwards closed his separate account, but moneys belonging to him were from time to time paid into the wife's account, and the wife drew against it cheques for the payment of the husband's debts and of household expenses. The account remained for six years, when the husband died. The wife died shortly afterwards:—Held, that as the account was a mere agency account, and the balance belonged to the husband's estate, the representative of the husband and the wife must have his costs of two suits for administering their respective estates, in priority to the costs of the other parties, for the right of priority rested upon principle, and was not within the discretion of the judge. Lloyd v. Pughe, Evans v. Pughe, 42 L. J., Ch. 282; L. R. 8 Ch. 88; 28 L. T. 250; 21 W. R. 346.

Where a joint creditor takes the benefit of a decree for administering the estate of the insolvent partner, and obtains an order for payment of his debt and costs, the executors' costs are prior charges, but where the executors have denied assets, their costs are postponed to the debt and costs of the joint creditor. Lodge v. Pritchard, 4 Giff. 294; 11 W. R. 532.

Retainer of Fund against Beneficiary for.]—Where a legatee is admittedly one entitled to a certain fund under a will, but claims more than his title to is admitted, and threatens a suit for payment, the executors are entitled to retain the fund to which the legatee's title is admitted to meet the costs of the suit. Ridge v. Newton, 2 Dr. & War. 239; 1 Con. & L. 381; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 389.

An estate was represented to a legatee by the personal representatives as barely sufficient to pay the debts, but the accounts were not shewn. A bill was filed, and afterwards an offer was made to produce the accounts, which was declined; ultimately a small surplus was ascertained to exist, and to be due from the representatives, but which was totally insufficient to pay the legacies, which were of a very considerable amount. The court disapproved of the litigation, and gave the plaintiff no costs, but directed the representatives to retain their balance in discharge of their costs. Ottley v. Gilby, 8 Beav. 602; 14 L. J., Ch. 177.

Misconduct of Executor or Administrator.]—It is a general rule that an executor is entitled to costs as far as goes to the taking the account; but where an executor, by his delay, had caused all the expenses, except the taking the first account, the court said they could not separate the expenses, and therefore gave him no costs. Newton v. Bennett, 1 Bro. C. C. 362.

Executors guilty of a breach of trust, ordered to pay costs. Order confirmed on appeal, with a direction that the costs having been taxed ex parte, the court should send them back to the Master to be retaxed. Bretland v. Cope, Colles, P. C. 97.

An executor, guilty of misapplying trust funds:—Held, liable to pay the costs as far as related to the transaction in question. Pocock v. Redington, 5 Ves. 800.

Where executors make an unfair appraisement, and otherwise misbehave themselves in their trust, they shall be liable to costs. Sheppard v. Smith, 2 Bro. P. C. 372.

Where an answer of an executrix was falsified by proof, and she appeared to have acted fraudulently, she was made to pay costs. Vaughan v. Thurston, Colles, P. C. 175.

If an executor commit a fraud, he will not be allowed costs out of the estate, though the testator has directed that his executors, for any expenses they might be put to, should be allowed their costs out of his estate. Hide v. Haywood, 2 Atk. 126.

An executor filed a bill to prove the will against the heir, and to have a defective surrender supplied, charging that the estate was otherwise insufficient. The heir, by a cross bill, insisted that there was more than sufficient to pay all the debts, exclusive of the copyhold not surrendered, whereupon the original bill was dismissed with costs against the executor as to that point, because the executor confessed the matter in a second answer to the cross bill, but had suppressed it in the first answer, and charged the contrary in the original bill. Malabar v. Malabar, Ca. t. Talb. 79.

In taking the account of an intestate's estate the plaintiff, in consequence of the evasive and fraudulent conduct of the administratrix, had been under the necessity of employing an accountant. Before the hearing of further directions, the administratrix was ordered to pay the costs of employing the accountant. Toner v. Thompson, 7 Sim. 145.

Administration is taken out in 1771. Distribution to a certain extent is made, but a large sum is retained on fraudulent pretences. No effectual stir is made against administration till 1802, and that is protracted by admonition in court below till 1810:—Held, notwithstanding lapse, that administrator should pay interest with annual rests for whole period, on sum undistributed, with costs incurred since original decree. Stacpoole v. Stacpoole, 4 Dow, 209.

Costs were given personally against an executor up to the decree, when the defence was on a wrong footing, and the answer evasive and contradictory. Reech v. Kennegal, 1 Ves. Sen. 126.

So where an executor has obtained a release of a legacy without any consideration. Horsley v. Chaloner, 2 Ves. Sen. 84.

W., by will, in 1849, directed his executors and devisees in trust to sell his real and personal estate, and to pay legacies to his nephews and nieces in classes, and to distribute the residue also among his nephews and nieces. They were empowered to postpone the sale and conversion for five years, but ordered to pay the income to the persons entitled in the meantime. For five years before the bill was filed they kept the estate in their hands, without suggesting any difficulties as to the ascertainment of the classes; kept no accounts; paid only a small part of the legacies, and to the residuary legatees neither principal nor interest; gave no information; and when applied to for accounts, sent no reply. Although illiterate men, and the estate large, they were ordered to pay the costs of the suit for administration, with the exception of costs of proving the pedigree. Wroe v. Seed, 4 Giff. 425; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1122; 9 L. T. 254.

Where a testatrix by her will gave all her property to executors, upon trust to sell and convert the same, and after payment of debts and expenses to pay and divide the trust moneys amongst certain legatees, and the executors had paid some of the legatees part of their legacies, but had for seven years never paid anything to the other legatees, who had applied to them for payment, or for part payment, out of the moneys received by the executors, the court decreed that the executors were chargeable with the costs of the suit, they consenting to pay interest on the moneys improperly remaining in their hands, and also to strike off a considerable part of their solicitor's bill of costs. Tickner v. Smith, 3 Sm. & G. 42; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 990; 3 W. R. 224.

Semble, in an administration suit by legatees against executors, alleging that the legacies ought long since to have been paid, and seeking to charge the defendant with the costs, the plaintiffs may adduce evidence of wilful default, though not specifically charged by the bill. Ib.

A testator, by his will, made A. and B. his executors. B. died, and a suit was instituted to administer his estate. After decree and report made in this suit, but before B.'s assets had been distributed, a residuary legatee of the original testator filed a bill against A. and the personal representative of B., seeking to fix A. and the estate of B. with liability in respect of balances improperly retained by A. and B. as executors:—Held, that notwithstanding the pendency of the former suit, a decree in the latter suit directing accounts as against A. and B.'s personal representative, was properly made. Birks v. Micklethwait, 34 L. J., Ch. 362; 13 L. T. 31—L. C. Reversing 33 Beav. 409.

After decree in a creditors' suit against the executors of a deceased testator, a bill was filed by a residuary legatee seeking to charge the executors in respect of balances improperly retained, and under a decree made in the latter suit (adopting the accounts in the creditors' suit, but giving leave to surcharge and falsify) large balances were found due from the executors:—Held, that the executors ought not, even upon the condition of making good the balances, to be allowed any costs in the latter suit. Ib.

A testator, after some small bequests, appointed his daughter residuary legatee, and appointed her executrix, and another person executor of his will. Part of the estate consisted of leaseholds. The executor was guilty of great misconduct and obstruction, which occasioned much expense to the executrix and delay in the administration of the estate. His solicitors took out an administration summons on behalf of an assignee of a pecuniary legacy, whose name they had refused to give to the executrix, that she might satisfy his claim. The executor commenced an action for the administration of the estate:—Held, that notwithstanding the executor's misconduct, he was entitled to obtain an indemnity in respect of the leaseholds, and, therefore, to such costs of the action as would have been occasioned by a simple administration summons, but that he must pay all costs of the legatee's administration summons, including the costs of the affidavits used there and in the action, and that he must be disallowed all other costs, charges and expenses incurred since a certain date, when he declined to entertain a reasonable scheme for the administration of the estate submitted to him by the executrix, but that, subject as aforesaid, he should be allowed his costs, charges and expenses properly incurred before the commencement of the action. Bosworth, In re, Howard v. Easton, 45 L. T. 136; 29 W. R. 885.

If a suit would have been proper, and the executor a necessary party, though the executor had misconducted himself, he ought not to pay all the costs of such suit, though in the course of the suit it appears that he has misconducted himself; but if the misconduct of the executor was the sole occasion of the suit, he ought then to pay costs. Semble. Tebbs v. Carpenter, 1 Madd. 290, 308; 16 R. R. 224.

In this case his honour allowed executors their costs up to the time of the decree, but charged them with the costs of subsequent inquiries, which were solely occasioned by their breach of trust. Ib.

Executors, against whom an inquiry has been directed as to what part of the testator's assets might, but for their wilful default, have been got in, and who have been guilty of some act of negligence, may, nevertheless, be entitled to their costs of an administration suit brought against them. Bailey v. Gould, 4 Y. & C. 221; 9 L. J., Ex. Eq. 43.

Costs of an administration suit given to an executor, though charged with the consequences of an improper investment. Knott v. Cottee, 16 Beav. 77; 18 Jur. 752.

Executors having retained in their hands large balances arising from the estate without investing them, an inquiry was directed as to the propriety of their conduct, and they were charged with interest at 4*l.* per cent. upon a portion of such balances:—Held, that in pursuance of the general principle, the executors could not be allowed the costs occasioned by the inquiry. Colyer v. Colyer, 32 L. J., Ch. 101; 7 L. T. 522; 11 W. R. 79.

Where Interest given against.]—Trustees or executors charged with interest do not therefore lose their costs. Woodhead v. Marriott, C. P. Cooper, 62.

When the court gives interest against executors as a remedy for a breach of trust, the costs follow of course. Seers v. Hind, 1 Ves. J. 294. S. P., Rocke v. Hart, 11 Ves. 62; Mosley v. Ward, id. 583.

The Master of the Rolls in giving costs against executors, went into the circumstances as a ground for it, observing that he did so, seeing the rule laid down in so general a manner in Seers v. Hind (1 Ves. J. 294), to which he was not quite prepared to accede, as there might be many cases in which executors must pay interest which would not be cases for costs. Ashburnham v. Thompson, 13 Ves. 404.

An executor was charged with interest, and with the costs of the inquiries and accounts relating to the breach of trust; but on the cause coming on for further directions, he was allowed such costs of the subsequent proceedings as were consequential on those of which the costs were allowed him by the former decree, and which arose principally by a necessary investigation as to the rule by which they were to be charged. Raphael v. Boehm, 13 Ves. 590; 8 R. R. 95.

Executor directed to lay out testator's personalty in the funds, &c., unnecessarily selling out stock, keeping large balances in his hands, and resisting payment of debts by a false pretence of outstanding demands charged with 5 per cent. interest and costs; but the court refused to make rests in the account. Crackelt v. Bethune, 1 Jac. & Walk. 586; 21 R. R. 241.

Executor, though in the result made answerable for default, by reason of loss incurred through neglect, or chargeable with interest for retaining money in his hands, yet, if there is nothing beyond such negligence or retention of money, is still entitled to the costs of the suit. Travers v. Townsend, 1 Moll. 496.

An executor retaining balances, and therefore charged with interest, gets his costs notwithstanding if his accounts are not falsified. Flanagan v. Nolan, 1 Moll. 84.

An executor or trustee, who retains a balance in his hands, and against whom a suit is instituted, will not be charged with the costs of the suit, except under circumstances of considerable misconduct. Where a suit is instituted with unnecessary haste against an executor or trustee, who has not greatly misconducted himself, he will be allowed his costs. Bennett v. Athins, 1 Y. & C. 247; 4 L. J., Ex. Eq. 35.

The court will allow an administrator his general costs of an administration action brought against him by a next of kin of the intestate, even where the greater part of his claim for expenses of realisation has been disallowed, provided that such claim was not improper, dishonest, or monstrous. Nor will the administrator under such circumstances be ordered to pay interest on the balance of the estate in his hands retained to meet such claim. Jones, In re, Christmas v. Jones, 66 L. J., Ch. 439; [1897] 2 Ch. 190; 76 L. T. 454; 45 W. R. 598.

Neglect of Duty.]—Mere neglect of duty in an executor, as, for instance, the omission to invest balances pursuant to a direction in the will, if unaccompanied by fraud, is not such misconduct as to disentitle him to the general costs of a suit for the administration of the estate, although it may subject him to the costs of so much of the suit as was occasioned by such neglect. Heighington v. Grant, 1 Ph. 600; 10 Jur. 21. Affirming 11 L. J., Ch. 171. And see S. C., 10 L. J., Ch. 12; 9 L. J., Ch. 142.

The estate of a testator who died in 1832 was distributed in 1847, at the written request of the persons beneficially entitled. Another part of the estate, which fell in, in 1852, was distributed also at the request, but not in writing, of the beneficiaries, and in 1871 the acting trustee died. No accounts or vouchers were forthcoming from the trustees. A bill filed in 1872 by one of the beneficiaries and her husband against the surviving trustee, and the representative of the deceased trustee, for administration, was dismissed; but owing to the negligence of the trustees in not keeping accounts and vouchers, without costs. Payne v. Evens, L. R. 18 Eq. 356.

Neglect or Refusal to Render Accounts.]—The mere fact that an executor neglected to render accounts when asked, is not of itself sufficient to make him liable to the costs of a suit for administering the estate. White v. Jackson, 15 Beav. 191.

Where executor had refused an account, but on bill filed he gave one in his answer, and plaintiff took a decree for account, and it turned out on Master's report that account was correct, court gave plaintiff costs up to decree, and defendant those of subsequent proceedings. Anon., 4 Madd. 273.

Neglect or delay in furnishing accounts, or even refusal to furnish accounts, will not, in every case, be sufficient to induce the court to order a trustee or executor to pay the costs of an administration suit; but where the neglect, delay or refusal is accompanied by improper dealing with the trust fund, he will be ordered to pay the costs except in so far as they are clearly not occasioned by his misconduct. Heugh v. Scard, 33 L. T. 658; 24 W. R. 51.

S., a solicitor, was executor of the will of the testator in the cause, who left his residuary estate to be divided between H. and G. H., G. H. being trustee of H.'s share. S. paid 50*l.* to G. H. on account of his share, but refused or neglected to furnish accounts, although repeatedly requested to do so, on the plea that he had mislaid them. The suit was instituted, but on S. furnishing an account, the plaintiff agreed to compromise, but his offers were refused, and an order was obtained against S. to pay the fund into court. S. had also dealt improperly with the fund:—Held, that he was liable for the costs of the suit, except in so far as they were not incurred through his misconduct. Ib.

An executor and trustee who had acted, but not proved, refused, and insisted that he was not bound to account, and he placed every impediment in the plaintiff's way. Having failed in his contention, the court, on making a decree for an account, directed him to pay the costs of suit to the hearing. Boynton v. Richardson, 31 Beav. 340.

An executor having neglected to render any accounts, and vexatiously obstructed the taking of them in a suit, the court on an administration summons refused to allow him any costs. King, In re, Gilbert v. Lee, 34 Beav. 574; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 899; 12 L. T. 818; 13 W. R. 1012.

Executors who had neglected to produce their accounts, deprived of their costs of suit up to the hearing. Gresham v. Price, 35 Beav. 47.

To an administration suit, the executors put in their answer that the suit was vexatious, and that nothing was due, and resisted the demand for an account; but an account being decreed, they claimed, first 400*l.*, and subsequently 60*l.*; but the chief clerk having certified that 220*l.* was due from them, the court ordered them to pay the costs of the suit. Eglin v. Sanderson, 3 Giff. 434; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 329; 6 L. T. 151.

When trustees refused information and an account of the property to the plaintiffs, who had an interest in the estate, and other proceedings had subsequently been taken whereby the costs of the suit were greatly increased, the trustees were directed to pay the costs of the suit up to the hearing, as if it had been an ordinary administration suit, and as to the rest of the costs each party to bear his own. Talbot v. Marshfield, L. R. 3 Ch. 622; 19 L. T. 223.

Trustees and executors, when called upon to render an account, offered to allow the plaintiffs, who were residuary legatees, or an accountant, or any other person named by the plaintiffs, to inspect the accounts. Notwithstanding this offer, the acting executor and trustee refused to allow the plaintiff's solicitor to interfere with the accounts, alleging that he was inquiring, not in the plaintiff's interest, but in his own, he having advanced money to the plaintiffs. The executors and trustees were ordered to pay the costs of the suit up to the hearing. Kemp v. Burn, 4 Giff. 348; 1 N. R. 257; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 372; 7 L. T. 666; 11 W. R. 278.

When executors and trustees had, prior to an administration action, distributed three-fourths of the residuary property, but had been irregular in paying the income of the other one-fourth (which was held by them in trust for a person during her life, and afterwards for her children), and had persistently neglected to furnish accounts in respect of this share, on an administration action being brought by the persons entitled to the one-fourth share:—Held that the costs of the action, including those of the hearing, but excepting those of the accounts and inquiries, must be paid by the trustees personally, and that the remainder of the costs must in the first instance be thrown on the whole of the residuary property, the proportion of them which would have been payable out of the three-fourths, if such parts had not been distributed, being borne by the trustees personally, and the remainder being paid out of the one-fourth share actually administered in the action. Bell, In re, Bath v. Bell, 39 L. T. 422.

Under the Judicature Act if an administration action be rendered necessary solely by the neglect of a trustee to furnish accounts, the decree should be so framed as to enable the court to throw the whole costs of the action on the party in default. Hayter, In re, Wallett, In re, Hayter v. Wells, 32 W. R. 26.

Items disallowed in taking Account.]—A residuary legatee objected to the account rendered by the executors, and on their refusing to pay, in discharge of all her claims, a sum larger than the amount thereby shewn to be due to her, filed a bill against them for administration. In the suit they were disallowed certain items of disbursement, and in consequence the balance found due from them was larger than the amount which the plaintiff had offered to accept:—Held, that the executors ought not to be ordered to pay the costs of the suit, which was consequent on their mistake, but that they were entitled to retain their costs out of the fund in the usual way. Smith v. Cremer, 24 W. R. 51.

A residuary legatee objected to certain items in accounts furnished by the executors, amounting in all to about 100*l.*, and issued a writ for an account specially indorsed under Judicature Act, Ord. III. r. 8, and payment of the balance. An account was taken under Ord. XV. r. 1, without any pleadings being delivered, and the chief clerk disallowed all the items objected to, and made his certificate accordingly:—Held, that the executors must pay the costs of the action. Radclyffe, In re, Pearce v. Radclyffe, 50 L. J., Ch. 317; 44 L. T. 96; 29 W. R. 420.

Unreasonable Conduct.]—Executor refusing to act on will without the sanction of the court, ordered to pay costs when construction plain. Harvey v. Harvey, 3 Jur. 919.

A trustee refusing to pay a legacy without the direction of the court, in a case which admits of no doubt, was refused his costs, but was not made to pay the costs of the suit, because he might have acted from ignorance, and not from any improper motive. Knight v. Martin, 1 Russ. & M. 70; Tam. 237.

A party was unable to obtain payment of his legacy and his portion of the residue without suit. The case being clear, and the remaining portion of the residue having been paid by the executor, he was charged with costs. Curtis v. Robinson, 8 Beav. 242.

Plaintiff, a trustee and executor under a will, brought an action for the administration of a small estate, on the ground that it was in the interest of all parties, as there were doubts as to the true construction of the will, and difficulties and disagreements with regard to the interpretation of the trusts, and that he needed the protection of the court. The defendants, the beneficiaries (who, after the commencement of the action, had suggested that the quickest and least expensive mode would be to state a special case for the opinion of the court), denied that it was in the interest of all parties that the estate should be administered under the direction of the court, and contended that the question of construction was in no respect doubtful. They submitted that the action should be dismissed, as being unnecessary, harassing, and destructive of the trust property:—Held, that the action must be dismissed with costs to be paid by the trustee personally, as the court will not allow itself to be made an instrument or mere agent of oppression, nor interfere where the only result must be to despoil of their property persons unable to protect themselves, and in this case there was no ground whatever on which the court could be asked to interfere except the question of construction of the will, and that was not in doubt. Cubburn, In re, Gage v. Rutland, 46 L. T. 848.

Executors of trustees decreed to pay the costs of a suit rendered necessary by their having refused to pay over the trust fund on reasonable evidence of a person's death; but, inasmuch as the trustees had been guilty of a breach of trust in relation to the fund, the costs were decreed to be paid out of the assets of the trustees, and not personally by the executors. Lyse v. Kingdon, 1 Coll. C. C. 184; 8 Jur. 418.

An executor, who, as alleged, occasioned the suit by not admitting the sufficiency of the evidence of residuary legatees in support of their title:—Held, not entitled to retain a portion of the assets paid over to his solicitors to defray the costs of defence. Willets v. Jones, 5 Jur. 623.

Legacy assigned upon certain trusts. Trustee, notwithstanding notice of former decree for administration of assets, files bill for payment of legacy. Court refused to assign legacy to him, he having acted improvidently, or to give him costs; and executors refused costs, because they should have moved to stay proceedings, instead of answering trustees' bill. Packwood v. Maddison, 1 Sim. & S. 232; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 107.

On motion, the executor not objecting, if the record is in a condition to obtain a decree, the order of reference may be made to take the account. It is cheap and convenient, and executor refusing to consent to have his account taken in this way, has his costs refused to him. Black v. Creighton, 2 Moll. 555.

The testator left the bulk of his property (all personal) to his wife, after a few pecuniary legacies. The testator left a large contract for wheat incomplete at his death, and was the personal representative of his deceased father's and brother's estates, in respect of which there were still unsettled claims. The executors paid the small legacies; but before paying over anything to the widow, required, as an indemnity, to have a large portion of the residue impounded for twenty years. The widow at first agreed, but afterwards withdrew her consent, and filed this bill for administration, and payment over. No additional claims were established either in respect of the wheat or the estates which the testator represented or otherwise:—Held, that though the period of twenty years was too long to ask to have the indemnity fund impounded, yet that the executors, the defendants, were entitled to their costs. Cumbray v. Draper, 16 Jur. 735.

Credits taken in error in Accounts.]—Executor's account surcharged by the amount of a credit taken for proportion of annuity payable by testator to executor for life of testator, which was not apportionable, being honest mistake, is not a ground to disentitle him to costs. A disallowance of credit honestly claimed, though mistaken by the executor, is not a disaffirmance or falsification of the account rendered; it is not like receipts found to have been had, which the executor did not disclose; nor payments alleged, which the executor did not make. Executors' costs are the first charge on the personal assets; and then plaintiff's costs in the cause on a bill to administer, &c. When the suit has been fairly instituted, the old rule that plaintiff's costs are to abide his priority, does not apply. Bennett v. Going, 1 Moll. 529.

Admission of Assets.]—The executor having, by admitting assets, prevented the account being taken at the proper time, was ordered to pay the costs of the suit, being precluded thereafter from alleging or relying on a deficiency to the prejudice of the plaintiff. Macarthy v. Macarthy, 1 Moll. 186.

An executor, in a suit for the arrears of an annuity under a will, disputing the title of the plaintiff to the annuity as a question of law, but admitting assets sufficient to pay funeral and testamentary expenses and legacies, may be decreed to pay the costs of the suit in addition to the arrears, and is not entitled to a decree for an account of the assets prior to any decree being made for costs. Roch v. Callen, 6 Hare, 531; 17 L. J., Ch. 144; 12 Jur. 112.

Upon motion, after an administration decree, to restrain a creditor from prosecuting an action, the administrator admitting assets, but disputing the debt, the costs of the action, down to notice of the decree, together with the costs of the motion, were ordered to be paid by the administrator immediately upon the creditor establishing his debt. King v. King, 34 Beav. 10; 34 L. J., Ch. 195; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 762; 10 L. T. 882; 12 W. R. 1095.

Of unfounded Claims by.]—Bill for a residue. Defendant, the executor, by his answer, stated declarations of the testatrix that the other relations should have no more than their express legacies, and hoped to prove that the surplus was intended for the executor. He was made to pay costs for thus insisting on the surplus. Bayly v. Powell, Pre. Ch. 92; 2 Vern. 361.

Where the administratrix of a deceased person claimed a portion of the estate beneficially, and a suit was instituted to recover that portion from her, in which the plaintiffs were successful:—Held, that the administratrix must bear the costs of the suit. Bruin v. Knott, 12 Jur. 616.

In consequence of a groundless claim of an administratrix to free-bench out of her intestate's copyhold estate, she is made defendant in a suit. Under an order of reference to take an account of the costs and expenses incurred by her solicitor in his character of solicitor to her as personal representative of her intestate, the Master must allow the costs of that suit, and has no authority to disallow them because he may think that the suit was occasioned by the improper claims of the administratrix herself. Watkins v. Maule, 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 82.

Where executor sues in the joint character of creditor and legatee, he is liable to pay additional costs if any caused by claim as a creditor unsupported. Sharples v. Sharples, M'Clel. 506; 13 Price, 745.

Plaintiff being himself an executor, filing bill as creditor and legatee for an account of the estate of testator, is entitled, having obtained a decree, to costs out of fund in court, although he had obtained no more information than had been offered to him. Ib.

Executor's Cross-examination of Creditor.]—A., being entitled to a life interest in a fund over which she had a testamentary power of appointment, borrowed, in 1871, from B. 350*l.* on the security of a covenant that 1,250*l.* should be paid one month after her death. She died in 1884, having by her will appointed executors, and directed payment of her debts, and also that C., one of her executors (a solicitor), should be entitled to charge and receive payment for all professional business to be done by him under the will. C. was one of the attesting witnesses. In an administration action by B. on behalf of himself and all other creditors, the estate being insolvent:—Held, that the executors could not be deprived of the costs out of the assets of a cross-examination for the purpose of investigating B.'s claim, though no proceedings to set aside the deed were subsequently taken. Barber, In re, Burgess v. Vinnicome, 55 L. J., Ch. 373; 31 Ch. D. 665; 54 L. T. 375; 34 W. R. 395.

Further Consideration.]—Although applications for an order on further consideration are by Ord. LV. r. 2, sub-r. 16, where the estate is insolvent, business to be disposed of in chambers, a plaintiff will not be disallowed his costs of further consideration in court where the distribution of the insolvent estate gives rise to questions of difficulty. Ib.

Summons adjourned into Court by Executor.]—A testator made a voluntary settlement which was admitted to be void against his creditors. The trustee of the settlement paid 580*l.* into court. An administration action was necessary to find out the amount of debts. The claims of the creditors amounted to 504*l.* The chief clerk ordered the clear balance to be paid to the trustee, leaving the creditors only a dividend. The summons was adjourned into court by the defendant the executor:—Held, that the order of the chief clerk was right, and that the defendant must pay the costs of the adjourned summons personally. Turner, In re, Turner v. Turner, 51 L. T. 497.

Of defaulting Executor or Administrator.]—In an administration or creditors' suit against an executor becoming bankrupt or insolvent, and who is, at the same time, indebted to the estate of his testator, the costs of the executor incurred before his bankruptcy or insolvency will be set off against his debt, and the costs of the same executor incurred in the proper performance of the duties of his trust after his bankruptcy or insolvency will be allowed out of the estate. Samuel v. Jones, 2 Hare, 246; 12 L. J., Ch. 496; 7 Jur. 845.

In a creditors' suit, a defaulting administrator and his assignees, appointed pendente lite:—Held, not entitled to any costs. Carr v. Henderson, 11 Beav. 415; 18 L. J., Ch. 39.

In a creditors' suit, the assignees of a bankrupt, who is a defaulting executor of the deceased debtor, are not entitled to their costs of the suit out of the testator's estate; but if the plaintiff sought to charge the assignees with the receipt of specific parts of the testator's estate and failed to do so, the assignees might be entitled to costs. Mussey v. Moss, 1 Hare, 319; 11 L. J., Ch. 299; 6 Jur. 638.

Where, after the commencement of an administration action against a defaulting executor or trustee, he becomes bankrupt, and under s. 49 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, his debt remains undischarged by the bankruptcy, he is not entitled to be paid any of his costs of the action, whether incurred before or after the bankruptcy, until he has made good his default. But where the debt of the defaulting executor or trustee has been discharged by his bankruptcy—as where the bankruptcy has taken place prior to the Bankruptcy Act, 1869; or where, after the bankruptcy, his debt remaining undischarged, he renders services in the action in his character of executor or trustee, he is entitled to be paid his costs incurred subsequently to his bankruptcy, though his prior costs must be set off against his debt. Lewis v. Trask (21 Ch. D. 862) followed. Clare v. Clare (21 Ch. D. 865) not followed. Basham, In re, Hannay v. Basham, 52 L. J., Ch. 408; 23 Ch. D. 195; 48 L. T. 476; 31 W. R. 743.

A sole executor, who was a defendant to an administration action, became bankrupt after the administration judgment. He was a debtor to the estate in respect of money advanced to him by the testator in his lifetime:—Held, that the executor must have his costs subsequently to the bankruptcy, but that his prior costs must be set-off against the debt due from him. Basham, In re (23 Ch. D. 195) followed. Vowles, In re, O'Donoghue v. Vowles, 55 L. J., Ch. 661; 32 Ch. D. 243; 54 L. T. 846; 34 W. R. 639.

Of Defaulting Co-Executor.]—A decree was made for the payment by two executors of the balance found due to their testator's estate; and it was ordered, that upon payment they should be allowed separate costs of suit. One of the executors was insolvent, and the whole amount would have to be paid by the other. In drawing up the decree, the registrar made the payment of costs to the defaulting executor dependent upon his paying his proportion of the balance found due:—Held, that they were payable in any event, a direction being inserted in the decree, that if the one executor paid more than his proportion, the costs of the defaulting executor should be carried to a separate account, with liberty to his co-executor to apply. Birks v. Micklethwait, 33 Beav. 409; 33 L. J., Ch. 510; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 302; 10 L. T. 85; 12 W. R. 505. But costs were not allowed on appeal; see 34 L. J., Ch. 362; 13 L. T. 31.

Two executors in an administration suit appeared by the same solicitor, to whom they had given a joint retainer. One of them was a debtor to the estate, and subsequently became bankrupt:—Held, as to the costs incurred by them prior to the bankruptcy, that the solvent executor was to be allowed only his own proportion of them out of the fund; the defaulter's proportion of those costs being set off against the debt due from him. But the costs incurred subsequently to the bankruptcy were allowed in full. Watson v. Row (next case) dissented from. Smith v. Dale, 50 L. J., Ch. 352; 18 Ch. D. 516; 44 L. T. 460; 29 W. R. 330.

Two executors jointly retained solicitors. One of them, largely indebted to the estate, died insolvent:—Held, that as the other was liable to the solicitors for the whole of their costs, they must be allowed to him out of the estate. Watson v. Row, 43 L. J., Ch. 664; L. R. 18 Eq. 680; 22 W. R. 793.

The insolvent trustee being indebted to the estate, and the solvent trustee not being responsible for that debt, and the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, having made a debt arising from a breach of trust to continue notwithstanding the bankruptcy:—Held, that a reference be directed to the taxing master to apportion the costs of the trustees appearing by the same solicitor, and that the costs of the solvent trustee be paid out of the estate, and the costs apportioned as the costs of the insolvent trustee be set off against the amount found due from him to the estate. McEwan v. Crombie, or Porter v. Grant, 53 L. J., Ch. 24; 25 Ch. D. 175; 49 L. T. 499; 32 W. R. 115.

Whether under this direction the whole of the common costs of the two trustees would be allowed to the solvent trustee or divided, must depend on the settled practice of the taxing master's office. Ib.

Executor of an Executor.]—Where the estates of two testators have been blended so as to create confusion, the executor of an executor shall be excused costs, though it appeared he had assets enough to pay the plaintiff's debts. Sandys v. Watson, 2 Atk. 80.

Where a bill sought either to charge the surviving executors of a testator personally with a demand, or to have the debt paid out of the assets of the testator, and the court decided that the surviving executors were personally liable:—Held, that the representatives of a deceased executor were entitled to have the bill dismissed against them, with costs. Bradley v. Heath, 3 Sim. 560.

Where a cause is continued after the death of an executor who had been declared a party, he will be declared entitled to his costs up to the time of his death; but the administrator de bonis non of the original testator will not be declared entitled to those costs. Wood v. St. George, 1 Con. & L. 365.

A., who was defendant as an acting executor, died. The court gave leave to the plaintiff to amend, by making the other executors parties in the place of A., without paying A.'s costs. Rye v. Coppinger, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 314.

A suit was instituted by husband and wife against the personal representative of the executor of a testator, for the wife's share of a specific legacy bequeathed to four persons. The personal representative of the executor died, and thereby the suit became abated. This suit was abandoned, and another against other parties was instituted. The costs of the representative of the executor of this abandoned suit were allowed in the accounts as against the original testator's general personal estate. Trail v. Bull, 1 Eq. Rep. 9.

Executor of Defaulting Executor.]—The representative of a defaulting executor, fairly accounting, is entitled to deduct his costs of suit out of the assets, though they may be insufficient to repair the breach of trust. Haldenby v. Spofforth, 9 Beav. 195; 15 L. J., Ch. 328.

An executrix charged with breach of trust by investing in her own name dies, and her executor puts in an answer denying any residue, and scheduling certain documents. Inquiries are directed, and, after some contention, it appears upon those documents that there is a residue. The executor of the executrix is then sought to be charged personally with the costs of the inquiries, inasmuch as it appeared from the scheduled documents that there was a residue:—Held, that he was not liable for such costs. Lilley v. Medlicott, 5 W. R. 412.

An executor, A., died indebted to the estate of his testator B., and a suit was afterwards instituted by the administrator de bonis non of B. against the representatives of A. to administer his estate and to ascertain and recover the amount due to the estate of B.:—Held, that the costs must fall on the estate of A. Hyatt v. Hyatt, 30 Beav. 630.

An executor died insolvent, having misapplied the assets. An administration suit having been instituted against his executors, who had received part of the testator's estate, they duly accounted for what they had received:—Held, that they were entitled to the costs of accounts against themselves, not to costs of accounts against the estate of the insolvent executor, and that as to other costs of suit, being parties in both capacities, they should have half the costs. Palmer v. Jones, 43 L. J., Ch. 349.

Where an action was brought for the administration of a testator's estate against the executrix of his defaulting executor whose estate was insolvent, it was held that the executrix was entitled to the costs of taking an account against herself, but to no costs of taking an account against the defaulting executor, and that she should have the general costs of the action. Kitto, In re, Kitto v. Luke, 28 W. R. 411.

In a suit for administration by the administrator de bonis non of an intestate against the executor of a deceased administrator, the plaintiff had a balance in his hands sufficient to pay his costs of the suit, and the defendant had in his hands a balance insufficient to pay his costs:—Held, that the plaintiff, as legal personal representative of the intestate, was entitled to retain his costs in full out of the balance in his hands, and that the defendant, as a stranger to the estate, was not entitled to have both the balances paid into court, and the costs paid ratably to each party, but was only entitled to retain his balance so far as it went in payment of his costs. Rice v. Orgles, 25 L. T. 263.

Three executors allowed an investment of 500*l.* to remain (under a power in the will) upon an insufficient security. One died. The legatee claimed the legacy. The surviving executors opposed her claim on an administration summons. They gave no notice to the executor of the deceased executor of the proceedings:—Held, that the estate of the deceased executor was not liable to pay the costs of such proceedings. Paull v. Mortimer, 29 L. T. 418.

Where an action was brought for the administration of a testator's estate against the executor of a defaulting executor, whose estate was insolvent:—Held, that the defendant being before the court in a double capacity, should have his costs of taking the accounts of the original testator's estate and half the rest of the costs of the action out of the estate. Palmer v. Jones (43 L. J., Ch. 349) and Kitto v. Luke (28 W. R. 411) followed. Griffiths, In re, Griffiths v. Lewis, 53 L. J., Ch. 1003; 26 Ch. D. 465; 51 L. T. 278—C. A.

(c) Of Creditor.

When Plaintiff.]—On a bill by creditors, a sale was decreed by consent, and the creditors to be paid according to their priorities. Costs shall, notwithstanding, be paid to all in the first place. Brace v. Marlborough (Duchess) Mos. 50.

It is not the invariable rule, either that plaintiff's costs in a creditor's suit are to be the first payment out of the fund brought in, or that they are to abide the order and degree of plaintiff's demand. Where a puisne creditor files a bill on foot of a debt, which he might have known was desperate, his costs in that case are not of course, and advance of money out of the fund to prosecute the suit, will be refused. But if the debt was a hopeful debt, and the suit instituted bonâ fide, the accident of the fund not reaching the plaintiff's demand, is not a reason for mulcting him further, and his costs ought to be paid first. Egan v. Baldwin, 1 Moll. 539.

Where there are no incumbrances prior to his, a petitioner having the carriage of the suit is entitled to his costs out of a fund the produce of real estate, in the first instance, and in priority to the demand and the costs of creditors in equal priority with him. Watson v. Fitzpatrick, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 213.

In suits for administration of real and personal estate, where there are no specific incumbrances affecting the real estate, the petitioner is entitled to his costs out of the fund, in priority to all the creditors. Smith v. Murphy, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 42.

Costs of the suit given to the plaintiff, a simple contract creditor, in priority to the demands of judgment and specialty creditors; the suit being necessary, and having been properly conducted. Jameson v. Farrer, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 346.

In a creditors' cause, where other creditors apply for liberty to prosecute it, in consequence of delay in plaintiff, they must indemnify plaintiff against future costs. Anon., 2 Moll. 467.

After a decree for an account, by which costs were given to all parties generally out of the estate, creditors, parties to the suit, were held entitled to their costs before any of the creditors coming in before the Master could be paid their debts; and where regular proceedings are taken after the decree between the parties, plaintiffs and defendants, there is no occasion to give notice of such proceedings to the creditors before the Master. Hare v. Rose, 2 Ves. Sen. 558.

Decree for costs to prior creditors to be paid by plaintiff, plaintiff to have them over, plaintiff is not to pay the costs forthwith. Creditors must wait until the fund is available; but if a deficiency, then plaintiff must make up that deficiency. Jackson v. Curtis, 2 Moll. 463.

A., as creditor of B., files a bill against the proper parties for a sale of B.'s estate, alleging that he had by his will charged it with the payment of his debts. On the trial of ejectment, a verdict was found against the will; whereupon A.'s bill was dismissed with costs. But, on appeal, decree as to costs was reversed. Squire v. Pershall, 2 Bro. P. C. 396.

The final decree ordered a defendant to have his costs against the plaintiff, and the plaintiff to have them over, with his own costs, out of the money arising from the sale. The plaintiff was a puisne reported creditor. The court refused to pay him the amount of those costs (for payment of which the defendant was proceeding against him by attachment) out of rents brought in by the receiver; but stayed the defendant's proceedings until further order. Such a decree for costs is not to be enforced against the plaintiff unless the fund be insufficient, or he be guilty of laches in the prosecution of the suit. Crofts v. Poe, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 151.

A creditor instituted a suit against the real and personal representatives of the principal debtor and against one of the sureties, omitting the other surety, and obtained a decree to account. He afterwards filed a supplemental bill against the representatives of the other surety; but inasmuch as they did not derive any benefit from the proceedings in the original suit, and as the creditor might have framed the original suit so as to have had in it the relief sought by the supplemental bill:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled, as against the representatives of the second surety, to the costs of the original suit. Cuffe v. Young, 2 Jo. & Lat. 17.

In a creditors' suit, the plaintiff did not establish his debt at the hearing, but the court retained the bill, giving him liberty to bring an action. He produced other evidence, and recovered in the action. Decree for payment of the debt and costs in equity, but no costs given of the proceedings at law. Gregson v. Booth, 5 Hare, 536.

The costs of a plaintiff in a creditors' suit in opposing a motion to dismiss for want of prosecution, by a party named executor, who had renounced probate and disclaimed, was refused to a creditor whose bill was dismissed upon payment of his claim by the acting executor. Kenny v. Beavan, 7 Hare, 133; 18 L. J., Ch. 64; 12 Jur. 936.

The mere offer from a defendant to pay a claim and costs (without motion):—Held, not to disentitle the plaintiff to his costs of the subsequent proceedings in the suit. Ib.

Pending a reference under an order, whereby, inter alia, the Master was directed to report the costs of the reference, and of the order to pay out the funds, the Master transferred the carriage of the decree, &c., from J. C. to M. W., another creditor, and reported that the costs of the reference would be payable to M. W., then having the carriage of the decree:—Held, that J. C. was entitled to so much of the costs of the reference as were incurred up to the time when the carriage of the decree, &c., was transferred to M. W. Kelly v. Kelly, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 317.

If the notice of a motion does not require that the party should have the costs, they will not be awarded to him by the court in granting the motion, unless his adversary gave notice of using affidavits or documents to oppose the motion. A creditor who applies for and obtains an order on the plaintiff to procure a report within a limited time, will not be awarded the costs of the motion to be paid by the plaintiff; but if a plaintiff disobeys that order, and the creditor applies for the carriage of the decree, the plaintiff will be ordered to pay him the costs of the motion, if they are asked by the notice. Magrath v. Veitch, 1 Hog. 443.

A creditor's summons was taken out in chambers in a cause. Upon the return of the summons, the chief clerk, finding that he had no jurisdiction, adjourned the summons into court at the suggestion of all parties, to come on with the cause upon further consideration: —Held, that the application by summons was regular, but that it ought to have been referred to the judge in chambers, and not adjourned into court. Halliley v. Henderson, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 202.

No order was made upon the summons, the claim being barred by the Statute of Limitations; but the plaintiff was ordered to pay the creditor 5*l.* for his costs, and to add them to his own; the costs of all other parties costs in the cause. Ib.

A plaintiff who has been removed from the conduct of a creditors' suit will be allowed his costs of appearing at the hearing on further consideration to ask for costs due to him before his removal, but will not be allowed his costs of attending the taking of the accounts in chambers subsequently to his removal. Joseph v. Goode, 23 W. R. 225. S. P., Armstrong v. Armstrong, L. R. 12 Eq. 614; 25 L. T. 199; 19 W. R. 971.

—— No Assets for Payment of Plaintiffs' Debt.]—In a creditors' suit, it appearing that there were no assets applicable to the payment of the plaintiffs' debts, the plaintiffs ordered to pay the costs: but other creditors entitled to a specific lien, having proved, they were ordered to pay the costs of the proceedings relative to their debts. Bluett v. Jessop, Jacob, 240; 23 R. R. 35.

A simple contract creditor, who had instituted and prosecuted a suit for administration, in the face of information furnished by the legal personal representative (which turned out to be correct), that there were no assets for the payment of simple contract debts, was ordered to pay the costs of the suit. King v. Bryant, 4 Beav. 460. S. C., nom. King v. Hammett, 11 L. J., Ch. 14; 5 Jur. 1025. S. P., Fuller v. Green, 24 Beav. 217.

A simple contract creditor obtained an order to administer the intestate's estate. He afterwards had notice that the estate was insufficient to pay the specialty creditor and the costs of the administratrix, but he still persisted in prosecuting the suit:—Held, that the fund must be applied, first, in paying the costs of the administratrix, then in paying the plaintiff's costs down to the notice, and the residue in payment of the specialty creditor. Sullivan v. Bevan, 20 Beav. 399.

A creditor files a bill against an executrix, and she states by her answer that there are no assets for the payment of his debt; he, however, persists in the suit, and the result of the account in the Master's office is, that there are no assets unadministered, though the executrix is charged with more than she had admitted:—Held, that the bill is to be dismissed without costs as against the executrix. Robinson v. Elliott, 1 Russ. 599.

—— Laches.]—Where a bill by a creditor to have the benefit of a decree to account, was dismissed for laches in plaintiff, the court doubted as to the costs; but as the laches were not all on one side, the bill was dismissed without costs. Hercy v. Dinwoody, 2 Ves. J. 87.

As between Solicitor and Client.]—In a creditors' suit, the plaintiffs are entitled to their costs, as between solicitor and client, where the fund is insufficient to pay the debts. Tootal v. Spicer, 4 Sim. 510. S. P., Hood v. Wilson, 2 Russ. & M. 687.

The plaintiff, a creditor, was allowed costs in an administration suit, commenced by summons, as between solicitor and client, where the fund realised was insufficient to pay the creditors in full. Flynn, In re, Guy v. McCarthy, 17 L. R., Ir. 457.

In a creditors' suit, costs as between solicitor and client cannot be given, even with the consent of all parties, unless it clearly appears that the estate is insufficient for the payment of the debts. Blackett v. Blackett, 5 L. J., Ch. 213.

The insufficiency of the fund to pay the debts is the only case in which the plaintiff in a creditors' suit is entitled to his costs as between solicitor and client. Brodie v. Bolton, 3 Myl. & K. 168.

In a creditors' suit, the assets being sufficient to pay the debts, but insufficient to pay the debts and the costs of suit taxed as between party and party, the court ordered the plaintiff's extra costs, as between solicitor and client, to be paid out of the fund. Sutton v. Doggett, 3 Beav. 9; 9 L. J., Ch. 335; 4 Jur. 959.

In a suit by creditors to administer the realty, there being no personalty, and the realty proving deficient, the court ordered the costs of the plaintiffs and of the defendants, who were beneficial devisees, to be taxed as between party and party, and paid pari passu out of the fund, and the balance of the fund then remaining to be applied in payment of the plaintiffs' extra costs between solicitor and client, and then in payment of debts. Henderson v. Dodds, L. R. 2 Eq. 532; 14 L. T. 752; 14 W. R. 908. S. P., Ferguson v. Gibson, 41 L. J., Ch. 640; L. R. 14 Eq. 379.

The rule that a plaintiff in a creditors' suit is allowed his costs as between solicitor and client, if the estate has proved insufficient, extends to parties to whom the conduct of the proceedings has been given. Joseph v. Goode, 23 W. R. 225.

The rule that a creditor who brings an action on behalf of himself and all other creditors for the administration of an estate which turns out to be insufficient for the payment of debts, is entitled to his costs as between solicitor and client, applies equally to the case of a creditor who obtains the conduct of an action originally commenced by a legatee or next of kin. Richardson, In re, Richardson v. Richardson, 49 L. J., Ch. 612; 14 Ch. D. 611; 43 L. T. 279; 28 W. R. 942.

—— Simple Contract and Specialty Creditor.]—Costs as between solicitor and client given out of the fund to a simple contract creditor who was plaintiff in a suit to administer his deceased debtor's estate, although the assets had proved insufficient to satisfy the specialty creditors. Barker v. Wardle, 2 Myl. & K. 518. S. P., Jenkins v. Robertson, 22 L. J., Ch. 874; 1 W. R. 298. Larkins v. Paxton, 2 Myl. & K. 320. But see Rowlands v. Tucker, 1 Russ. & M. 635; Young v. Everest, 1 Russ. & M. 426.

—— Joint and Separate Creditors.]—In an action by a separate creditor, on behalf of himself and all other the creditors of a testator, who was one of a firm of traders, for a general administration of the testator's estate, the general estate was realised and turned out sufficient to pay in full the separate creditors, but insufficient to pay in full the joint creditors of the testator:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to costs out of the estate as between solicitor and client. McRae, In re, Norden v. McRae, 55 L. J., Ch. 708; 32 Ch. D. 613; 54 L. T. 728.

Contribution by Creditors other than Plaintiff.]—The direction for creditors coming in under a decree to contribute to the costs, not enforced in practice. Blunt v. Jessop, Jacob, 243; 23 R. R. 35.

Note.—It is not the present practice to insert such a direction.

If in a creditors' suit plaintiff does not call for contribution according to decree, before creditor is admitted to prove, he waives all claim to contribution. Shortley v. Selby, 5 Madd. 447.

In a creditors' suit, the plaintiff's solicitor having refused to attend the accountant-general with Master's report, unless a contribution was made to him of 1*s.* in the pound, on motion, he being ordered to attend on payment to him of the fee of 6*s.* 8*d.* for attendance with each creditor, and his claim disallowed, the costs thereof were allowed to such as had tendered him the 6*s.* 8*d.*, but not otherwise. Ib.

The usual direction in decrees in creditors' suits that the creditors shall, before they are admitted, contribute their proportion to the expenses of the suit, does not prevent the court on further directions, if the case warrant, from ordering the plaintiff to pay all the costs of the suit; but if the suit be anything more than a mere creditors' suit, the direction for contribution ought to be limited to the costs of that part of the suit in which all the creditors have a common interest with the plaintiffs. Dunning v. Hards, 2 Ph. 294; 16 L. J., Ch. 403; 11 Jur. 549.

Where the fund in a creditors' suit is insufficient to pay the plaintiff his costs, the creditors, who have had the benefit of the suit by proving and obtaining payment of their debts, must contribute to the plaintiff's costs, and it is not matter of exception to the rule that they obtained payment by reason of being associated as joint creditors with a person who had a right of retainer against the estate. Thompson v. Cooper, 2 Coll. C. C. 87; 14 L. J., Ch. 318; 9 Jur. 768.

In a creditors' suit, instituted by simple contract creditors, in which the assets, after the payment of the costs, being insufficient for the discharge of the specialty debts, are apportioned among the specialty creditors, these specialty creditors are entitled, without contributing to the extra costs of the plaintiff, to the use of the order for the payment of the money and of the report founded upon it, so as to enable them to get the fund out of court. Lechmere v. Brazier, 1 Russ. 72; 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 95.

A creditor who has been stayed from proceeding in his suit, and compelled to come in under the decree in another suit, will not be ordered to contribute to the costs of the plaintiff in that suit, as between attorney and client. The rule only applies to persons coming in voluntarily under the decree. O'Brien v. Fitzgerald, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 159.

Creditors who prove under a decree obtained in a suit instituted by a legatee for the administration of the assets of the deceased, are not bound to contribute to the difference between the plaintiff's costs between attorney and client, and party and party. Lynch v. Skerritt, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 504.

Upon the distribution of the funds in a creditors' suit, there being no specific incumbrancer, the several defendants and creditors were directed to pay to the plaintiff their proportions of the difference of the costs between party and party, and attorney and client, in proportion to their demands, although neither the bill prayed, nor did the decree direct, that they should so contribute. Bracken v. Drought, 2 Jones, 114.

The plaintiff, a specific incumbrancer, filed a bill for a sale:—Held, that judgment creditors, proving under a decree to take an account of prior incumbrances, were not bound to contribute to the payment of plaintiff's costs, though their demands exhausted the funds and left nothing for the plaintiff. Downshire (Marquis) v. Tyrrell, 2 Jones, 805.

Upon the distribution of the funds, the produce of real estates, in a suit instituted by a simple contract creditor on behalf of himself and other creditors, who should come in and contribute to the expenses of the suit, the fund being a sufficient one, the plaintiff is not entitled to make judgment creditors contribute in proportion to their demands to his costs between solicitor and client. Newby v. Drew, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 58.

On Stay of Proceedings by — At Law.]—A decree against an executor is in nature of a judgment at law; after that, he may, on motion, without filing a bill for an injunction, restrain a creditor suing at law. The executor must pay the costs till the notice, but not after notice; and he must make an affidavit as to funds in his hands. Paxton v. Douglas, 8 Ves. 520. And see Dyer v. Kearsley, 3 Mer. 483, n. And the rule is the same as to legatees. Jackson v. Leaf, 1 J. & W. 229.

Pending an action by a creditor against an executor, a decree is made in chambers in a creditor's suit, and notice of the decree given to the creditor. On the question of costs in the action, on motion:—Held, on the authority of certain of the registrars as to the practice, that the creditor is entitled to both sets of costs out of assets if admitted, but otherwise must add them to his debt; but quære. White v. Leatherdale, 1 W. R. 405.

Where a motion is made after a decree in a creditors' suit to restrain a creditor from suing at law, the creditor is entitled to the costs of the motion. Jones v. Jones, 5 Sim. 678.

Costs at law down to time of notice of the injunction given to a creditor to be paid by the executor, and also the costs of the application in equity. Bookless v. Crummack, C. P. Cooper, 125. And see Curre v. Bowyer, 3 Madd. 456;

Anon., 2 Sim. & S. 424; Anon., 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 227; Powell v. Powell, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 501.

The usual decree for an account having been pronounced in a creditors' suit, and the usual notice of the same having been published, a creditor brought an action against the executors for an alleged debt of the testator. On motion by the executors the action was restrained; but the costs both at law and in equity were reserved, till it should appear whether the creditor would establish his claim. Burnett v. Burnett, 10 Jur. 4.

Injunction to stay proceeding at law was granted, a decree of reference to take an account having been obtained on a creditors' bill against executors before action brought; but defendant not having notice of decree or of this application, it was ordered that all his costs should be first paid. Farlow v. Wilson, 11 Price, 95.

Upon a motion, after decree in a creditors' suit to restrain a creditor from suing the administratrix at law:—Held, under the circumstances, that the creditor was not entitled to the costs of the action, or of the motion for the injunction; and that the cost of the administratrix should be costs in the cause. Jones v. Brain, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 170.

An action by a creditor, whose debt was disputed, being stayed after a decree for the administration of the intestate's estate:—Held, that the creditor was not entitled to his costs of the action, nor of the motion to stay it, until he had first established his debt in chambers. King v. King, 34 Beav. 10; 34 L. J., Ch. 195; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 762; 10 L. T. 832; 12 W. R. 1095.

A suit was instituted by a creditor, for the administration of a testator's estate, and another creditor, the estate being insolvent, proceeds at law against the administratrix who does not apply for an injunction, or tender the debt and costs. Notice of a decree in the suit was given to the plaintiff in the action, who nevertheless continued the action, and obtained a verdict for his debt and costs:—Held, that the creditor was not entitled, as against the other creditors in the suit, to his costs in the action after notice of decree. Sharrod v. Wingfield, 25 L. J., Ch. 176; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1154.

The answer of the executrix in a legatees' suit contained no accounts, and the decree did not direct an account of real estate. A creditor proceeding at law, after notice of the decree, restrained, on motion, without being allowed his costs of the application. Bush v. Windey, 13 Jur. 273.

After the usual decree has been obtained in a creditors' suit against the real and personal representatives of an intestate, this court will restrain all further proceedings in an action by a bond creditor of the intestate against the heir, although the heir may have pleaded riens per descent, and issue may have been joined to such plea; and as the heir will be ordered to pay to the creditor his costs of the action up to the time when he had first notice of the decree, any delay in applying for the injunction will in most cases resolve itself into a question of costs. Roose v. Jones, 1 Ph. 462; 14 L. J., Ch. 4.

A creditor having continued his proceedings at law after notice of a decree for administration, was ordered to pay the costs of a motion to restrain him, but was allowed to set them off against the costs of the proceedings at law incurred prior to the notice. Gardner v. Garrett, 20 Beav. 469.

A judgment creditor prosecuting an action upon his judgment against the executors of his debtor after notice of decree in administration suit will be restrained, and must pay the costs of the executors, of proceedings in the action taken after such notice (which costs will be set off against his judgment debt when proved), and also the costs of the application to restrain his proceedings at law. Boston v. Richardson, 3 W. R. 432.

—— In Equity.]—From the moment a creditor has notice of a decree to account against his debtor's representative, any further costs he incurs in his own proceedings will not be allowed to him. Moffet v. Smith, 2 Moll. 359.

Where there is an effectual decree under which a creditor can come in, he shall not, after he has notice of it, be allowed against the fund, the costs of any proceedings which he shall either institute or continue. Biddulph v. Fitzgerald, 2 Moll. 251.

Prior incumbrancer coming in in a subsequent creditors' suit, entitled in taking the account to be allowed the costs of suit theretofore instituted by him, for recovery of his demand, so far as incurred by him, he undertaking to discontinue further proceedings. Farrer v. Brereton, 2 Moll. 93.

Where the proceedings in a creditors' suit are stayed upon motion by an executor, on the ground that a decree for administration has been obtained in another suit, under which the plaintiff has a right to go in and prove his debt, the practice is to reserve the costs when the debt is disputed or not admitted by the executor. Davey v. Plestow, 19 L. J., Ch. 491; 14 Jur. 388.

Where there are several creditors' suits, and proceedings in the last instituted are stayed, and the plaintiff ordered to go in under the decree in the first cause, and prove his demand, including his costs properly and necessarily incurred, and the costs which he should be liable to pay to the several defendants, he is personally liable, in the first instance, to pay the costs of the defendants, who are not obliged to wait until funds are allocated or realised in the first cause. But where the restrained cause, though unnecessary, was not vexatiously instituted, and the plaintiff had been compelled to pay the costs of some of the defendants, the court ordered the receiver in the first cause to pay to him the amount of the costs which he had been so compelled to pay. Loftie v. Forbes, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 443.

Where a cause in which there had been a decree to account was abandoned by the plaintiff therein, who, without any restraining order having been served upon him, came in and proved his debt in another cause:—Held, that a defendant in the abandoned cause (a creditor whose demand was puisne to that of the plaintiff) was not entitled to have the costs incurred by him in the abandoned cause, paid out of the plaintiff's portion of the fund brought into court in the other cause. Downshire v. Tyrrell, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 66.

Semble, the defendant should have applied for the carriage of the decree in the abandoned cause, and had his costs added to his demands. Ib.

Where a creditor, without notice of a decree in an administration suit, had commenced an action in Scotland against the administratrix, and afterwards had come in under the decree, but declined to undertake to discontinue his action, he was fixed with the costs of a motion for an injunction to restrain proceedings at law. After a decree in an administration suit, it is no ground for allowing a creditor, in the first instance, to proceed at law to ascertain his claim, that the cause of action arose in Scotland, and the witnesses are resident there, and that questions of Scotch law are involved. Graham v. Maxwell, 1 Mac. & G. 71; 1 Hall & Tw. 427; 18 L. J., Ch. 225; 13 Jur. 217. And see Beauchamp v. Huntley (Marquis), Jacob, 546; 23 R. R. 143.

Priority.]—By the settled practice of the Court of Chancery, a plaintiff is entitled to his costs only in the priority of his demand, except such costs as have been plainly incurred for the benefit of the parties in the cause, such as making out title to the estate to be sold. Nelson v. Brady, 1 Con. & L. 239; 2 Dr. & War. 143; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 359.

In administration suits concerning personal estate, where there is no fund to pay the plaintiff, the general rule is, that plaintiff does not get his costs out of a fund belonging exclusively to creditors of a higher degree, unless they are salvage costs, or there are special circumstances; and where plaintiff, a simple contract creditor, knew that the judgment debts would exhaust the assets, as they did, and her object in the suit was to have a certain fund decreed to be equitable assets, in which she failed, no costs were given. Fisher v. King, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 460.

A simple contract creditor, who institutes a suit for the administration of personal assets, and seeks to have his costs as against judgment and specialty creditors, who may come in under the decree, ought to make a case for it by his bill, and shew that a suit was necessary for the due administration of the assets and payment of his debt, or else that, by his exertions, he has made a fund available which would otherwise have been lost. Drake v. Ford, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 56.

The plaintiff in a creditors' suit is entitled in priority to the demands of the other creditors, to be paid the costs which he has incurred bonâ fide, and for the benefit of all parties, and with their assent, in making out title to the premises decreed to be sold. Semble, the plaintiff in a creditors' suit is entitled to his costs in the cause in the same priority with his demand; but if by his exertions he realise a personal fund for the benefit of all the creditors, he is entitled to his costs as the first charge upon the funds so realised. Thornley v. Dundas, Jones & Carey, 2. S. C., nom. Maguire v. Dundass, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 25.

The costs of a creditor bonâ fide carrying the decree into effect, for the benefit of all parties, and making the fund available, is an exception to the general rule that the plaintiff's costs should stand in the same decree with his demand. The rule in Taylor v. Gorman (1 Dr. & Wal. 235, n.) qualified. Kelly v. Kelly, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 317.

In a creditors' suit when after final decree J. C. obtained the carriage of the decree, and was ordered to proceed without delay to have a sale:—Held, that J. C. was entitled in priority to the costs of making out title, though the funds realised did not reach his demand. Ib.

Secured Creditor.]—A secured creditor upon an estate, which upon realisation under the order of the court is found deficient, cannot after proving his claim at chambers, without valuing his security, claim priority over the plaintiff's costs. The time when the creditor's rights are fixed by election is the time when he sends in his proof. Cloghessy, In re, McDonald v. Cloghessy, 21 L. R. Ir. 388.

Where a puisne incumbrancer brought an action against other incumbrancers, and the trustees of a will, for administration of the estate, on further consideration:—Held, that, so far as the administration proceedings were proper, and also for the benefit of the prior mortgagees, the plaintiff was entitled to his costs of such proceedings out of the estate in priority to the prior mortgagees, but must add the rest of his costs to his security:—Held, also, that the trustees' costs of the action, so far as such costs were costs of administration of which the prior mortgagees had had the benefit, must come out of the fund as between solicitor and client. Barne, In re, Lee v. Barne, 62 L. T. 922.

See also ADMINISTRATION—DEBTS—INSOLVENT ESTATE, b. 3, (c), ii., col. 1662, ante.

Salvage Costs.]—Where in a creditors' suit a fund had been realised by the diligence of the plaintiff, and the assets were more than sufficient for payment of the debts, the costs of the plaintiff, as between party and party, were ordered to be paid out of the general fund, and the extra costs of the plaintiff were under the circumstances directed to be paid pro ratâ, by all the creditors who partook of the benefit of the suit. Stanton v. Hatfield, 1 Keen, 358.

If through the exertions of a plaintiff the court is enabled to distribute a fund, or make a declaration of rights necessary for an administration, there, although the plaintiff may fail in his claim, the court will not permit the other parties to carry off the fruit of his exertions without defraying his costs out of the fund. Wedgwood v. Adams, 8 Beav. 103.

A creditor plaintiff in an administration suit to carry out the trusts of a voluntary deed, including personal estate, is entitled to his costs in the first estate, having put the personal estate in a train to be realised. O'Dowda v. O'Dowda, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 464.

The costs incurred by a plaintiff in litigating and reducing considerably the demand of a creditor whose demand is prior to that of the plaintiff, are not costs which the plaintiff is entitled to be paid in preference to the demand of such creditor, who at the final hearing had a decree for payment of his prior demand, and his costs. Jauge v. Jackson, Fl. & K. 45.

Rent paid by the plaintiff to a head landlord of the premises in the pleadings mentioned, to preserve them from eviction, is the first charge on the fund produced by the sale of those lands. Gray v. Crawford, Jones & Carey, 174; 1 Ir. Eq. R. 274.

Other Cases.]—Where a creditor had, by an unconscientious use of legal process, acquired possession of an estate, he was deprived of costs subsequent to the payment of money into court. Cranstown (Lord) v. Johnston, 5 Ves. 277; 3 R. R. 80.

Creditor defendant, contesting the mode of taking the accounts, and failing, knowing a balance to be against him, is liable to costs. Skirrett v. Athy, 1 Ball & B. 435.

A creditor insisting by his answer on more than is really due, shall lose his costs in equity, though entitled to them at law. Forward v. Duffield, 3 Atk. 555.

A creditor had obtained a separate report as to her debt, and presented a petition to have it confirmed and the debt paid. The plaintiffs presented another petition, stating that report, and another report as to debts generally, and praying to have the latter report confirmed and the creditor's debt paid. His honour made an order in both petitions, according to the prayer of the second, and ordered the creditor to pay the costs of his petition. Turner v. Connor, 12 Jur. 1082.

A., previously to the marriage of his daughter B., gave to the trustee of her settlement a bond, whereby he bound himself to pay an annuity upon trusts for the benefit of B. and her children. A. died, leaving C., another of his daughters, his sole devisee and executrix. On a bill filed by B. against C.:—Held, that B. was entitled to a decree declaring that she had a lien on the testator's real estate to the amount of the value of the annuity, but that B. should pay the costs of all parties to the cause. Norman v. Johnson, 29 Beav. 77; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 905; 8 W. R. 300.

A person, who was not a party to a suit, came in under the usual advertisements to prefer a claim against the testator's estate. The summons being adjourned into court, the claim was disallowed as against the estate, but was held to be good as against the executrix of the estate in respect of the share which she took under the will:—Held, that the cost of so much of the summons as related to the claim against the testator's estate must be paid by the party making such ineffectual claim. Bentley v. Bentley, 7 L. T. 819.

Upon the son's death an action of Bennett v. Samuel was instituted by a creditor in another branch of the court for the administration of his estate. In that action an order was made giving the plaintiff leave to apply in the present action (Samuel v. Samuel) to "intervene therein by appearing at the trial and contending that there was no forfeiture of the son's interest." Upon production of this order the chief clerk to the Master of the Rolls made an order giving the plaintiff in Bennett v. Samuel leave to "intervene" in Samuel v. Samuel accordingly, whereupon that plaintiff appeared at the trial of Samuel v. Samuel to contend against the forfeiture: — Held, that, although, under the circumstances, plaintiff was entitled to his costs of appearance, both orders were irregular, and that the proper course was for him to have obtained an order in Bennett v. Samuel for leave to appear in Samuel v. Samuel in the name of the son's widow, her interest as his executrix being in conflict with her beneficial interest under his father's will. Samuel v. Samuel, 47 L. J., Ch. 716; 12 Ch. D. 152; 26 W. R. 750.

(d) Of Heir-at-Law.

In General.]—An heir is entitled to his costs, for it is the law which casts the descent upon him. Humphrey v. Morse, 2 Atk. 408.

Where an heir-at-law is brought by order before the court, though there is no resulting trust in his favour, he shall have his costs. Att.-Gen. v. Haberdashers' Co., 4 Bro. C. C. 178.

Of Administration Action.]—An administrator having claimed his debt before the Master, that is sufficient to entitle him to retain it. The administrator entitled to his costs out of the produce of the sale of real estate, his intestate having been a trader. The heir-at-law entitled to his costs from the plaintiff, who may be reimbursed out of the fund in court, without prejudice to the costs of the administrator. Winter v. Hicks, Tam. 475.

In a creditors' suit the heir-at-law of the debtor, who has been decreed his costs out of the surplus fund, cannot have them against the plaintiff if that fund prove deficient. Hunt v. Bateman, 1 Longf. & T. 379.

Where, under a decree in an administration suit, the solicitor for the inheritor was declared entitled to be paid his costs out of the surplus, if any:—Held, under the particular circumstances of the case, that although the fund was deficient he was entitled to his costs. Grey v. Matthews, Fl. & K. 309; 3 Ir. Eq. R. 430.

Where a suit had been instituted respecting the disposal of accumulations (void by Thellusson's Act), which arose from a mixed fund of realty and personalty, and which by the decree were given proportionably to the heir and next of kin, the court directed the costs of the suit to be paid pro ratâ by the heir and personal representative; but the decree was reversed as to this point. Eyre v. Marsden, 2 Keen, 564; 7 L. J., Ch. 220. Reversed, 4 Myl. & C. 231; 3 Jur. 450.

In an administration suit of an intestate's estate, where the whole of the real and personal estates was insufficient to pay the claims made by creditors:—Held, that the heir-at-law and administratrix were entitled to their costs as between solicitor and client, and also to all costs, charges and expenses properly incurred by them in respect to the intestate's estate. Tardrew v. Howell, 2 Giff. 530; 30 L. J., Ch. 191; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 937; 3 L. T. 661; 9 W. R. 296.

Where an infant heiress-at-law filed a bill for the administration of her intestate's real and personal estate, and his assets were found insufficient for the payment of his debts:—Held, that the plaintiff was, nevertheless, entitled to her costs as between solicitor and client out of the estate. Shittler v. Shittler, 10 L. T. 833.

Of Litigating Will.]—Heir-at-law disputing will, though on trial there were shewn no grounds for disputing it, yet held he was entitled to his costs at law and equity. Crew v. Jolliff, Pre. Ch. 93.

Heir-at-law, defendant, contesting the will and failing, but establishing a claim in the cause as creditor against testator's estate, charged with payment of his debts, is entitled to his costs. Burne v. Breen, 1 Ball & B. 308.

Heir-at-law, defendant, desiring an issue upon a will, in which he failed, entitled to his costs in equity; no costs on either side as to the issue; ordered to pay costs of a groundless motion for a new trial. White v. Wilson, 13 Ves. 87.

Heir-at-law has a right to his costs, though he cross-examine plaintiff's witnesses; but if he examine witnesses on his own part, he shall not have costs as to that. Vaughan v. Fitzgerald, 1 Sch. & Lef. 316.

Where the heir-at-law is brought into court he is entitled to his costs, though he examines witnesses on his own behalf: but praying an issue he puts himself into the situation of a plaintiff, and failing in it he must pay the costs at law. Tuthill v. Scott, 2 Moll. 468.

Heir-at-law raising a point against a will and failing, costs were refused to and against him; but an executor or trustee merely submitting a point for opinion of court, though they fail, he shall have costs. Rashleigh v. Master, 1 Ves. J. 205.

Where the heir-at-law, being made a defendant, impeaches the testator's will by his answer, although the decree afterwards established the will, yet he is entitled to his costs of suit. Wilson v. Simpson, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 336.

Heir-at-law, being also the devisee in trust, misconducting his defence, ordered to pay all the costs of the suit. Man v. Ricketts, 7 Beav. 93; 13 L. J., Ch. 194; 8 Jur. 159.

In a suit as to the construction of a will, in which the heir-at-law is a necessary party, and is made a party by order of the court, he will be allowed the costs both of proving his heirship, and also of the general suit between the parties, even though he is ultimately unsuccessful. Singleton v. Tomlinson, 3 App. Cas. 404; 38 L. T. 653; 26 W. R. 722.

In Suits for establishing Wills and on Issue Devisavit vel non.]—See also WILL.

(e) Respecting Legacies and Shares of Residue.

Out of General Residue.]—Costs of a suit for legacy out of the residue; the suit being rendered necessary either by the conduct of executrix, who was the residuary legatee, or by the disposition of the testatrix. Wilson v. Brownsmith, 9 Ves. 180.

The costs of a suit for payment of a legacy which the executor and residuary legatee had offered to pay, ordered to come out of the testator's general estate, because the executor had qualified his offer to pay, by a restriction which he had no right to impose. Walter v. Patey, 1 Russ. 375.

In a suit for administering a testator's estate, a legacy was claimed by two legatees adversely to each other:—Held, that as the question arose on the testator's will, the costs must be borne by his estate and not by the legacy. Wilson v. Squire, 13 Sim. 212; 12 L. J., Ch. 139.

A testator bequeathed certain legacies to the children of A.; A had no legitimate but three illegitimate children, who claimed the legacies; the executors took out an originating summons to have the question decided:—Held, that the costs of the proceedings must be borne by the residuary estate. Haseldine, In re, Grange v. Sturdy, 31 Ch. D. 511; 54 L. T. 322; 34 W. R. 327; 50 J. P. 390—C. A.

Where a claim to a bond as a donatio mortis causâ was established, the costs of the suit were given out of the estate. Gardner v. Parker, 3 Madd. 185; 18 R. R. 213.

On account of the imbecility of an adult legatee, the executors in proper time, and bonâ fide, set apart the amount of her legacy, and, after payment of the legacy duty and incidental expenses, invested the balance in consols, in their own names, and accumulated the dividends (the 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, not applying to the case), and did not, on the passing of the 10 & 11 Vict. c. 96, transfer the amount into court under that act. A bill was filed in 1846 for payment of the legacy in cash, with interest; but the court refused to disturb the investment, and directed it and its accumulations to be brought into court. It appearing, however, that the legatee was of imbecile mind at the date of the testator's will, the court, on that ground, gave the costs out of the testator's general estate. Pothecary v. Pothecary, 2 De G. & Sm. 738; 18 L. J., Ch. 48; 12 Jur. 1016.

—— Of Specific Legatee.]—When a specific legacy is claimed in this court, the legatee must have his costs out of the testator's general estate, for otherwise it would be to abridge his specific legacy. Bayshaw v. Newton, 9 Mod. 283. S. P., Nisbett v. Murray, 5 Ves. 158. Except costs of inquiries as to the specific legacy. Barton v. Cooke, 5 Ves. 464. And see Kirby v. Potter, 4 Ves. 752; 4 R. R. 342.

Where a question is raised between specific and general residuary legatees on the construction of part of a will, whether a specific sum does or not fall into the general residue, the costs form part of the general administration costs, although in fact there is no question of an administration of the whole estate. Lonsdale v. Berchtold, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 328.

Out of Legacy or Share.]—Though it is true that the rule that costs shall come out of the estate prevails, where a question arises between the individual and the person taking the bulk of the estate, how far the bulk of the estate is to answer for a legacy, a sum of money, or a portion, yet if there is no question between the latter and persons claiming against him the bulk of the estate, but after he has paid out of the bulk, and done all that is incumbent on him, a question arises as to the interest in that property, clearly severed from the bulk, the expense of questions touching that fund ought to be thrown on the fund itself. Jenour v. Jenour, 10 Ves. 579.

The costs of an action to determine whether specific property passed under a gift to A. or a gift to B. ought not to be charged on the residue. Wollaston v. Wollaston, 47 L. J., Ch. 117; 37 L. T. 631; 26 W. R. 77.

Where the question was, whether a legacy lapsed or not, and it was held it did, the costs of ascertaining the right to it were ordered to be paid out of it, in exoneration of the general residue. Skrymsher v. Northcote, 1 Swanst. 566, 572; 1 Wils. Ch. 248; 18 R. R. 142. And see Cresswell v. Cheslyn, 2 Eden, 123.

Costs of an administration suit were directed to be paid out of the share of the residue destined for two legatees, as to which alone the question in the cause arose. Barber v. Barber, 3 Myl. & C. 688; 8 L. J., Ch. 36; 2 Jur. 1029. And see S. C., 7 L. J., Ch. 70; 1 Jur. 915.

Where a legacy has been severed from the general estate, and becomes the subject of a suit, by the result of which the estate will not be affected, the costs of the suit are borne by the fund constituting the legacy; but the appropriation or investment by the executor of a particular sum to answer the legacy, where the question which arises upon it is a question between the general estate and the legacy, does not relieve the general estate from the costs of the suit. Att.-Gen. v. Lawes, 8 Hare, 32; 19 L. J., Ch. 300; 14 Jur. 77.

An administrator settled with three out of four next of kin, and the fourth having instituted a suit for administration:—Held, that his share was only liable to one-fourth of the costs. Holgate v. Haworth, 17 Beav. 259.

When a legacy has been properly severed from the residue, and a question subsequently arises respecting it, in the issue of which the residuary legatee is not interested, the costs must come out of the legacy. Martineau v. Rogers, 8 De G. M. & G. 328; 25 L. J., Ch. 398; 4 W. R. 502.

Executors and trustees having appropriated a legacy and divided the residue:—Held, that the costs of a suit to secure the particular legacy must be paid thereout. Governesses' Benevolent Institution v. Rushbridger, 18 Beav. 467.

A stock legacy, bequeathed to several in succession, was appropriated by the executors and the residue paid over. In a suit between the remainderman and the executors alone, the legacy was transferred into court and the costs of suit were paid thereout. The tenant for life afterwards filed a claim to have the amount of costs recouped out of the residue. It was dismissed with costs. Richardson v. Rusbridge, 20 Beav. 136.

Under a direction by will to accumulate and lay out a certain sum of money in the purchase of land to be settled to uses thereby declared, the costs of the investment are to be paid out of the particular sum directed to be invested. Gwyther v. Allen, 1 Hare, 505.

Infants entitled to share in a residue, having filed a bill for an account against the executors and other adult residuary legatees who had received their shares and deprecated the proceedings: the accounts proving correct, the costs ordered to be paid out of the plaintiffs' share alone. Mackenzie v. Taylor, 7 Beav. 467.

Executors had made a division and appropriation of the residue. The husband of one of the residuary legatees, in ignorance of what had been done, filed a bill for an account. At the hearing, the plaintiff, with notice of what had taken place, persevered in having the accounts taken, and no substantial variation resulted therefrom:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to costs out of the estate up to the hearing, but that the plaintiff's share alone must bear the subsequent costs. Thompson v. Clive, 11 Beav. 475.

—— Partial Distribution.]—Personal estate was given by will to a large number of legatees. The executors and trustees, after deducting 10*l.* from each share to form an indemnity fund against certain possible claims, paid off the adult legatees, and invested the share of each infant legatee in his name and theirs jointly. A general release, to which the accounts were scheduled, was then executed by all the adult legatees. Some years after this a bill for the administration of the estate was filed by six of the infant legatees, their next friend being the managing clerk of their solicitor, acting at the request of their father, who had executed the release. The result of the accounts was to shew that the suit was not for their benefit:—Held, that the next friend was entitled to his costs; that the fund for payment of costs consisted of the indemnity fund and the undistributed shares of all the infant legatees; but that any residuary legatees who had been paid, including the trustees, asking for costs, should bring in the shares which they had received; and (the trustees taking large shares, and being therefore unwilling to bring them in) that any surplus remaining should be paid to the trustees towards their costs. Gravatt v. Tann, 38 L. J., Ch. 459; L. R. 7 Eq. 436.

When executors have made a right partial distribution and have properly accounted, and the remaining legatees then bring an action for administration, the costs will be borne by the shares remaining undistributed. Hilliard v. Fulford, 46 L. J., Ch. 43; 4 Ch. D. 389; 35 L. T. 750; 25 W. R. 161.

But when executors had made a wrong partial distribution, on the assumption that the estate was divisible into five shares instead of six, and their accounts were also incorrect, the costs of a subsequent administration suit were ordered to be paid out of the whole estate, as if no distribution had taken place, so as to charge the executors with the share of costs attributable to the distributed shares of the estate. Ib.

—— Fund in Court—Lapsed Shares.]—A question arose as to whether the next of kin (of which there were sixteen) of the testator's wife were entitled to a sum of money bequeathed to them as a class, or whether only such of the class were entitled as were living at the death of the testator. The trustees paid the amount into court. The court, having decided that as to five shares, such shares lapsed and went to the residuary legatees, directed the eleven shares to be paid in full, and that the costs of all parties should be paid out of the five lapsed shares. Ham's Will, In re, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 106; 21 L. J., Ch. 217; 15 Jur. 1121.

By Beneficiary personally.]—Legatees applying by petition for the payment of their legacies in an administration suit, before or at the time the cause is heard for further directions, must pay the costs of all parties of such petition. Edwards v. Hall, 8 De G. M. & G. 74.

H. devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to two trustees to sell and convert, and to stand possessed of the proceeds upon trust to set apart and appropriate 10,000*l.* for the benefit of the plaintiffs, one a tenant for life, and the other tenant in remainder, if the latter should attain twenty-one. One of the trustees was made residuary legatee. The plaintiffs by letter requested the trustees to pay the legacy into court under the Trustee Relief Act of 1847; but they declined to do so, and stated that they had invested the money as directed by the will, and that they did not wish to divest themselves of the trust. The trustees, by their answer to a suit instituted for payment of the legacy into court, said that it was unnecessary and improper, but they admitted that the plaintiffs had a right to have the legacy brought into court. Upon the language of the will, and upon established principles of equity, the court held that the expenses of severing, appropriating and securing a legacy must be borne by the residuary legatee; and held that the costs of the legatee, who had been by the conduct of the trustees forced to institute a suit for the payment of the legacy into court, which might have been done under the trustee relief act, must also be borne by the residuary legatee. Handley v. Davis, 28 L. J., Ch. 873; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 190.

Legatee Plaintiff.]—An executor is not justified upon a claim of interest by the legatee in imposing terms as to the payment of the legacy for the purpose of obtaining an abandonment of the claim for interest. Semble, that if a legatee has not exhausted every possible means of obtaining his legacy short of a suit, he will not receive costs upon a suit instituted by him for that purpose. Aylmer v. Winterbottom, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 19.

Between Solicitor and Client.]—A residuary legatee, plaintiff in an administration action, is entitled to his costs as between solicitor and client where the estate is insufficient for payment of legacies, provided it is sufficient for payment of debts, but not otherwise. Harvey, In re, Wright v. Woods, 53 L. J., Ch. 544; 26 Ch. D. 179; 50 L. T. 554; 32 W. R. 765. S. P., Thomas v. Jones, 1 Dr. & Sm. 134; 29 L. J., Ch. 570; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 391; 8 W. R. 328. Cross v. Kennington, 11 Beav. 89. Waldron v. Frances, 10 Ha. (App.) xxvi. Wilkins, In re, Wilkins v. Rotherham, 54 L. J., Ch. 188; 27 Ch. D. 703; 33 W. R. 42.

A residuary legatee who brought an action for administration was, prior to the rules of 1883, entitled to costs out of the estate unless some special grounds were shewn for depriving him of them. Farrow v. Austin (18 Ch. D. 58) followed. McClellan, In re, McClellan v. McClellan, 54 L. J., Ch. 659; 29 Ch. D. 495; 52 L. T. 741; 33 W. R. 888—C. A.

Where a legatee files a bill for the administration of a testator's estate, whether it is expressed that he does so on behalf of himself and the other legatees or not, he does in fact represent them, and when all the debts are paid the fund belongs to the legatees, and the plaintiff is entitled to his costs of suit as between solicitor and client, the fund not being sufficient to pay all the legacies in full. Thomas v. Jones, 1 Dr. & Sm. 134; 29 L. J., Ch. 570; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 391; 8 W. R. 328.

In a legatees' suit, where the assets prove insufficient for the payment of debts, the plaintiff and the other parties, with the exception of the legal personal representative, are entitled to the costs of suit as between party and party only, and the plaintiff is not entitled to any priority in respect thereof. But the plaintiff is entitled to the costs, as between solicitor and client, of getting in and realising the estate, and in priority to all other parties, except the legal personal representative. Wettenhall v. Davis or Dennis, 33 Beav. 285; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1216; 9 L. T. 361; 12 W. R. 66.

In an administration suit by legatees, the fact of one of the legatees being a large creditor will not entitle him to costs as between solicitor and client. Horne v. Horne, 14 W. R. 957.

In a suit by a residuary legatee against the executor of the will, the testator's estate proved insufficient to pay his debts:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to his costs, not as between solicitor and client, but as between party and party only. Burkitt v. Ransom (2 Coll. C. C. 536) disapproved. Weston v. Clowes, 15 Sim. 610.

In a suit instituted by a residuary legatee, the assets proved insufficient for the payment of the expenses and the general legacies:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to his costs as between solicitor and client, except so far as the general estate had been increased by the proceeding. Wroughton v. Colquhoun, 1 De G. & Sm. 357.

Costs of a residuary legatee, in a suit for administering an insufficient estate, which he had commenced in chambers, allowed as between solicitor and client. Burrell, In re, Burrell v. Smith, 39 L. J., Ch. 544; L. R. 9 Eq. 443; 22 L. T. 263.

Where in a suit by a residuary legatee against the executor and other residuary legatees, the costs of all parties were directed as between solicitor and client, the court refused to vary the order on the ground of non-consent by the residuary legatees. Blenkinsop v. Foster, 3 Y. & C. 205; 8 L. J., Ex. Eq. 8.

Bill by one residuary legatee against the other, for the administration of estate; usual decree made; and held, on further directions, costs should not be taxed as between solicitor and client. Fenner v. Taylor, 5 Madd. 470.

When Legacy incumbered or assigned.]—Where one of a class of persons interested in a testator's residuary personal estate files a bill for its administration, the general costs of the suit are to be satisfied out of the fund generally; but where some of the parties beneficially interested have incumbered or absolutely assigned their portions of the fund, the costs of the assignors only will be allowed, the same to be paid to their assignees respectively, and the rest of the costs incurred by the assignees must be satisfied out of the assigned shares respectively. Greedy v. Lavender, 11 Beav. 417; 18 L. J., Ch. 62. Contra, Coates v. Coates, 3 N. R. 355. And see col. 1851, ante.

Executor having assigned his legacy, and having afterwards been decreed to pay costs, the legacy which had been assigned was held subject to make good these costs, although the liability had arisen after the assignment. Hopkins v. Gowan, 1 Moll. 561.

A party to whom a legacy was assigned upon certain trusts having filed a bill against the executors, to recover the legacy, notwithstanding he had notice of a subsisting suit for the administration of assets, the court refused him his costs, on the ground that he had acted improvidently. Packwood v. Maddison, 1 Sim. & S. 232; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 107.

In a suit for account of residue, one of the residuary legatees having, by assigning and taking benefit of insolvent act, rendered two supplemental bills necessary, the additional costs are to be borne by his share. Brace v. Ormond, 2 J. & W. 435.

A legatee who before a suit for the administration of the estate had assigned her interest, and who, with her assignee, was made a party to the suit, joined her co-legatees in her defence; and the court held, that the benefit of her having joined in defence should belong to the general estate, and the assignee's costs must come out of his own fund. Heywood v. Grazebrook, 18 L. J., Ch. 303; 13 Jur. 619.

If in an administration suit an inquiry is directed in chambers, as to incumbrances by persons interested under the will, the costs of such inquiry must be treated as part of the general costs of the suit and be paid out of the estate. Gee v. Mahood, 23 W. R. 71.

In an administration suit, where a legatee has assigned his interest under the will, he and his assignee are entitled to be allowed out of the general fund such an amount of costs only as the assignor would have got had he made no assignment. And as between the assignor and assignee, even where the assignment does not include the whole of the assignor's interest under the will, and where consequently the assignor remains a necessary party to the suit, the assignee is entitled to be paid his costs in full out of the amount so allowed in priority to the assignor. Turner v. Sowdon, 23 L. T. 799; 19 W. R. 403.

On Failure of Claim.]—In a suit instituted on fair grounds to establish a claim to a residuar bequest, the court will give the plaintiff, though failing, his costs out of the estate. Turner v. Frampton, 2 Coll. C. C. 331 ; 10 Jur. 24.

It being admitted by the defendants, in a suit against the executors and parties charged with misapplying the trust property, that an account had been settled between the residuary legatee, the executor and the other defendant, upon an erroneous footing, by which the other defendant was benefited, and the residuary legatee was prejudiced, the court, on dismissing the bill of the residuary legatee, on the ground that he had no title to the relief prayed, did so without costs. Portloch v. Gardner, 1 Hare, 594 ; 11 L. J., Ch. 313 ; 6 Jur. 795.

Where executor sues in the joint character of creditor and legatee, he is liable to pay additional costs, if any, occasioned by the claim as a creditor unsupported. Sharples v. Sharples, M'Clel. 506 ; 13 Price, 745.

Plaintiff, being himself an executor, filing bill as creditor and legatee for an account of the estate of testator, is entitled, having obtained a decree, to costs out of fund in court, although he obtained no more information than had been offered to him. Ib.

A bill was filed for the administration of the testator's estate, by a party entitled to a contingent reversionary interest, and a decree for an account was obtained. Before the report, the plaintiff's interest wholly failed :—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to his costs of suit, either as against the defendants or the fund, and a petition for the purpose was dismissed with costs. Hay v. Bowen, 5 Beav. 610 ; 12 L. J., Ch. 78 ; 6 Jur. 1119.

There being no residuary gift, the next of kin filed a bill for administration. The debts exhausted the residue, but there remained assets specially bequeathed :—Held, that the plaintiff must bear his own costs, but that the executor was entitled to his costs out of the specific legacies. Newbegin v. Bell, 23 Beav. 386.

W. devised the whole of his real estate (some parts of which were subject to mortgage) specifically to his nine sons and daughters, and granddaughter. The personal estate was found to be insufficient to pay his debts. The representatives of one of the sons filed a bill praying for the administration of the real and personal estate ; and they submitted that one of the devises had lapsed ; that the whole of the real estate was charged with payment of the debts, and that the three daughters took only life estates. They failed in all points, the court holding that there was no descended estate, that the real estates devised to the sons were alone charged with debts, in exoneration of the daughters' estate, and that the daughters took an estate in fee. The real estates devised to the sons were ordered to be sold, and the proceeds paid into court. Upon the question of costs :—Held, that the daughters and granddaughter, who could not have enjoyed their estates except subject to the questions which the court had decided, must pay their own costs. Wisden v. Wisden, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 86.

Held, also, that though the plaintiffs had failed, they were not, under the circumstances, to be compelled to pay their costs out of their own estate, but were entitled to have their costs, as between party and party, out of the fund in court. Ib.

Where a beneficiary under a will files a bill for administration of the testator's estate, and in his bill sets up a claim to rank as a creditor of the estate, he will have to pay the costs of his claim if it is successfully resisted. Lancefield v. Iggulden, 44 L. J., Ch. 203 ; L. R. 10 Ch., 136 ; 31 L. T. 813 ; 23 W. R. 223.

Other Cases.]—A legatee agreeing after a decree for the administration of the estate obtained in chancery by another legatee, to stop proceedings in a suit previously instituted by him in the exchequer, allowed his costs up to the time of his having notice of that decree. Jackson v. Leaf, 1 J. & W. 229.

Plaintiff, in an administration suit, held not liable to pay the costs of certain legatees, who were made defendants, but disclaimed. West v. Cole, 3 Y. & C. 582.

A party against whom a decree to account had been made died, and a bill was filed against his representatives to continue the accounts. The representatives submitted by their answers whether certain legatees were not necessary parties. Those legatees, having been made parties by amendment, stated by their answer that their legacies had been paid. The bill was dismissed, as against them, with costs, to be paid by the plaintiff, who was to have them over against the representatives. Trevelyan v. Charter, 6 L. J., Ch. 274.

Plaintiff prosecuting, to a decree, a suit for the arrears of an annuity under a will, after the arrears had been paid, entitled to the costs ; the defendant not having tendered the costs up to the time of payment, and disputing by answer the will, and making it necessary for the plaintiff to establish by decree the will. Plaintiff also entitled to the costs of defendant, the heir of a deceased trustee, who could not be co-plaintiff ; but not to the costs of a necessary party made a defendant by amendment, but omitted in the original bill. Lill v. Robinson, 1 Moll. 83.

In an administration suit instituted by legatees in a county court, the costs were ordered to be paid by the plaintiffs :—Held, that the costs must be paid out of the general assets of the estate. Cooper v. Busbridge, 16 L. T. 5.

A bill for an account of the personal estate of W. J., an intestate, was filed by the legal personal representative of E. B. against the personal representatives of the deceased administrators of W. J., alleging that the administrators of W. J. had got in the greater part of the estate, and that E. B. was the sole next of kin. The suit was revived in 1877 by M., a subsequent personal representative of E. B., against X. and Y., as representatives of one of the administrators, and Z., as representative of the others, and was ultimately dismissed in 1880 with costs, as against all three defendants, on the ground that the title of E. B., as next of kin, was not proved. After this M. took out administration de bonis non to W. J., and brought his action as such administrator against Z. for an account of the personal estate of W. J. received by the administrators whom Z. represented :—Held, that although M. formerly sued as personal representative of E. B., and now sued as personal representative of W. J., the action was in substance a second proceeding for the same matter under the same alleged title, and that proceedings must be stayed until the costs of the old suit had been paid. Martin v. Beauchamp (Earl), 53 L. J., Ch. 1150 ; 25 Ch. D. 12 ; 49 L. T. 334 ; 32 W. R. 17—C. A.

A party beneficially interested in a testator's estate, employed counsel to attend for him before the master, on a question as to the propriety of allowing certain items in the executor's discharge:—Held, notwithstanding the question was one of considerable difficulty, that the expenses of employing counsel ought not to be allowed in taxing costs as between party and party. Russell v. Nicholls, 15 Sim. 151; 15 L. J., Ch. 289.

The costs of the bank, when made parties for the security of a legacy, must come out of the capital of the legacy. Hammond v. Neame, 1 Swanst. 38; 18 R. R. 15.

The attorney-general, appearing in support of a bill for a legacy, the bill being dismissed:—Held, not entitled to costs. Gloucester Corporation v. Wood, 3 Hare, 149.

(f) Other Matters.

An admission of assets for the payment of a legacy is an admission of assets for the purposes of the suits, and extends to costs, if the court thinks fit to give them. Philanthropic Society v. Hobson, 2 Myl. & K. 357; 3 L. J., Ch. 97.

Costs of a litigation in the course of administering a will are given out of general assets, or, in case of a deficiency, out of the fund. Hampson v. Brandwood, 1 Madd. 394.

Devisee cannot retain his own debt in priority to costs. Loomes v. Stotherd, 1 Sim. & S. 461; 24 R. R. 209.

A letter written by the defendant, the executor, after bill filed, offering to submit to arbitration, may be looked at on the question of costs. Meader v. M'Cready, 1 Moll. 119.

In a creditors' suit instituted by the plaintiff, on behalf of himself and all other creditors, the defendant is entitled on motion, at any time before decree, to have the bill dismissed, on payment of the demand of the plaintiff and his costs as between party and party; but if there be other defendants their costs must also be paid. Pemberton v. Topham, 1 Beav. 316; 2 Jur. 1009.

On a bill by a creditor for administration of an estate, making others jointly liable parties, who immediately appeared and offered to pay the debt, the court stayed the proceedings against them without costs. Holden v. Kynaston, 2 Beav. 204; 9 L. J., Ch. 198.

Costs of unsuccessful defence of an infant charged, not upon general fund, but on his own share. Orford (Earl) v. Churchill, 3 Ves. & B. 59.

In the case of a deficient fund, if a creditor who has obtained a separate report after the final hearing rehears the cause, the decree may be altered by refusing costs to a defendant who had formerly been decreed them; the facts detailed in the report being such that, if known at the final hearing, the court would not have given him his costs. Robinson v. Harris, Hayes & J. 412.

Where after an order to pay out a deficient fund to the parties as reported, the plaintiff was obliged to take further proceedings in the cause for the costs of which the order did not provide, and no application was made until after all the creditors except one had drawn out the sums respectively allocated to them:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to be paid the amount of the costs necessarily incurred by such further proceedings out of the remaining share. Birch v. Alt, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 228.

Where a supplemental bill was filed merely for the purpose of bringing a tenant in tail before the court, who had come in esse since the pronouncing of the decree in the original cause, and all the defendants in that cause having again appeared at the hearing of the supplemental suit:—Held, that as they appear in consequence of a notice served by the plaintiff, they were entitled to their costs of the hearing as against the plaintiff; but that the plaintiff should not have the same over. Wallace v. Blake, 1 Dr. & Wal. 378.

Under a decree in an administration suit, certain parties only were allowed to attend before the master. The master approved of some suits being instituted by the receiver, who was to be indemnified out of the estate. The funds appearing by the affidavit to be "abundantly ample," the court ordered the institution of the suits, and the payment of costs out of the fund standing to the general credit of the cause, upon service of those only whom the master had authorised to attend him on the conference. Lockhart v. Hardy, 6 Beav. 267; 13 L. J., Ch. 50.

An abatement having happened after a decree to account, and the plaintiff neglecting to revive, the defendant filed a supplemental bill to carry on the decree; and having made certain parties who took an interest under the will of the original defendant, defendants, such defendants were entitled to their costs, there not being sufficient unity of interest to make them co-plaintiffs. Drought v. Redford, 1 Moll. 572.

A suit was instituted for administration of the estate of A., who was supposed to have died intestate. Letters of administration had been granted to H., one of the next of kin. Subsequent to the decree being made and the accounts taken, a letter, of which probate was afterwards granted, was produced by another of the next of kin, in whose favour the will was made. By the production of the will the proceedings in the suit were rendered useless, the former letters of administration revoked, and letters of administration granted, with the will annexed:—Held, that the costs incurred in the suit must be borne by the party interested under the will who had the possession thereof, and had, by delaying to assert his right, occasioned the litigation. Mirehouse v. Herbert, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1238; 5 W. R. 583.

A. made a will, giving his personal estate to his five infant children by his first wife; he afterwards marries a second wife, by whom he had one child who died soon after his birth. On the death of A., the executors attempted to prove the will, but were opposed by the widow, on the ground that the will was revoked by the second marriage. A deed was then executed, by which the wife agreed, on certain considerations, to permit the will to be proved. The widow having married a second husband, they filed their bill in this court to set aside the deed, as having been obtained by fraud or surprise, and to have the assets administered, as in the case of an intestacy. The court directed the parties to proceed in the prerogative court, and reserved further directions. The prerogative court decided in favour of the will. The plaintiff appealed to the delegates, but afterwards agreed to abandon the appeal on payment of 300*l.* The court then directed the accounts of the personal estate, &c. Notwithstanding the plaintiffs failed in setting aside the will, yet as, in any case, it was necessary that the accounts should be taken in this court, the plaintiffs had their costs out of the fund. Thompson v. Sheppard, 2 Cox, 161.

An administrator settled with three out of four next of kin, and the fourth having instituted a suit for administration:—Held, that his share was only liable to one-fourth of the costs. Holgate v. Haworth, 17 Beav. 259.

Persons interested under a will and unnecessarily made parties to a suit for the administration of the estate, ordered to bear their own costs, they not having objected to their being parties in their answers or at the hearing. Williams v. Williams, 17 Jur. 434; 1 W. R. 237.

A bill was filed for the administration of a testator's estate, and for determining, among other questions, whether it was liable to bear the costs of completing a column left unfinished by the testator. By agreement between the parties, all questions were waived except as to the costs of completing the column, and the costs of the suit. The question as to the column was determined against the plaintiff:—Held, that the costs of the suit must follow the ordinary rule in administration cases, and be paid in the usual way. Joliffe v. Twyford, 28 L. J., Ch. 93; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1165.

Next of kin appearing in opposition to a charitable bequest, and failing, are not entitled to costs as between solicitor and client. Wilkinson v. Barber, 41 L. J., Ch. 721; L. R. 14 Eq. 96; 26 L. T. 937; 20 W. R. 763. But see Carter v. Green, 3 Kay & J. 591; 5 W. R. 856.

Where a residue was disposed of to charitable purposes, costs were given to the executor, next of kin and attorney-general, out of the fund. Moggeridge v. Thackwell, 7 Ves. 36; 6 R. R. 76.

A married woman entitled to residuary estate is only entitled to the residue subject to the payment of costs. Therefore, when by consent in court of a married woman entitled to the residue of an estate, which had been the subject of a common administration suit, an order had been obtained for the settlement of the funds on her, but the minutes, as taken down in the registrar's book, did not provide for costs, leave was given, in drawing up the order, to provide for costs out of the said residue, without any further consent on the part of the married woman, as being a dealing with the fund in which she had no voice. Musgrove v. Flood, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1086.
